TEXAS AND TEXANS

HENRY FRANKLIN GOODNIGHT. The president of the Van Zandt County National Bank, at Wills Point, has had a varied business and civic career. He was little more than a boy when he served in the Confederate army, in Texas. With practically no education, and with the family circumstances such after the war that he was unable to attend school for any length of time, he set himself resolutely to the arduous task of gaining a livelihood through farming and by working at a trade, advanced from a position of dependent to a place as an independent merchant, and eventually became one of the prosperous men of this section of the state.

Mr. Goodnight was brought up from childhood in Henderson county, and has been a resident of Wills Point since 1875. He was born near Paducah, Marshall county, Kentucky, November 11, 1844, a son of Joseph Goodnight, who brought his family by water from the mouth of the Tennessee River to Shreveport, Louisiana, where he loaded his possessions into an ox wagon and finished his journey to Texas. After a year in Panola county, in 1850, he settled permanently in Henderson county, where he took up public lands and where his death occurred in 1854 when about fifty years of age.

Joseph Goodnight was born along the line between Kentucky and Tennessee. His father was Henry Goodnight, born of Irish parents, and probably himself a native of the Emerald Isle. He was twice married. By his first wife the children were: David, who died in North Missouri; Elizabeth, who spent her life in Tennessee; and Joseph. By the second marriage were four children, one of whom is Robert Goodnight of Bell, Texas. During the decade of the fifties, Henry Goodnight moved to North Missouri, and lived on a farm there the balance of his days. Joseph Goodnight was a man of fair education. His life was spent uneventfully, chiefly as a farmer. He married Elizabeth Helm, a daughter of Thomas Helm. The latter brought his family to Texas in company with Mr. Goodnight, and died in Hopkins county. The Helm children were: Mack, James, Elizabeth, Mrs. Nancy Piereson, and Mrs. Mary Flowers. Their mother lived to be more than eighty years of age. Mrs. Joseph Goodnight died near Goshen, Henderson county, Texas, when about sixty years of age, and had seen her children each take up the burden of life of a new generation. These children were: Kathryn, who married F. Green Gray, and left three children in Henderson county at her death; Thomas, who was a Confederate soldier in the Thirty-Fourth Regiment of Texas cavalry, lived and died in Henderson county, and had a family of two children; Frances died unmarried; Nancy married James R. Reed, a Confederate soldier, who died in Van Zandt county; Henry F.; William D., of Dallas, Texas; and John, twin brother of the last named, who died in childhood.

While growing up in Henderson county, Henry F. Goodnight profited little by the schools of the time. He was seventeen years old when the war broke out, and he enlisted in the early months of the struggle, but remained only a few months before returning home to the aid of his mother. In October, 1863, he became a soldier in the Thirty-Fourth Texas, under Col. A. W. Terrell, and was engaged in service along the Brazos river and near the coast, afterwards going to the main army operating in Louisiana, under the command of General Kirby Smith. His service as a soldier caused him to participate in several of the great battles of the southwest, including Mansfield, Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou. Early in 1865 he was furloughed, and while on his way to rejoin his command, then in north Texas, the news of the surrender of Lee reached him. He suffered neither wounds nor capture, and was still a youth when he resumed the pursuits of peace.

After the war Mr. Goodnight attempted to make amends for his lack of education, but the condition of the family finances interfered with his plans, and he soon quit school with some knowledge of arithmetic, after having completed the "Fourth Reader," and other elementary studies. During the summer of 1866, he made a farm crop, and then began learning the saddler's trade at Rockwall. After two years of that he engaged in the dry goods business at Fosterville, Anderson county, and from there moved to Goshen, in Henderson county. A few years of his experience as a merchant gave him some headway in the matter of capital and laid the solid foundation for his successful career in a larger place.

Moving to Wills Point in 1875, Mr. Goodnight engaged in the drug business with Dr. J. H. Russell. With the exception of five years, during which he had devoted himself to other affairs, Mr. Goodnight was in the drug business at Wills Point for twenty-one years and it was in that line that he accumulated his substantial prosperity. In 1902 after a rest of a few years he opened a bank in Wills Point, associating with him Ed Lewis, his first cashier, A. W. Meredith, F. W. Anderson, Dr. Fry, R. J. Moreau, and others. These men were the organizers of the Van Zandt County National Bank, with a capital stock of thirty-five thousand dollars. The institution opened its doors for business in January, 1902, with Mr. Goodnight as president and active manager. During the first seven years the bank paid regular dividends on the capital stock, and in 1909 the capital was increased to fifty thousand dollars. At that time the balance of the original investment was returned to the stockholders in dividends, and since then the bank has paid six per cent semi-annually. Its vice presidents are Dr. Harry Fry and A. W. Meredith.

Being in a rural community, and having business relations largely with farmers, Mr. Goodnight necessarily has become interested in farming and in the acquisition of farm land. His home is a suburban one, and is situated on a two-hundred-acre tract lying against the townsite, and his land has been kept improved apace with the advancement in agricultural development in Van Zandt county. In the business section of Wills Point, Mr. Goodnight was a party to the erection of the brick business house in which the Van Zandt County National Bank has its home. In politics Mr. Goodnight has been a Democrat always, casting his first vote at a voting box guarded by the bayonets of Federal soldiers, after the war. His only official service to his community has been the office of alderman at Wills Point. His father was likewise a loyal Democrat. In 1872 Mr. Goodnight joined the Masonic fraternity at Prairieville, and has taken thirty-two degrees of the Scottish Rite. His lodge membership is at Wills Point, and he has attended two sessions of the Grand Lodge, and has worked on the standing committee. He belongs to the Mystic Shrine, Hella Temple, at Dallas, Texas. His church is the Christian.

At Tyler, Texas, in September, 1872, he married Miss Berthena H. Nall, daughter of James Nall of Alabama. Their children are: Bertha, wife of Dr. Harry T. Fry, and the mother of one son, Harry Goodnight Fry; and Alice, now Mrs. R. J. Moreau of Wills Point, and the mother of four children, Henry A., Bertha Marguerite, Mary Elizabeth, and Josephine. Dr. Harry T. Fry, the husband of the older daughter is a practicing physician of Wills Point, and a son of the late Dr. J. M. Fry, who settled in Texas from Rush county, Indiana, and who was a soldier in the southern army, enlisting from Tennessee.

EDGAR SMITH, M. D. Holding prestige in the ranks of his profession by reason of superior natural ability, aided by a thorough training, wide experience, an acute comprehension of human nature and a broad sympathy, Dr. Edgar Smith is firmly established in the confidence of the people of Lockhart. Although engaged in practice here for but a short time, he has shown himself such a thorough master of his calling that he has been able to build up an excellent professional business, while as a citizen he has demonstrated that he is ready to do more than his share in behalf of the public weal.

Doctor Smith's family dates back to the Oglethorpe Colony of Georgia, and his ancestors were active during the winning of American independence. His father, Embree W. Smith, was born in Virginia, in 1830, and came to Texas in 1859, settling in Travis county, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits on the plains. At the outbreak of hostilities between the states of the South and the North he went to Mississippi and enlisted in Company E, Nineteenth Regiment, Mississippi Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of Virginia, under Gen. Robert E. Lee. Mr. Smith served until the fall of the Confederacy at Appomattox, and in 1868 returned to Travis county and resumed his agricultural operations, in which he continued to be engaged until the time of his death, in 1888. He was prominently identified with the Grange movement of those days, and for a number of years was chairman of the executive committee of the Texas State Grange. He also interested himself actively in local politics, and in 1886 was elected to the house of representatives, from Travis county, in the Twentieth Legislature. He married Sarah L. Turk, a native of Georgia, members of whose family were at various times identified with that state's administration, and she still survives, having reached the eighty-fourth year of her age.

Dr. Smith was born in Travis county, Texas, December 16, 1872. His early education was secured in the public schools of Travis county, and he was reared on his father's farm. His preliminary training was supplemented by a course of three years at Southwestern University, Georgetown, Texas, and his medical studies were prosecuted at the University of Louisville, Kentucky, where he was graduated in 1897, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Doctor Smith began practice at Mendoza, Caldwell county, where he remained for more than eighteen years, and February 1, 1914, he came to Lockhart, in which city he has since made his home and maintained his offices. Doctor Smith's success is not the result of any happy chance; luck has played no part in his advancement. At the beginning of his career he was compelled to meet and to overcome the same obstacles which arise in the path of every aspiring young practitioner. These, however, succumbed to his constant study, his indomitable perseverance and the force of his ability, well applied, and he may today take a pardonable degree of pride in the fact that he owes his present position and prosperity solely to his own industry and effort. A constant student, in 1904 he took a post-graduate course at the New Orleans Polyclinic, and in 1911 took a course at the New York Post-Graduate Hospital, New York City. He holds membership in the Caldwell County Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. Among other fraternal orders, he belongs to Mendoza Lodge, No. 487, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Lockhart Chapter, No. 208, R. A. M.; Lockhart Council, No. 11, R. & S. M.; Colorado Commandery, K. T., and Ben Hur Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.

Dr. Smith was united in marriage, in May, 1899, with Miss Minnie Gallat, daughter of Xavier Gallat, of Caldwell county, Texas, a prosperous ranchman. Her grandfather, H. Gullet (as the name was then spelled), was a native of Upper Alsace, France, who emigrated to the United States and came to Texas in 1845, locating at Castroville, where he was killed by the Indians two years later. Doctor and Mrs. Smith have no children.

ALONZO A. ROSS, M. D. The recognized results of a career spent in earnest effort, intelligently directed by a trained mind, are gratifying to the individual who has devoted his life to the development of the highest ideals of a chosen calling. No man can be greater than his appreciation of the debt he owes the world, and the professional men who rise highest are those who endeavor to aid humanity and to make their influence for good assist their fellow-men. One of the distinguished medical men of Texas, whose career shows marked capability and whose companions in the profession admire and respect, is Dr. Alonzo A. Ross, of Lockhart, who has been engaged in practice here since 1903. He is a native of Caldwell county, and was born January 22, 1868, a son of Abner M. and Elizabeth (Shupe) Ross.

To be a descendant of a boyhood playmate in Tennessee of Gen. Sam Houston, on the paternal side, and to be a grandson on the maternal side of one of the heroes of the battle of San Jacinto, is a distinction which few can claim, and to a native Texan such eminence overshadows the glory of any earlier ancestry. John Ross, the paternal grandfather of Doctor Ross, was a native of Tennessee, where in his boyhood he was a boon companion of the lad who was later to become the great Texas liberator. The maternal grandfather of Doctor Ross, Sam Shupe, participated with General Houston in the battle of San Jacinto. Some of the records of this battle give the name as Sam "Sharp," but this is an error, caused, evidently, by the indifferent writing of those days. He was of Quaker origin, and came from Pennsylvania to Texas in 1821, settling at Texana, where his daughter, Elizabeth, the mother of Doctor Ross, was born in 1834. She passed away in 1879. Abner M. Ross was born in Tennessee and came to Texas from Missouri in 1855, settling in Caldwell county, where he was engaged successfully in agricultural pursuits until the time of his death, in 1881.

After completing the curriculum of the common schools of Caldwell county, Doctor Ross became a student in Tulane University medical school, at New Orleans, Louisiana, and was there graduated in 1896, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He at once began following his calling in DeWitt county, which was his field of practice until 1903, in which year he located at Lockhart and became associated in practice with Dr. Thomas B. Coopwood, a connection which has continued to the present time. In 1902 Dr. Ross went to Vienna, Austria, where he took a post-graduate course in the leading clinics and hospitals, marking with the leading men of his profession there. He also pursued post-graduate work in New York and New Orleans, Louisiana. Doctor Ross is a member of the Caldwell County Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Association and the American Medical Association, and his connection with these organizations keeps him in touch with the progress and improvement which is being made in medical science. The physician who would gain a full measure of success must possess many qualities of heart and mind not included in the course of study of the schools and colleges he may have attended. In analyzing the career of the successful practitioner of the healing art, it is invariably found that a broadminded sympathy with the sick and suffering and an earnest desire to aid his afflicted fellow-man has gone hand in hand with skill and able judgment. Doctor Ross fortunately embodies these characteristics, and through energy and devoted application to his professional duties has built up an enviable reputation. In addition to achieving success in his calling, he is known as an able man of business, and in all public affairs affecting his community he has always been interested, doing his full share toward contributing to the general welfare and advancement. For a number of years he has always been a member of the Texas State Historical Association, and fraternally he is connected with Lockhart Lodge, No. 690, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Lockhart Chapter, No. 208, R. A. M., of which he is past high priest; Lockhart Council, No. 11, R. & S. M.; Gonzales Commandery, K. T. P. E. C., and Ben Hur Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.

On November 1, 1896, Doctor Ross was united in marriage with Miss Ella Timm, daughter of Charles Timm, of Hochheim, DeWitt county, Texas. Four children have been born to this union, namely: Abner A., Crystal Ray, Elizabeth E. and Raleigh R.

BERNHARD LANGE. Few of the business men of Texas have enjoyed a more satisfactory success than Bernhard Lange, of Llano. Mr. Lange, who belongs to one of the old German-American families of Texas, represented here since the decade of the fifties, was initiated into business through the avenue of hard work, and started in where the competition was keen because he was in the ranks where many men spend all their lives. By ability and industry he rose step by step, and now for the past thirteen years has been active head of the largest lumber plant in the city of Llano.

Bernhard Lange was born in the city of San Antonio, August 4, 1860. A private school furnished him his early education, and his early life was spent on the home ranch of his parents in southwest Texas. At the age of twenty-six he began his independent career as a rancher, but after five years of that experience moved to Llano and began work in the carpenters' and builders' trade. A few years later he was given a place with the Llano Lumber Company, and soon afterwards changed his employment to the Rockwell Brothers & Company, with which he has been identified for more than twenty years. He had first begun with duties that are easily entrusted to the beginners, and demonstrated his fitness for responsibility at each successive stage in the business. In 1900 he was appointed manager of the large enterprise conducted by this company, and has directed the business in this capacity to the present time. The company handles a full line of lumber, builders' hardware and material, wire fences, and does an extensive wholesale and retail business in this section of Texas.

Mr. Lange's parents were C. F. W. and Johanna (Steines) Lange, who were natives of Germany, where they were married. The family migrated to Texas in 1854, and the father was a cooper by trade. He and his wife were devoted Christians and members of the Christian church. The father died in 1877, and the mother in 1911 at the age of ninety-three, their bodies resting side by side in Gillespie county. They had a large family of fourteen children, of whom Bernhard was the youngest.

Mr. Lange was married in Gillespie county, May 24, 1881, to Matilda Horlen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Horlen of that county. The six children, four daughters and two sons, born to their marriage are mentioned as follows: Lillie, at home; Emma, wife of M. M. Berry, of Marble Falls, Texas; Fred, who is married and is in the grocery business at Llano; Bertha, the wife of A. K. Wolf, of Wichita Falls; Annie, at home; and Oscar, at home. Mr. Lange represents more than his business in his home community and is one of the active supporters of school and church, being a worker in the Lutheran church, and his name is always associated with any movement for the betterment of the city and county of Llano. His influence is that of a leader, and when he takes hold of anything all of his fellow citizens are willing to follow on his recommendation. Mr. Lange owns much valuable real estate in Llano and vicinity. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, from the Blue Lodge to the Commandery, and has held offices in both the Lodge and Chapter, and is recorder of the Knights Templar commandery, No. 54. He is also affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. In national affairs he votes the Republican ticket, but is an independent Democrat in state and local matters. For the past six years he has been a member of the Llano school board, and is its president at this writing. For his diversions he takes an occasional fishing and hunting excursion, and is a broad-minded and genial companion, and one of the best esteemed citizens of Llano.

JONATHAN RUSH LOONEY. For eight years, four successive terms, the citizens of Brownwood have elected to the office of mayor a pioneer merchant and business man, Jonathan Rush Looney, who has been identified with this part of Texas since the decades of the seventies and who became a merchant in Brownwood a year before the railroad reached that point. He thus became an active factor in the town when its population was less than two thousand and is not only the civic head but also the leading business man in what is now one of the most progressive small cities of West Texas, with its varied mercantile and industrial enterprise, and with a population second to none in character among any city of the state. Mayor Looney has had an important part in the civic movements of recent years in promoting the general welfare and improvement of the city. Partly to his credit as mayor should be assigned the honor awarded to Brownwood in 1912 of being the cleanest city of less than ten thousand population in the state of Texas.

Jonathan Rush Looney was born at Goodlettsville, near Nashville, Tennessee, on May 21st, 1850, a son of William Looney. He was reared and educated in the public schools of Goodlettsville and Nashville, and when his school days were over came out to Texas. For two years, 1874-75, he was engaged in teaching in Collin county, and then moved into Brown county. Brown county, though it had been organized nearly twenty years before, was very little developed until the decade of the seventies, and the entire population of this county in 1870 was only about five hundred. Mr. Looney was thus one of the pioneers in the new migration which in a few years' time transformed all conditions in this part of the state and made it one of the important areas in the stock industry. It was with cattle and wheat raising that Mr. Looney identified himself on first coming to the county, and his headquarters were eleven miles north of Brownwood. He continued in this calling up to 1888, at which time the first railroad had penetrated the county, and he moved to Brownwood in advance of the construction of the road to that point. In Brownwood he took the position of superintendent of the Brownwood Mill & Elevator Company, and was manager of that local industry for two years. He then sold out and in 1890 established a store on a small scale, and from that year to the present has been enlarging his facilities in keeping with the growth and development of Brownwood and has always merited the position of leading business man. In 1907 he incorporated the business under the name of the Looney Mercantile Company, a large department store, of which he has since been president and principal owner. This establishment is the pioneer department store of Brownwood and of Brown County, and is the only mercantile enterprise of this class in this region. The store is a large and modern one in every detail and would be a credit to a city many times the size of Brownwood. For the purposes of the business the firm has floor space of about twenty-eight thousand feet and employs some twenty or more salespeople.

Mr. Looney is also president of the Empire Furniture Company at Brownwood, and his name has been associated with various business and civic enterprises during the last twenty years in Brownwood. He is president of the school board, and as the head of a very progressive administration of city affairs, there is little doubt that he could retain his place as mayor for as many terms as he desired. The first prize awarded for the cleanest city under ten thousand in Texas was five hundred dollars, and it came not only as a deserved tribute to the customary wholesomeness and cleanliness at Brownwood, but also proved a stimulus to further development and improvement along this line. Mr. Looney is a Democrat, has always been loyal to his party, but has never in any sense been an office-seeker, and holds his present positions because of their possibilities of service to the community rather than for the sake of honors accompanying them.

In 1875 he married Miss Laura Hewgley of Murfreesboro, Tennessee. They have four children: Clara is the wife of W. D. McCully, of Brownwood; Herbert Earl Looney, born in Brown county, November 4, 1879, educated in the public schools and at Trinity University and Howard Payne College at Brownwood, in 1900 took charge of the books in the Looney Mercantile Company, and has been actively identified with the management of this large enterprise. He was married December 26, 1900, to Miss Mattie Renfro, of Brownwood, Texas, and they have one child, Marie Augusta Looney. Robert Fay, the third child, was born at Brownwood, February 22, 1887, and is now manager of the dry goods department of the Looney Mercantile Company. Emily May Looney, the youngest child of Mayor Looney, is the wife of Herbert Ragsdale of Brownwood. The family are all communicants of the Presbyterian Church of the United States. Mayor Looney is a Knights Templar Mason, and also a member of the Knights of Pythias.

LEE JERNIGAN. Youth and energy are the dominating factors in modern industrialism and commerce, and in Texas as elsewhere many of the largest and most important industrial plants are being directed by men still many years short of life's meridian. An excellent illustration of this is the manager and active head of the Llano Milling & Manufacturing Company.

Lee Jernigan was born in Columbia, Tennessee, February, 24, 1878, a son of William L. and Josephine (Riley) Jernigan, both natives of Tennessee, whence they came to Texas in 1881. The father, whose home is now at Eastland, has for many years been in the contracting and building business. He is prominent in Masonic circles, and his wife is a member of the Baptist church. They were the parents of six children, of whom Lee was the oldest. He was three years old when the family came to Texas, and since that time his home has been in this state. He attended the public schools of Llano, finishing in the high school, and remained home until about twenty years of age. He followed different occupations in his youth, and finally took employment with the Llano Milling & Manufacturing Company. The value of persistence is a big factor in Mr. Jernigan's career, since he has been with the one company almost from the beginning of his business experience and worked up from the bottom, until 1906 he was made general manager, and has since then been active head of this concern. The business under his management has grown remarkably, and many improvements have been made to the plant. A new water system has been installed, a new dam built, the machinery has been remodeled and rebuilt, and the plant is now one of the best of its kind in the state. The company beside the manufacture of flour and similar products, also operate the electric light plant for the town, the city water-works, and a large part of its product is the manufacture of ice, which is shipped to a large territory in a radius about Llano.

Mr. Jernigan was married at Valley Springs, Texas, November, 1899, to Miss Mattie T. Bell Bardin, daughter of John Bardin of Llano county. Their three children, two daughters and one son, are Viola, Willie Lee and Malcolm. Mr. Jernigan's church preference is the Baptist, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. He votes the Democratic ticket as a rule, but takes no active part in party politics. For diversion and recreation he takes occasional hunting and fishing trips, and especially enjoys a good game of baseball.

AUGUSTAN W. CLAYTON, M. D. A physician and surgeon of San Angelo who has an established place in his profession and citizenship, Dr. Clayton has practiced medicine for over twenty years, and is a graduate of the best schools and equipped with most careful preparation for his important work in society.

Dr. Augustan W. Clayton was born September 1, 1868, in Arkansas, a son of A. S. and Sally (Vaughn) Clayton. His father was a physician at Emerson, Arkansas, where he still lives, but is now retired from professional pursuits. The mother died about 1888. Dr. Clayton is American on both sides, and the families have lived in this country for many generations. On the paternal side the original seat of the name was in Georgia, where the Claytons were slaveholders in the early days. The doctor's father was a soldier of the Confederate army, and went through the war. There were three children in the family of the parents, of whom Dr. A. W. was the youngest. His first education was obtained at Magnolia, Arkansas, in the public schools, and from there he entered the Louisville Medical College in Kentucky, where he was graduated M. D. in 1892. His first practice was with his father in Arkansas, with whom he remained a short time, after which he moved out to Paint Rock, Texas, and practiced for one year. In 1893 he established himself at Ozana, and continued in practice there for a period of eighteen years. Then in 1911 he moved into San Angelo. Always ambitious for further attainment in his profession, the doctor spent one year in Tulane University at New Orleans, taking post-graduate work, and has also studied in the New Orleans Polyclinic. He is one of the physicians serving as local surgeon for the Santa Fe Railroad.

Dr. Clayton is vice president of the Ozana National Bank at Ozana, and has prospered in his professional and business connections. In politics always a Democrat, he has taken his share in community affairs, and is a member of the San Angelo club. His church is the Methodist church south. On July 19, 1896, Dr. Clayton married Miss Addy Henderson, of Ozana, a daughter of J. W. and Elizabeth Henderson. Her father is a ranchman, and he and his wife still live at Ozana. The doctor has three children, two sons and one daughter, Ethel, aged sixteen, Warren, fourteen, and Boyd, twelve years, respectively, and all attending the San Angelo public schools.

HON. THOMAS E. BOREN. On the roster of those who have honored the bench and bar of Panola county is found prominently placed the name of Judge Thomas E. Boren, of Carthage, who has reached a distinguished position in his profession and has wielded a wide influence in public affairs. Brought by his parents to this county in 1849 he has lived through its formative period, and the impress of his individuality has been felt upon public thought and action which has shaped the policy of the county and of this portion of the great Lone Star state. Judge Boren was born at Holly Springs, Marshall county, Mississippi, April 5, 1849, and is a son of Shadrach E. and Louisa A. (Fife) Boren.

The grandfather of Judge Boren was Thomas Boren, a native of Virginia, who married Elizabeth Flewellyn, also born in the Old Dominion state. After his marriage he settled along the Tennessee river, where he became a prosperous corn and hog raiser, selling his product to the cotton growers of Northern Mississippi, and, becoming fascinated with cotton growing as practiced by the aristocratic slaveholders of that section, purchased a farm in Marshall county himself and spent his remaining years there, dying in 1850, when past ninety years of age. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: William, who died at Hernando, Mississippi, where he had been engaged in the practice of law; Dr. James, who moved to Arkansas and spent his life near Helena; Mrs. Elizabeth Lewis, who died in Marshall county, Mississippi; Mrs. Nannie Wilkinson, who passed away in that state; Mrs. Lydia Blasingame, who died in Texas; Mrs. Elizabeth White, who died in Mississippi; Shadrach E., who established his family in Texas; and Wesley, who died before maturity.

Thos. E. Boren

Shadrach E. Boren was born in Middle Tennessee, near the city of Lebanon, in 1819, and his education came as a liberal contribution from the wealthy purse of his father. He accompanied the family to Marshall county, Mississippi, where he was married at Holly Springs, and in December, 1849, came to Texas and settled near Carthage on the old Boren estate. There because of the severe drought he was sorely distressed, and started back to Mississippi, but was induced to stop at Bethany, Louisiana, where he was engaged in the mercantile business until his demise in July, 1859. His children were as follows: Lizzie, who married J. R. Bond and died at Terrell, Texas, in January, 1913; Thomas E., of this review; James F., who died at Carthage, in June, 1913; Ida, who is the widow of Jno. W. Abernathy of Terrell; S. H., a resident of Carthage; Dr. William L., a practicing dentist of San Antonio; Mrs. Mattie Daig of Elmo, Texas; Dr. S. E., of Dallas; and Miss Lula C., of Elmo.

Judge Thomas E. Boren spent his youth on a farm near Carthage and was educated like other country lads here, with the supplemented advantages attainable in Looney's Institute at Gilmer, Texas. He began life as county deputy sheriff, by appointment of Sheriff T. F. Hull, in 1869, and served until the latter part of 1870, when he engaged in merchandise and was deputy postmaster of Carthage until 1873, then again engaging in the reading of law, his first acquaintance with which subject had been formed as a student in Looney's Institute under Governor Robert's direction. He resumed law study at Carthage under Captain Deberry, and was admitted to the bar at the spring term of court in 1875, before Judge M. W. Wheeler of Panola county. Judge Boren at once began practicing his profession and in the fall of 1877 was elected justice of the peace, following which he was elected County Judge and served three terms. In 1893 he was sent to the state senate from the Eighth District by unanimous vote of the Democratic party in the counties of Harrison, Panola, Rusk and Shelby, and served two terms. He was in the Twenty-third, Twenty-fourth- and Twenty-fifth Legislatures and served through the administration of Governor Hogg and into that of Governor Culbertson. In the Twenty-third Legislature he was chairman of the committee on Public Printing, and having experience as an editor and newspaper man, as proprietor of the Panilo Watchman, his qualification to head this committee was evident. He was a member of the Finance committee of the senate, and those of Public Lands, Contingent Expenses and Public Education in all the sessions. In addition he was chairman of the committee on Penitentiaries and was the first man to pay an official visit to the Gatesville Reformatory, and his report on conditions there was printed verbatim in The Dallas News. As a legislator he confined his attention to county matters largely, aiding measures to secure improved roads, amendments to the school laws and in giving strong support to the governor's favorite measures, the stock and bond law, the gross receipts tax law of insurance companies and the railroad commission law. He retired from the senate in 1897.

While county judge, Judge Boren brought the county to a cash basis, encouraged the building of iron bridges and was responsible for the construction of the court house. After his service in the legislature, he served another term as county judge and retired from office finally in 1902. Since then he has aimed to leave political activity to the younger men and has resumed active law practice as a land and probate lawyer. Judge Boren is a consistent Methodist, and is president of the church board of trustees. In fraternal matters, he is a Mason, which order he joined in 1870. His business ventures have been successful, and at this time he is president of the Panola Land Company, and of the Carthage Oil and Gas Company. He was the first president of the Merchants and Farmers National Bank of Carthage, which was the predecessor of the present Guaranty State Bank of this city.

Judge Boren was first married in April, 1873, his wife being Miss Ophelia Lawrence, a daughter of James M. Lawrence, formerly of Pike county, Alabama, moving to Texas in 1867. Mrs. Boren died in January, 1884, having been the mother of the following children: Marcus, who died single at the age of twenty-four years, and who had been in charge of the commissary of the Cicero Smith sawmill of Panola county; Glenn, a farmer of the county, who married Miss Allie Anderson; Dr. Lawrence, of Del Rio, Texas, who married Miss Mary Madison; and Miss Essie, a resident of Carthage. Judge Boren married Miss Celeste Carswell, in January, 1885, she being a daughter of Joseph and Priscilla Carswell, formerly of Georgia, moving to Texas in 1866.

HARRY M. BRITT. A citizen whose activities along commercial lines have made him well known to the business men of Amarillo, is Harry M. Britt, proprietor of Britt's Sheet Metal Works, one of the city's flourishing industries. This concern is widely and favorably known in Amarillo and vicinity, having been founded in 1889 by the father of Mr. Britt, and the latter has conducted the business since his father's retirement in 1905. It is recognized as the most important business of its kind at this place, and its trade extends throughout this part of the State and into New Mexico. Mr. Britt was born December 12, 1882, at Morristown, Tennessee, and is a son of John W. and Addie T. (Trolinger) Britt.

John W. Britt brought his family to Austin, Texas, during the year 1882, and there engaged in the sheet metal business, but subsequently removed his operations to Amarillo, where he established the first sheet metal business of the city. This he continued to conduct until 1909, when he retired from this line to give his entire attention to the emigration business. In this he has also been very successful, having assisted materially in the upbuilding and development of this section by inducing settlers to come here from the East. In politics a Democrat, he served Amarillo as marshal, or chief of police, for two years, and has ever been active in civic affairs. He married Addie T. Trolinger, also a native of Tennessee, and they became the parents of two children: Harry M.; and Mrs. Harry Hayden, now deceased.

Harry M. Britt was educated in the public schools of Amarillo and the high school, and then entered Amarillo College, where he was graduated at the age of eighteen years. He learned the sheet metal business with his father, and after the latter's retirement succeeded him as its proprietor, and has continued to successfully conduct it to this time. The Britt Sheet Metal Company employs on an average of ten skilled workmen, and is known as the leading concern of its kind here, although since its inception two other business houses of a like nature have been bidders for public favor. The modern plant, equipped with the latest and most highly improved machinery, is located at the corner of Sixth and Taylor streets. Mr. Britt has won recognition as a man of affairs, and is a valued member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Business Men's Association, where his activities have assisted in inaugurating and supporting movements of a nature beneficial to the commercial interests of the city. His fraternal connections are with the Masonic fraternity, where he has passed through several chairs and risen to the Knights Templar degree, the Woodmen of the World, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights and Ladies of Security. With his family, he attends the Christian church.

On January 25, 1904, Mr. Britt was united in marriage with Miss Mary Warren, a native of Tennessee, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Warren, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Britt have had one child: Murray Warren, who was born at Amarillo, November 25, 1905. Mr. Britt has met with fine success in the city of his adoption, where he has lived since infancy, and intends to round out his life here, having a comfortable, modern home at No. 805 Jackson street. He is an excellent type of Texas business man and the prosperity which has attended his activities is but the just reward for a life of industry and perseverance.

DAVID WILLIAM OWEN. In the shopping district of Amarillo, the trading center of the Panhandle, the store which is patronized by the most exclusive woman patrons and which has a reputation all over that section of the state is the D. W. Owen Dry Goods Company, a big store, thoroughly equipped with stocks to satisfy the most discriminating. The head of this establishment, successful according to all the standards of mercantile enterprise, had a thorough and hard apprenticeship. He became self-supporting when hardly out of his teens, was clerk in a Mississippi store for ten years, came to Texas about twenty-five years ago, engaged in business, had to begin all over again after a fire, and finally reached a place among the independent and prosperous merchants of Texas.

David William Owen was born in Itawamba county, Mississippi, August 6, 1864, the fourth in a family of eight children born to Benjamin L. and Arabella (Clifton) Owen. The paternal ancestor was Scotch and the forefathers of D. W. Owen on both his mother's and father's side fought in the colonial and revolutionary wars. The paternal grandfather was Stephen Owen, who was born in 1798. Benjamin L. Owen, the father, was a native of Kentucky, and died in 1871 at the age of forty-five. He was a lawyer by profession and took a prominent part in public affairs in the state of Mississippi, where he served on the bench as district and county judge. He was a Methodist, and in politics a Democrat. During the Civil war he served with the Mississippi Regiment, and two of his brothers, David William and Samuel Sadler Owen, were killed while serving the Confederacy. David William lost his life in the battle of Murfreesboro, while holding the rank of adjutant. Arabella Clifton, the mother, was born in Mississippi and her family was of distinguished activities in that state. She died in 1900 in Kosciusko, Mississippi, at the age of sixty-four.

David W. Owen up to the time he was fifteen years of age attended at more or less regular intervals the public schools of Mississippi. His first salaried position after leaving school was in the Lee county Bank of Tupelo, Mississippi, where he remained eighteen months, and then took a clerkship in a dry goods store at Tupelo. He remained a clerk in Mississippi in the dry goods business for ten years and thus gained a solid experience for his later career. Coming to Texas in 1899, and first locating in Terrell, he engaged in the grocery business there, but at the end of a year and a half a fire swept his stock and establishment and left him with practically nothing. He then entered the employ of W. H. Ellington at Hillsboro, with whom he continued three years, and next moved to Tyler, where he found a partnership with Oscar Price in the dry goods business, the firm being known as Price & Company and lasting under this firm name for three years. He was a successful business man, and after selling out his interests to Price he returned to Hillsboro and entered into partnership with his former employer, Mr. Ellington, in the dry goods business. Hillsboro was his business home for eight years, and then in 1903, having sold out, he came to Amarillo and established the D. W. Owen Dry Goods Company. The business is an exclusive ladies' and children's store, carrying a complete stock of all goods for garments and general dress line for women's wear. The store occupies a ground space of thirty by one hundred and forty feet and has a second story space sixty by thirty feet and eight salespeople are regularly employed besides fitters, cutters, seamstresses, etc. Mr. Owen is also vice president of the Brady-Neely Grocery Company at Amarillo.

Mr. Owen in politics is a Democrat, though never having sought public honors, although he has given five years of service on the Board of Education in Amarillo. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the business men's association, and for the past twenty-five years has been a member and steward of his Methodist church. He was married at Rockdale, Texas, January 25, 1894, to Miss Lulu Gill, a native of Mississippi and a daughter of S. C. Gill. They are the parents of one daughter, Catherine Owen, born August 15, 1896, at Hillsboro and a graduate of the high school at Amarillo. The Owen residence is at 1912 Tyler Street and the store and offices are located at 512 Polk Street.

WILLIAM B. COLLINS. Since 1906 editor and proprietor of the Llano News, Mr. Collins has been versed in all the complex accomplishments of the printers' craft since early youth, and with expert knowledge of his business combines the rarer faculty of successful executive management.

William B. Collins was born at Minden, Louisiana, November 13, 1878. He lived in Louisiana until about fourteen years of age and then came to Llano, Texas, which has been his home since that time. As a boy he attended public schools in Louisiana, and completed his education at Llano, and in the Agricultural & Mechanical College at Bryan, where he pursued a three-years' course. When a small boy he had first been introduced to a printing office, and on leaving college at the age of twenty he became permanently identified with newspaper work. He was a salaried man up to 1906, in which year he bought the Llano News and has since been its sole proprietor. He has an establishment with modern equipment, and issues one of the best semi-weekly newspapers in this part of Texas. He also has the facilities for first-class printing of all kinds, and has a large business in this department. The circulation of the News is not limited by the bounds of Llano county, and the paper is read in every part of the state, and also goes to many of the states of the Union.

Mr. Collins was married in Llano, December 24, 1902, to Miss May Oatman, daughter of John C. Oatman of Llano. They have one son, William B. Jr. Mr. Collins is a member of the Methodist church and has held office in all the bodies of York Rite Masonry from the Blue Lodge to the Commandery, and has also been officially honored in the Knights of Pythias. His fraternal affiliations also include the Woodmen of the World. He is an active member of the Llano Commercial Club, and is a Democrat who has made a close study of local and national affairs. At the present time Mr. Collins is giving public service as a member of the school board. His chief diversions are fishing and baseball, and he is a thoroughly qualified baseball fan.

Mr. Collins is a son of William N. and Nannie H. (Hodges) Collins, both of whom were born in Louisiana.

C. J. Newton

The father was active politically and served as sheriff of his parish when only twenty-one years of age, holding that office until his death, in 1879. He is buried in Minden, Louisiana. His wife, who died in 1906, and is buried at Llano, was a devout member of the Episcopal church. The Llano newspaper man was their only child. Mr. Collins has found Texas to be one of the states of the Union which thoroughly lives up to expectations of it, and is always ready to help promote any enterprise for the continued development of the Lone Star state.

THOMAS BENTON COOPWOOD, M. D. In the present century of expanding horizons in medical science, of marvelous discoveries and undreamed-of surgical skill, the profession seems to have almost reached a time when its accomplishments are no less than miracles. The modern physician and surgeon, taking advantage of every opportunity for knowledge, must often realize with professional elation his great power over disease and disability and be encouraged thereby in his struggles to conquer the strongholds that have not yet been overcome. Possessing the steady nerve, the patience that never tires, the trained understanding gained through his long period of special training and experience, Thomas Benton Coopwood, M. D., of Lockhart, Texas, has met every emergency which has made a demand upon him and has steadily risen to a high position among the physicians of the great Lone Star state.

Doctor Coopwood was named for his father, who in turn was named for the great American statesman, Thomas Hart Benton ("Old Bullion"), who was for thirty years a member of the United States Senate. Thomas Coopwood, the grandfather of Doctor Coopwood, was for years a member of the legal profession in Mississippi, and a partner of the celebrated E. J. Davis, one of the great legists of the Southland. The father of Doctor Coopwood, Thomas Benton Coopwood, was born in Alabama, and as a young man accompanied his parents to Mississippi, where during the early part of the Civil war he became a member of a Mississippi infantry regiment in the Confederate army. Upon receiving his honorable discharge, in 1863, he came to Texas and settled in Camp county, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until January 3, 1879, at which time he moved to Caldwell county. There he passed away July 23d of the same year. He married Minerva Bennett, who still survives him.

Doctor Coopwood received his early education in the public schools of Camp and Caldwell counties, and in the meantime assisted his father in the work of the home farm. Having decided upon the medical profession as his field of endeavor, he prepared thoroughly and eventually entered Tulane University medical school at New Orleans, Louisiana, where he was graduated in 1893, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has continued to be a student, and has taken two post-graduate courses at New Orleans and one at New York. Upon graduating, Doctor Coopwood located in practice at Lockhart, where he has since remained, and in 1903 became associated in practice with Dr. Alonzo A. Ross, this now being considered one of the strongest professional combinations in this part of the state. Doctor Coopwood is a member of the Caldwell County Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. His fraternal connections include membership in Lockhart Lodge, No. 690, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Lockhart Chapter No. 208, R. A. M.; Lockhart Council, No. 11 R. & S. M., San Marcos Commandery, K. T., and Ben Hur Temple A. A. O. N. M. S., and San Antonio Eighteenth degree, A. & A. S. R., of the Masonic fraternity; the Woodmen of the World and the Knights and Ladies of Honor. Doctor Coopwood's comprehensive reading on medical subjects, his deep personal research and his practical experience in his profession have made him a perfect master of the construction and functions of the various parts of the human body, of the changes induced in them by the onslaughts of disease, of the defects cast upon them as the legacy of progenitors, and of the vital capacity remaining in them through all the vicissitudes of human existence, and to this he has added an accurate knowledge of the methods best calculated to abate the ravages of disease and restore that most cherished human possession—health. He has succeeded in his profession because he has realized keenly that he belongs to an organization working for the welfare of humanity; he has attained distinction therein because nature has endowed him bountifully, and he has studiously, carefully and conscientiously improved the talents that have been given to him.

Doctor Coopwood was married in 1898 to Miss Eva Putnam, daughter of Joe Putnam, of Lockhart, and three children have been born to this union: Thomas Benton III., Julia and Joe.

CHARLES J. NEWTON. All of his life, save the first fourteen years, has Charles J. Newton spent in Texas, and few men are to be found in the state today with wider acquaintance of people and conditions than he. Here he has advanced by easy stages from the lower to the top rungs of the ladder of material success, and in the latter years of his life he is living quietly in his handsome home in Terrell, well content to rest after a long period of strenuous, but successful activity as a cattle and ranch man. He began his work as a mere, everyday cow puncher, in the parlance of the range, and from that status his ascent has been sure and steady. At one time, part owner in an immense ranch of seven thousand acres, Mr. Newton with his partners, when they decided to give over ranching activities, cut up the ranch and disposed of it in small parcels to farmers, a process that covered a period of some eight years. It was then that Mr. Newton took up his abode in Terrell, and his residence here has been one of undeniable benefit to the community. He has identified himself with some of the chief industries of the district in a financial way, and has taken upon himself all the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, showing forth the possession of many admirable qualities of heart and mind. He has made this point his home since 1893, and in the passing years has come to number his friends in the community by the hosts.

Charles J. Newton was born in St. Clair county, Alabama, on January 13, 1854, and is the son of Jesse M. Newton and his wife who was Frances Lavina Allen, in her maiden days. The father died on a farm near Sherman, Texas, in 1908, at the age of seventy-nine years. He, too, was born in St. Clair county, Alabama, where his father had settled on his arrival from England, and where he gave his life to the teaching profession. He had been born in London and there married his wife, who was of a family of the name Morgan. He died in St. Clair county, where he had reared a large family of thirteen children.

Jesse M. Newton, the father of Charles J. Newton of this review acquired his early education mainly from the instructions of his father and in the atmosphere of the home, which exhaled many of the finer qualities. He was nearing his twenty-second birthday when he enlisted for service in the Mexican war and served in General Taylor's command along the Rio Grande. He had the distinction of being the first man to scale the walls at Monterey when that city was captured by the United States troops. With the advent of the Civil war, he promptly became an enrolling officer for the Confederacy in Alabama. He was engaged in the merchandise business at that time, and his property was utterly destroyed by marauding military forces, so that when the war was over, he, like many another southerner, found himself dependent mainly upon his own exertions for the means of a living. In 1869 he thought to better his straitened circumstances by emigration, and in that year he came to Texas, locating at Sherman. There he spent many successful years engaged in the buying of cotton, and a few years before his death he moved to a fine farm he had come to own, there spending the remaining season of his rather eventful life. In his later years he was prone to a rather quiet and unassuming interest in affairs of a public nature, and manifested a wholesome activity in those matters. He was an uncompromising Democrat, and he died in the membership of the Christian church.

It was in his native county, in Alabama, that Mr. Newton married Frances Lavinia Allen, a daughter of United States Senator Allen, of that state. Mrs. Newton yet survives her husband, at the age of eighty-two years. The children born to them were as follows: John, who died in Sherman, leaving a family; Mary E., the wife of W. B. Munson, the well known Texas cattle king of Denison; Charles J., of this review; and Miss Jessie, a resident of Denison.

Such education as Charles J. Newton secured came to him mainly from the common schools. He was never of a studious nature as applied to books, but was a quick observer,—a faculty that has gone far to make up for his lack of book learning. In the school room as a boy he was more apt to shirk his work than to perform it with any semblance of interest, and, indeed, up to the age of about twenty-one, he manifested little active interest in anything of the nature of real work. In the early seventies he became an employe of the Sherman post office, and he made himself an object of considerable attention as a result of his wide acquaintance and the astonishing ease with which he retained the names and addresses of the majority of the residents of Grayson county.

In 1874 Mr. Newton had his first taste of ranging service, when he hired out as a cow puncher for Woodward & O'Shea, down on the Rio Frio river, in the vicinity of San Antonio. In those days ranging was not the simple task it has come to be in more recent years. Indians in plenty, and usually on mischief bent, were to be reckoned with by the man who valued his life, and the cattlemen of that day went about their business armed to the teeth, one might almost say. However that may be, it is a fact that a rifle, pistol and usually an immense bowie knife, made up a good part of the accoutrement of the cowboy of the day, for the man who encountered Indians had but little chance for his life, unless he was fully armed. During the first few months of Mr. Newton's life on the ranch, it so happened that one day he left the camp without arms. Riding out a short distance he came upon a pile of ponies that had been recently killed by Indians. He drew the arrows from their bodies, thinking to retain them as souvenirs and had gone but a short distance when the hairraising Indian whoop greeted his ears, and he saw his enemy galloping toward him on the wings of the wind. How to save himself from his unhappy plight was a problem, and all he could do was to put the spurs to his pony and make it race for the camp. The pony was jaded to begin with, and it soon became evident that the Indian had the better end of the argument, when Mr. Newton chanced one glance back to see how near his end might be. He was relieved, but mightily angry, to perceive that his foe was none other than a German cowboy of his own camp, who was having a bit of fun at the expense of the new puncher. Pranks of this order were not uncommon among the gay and carefree range riders, and they usually resulted in the most spectacular and pyrotechnic display of profanity on the part of the victim.

Mr. Newton drove the old Chisholm trail for his employers to Fort Sill, where cattle were furnished for the Comanche Indians whose reservation was near there. Later he went to the Colberts just above Denison and served them as a camp cook and cowboy, while rounding up cattle on their ranch on the Washita River in the vicinity of Madil, Oklahoma. He shipped out of Colbert station on the M., K. & T. Railroad, and when, in 1883, he went to the firm of Gunter & Munson, he made possible the career in the cattle business which he later realized, and which made him known well into the Choctaw Nation, as well as in North Texas. He worked for that firm, and later for the firm of Munson Brothers, the successors of Gunter & Munson, and finally became a part owner with the Munson Brothers, and having entire charge of the interests of the firm on the range ten miles west of McAlester, where they operated for some years.

Long before statehood came to their territory, Munson Brothers & Newton returned to Texas, and in Rockwall county they purchased a ranch of seven thousand acres. Here they carried on business along the most successful and extensive lines until 1896, when they felt themselves able to retire from the stress of range life, and shipped out their last bunch of cattle. In 1894 they had conceived the idea of cutting up the ranch and selling it to the farmers on time, a process which they did not complete until as late as 1912, when the last parcel of land was disposed of.

About the time when Mr. Newton withdrew from activities in the cattle business, he moved to Terrell, and here took up his abode. He has identified himself conspicuously with the business interests of the place and among other things, is a director and stockholder in the First National Bank of this town. He is also a heavy investor in properties in Oil City, Oklahoma, where a gas and oil field was recently opened up. As a citizen of Terrell he has given his service freely in public capacities, having done duty as a councilman, and being elected to membership on the first board of commissioners, after the commission form of government, of which he was the staunch advocate, came into effect in Terrell. In his capacity on the board he had charge of the streets of the city, and he encouraged the bond issue for the extensive paving improvement which is now being carried forward in the city.

On January 16, 1878, Mr. Newton was married in Grayson county, Texas, to Miss Frances Virginia Stewart, a daughter of W. A. Stewart, a farmer, who came to Texas from Trigg county, Kentucky, after the Civil war. Mrs. Newton was one of the four children of her parents, the others being W. C., of Sherman; W. O., of Denison, Texas; and Edward, who is deceased.

To Mr. and Mrs. Newton were born five daughters, but three, Sallie, Alline and Lavina Frances died in infancy; Hattie, the wife of S. O. Latimer, is a resident of Port Arthur, Texas, where Mr. C. J. Newton has large interests, and the mother of two daughters; Mary Virginia, and Louise. The other child of the Newtons is Jonnie Edna, who is married to W. A. Wilson, and resides in Waco, Texas. She has three sons Charles A., W. A. Jr., and "Jack."

Despite the rough-and-ready existence that Mr. Newton lived upon the ranges for so many years, with the exposure to the elements and other hardships incident to such a life, he has never given up to the usage of alcoholic stimulants, and has yet to learn the taste of intoxicants. He is a man who has the finest capacity for making and retaining friends, and is one of the most popular men in the community. He has a fine home with attractive and well kept grounds on a prominent residence street in Terrell, and also has a winter home in Port Arthur, where he and his wife spend much of their time. Both are members of the Christian church of Terrell.

ALBERT PIKE FOUTE. The Boren, Stewart & Company, of which Mr. Foute is vice president, is the oldest wholesale grocery house in Dallas, and enjoys a mammoth business all over the southwest. The business occupies an entire square of ground at the corner of Lemar and Jackson streets. The original concern was established in the early days of Dallas as a railroad center and metropolis, and was among the oldest and largest in the entire state.

Albert Pike Foute, who has been identified with the larger commercial affairs of Texas for a number of years, was born in Memphis, Tennessee, November 24, 1868, a son of Judge Green P. and Jane (Skipwith) Foute, of Memphis. The father was an attorney and for several years served as judge of the criminal court at Memphis. Mr. Foute's mother was a great-niece of Thomas Jefferson, and by reason of her ancestry she was also a member of the Daughters of the Revolution. General Albert Pike was sponsor at the baptism of this son of Judge Foute and wife, and the Dallas wholesale grocer bears the honored name of his sponsor and the friend of the family.

Mr. Foute spent his early years in Memphis, and on leaving the public schools of that city he got his introduction to business life as a messenger boy with the Western Union Telegraph Company. This occupation continued for one year and then, in 1879, he finally came to Texas, locating at Sherman, where he entered Austin College and was a student in that well known institution for three years. On ending his college days he obtained a clerkship with a dry goods house, with which he remained about one year. He was then taken into the Texas force of R. G. Dun & Company, and remained with this well known commercial rating firm for two years up to 1889.

After this experience with Dun & Company he joined the clerical department of Waples-Platter Grocery Company at Denison, Texas. After one year at this place he was transferred in the employ of the same company, as manager to Gainesville, Texas. Subsequently he was made manager of the Fort Worth house for the same company, and continued as manager at Fort Worth for sixteen years. In this time Mr. Foute had become recognized as one of the ablest merchants and business men of North Texas, and in 1909, with a group of associates he bought out the old incorporated firm of Boren, Stewart & Co. at Dallas. Since then he has been vice president and one of the active heads of this old and important concern. Boren, Stewart & Co. might be considered one of the corner-stones of the great wholesale and jobbing business of Dallas, and its business history is a chapter of thorough integrity and splendid management with a trade which has been on a steady increase from year to year.

Mr. Foute was married June 19, 1890, to Miss Willie Howard, a daughter of Frank and Fannie Howard, of Marshall, Texas. They are the parents of three children, namely: Frances Howard, born June 16, 1891; Margaret Skipwith, born January 23, 1895; and Alberta Potter, born December 21, 1901.

JAMES P. ATTEBERY. A scion of one of the well-known and influential pioneer families of northeastern Texas, Mr. Attebery bears a name that has been prominently and worthily linked with the social and industrial development and upbuilding of this favored section of the Lone Star state, and here he has maintained his home from the time of his nativity to the present. He is one of the representative agriculturists and stock-growers of Hunt county, is a lawyer of marked ability and definite achievement, though not at the present time actively engaged in the work of his profession, and he has served as county attorney of Hunt county, besides which he was a candidate for nomination in the Democratic primaries in 1912 for the position of representative of Hunt county in the state legislature. He is a man of broad and well fortified views in regard to governmental and economic policies and his "platform" at the time of his appearing as a candidate for nomination for the legislature was tersely stated and gave evidence of his loyalty and his practical views in regard to measures of importance to the people of his native state.

Though defeated by a very small majority, in the primary election, his views met with distinctive approval and there is every reason to believe that should he desire to come forward for nomination to the same position he will gain the strongest of popular support, for he is essentially and emphatically a man of the people, even as he has the high esteem of those who know him best and among whom his life has been passed.

Mr. Attebery was born in Fannin county, Texas, on the old homestead farm near the village of Celeste, the place of his nativity being within the limits of Hunt county, which was organized a number of years after his birth, which here occurred in 1863. He is a son of Joseph J. and Mary A. (Thomas) Attebery, the former a native of Kentucky. Joseph J. Attebery was an infant at the time of the family removal from Kentucky to Missouri, where he was reared and educated and where he continued to reside until 1844, when he came to the Republic of Texas, which was admitted to statehood in the American Union in the following year. He was one of the pioneer settlers of what is now Hunt county, and he obtained a large tract of land near the present village of Celeste, where he was engaged in farming and stockraising until the inception of the Civil war, when he promptly tendered his aid in defense of the cause of the Confederate states, by enlisting in a Texas volunteer regiment. He served during virtually the entire period of the war and took part in numerous engagements, in which he proved himself a valiant and faithful soldier. After the close of the war he returned to his old homestead near Celeste and there he still resides, venerable in years and honored as one of the sterling pioneers of this section of the state. He is a man who has always done his part in the furtherance of measures projected for the general good of the community, is a stalwart Democrat in his political adherence, and is one of the substantial citizens of the county that has long been his home and the stage of his well directed activities. His devoted wife was summoned to the life eternal in 1909. She was a daughter of Judge Jesse Thomas, who was one of the earliest settlers in Fannin county, and who had the distinction of being the first chief magistrate or county judge of that county after it was organized. He was also the first justice of the peace in the township of Honey Grove and was one of the most influential and honored citizens of the county.

James P. Attebery, the immediate subject of this review, gained his earlier educational discipline in the common schools of the pioneer days and supplemented this by an effective course in old Savoy College, at Savoy, Fannin county, an institution of high rank at the time, its executive head having been Professor Halsell, who was a man of fine attainments and one of the foremost educators of his day in this section of the state. Under his effective tutorship were educated many young men who later attained to distinction in public, professional and business life in Texas.

James P. Attebery was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm and has never severed his allegiance to the great basic industries of agriculture and stock-growing, although he has maintained his home in the city of Greenville since 1888. He is the owner of two finely improved and valuable farms in Hunt county, the same being eligibly located a few miles south of Greenville and being devoted mainly to diversified agriculture. Mr. Attebery also gives considerable attention to the raising of high-grade live stock, especially Jersey cattle, and he is one of the progressive and successful representatives of these lines of industry in northeastern Texas,—one who is enthusiastic in the promotion of high standards of operation and who has full appreciation of the splendid resources of this favored section of the Lone Star commonwealth. He also gives attention to the buying and selling of farm properties and city realty, and this enterprise, with the supervision of his farms, demands the major part of his time since his retirement from the practice of his profession.

Mr. Attebery studied law under the able preceptorship of E. B. Perkins, a prominent member of the Greenville bar and now general attorney for Texas of the Cotton Belt Railroad. He was admitted to the bar in 1888 and forthwith engaged in active general practice at Greenville. In 1890 he was elected county attorney, and he served in this office one term, in which he gave a most effective and acceptable administration. He retired from the practice of his profession and has since given his attention to the supervision of his farms and other real estate interests.

Giving an unqualified allegiance to the Democratic party, Mr. Attebery has been an active and efficient exponent of its principles and policies and an influential factor in its local councils. As previously stated in this context, he was a candidate for nomination for representative of Hunt county in the state legislature in the Democratic primaries in his county in 1912. He entered the field only a short time before the primary election and had made no preliminary campaign of more than desultory order. He was defeated for nomination, but his party and the people of his county will do well to make him a representative in a future legislature, for his fidelity and his practical ability well fit him for this office. In advancing his name for consideration in the primaries Mr. Attebery briefly presented his platform under the following heads: "1st. Change the new school law, so that country schools can teach all the grades. 2d. Change tax laws so that the millionaire will have to pay his share of taxes and exempt a man's wagon, buggy, team, and tools of trade from taxes, and also five hundred to one thousand dollars on every homestead. 3d. Reform court procedure, so that about one-half time and expenses of courts will be saved. 4th. No change in city charter without the vote of the people. 5th. Make holder of mortgages and not the landowners pay taxes on the mortgages. 6th. All laws should be made for the benefit of the common people, who constitute over ninety-five per cent of the entire population. 7th. I favor an eight-hour law and an employers' liability act, fair to both sides."

Mr. and Mrs. Attebery are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and he is affiliated with the local organizations of the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. In addition to his farm property he is the owner of valuable realty in Greenville, including his attractive residence, and the home is known for its cordial hospitality.

Mr. and Mrs. Attebery have three children,—James C., Annie Kathryn, and William B.

JUDGE ALFRED H. WILLBERN. After a number of years in successful business as a merchant, Mr. Willbern was chosen by his fellow citizens of Llano county as one of the administrators of county government in the position of commissioner, and following his conduct of that office he was elected county judge, and has been thrice re-elected to that large responsibility. Judge Willbern belongs to one of the old families of Llano county, and concerning his own career it may be stated that he started out when a boy, earning his first money at shearing sheep, and his success is the result of his own industry, and good judgment.

Alfred H. Willbern was born in Travis county, Texas, November 28, 1873, and has been a Texan all his life. Since the age of thirteen his home has been in Llano county. His father was the late Ferdinand Columbus Willbern, a native of Tennessee, where he was born in 1827, and as a young man came to Texas. A farmer and stock raiser, he was also for some time a merchant. During the Civil war he served in the Union army and fought in many engagements of the war. He was an influential factor in local politics, and held several offices at the hands of his fellow citizens. Fraternally he was a Mason and Odd Fellow. His death occurred in December, 1903, at the age of seventy-six, and he is buried in Llano county. The maiden name of his wife was Sarah J. Kerr, who was born in Georgia, and they were married in Texas in 1852. She died in 1907 at the age of seventy-three, and her body now rests at the side of her husband on their old homestead in Willbern's Glenn in Llano county. Of their eleven children, Judge Willbern was the tenth.

Judge Willbern received his early education in the public schools of Texas, but at the age of fifteen left school in order to take up the battle of life. It was at that time that he earned his first money as a sheep shearer, and then for several years worked on a ranch. His salary as a ranch hand was twelve dollars and a half a month at first, and by saving his earnings he bought a horse and saddle, which he considered a necessary equipment for his career. When about twenty-one years old he took a clerkship in a store in Llano, following that for about three years, after which he bought an interest in a mercantile establishment at Babyhead, in Llano county. He was proprietor of his business there for about ten years, and finally sold out and returned to Llano in order to devote all his time to the official responsibilities which in the meantime had been placed upon his shoulders. Two years before moving to Llano he had been elected a county commissioner, and was then elected county judge, in which he is now serving his fourth term. The office of county judge in Llano county also carries with it the duties of county superintendent of instruction, ex-officio.

At Click, in Llano county, in November, 1899, Judge Willbern married Miss Mary C. Longbottom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Longbottom, formerly from the state of Arkansas. The three children, two daughters and one son, of their marriage are Damon, Ora Lee and Ila May.

Mrs. Willbern is an active member of the Methodist church, and to that denomination Judge Willbern gives his preference, although he favors all religious works without discrimination. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World, and in politics is one of the local Democratic leaders. For a time in his earlier career he served as justice of the peace and held the office of postmaster at Babyhead for ten years. Judge Willbern at the present time is engaged in the study of law, and has always been fond of good reading, and is one of the well informed citizens of the state.

SAMUEL E. HARGON. Since 1910, county and district clerk of Llano county, Mr. Hargon has a record of eighteen years as a teacher of Llano county schools. He is a man of high education, stands as one of the most popular citizens, and belongs to that class whom President Wilson has called "forward looking men." While he is known and esteemed by hundreds of his former pupils as a teacher, his record as an educator becomes insignificant when compared with that of his father, one of the most venerable school masters of Texas, who for half a century was identified with the work of the schoolroom in this state. Samuel E. Hargon was born in Fayette county, Texas, July 6, 1869, the fifth in a family of eight children born to Patrick Henry and Frances (Townsend) Hargon. His father, who now lives retired in Llano county, was a native of Mississippi, who when a young man came to Texas and having both the mental qualifications and the particular ability of the real teacher, he took up the work of his profession in this state, and followed it continuously for a period of more than fifty years. He continued teaching until he was eighty years old, and at one time was county superintendent of schools in Llano county. He has always taken much interest in politics and in religion is a Methodist. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and whether known as a former teacher or as a citizen, his name is held in high esteem. During the Civil war he enlisted from Texas, and was a member of a Texas regiment through the greater part of the struggle between the states, among other engagements in which he participated being the battle at Fort Pillow. His wife, who is still living, was born in Texas, in which state they were unmarried, and she is a devout member of the Methodist church.

Samuel E. Hargon was well educated during his youth, attending the grade and high schools, and at the age of nineteen secured his certificate and taught his first term of school. He continued in that vocation with exceptional success for nineteen years, and with the exception of one year, all this time was spent as a teacher of Llano county schools. For eight years he was connected with the schools in the city of Llano and during three years of the eight he served as city superintendent of schools. In 1910 he was elected district and county clerk and by re-election in 1912 is filling out his second term.

In Llano in 1893 Mr. Hargon married Miss Lillie B. Swanson, daughter of J. A. Swanson, of Llano county. The ten children, five sons and five daughters, born to their marriage are mentioned as follows: Rex, Amanda and Eddie, all deceased; Myrtle, Norine, Weldon, Lella, Pat and Glenn, twins, Swanson, and Samuel T. The family belong to the Methodist church, and fraternally Mr. Hargon is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of the Maccabees, and the Modern Order of Pretorians. He also belongs to the Llano Commercial Club. He has been one of the workers in local politics for a number of years and his name as a Democrat is known beyond the borders of Llano county. For a number of years he served as a member of the county board of school examiners. A man of varied interests and accomplishments, Mr. Hargon is especially fond of music, and has considerable talent in that direction himself. Mrs. Hargon is known to many as a successful music teacher. Mr. Hargon acted as instructor to the band at Llano and in other places at various times. Among other amusements he is fond of a game of baseball, and in his home finds good books to be his most satisfying companions.

MOSES JAMES WHEAT, superintendent for the Marshall Mill and Elevator Company at Marshall, Texas, belongs to one of the pioneer families of the county. Mr. Wheat was born in Harrison county, Texas, four miles west of Marshall, in the year 1858, son of William L. and Naomi (Beaty) Wheat.

William L. Wheat, a native of Macon, Georgia, was at the age of four years taken by his parents to Tuskegee, Alabama, where the family home was established and where he was reared. In 1842 he emigrated to the Republic of Texas and took up his residence at Marshall in Harrison county, which was organized in that year. Here he at first engaged in the grocery business, but a year or two later, on account of failing health, he moved to what became known as the Wheat place, about four miles west of Marshall. Here he spent the rest of his life. Previous to the Civil war he was one of the large and successful planters of East Texas and owned many slaves. Far and wide his home was noted for its hospitality and neighborliness. His generosity was boundless, and it was one of the pleasures of his life to be of financial or other assistance to a neighbor or friend. During the war period he served the Confederacy as Commissary Officer. He died June 20, 1892. His wife, Naomi (Beaty) Wheat, was born in Tennessee, and died in Harrison county, Texas, November 4, 1909. At the time of her death she was the oldest inhabitant of the county. She was a member of a still earlier family here than the Wheats. Her father was John B. Beaty, who came from Tennessee to the Republic of Texas in 1837 and settled in San Augustine county, from whence the following year he moved to Harrison county. The land on which he settled, and which became known as the Beaty place, is two and a half miles north of Marshall. To him belonged the distinction of helping to lay off the town of Marshall. He was a large planter, and he lived to a ripe old age. His death occurred in 1909.

Several members of both the Beaty and Wheat families enlisted at Marshall in the Confederate States army, and served throughout the war.

Moses J. Wheat was reared on the Wheat plantation, and was educated in private schools at Marshall, which city has always been his home, and for a number of years he has been superintendent for the Marshall Mill and Elevator Company.

He and his wife, whose maiden name was Miss Maud Turner and who is a native of Texas, are the parents of one child, a little daughter, Naomi.

ROBERT TERRY FORSYTH. The architectural beauty of the city of Denison is the result of the best efforts of a group of men of artistic taste and training, who have labored faithfully in transforming an ungainly, half-formed community into a city of which its citizens may take a full degree of pride. Years of experience and a wealth of ideas have been brought into this work, and the services of a number of the most able architects in the state have been enlisted. Prominent among these is found Robert Terry Forsyth, monuments to whose skill and appreciation of the beautiful will be found in buildings all over the city. Mr. Forsyth is a native Texan, born at McKinney, Collin county, November 16, 1882, a son of James Alexander and Carrie D. Forsyth. The father was born in Michigan, from which state he migrated to Ohio in young manhood, and there married, the mother being a native of the Buckeye state. They came overland to Texas in 1878 and settled at McKinney, where James A. Forsyth has continued to be successfully engaged as a contractor and builder to the present time. Of the six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth, four are now living, Robert Terry being the second in order of birth.

Robert T. Forsyth attended the public schools of his native city, and in his boyhood displayed natural mechanical ability and inclination. With his father he learned the trade of carpenter, and like the elder man he gradually drifted into contracting and building, which he followed in the city of Dallas with some success until 1910, in that year coming to Denison. During his spare time he had made a study of architecture, and when the opportunity presented itself he began work along this line, subsequently finding it so profitable and prolific a field that he gave up contracting and concentrated his energies upon the new line of endeavor. He now has offices at No. 425½ West Main street, and is recognized as one of the foremost men in his calling in the city. It may be said that Denison has developed an architecture worthy of the name only within the past decade, this coming as a result of diversified influences, directed by an increased appreciation and demand for the artistic in the exterior aspects of the city. Mr. Forsyth's contribution to this development may be found in some of the most beautiful structures here, including the National Bank of Denison, Texas, a two-story stone bank and office building; the First Christian Church, a two-story and basement brick structure, the residence of E. H. Lingo, a beautiful two-story frame home, and numerous others in this city, as well as the Caddo National Bank, a stone structure at Caddo, Oklahoma. Mr. Forsyth stands high with his professional fraternity as well as with the public from which he draws his patronage.

On June 6, 1908, Mr. Forsyth was married at Sulphur Springs, Texas, to Miss Eula Morris, daughter of Henry and Annie Morris, the former of whom died in 1899 in Hopkins county, Texas, where he had been engaged in farming for some years, while the latter is still living at Dallas. Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth have one son, James Henry, born July 30, 1913. The family home is at No. 1226 West Woodard street.

Mr. Forsyth is liberal in his political views, giving his support rather to the man whom he deems best fitted for the office than to the representative of any particular party. He belongs to the Loyal Order of Moose and the Chamber of Commerce, at Denison, and to the National Protective League at Dallas. Personally he is popular with a wide circle of acquaintances because of his genial and sociable manner. He is a great lover of hunting and fishing and his vacations are generally passed with rod or gun, and it is seldom that he returns without some trophy of the forest or stream.

EUGENE J. DALRYMPLE. Having served four terms as mayor of Llano, Mr. Dalrymple is one of the oldest and best known members of the Llano county bar, having been active in his profession and in public affairs for the past twenty years.

Eugene J. Dalrymple is a Texan, a native of Georgetown, where he was born December 26, 1872. He was the oldest of five children born to William Tate, and Alice (Houghton) Dalrymple, both of whom were born in Texas, and represented old families of the state. The father, who spent all his active career in this state, and whose death occurred in 1896 when about fifty years of age, was prominent as a lawyer and in politics, and held a number of important offices. During the war he served the last few years as a Confederate soldier, and among other engagements in which he participated was the battle of Mansfield. He was prominent in Masonic circles. The mother now has her home in the city of Llano, and has long been one of the active workers in the Presbyterian church of this city.

Mayor Dalrymple left his studies in the Llano high school when about nineteen years old to enter his father's law office in preparation for a practical career. He continued until his admission to the bar in 1894, and in the same year was appointed deputy district and county clerk for Llano county. Three years in this position was followed by his election as county attorney, and he proved a very capable official in the county's legal department, and held the office for four years. He then retired to private practice and has since had his offices in Llano. On June 14, 1900, in Llano he married Miss Jessie Alexander, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Alexander, of Llano county. They are the parents of four children, three sons and one daughter, of whom Frank and Eugene are deceased, and the other two are Tate and Emily Alice. Mr. and Mrs. Dalrymple are both members of the Methodist church, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge and with the Modern Woodmen of America. He is an active Democrat and on the Democratic ticket has been four times elected to the office of mayor. Outside of his law practice and his official duties, he is a devotee of all the wholesome amusements and pleasures of life, is fond of hunting and fishing, and is one of the best informed baseball fans in Llano county.

To Mr. Dalrymple the state of Texas represents the finest part of the world, and he finds daily inspirations in the vastness of its material resources and the opportunities which the state offers to all men of industry and moderate ability who have the will and determination to succeed.

JOSEPH NORMAN GLASS, New Boston, Bowie county, Texas, was born in this county, about two miles south of the present town of New Boston, in 1874, and belongs to the pioneer family of Glasses well known in this locality.

John C. Glass, a native of Tennessee, of Irish ancestry, came to Texas, then a part of Mexico, in 1831. He settled in what is now Bowie county, about two miles south of the present county seat, New Boston, and here passed the rest of his life and died, his death occurring in 1859. He obtained a headright under the Texas Republic, and he and his brothers became large land owners, not only in Bowie county, but also in other parts of Texas. Much of the Bowie county land is still owned by members of this family. The Glasses are a strong race of people, physically and mentally, and stand well among their fellow citizens. Hiram Glass, the distinguished railroad attorney, now of Austin, Texas, was born and reared in Titus county and is a member of this family.

Joseph H. Glass, the father of the subject of this sketch, was a son of John C. Glass, and it was on the latter's farm that both Joseph H. and Joseph Norman Glass were born. Joseph H. was born in 1851 and died in 1882, having spent all his life as a farmer in Bowie county. His wife, Susan H. (Norman) Glass, was born in Meridian, Mississippi. She died in Bowie county in 1902.

Joseph N. Glass was reared and received his schooling in Bowie county. He is a successful farmer, and besides owning a good farm of 300 acres near the place where he was born, he has a large plantation of 2,000 acres on the Red River. For several years his home has been in New Boston.

Mr. Glass is married and to him and his wife have been given five children: Norma, Carrie Belle, John C., Binyon, and Addie Lou. Mrs. Glass was formerly Miss Clara Chance and is a native of Louisiana.

HENRY R. MCINNIS. Elected in November, 1912, to the office of county attorney of Llano county, Mr. McInnis is a veteran lawyer, with more than forty-five years of experience, is a man of old southern antecedents and possesses in himself many of the fine qualities which have made the southern gentleman conspicuous. Few members of the Texas bar are so genial and popular as Mr. McInnis, who has more than a local reputation as an anecdotist, and at the same time has a deep undercurrent of serious purpose which has on many different occasions given his services a beneficial value to the public. Mr. McInnis has been a resident of Llano for the past twenty-five years, has enjoyed a place of leadership in the local bar, and served as county attorney for one term during his earlier residence, his recent election having repeated this honor bestowed upon his ability as a lawyer and citizen.

Henry R. McInnis was born at Yazoo City, Mississippi, November 22, 1841. During his youth he attended both public and private schools in his native state, and later was a student in Oakland College in Claiborne county, Mississippi. He had nearly completed his course at that institution when the war broke out, and this disturbed all normal existence, and he was one of the young men of Mississippi who enlisted in the Confederate army as a member of the Thirty-seventh Mississippi Infantry. He went through the war until its close, and during that time was captured and held a prisoner for six months. During the last year of the war he was sergeant major in his regiment. A veteran soldier he returned to his native state and took up the reading of law, until admitted to the bar in 1867. His first practice was in Newton, Mississippi, where he remained about a year and for a short time was in practice in New Orleans. After that he returned to his home state, locating at Winona, where he continued until 1886, which was the year of his removal to Texas.

In New Orleans on January 30, 1868, Mr. McInnis married Miss Belle Stewart, a native of Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Her death occurred in Winona, Mississippi, in 1883, at about the age of thirty-eight years. She was one of the active members in the Methodist church, and a woman of very strong character. Her six children, three sons and three daughters, are mentioned as follows: Mary, deceased; Frank H., who is married and lives in Oklahoma City; William R., who is married and a resident of Bangs, Texas; Duncan C., who has a home of his own in Mississippi; Ella B., and Carrie are both at home. Mr. McInnis is a member of the Presbyterian church, and is affiliated with the Masonic Order. In politics a Democrat, he has for many years been a participant in political affairs, both local and state.

During his residence in Mississippi, he served four terms as mayor of Winona, and at one time came within seven votes of being elected to the legislature out of a total vote of twelve hundred. In Texas he was sent from Llano county as a member of the Twenty-seventh legislature, and during that time was instrumental in getting passed a special bill for the care of the deaf, dumb and blind, for which unfortunates up to that time no provision has been made by this great state. His service in the legislature lasted for one hundred and twenty days, and during that time he missed roll-call but twice, and gave his studious attention to every bill that was presented during that session. As a man who has given much of his life to the learned pursuits of law, with its office confinement, Mr. McInnis finds diversion in camp life, and is very fond of the out-of-doors. As to Texas, in his judgment the resources of the state are unsurpassed, and he considers the people more hospitable and generous-hearted than any other people on earth. He is especially fond of Llano county, a region which combines all the advantages of a genial and ideal climate with great and diversified material resources. Mr. McInnis married for his second wife in Llano, Mrs. Anna Winder, a daughter of a prominent Texan, Judge Houghton, of Georgetown.

FRANK A. BOSSY. Coming from England, where he was born, at the age of seventeen, Frank A. Bossy became identified with the cattle business in south Texas, and after about a year came to Fort Worth and now for about twenty years has held the responsible post of cashier of the George W. Saunders Commission Company of that city. This company has its office in the Live Stock Exchange Building in north Fort Worth, and is one of the largest enterprises of its kind operating in the live stock commercial center of the Southwest.

Frank A. Bossy was born on the Isle of Jersey, in England, September 7, 1876, a son of F. A. and Anne (LeGresley) Bossy. His education was received chiefly in the Victoria College of England, and after graduating in 1893 he immigrated to America and landed in Texas, first locating in Guadalupe county. After one year there he came to Fort Worth and took his present position, and has grown in ability and usefulness in proportion as the company has expanded. Mr. Bossy handles all the moneys which the George W. Saunders Live Stock Commission Company use in buying and selling cattle, and that amounts to a very large sum each year. Mr. Bossy enjoys the full confidence of all stockmen, who operate through the Fort Worth market and stands high in the estimation of his employers.

He married Miss Ellen Jary, a daughter of Herbert Jary, of Seguin, Texas. Their three children are: Reginald Arthur, born July 18, 1903; Herbert Grant, born July 23, 1901; and Kathryn Louise, born July 21, 1910. Mr. Bossy has membership in the Knights of Pythias Order and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

OLIVER H. BUTLER. The mercantile interests of Carthage are well represented by Oliver H. Butler, who now conducts the leading establishment of its kind in the city, and who has been a resident of this place since 1899. A man of industry, energy and excellent business ability, he has been the architect of his own fortunes and his career has been characterized by constant endeavor and steady advancement. Mr. Butler is a native of Decatur county, Georgia, where he was born in April, 1853, and is a son of Jacob and Mary (Herring) Butler, and a grandson of Charles Butler, whose life was passed in North Carolina.

Jacob Butler was born in the Old North state, April 30, 1812, and was there married to Miss Mary Herring, who had been born in the same locality in 1808. In 1835 the family removed to Georgia, where Mr. Butler engaged in agricultural pursuits and at a subsequent time became ordinary of the town of Bainbridge. He died in 1853, while the mother survived him for a long period, passing away in 1893. The children of Jacob and Mary Butler were as follows: Nathan, who died in Arkansas, and left a family; Lucien, who met his death on the battlefield of Gettysburg, while wearing the Confederate gray; Louise, who married W. A. Chester and lives in Georgia; Charles H. and Lewis, also of that state; Mary, who is the widow of Captain Platt, of Thomasville, Georgia; Catherine, who married Moses Noxwell of Georgia; and Georgia, also a resident of that state. Four of these sons were Confederate soldiers during the Civil War.

Oliver H. Butler was reared in his native county, where he received the training of the home farm and the education of the country schools. He came into Texas alone in 1872, with no objective point, and earned his first dollar at old Hico, in Comanche county, as a clerk. Later he drifted back into Eastern Texas, and stopped in Harden county for a time, choosing such employment as suited him and making some acquaintance which eventually led to an expression of public confidence in his behalf. In 1877 he was elected district and county clerk of the county, and after spending two years in office accepted a position as bookkeeper with A. W. Carlyle, a timber and tie contractor. Mr. Butler first engaged in merchandise on his own account at Kountze and later had stores at San Augustine and Nacogdoches, from which latter place he went to Lufkin in 1892. There he established a dry goods business and made it a leading house of its kind before he sold it to D. A. Singleton in 1899. In that year he came to Carthage and opened a comparatively small dry goods store, adopted the cash method of business, met the demands of the public with his stock and prices, and has built up a semi-department house with a $60,000 stock. His ladies' department, his gents' furnishings and his dry goods are conspicuous for their distinctive features and give the buying public an opportunity of selecting right at home, the business appealing only to the retail trade. Mr. Butler has had various other business interests, and at this time is a director of the First National Bank of Carthage. He is a Democrat in his political views, and so favorably is he known to the general public that he was urged to permit his name to be used as a candidate for mayoralty honors at the recent reincorporation of the city.

Mr. Butler was first married February 9, 1878, at Kountze, Texas, to Miss Johnnie Montgomery, whose father was a lawyer and died during the Civil War as a Confederate soldier from Tennessee, and in a Federal prison. Mrs. Butler died at Lufkin, Texas, in 1897, having been the mother of the following children: Olive, who is the wife of A. E. Graves, of Port Arthur, Texas; Carl, a cosmopolitan rambler, who served under Madero against the Diaz regime in Mexico, and helped to win the battle of Juarez; Cornelia P., who died as Mrs. E. L. Frazier, in 1909, and left a daughter, Dorothy; and Miss Hattie, a graduate of Ouachita College, Arkansas, and of the Dallas Conservatory of Music. On January 11, 1899, Mr. Butler was married to Miss Mary Daniel, of Magnolia, Arkansas, daughter of Z. L. Daniel, who came as an old settler from Virginia, served for a time as sheriff, became a real estate dealer and is now a leading citizen of Magnolia. He married Miss Nannie DeVaughn, and Mrs. Butler is the only one living of the three children born of their union.

STEPHEN RAINIER. During a residence in the state of Texas of nearly thirty years, Mr. Rainier has developed a large and important business, and for the past seventeen years has been one of the principal dealers in the staple products of the country at Llano. He is a business man from the ground up, with long and thorough experience, and the success which he has won in the field of commerce he has at various times used for the benefit of his community, and is one of the civic leaders in Llano county.

Stephen D. Rainier was born in Camden, New Jersey, August 23, 1862. His early life was spent in his native state, during which time he attended the grammar and high schools, and between his school days and the age of twenty-one he remained at home and helped work the paternal acres in New Jersey. At the age of twenty-one he came to Texas, and the first year was spent in San Antonio in looking over the field and preparing for his permanent undertaking. He then moved to Burnet, where he was employed on a salary in the cotton, hide, and wool business. He became thoroughly familiar with all the details of that trade, and on January 1, 1896, established a business of his own at Llano. He is one of the most extensive dealers in cotton, wool, hides and pecans in southwest Texas and ships his merchandise all over the country.

In Llano on June 8, 1899, Mr. Rainier married Miss Eva May Reisman, who was formerly from Austin, Texas. They have one child, Annie. Mr. Rainier's church preference is the Episcopal. At the present time he is serving as chairman of the Republican County Central Committee of Llano county, but is hardly a practical politician in the usual sense of the word. He has served on the school board in Llano and is always ready to get in line on any movement for the betterment of his community. Mr. Rainier takes special pleasure in driving good horses and is a man of broad sympathies and takes pleasure in all the good things of life. Though not a native son of Texas, his own loyalty to the Lone Star state is not exceeded by that of any lifelong resident here, and in his opinion the state has a remarkable future fully in keeping with its remarkable past.

JERE C. TURNER, SR. Not only is Jere C. Turner fitly called the "dean of Longview citizens" because of his very early residence here; but he is further distinguished by having been one of the founders of the first business house ever located in Longview, the builder of its first good residence and a most active leader in the creation of Gregg county.

Mr. Turner is a descendant of fine Southern stock in both lines. His maternal ancestry was of the Clemens family, made famous by that gifted member of it who has become so well known by "Mark Twain," through the floods of sunshine which his numerous writings turned upon the world. A close kinsman of Samuel Clemens was James Clemens, who married a member of the Mills family of Kentucky, which has produced some of the notable citizenship of our period. James Clemens and his wife were the parents of Jere Clemens, who was a Mexican war patriot, a member of Congress, and a strong supporter of the Union during the Civil war; and of Ann Clemens, who became Mrs. William S. Turner and the mother of him who is the special subject of this biographical account. The Turner family were originally Virginian. In the old Dominion State William S. Turner had been born and had, as a child, accompanied his parents to Alabama. There they settled in the vicinity of Huntsville, where, on reaching maturity, William Turner married Miss Clemens and where their children were born. These included James Turner, who spent his life at Helena, Arkansas; Dr. Archie Turner, whose last days were spent at Hope, Arkansas; John Turner, who died unmarried; and Jere C. Turner, whose achievements are the special object of this sketch.

The date of Jere C. Turner's birth was May 27, 1848, and his earliest years were spent in his native home at Huntsville, Alabama. While he was yet a child his parents moved to near Helena, Arkansas, where his elementary education was pursued and where he enjoyed the serene advantages of an affluent home until the outbreak of the Civil war. On the questions involved in that conflict the Turner family sided with the interests of the South and might have fared ill had it not been for the influence of Colonel Clemens, one of Mr. Lincoln's Southern advisers during the war. It was due to his foresight that Federal pickets were set about the Turner home and their property shielded instead of being ruthlessly destroyed. But even this friendly intervention of the government at Washington could not stay the activity of an enthusiastic young Southerner such as a Jere Turner was. In the enthusiasm of his earlier youth—for he was barely fifteen years of age—he could not forbear aiding his soldier countrymen of the South. Engaging through the lines in traffic which was contraband of war, he continued at intervals to thus give vent to his sectional patriotism, until his attitude menaced not only his own safety, but probably that of his family as well. He therefore had the additional adventure of being a refugee to Texas, where until the close of the war he remained at Gilmer. When throughout the country peace again prevailed, he returned to Arkansas, resuming his studies at Russel's Normal Academy, a school conducted by Professor O. F. Russel, a noted educator who had previously been of New York, but who served as a Confederate soldier during the Civil war.

The state of Texas, in spite of its then raw condition, appealed strongly to the young man's interests, for he saw in it much of the promise that has since been fulfilled. In 1867 he returned to the Lone Star state and began his self-supporting existence. At that time the end of the Texas and Pacific construction westward marked the only hint of the commercial center this region has become. The new line of railroad stretching its length westward had made mutually advantageous a series of supply camps which originated at Marshall. They were conducted by Miller, McKellar and Company, and for this concern Jere C. Turner became bookkeeper. Continuing with this firm he became its manager during the sojourn at Hallville and before the Longview locality was reached, he was one of the partners of the company.

This pioneer firm of Longview—composed of J. B. Miller, E. D. McKellar, J. A. McKellar and J. C. Turner, was thus, as stated above, the first commercial concern located in Longview. It is interesting to recall that their business card appeared in the initial issue of Longview's first paper—The Longview News, which was edited in part by no less a personage than James S. Hogg, later governor of Texas. One of its first news items in that earliest issue, dated November 28, 1871, was the following: "We often read and hear of wholesale and retail grocers and general commission merchants, but rarely ever see such a staunch firm as Miller, McKellar and Company. These gentlemen will do to tie to. It will be seen by the way they patronize home institutions that they are the right men in the right place. A sufficient acquaintance with this firm justifies us in commending them heartily to the public in general." The loyalty to local interests indicated in that comment is perhaps the keynote to both Mr. Turner's success and the unusual degree of appreciation accorded him by his townsmen. Although his locating in Longview was at the time supposedly temporary, he made a firm place for himself early in his career by such evidence of fairness and reciprocal obligation.

His business career of more than forty years has been one that has grown more and more closely into the civic entity of the town. That first step in grocery merchandise was so successfully taken that when in 1872 Miller, McKellar and Company closed out its business in Longview, he at once obtained a place in the clerical force of the bank of F. J. Harrison and Company. After a time he again entered merchandise, this time independently. Purchasing from Britton Buttrill the lot which the latter had used as the site of his hotel (but which is now occupied by the First National Bank building) Mr. Turner there erected the business house in which he sold goods as a grocer. He twice rebuilt as a result of successive conflagrations in the heart of the town, and his is the distinction of having built the first permanent business edifice ever constructed in Longview. The steady growth of his retail grocery business was such that in 1897 he converted it into a wholesale business, the same being incorporated as the Turner Grocery Company, capitalized at $50,000.00. The stock of this concern is owned and controlled entirely by members of the Turner family, Mr. Turner himself being its president and his sons the other official heads of the company.

Other commercial and financial interests of Mr. Turner include his connection with the Citizens' National Bank. When that institution was promoted he became a stockholder and was made the president of the bank. He is remembered with gratitude by many of the citizens of Longview because of the fact that when the financial situation was uncertain and rumors of "runs" were abroad, he came forward with the pledge of his own personal estate to depositors as a guaranty of the security of their funds.

Another important movement with which Jere C. Turner, Sr., has been connected with signal honor to himself and value to the community was the creation of Gregg county. He was one of the early members of the town board and in that capacity his influence and activity proved vital to the success of the proposal. Associated with him in this work was a man whose prominence and usefulness as a citizen in those formative days have been singularly overlooked in the tributes usually paid to influential pioneers whose names should live at least in those given to the streets of the town. No such honor has been paid to Britton Buttrill, who was Longview's early tavern-keeper and one of her most public-spirited citizens. He it was who performed a service for Gregg county by sturdily and perseveringly riding his pony over the territory of Upshur and Rusk counties, embodied in Gregg county, circulating the petition necessary for presentation to the legislature. He secured the needed signatures which made possible the creation of the county. The committee which had assigned him this duty also made Mr. Turner responsible for the raising of fifty dollars required for the representative who must go to Austin to coach the movement until it should be made a law. The money was slow in coming, only six dollars having been contributed before the day on which it was required. The balance of the amount came out of the pocket of Jere C. Turner, who thus, so to speak, stood godfather to the infant county. He was on the bond of the first sheriff of Gregg county.

The earliest dwelling-house of worthy quality in Longview, built—as stated above—by Mr. Turner, is still his home. In November of 1871 occurred his first marriage, Fannie C. Harrison at that time becoming Mrs. Jere C. Turner. She was a daughter of F. J. Harrison, of Keatchie, Louisiana, her father later becoming a banker of Longview. To her and Mr. Turner were born five daughters and four sons. The eldest is William Turner; Annie, Mrs. J. J. Stewart, is the wife of a leading Longview dentist; Fannie, Mrs. McClain, is a resident of Pine Bluff, Arkansas; J. C. Turner, Jr., is vice president of the Turner Grocery Company; M. McK. is secretary of the Turner Grocery Company; Lillian, Mrs. Clarence King, is a resident of Bristol, Tennessee; and Harry S. Turner is shipping clerk for the Turner wholesale house. In 1892 Fannie Harrison Turner passed to another life. The present Mrs. Turner was formerly Mrs. Mattie Bowles, a daughter of Thomas M. Gatlin, of Keatchie, Louisiana.

The life of no man in Longview has been more closely knit with that of the growing town than has Jere C. Turner's, during his forty years of activity in this community. In the important and successful business which he has built up, in the creditable family he has given to the world and the community, and in the deep and hearty respect of his fellow citizens, he has built a monument that many younger men may emulate and which many older men may envy Jere C. Turner, Sr.

JOHN R. STINSON, a retired merchant of Marshall, and a representative of one of the pioneer families of Texas, dates his birth in 1849, on his father's farm two miles southeast of the present courthouse at Marshall.

Mr. Stinson's father, Samuel Stinson, was born in Smith county, Tennessee. In 1844, with his brother, David Stinson, he came from Tennessee to Texas and settled in Harrison county, near Marshall, and a few years later he moved to the town. David Stinson was a lawyer, prominent and influential, and at one time served as County Judge of Harrison county. Samuel Stinson also figured in public service here. He was elected to the office of County Clerk, which he filled for several years and from which he resigned a year before his death, which occurred in 1854. The mother of John R. Stinson was Cynthia (Baker) Stinson. She was born in Mississippi, and in the early forties came with her parents to Harrison county, Texas. She died in 1868. In 1854, shortly after her husband's death, she bought a home place in Marshall, which comprised practically, the block bounded by Austin, Fulton, Rusk and Franklin streets, and in this block John R. Stinson has ever since made his home.

In his youth Mr. Stinson had the advantage of being a pupil in one of the best schools in this part of Texas, at that time,—that in charge of Prof. Morgan H. Looney, at Gilmer, in which was educated a number of prominent Texan characters. His first business experience was as clerk in a store at Marshall. That was in 1869, and he continued thus employed until he engaged in business for himself. He conducted a mercantile business at Marshall up to 1902, when he retired from active life.

Mr. Stinson served one term as Mayor of Marshall, 1890-1891.

In 1908 he had the misfortune to lose his wife, who before marriage was Miss Sallie Callaway. She, too, was a native of Harrison county. Their only child is Robert Lee Stinson.

JUDGE FRANK B. GUINN. It is one of the old and prominent families of east Texas that is represented by Judge Frank B. Guinn, who has himself been prominently identified with the state as a lawyer, and a well-known public man, and during a long residence and citizenship at Rusk has rendered many important services to that locality.

Judge F. B. Guinn is a son of the pioneer Texas lawyer, Judge Robert H. Guinn, who died at Rusk in 1888, after forty years of active professional life, during which time he had won his way to eminence as a criminal lawyer.

Several generations back in the family genealogy is found Emanuel Guinn, who was a Revolutionary soldier on the American side. A son of Emanuel Guinn was James Guinn, and among the children of James was John Guinn, father of the late Robert H. Guinn. John Guinn married Rachel Shields, whose mother was a Miss Evans. They had eight children, and six of them went from Tennessee about 1856 and settled in Iowa. These were named John, Hyrcannus, William, Jackson, Alpha Greenlee, and Hester Bradford. Some of these people were known in the vicinity of Belle Plain and Glidden, and one of the Guinns in Iowa was a member of the legislature. Another son of John and Rachael Guinn was Judge John W. Guinn, who settled in Angelina county, Texas, where he was a leading lawyer, and served on the bench. Robert H. Guinn, whose name completes the family of John and Rachael, though he was not the youngest child, was born in Greene county, Tennessee, in 1822. In the same county Andy Johnson, the tailor president, cut out his first frock coat. Robert H. Guinn acquired a fair education and read law under his brother, James W. Guinn. Moving to Randolph county, Alabama, he was married there to Sarah J. Hearne, daughter of Asa Hearne. Mrs. Robert Guinn is still living, her home being in Rusk. She was born in Georgia, in 1827. After their marriage the young couple came west by boat in 1847, as far as Shreveport, in company with Judge Reeves, a noted lawyer of Tyler, Texas, in later years, and another traveling companion was Jack Hamilton, who was also prominent as a lawyer and politician in this state. From Shreveport Judge Guinn's party came by stage down through the timber and sand to their respective destinations. The young lawyer spent his first night in Rusk beneath the roof of the old log court house, which then stood in the center of the town. For a few months he sojourned in the country near the town, and established himself at the county seat in 1848, where he was a man of growing prominence from that time until his death in 1888. For several years Judge Guinn, Sr., devoted himself to private practice and he quickly gained a position in the confidence of his new community. In 1853 he was elected to the state senate, was a member of that body until 1866, and did an important work on various committees. He was president pro-tem of the senate for the time, was chairman of the finance committee and a power in aiding the state in supporting the Confederate government and in looking after the families of men who were in the Confederate army. A strong secessionist, his character and voice were important influences in the secession convention which carried Texas into the Confederacy. He gathered much strength as a politician and was a familiar figure in state conventions, and following the period of reconstruction was a member of the Democratic State Committee. He gave his active aid to the party in various campaigns and was an especially strong follower of Governor Lubbock.

In his law practice Robert Guinn attained a reputation second to none among the criminal lawyers in his part of the state. He tried cases throughout his district, keeping from the death sentence all his clients except one,—Diamond, who committed suicide after the death penalty had been pronounced for the wanton murder of one of the Bryant children. In his private life Judge Guinn was clean and a man of kindly and righteous character. He belonged to the Methodist church and was a close reader of the Word. On a small farm near Rusk he spent many of his years, and had little interests in other matters outside of his profession and the education and culture of his children. Money-making had no place in his nature, and his fraternal side showed itself in membership in the two leading fraternal orders, the Masons and Odd Fellows.

Some time during the decade of the forties, Robert Guinn married Miss Hearne, as already stated, and their children were as follows: Heflin S., whose career has been chiefly spent in engineering work, and as county surveyor of Cherokee county, and who married Mollie Horton; P. P., a farmer of Rusk, who married Mary Clay; Mrs. Callie Reeves, who died at Rusk, leaving a family; Frank B.; William T., who married Laura Cameron, and died in Rusk with a family; James K., of Hughes Springs, Texas, who married Miss Belle Miller; John B., a merchant of Rusk, who married Anna Tucker; Lee D., who is district judge of the Second Judicial District of Texas, living in Rusk and who is married to Miss Florence Crittenden; Lulu J., the wife of E. T. Durrrough, of Atlanta, Georgia; and Hubbard G., of Lubbock, Texas.

Judge Frank Benton Guinn was born at Rusk, May 29, 1855. Part of his boyhood was spent during the troublesome period of the Civil war, and in the later reconstruction era, and these conditions necessarily delayed his education. He was a student in the Masonic Institute, and later entered Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, in the law department. In 1882 he was graduated in law, and then returned to his native state. Already he had received some official experience as county surveyor of Cherokee county, an office to which he was elected before completing his law studies. Then in 1882 came his election as county attorney of Cherokee county, and the six years of his service in that capacity were marked by a number of important accomplishments, including his success in breaking up the nefarious practice of playing pool and billiards for the drinks. Eleven of the twelve proprietors of saloons in the county were convicted under his regime, and his administration was salutary in every respect. While in that office Judge Guinn formed a partnership with R. H. Morris, who was at that time district attorney. He was thus given a wide experience as assistant to his partner in the criminal work of the district courts.

When Judge Guinn's term of county attorney expired he declined another term, and spent two years building up a private practice. About that time his relations with Mr. Morris were discontinued and in 1890 he was elected county judge and served on the bench for six years. As ex-officio county superintendent he rendered valuable aid to the public schools by adopting, independently, a system of text books which proved most beneficial, and established a precedent which in later years was applied throughout the state and has resulted in a complete system of books for use in the public schools. This new plan, as inaugurated by Judge Guinn, created a wide interest in public school work, and was one of the many things that his constituents held in his favor. In 1894, when the populist party gained its greatest victory in Cherokee county, Judge Guinn was one of the few Democrats elected, and led the ticket with a majority.

In 1896 Judge Guinn retired to the private practice of law, and at the same time engaged in real estate activities. In this latter field he took up local development and has probably done more than any other individual to improve agriculture along modern lines. He has introduced the culture of both vegetables and fruits and embarked in the truck and fruit business and was chosen president of the Rusk Truck Growers' Association, and the Rusk Fruit Growers' Association, at the same time being made chairman of the County Association of Truck and Fruit Growers. When the railroad companies proposed to furnish transportation to delegates to study fruit culture, picking, packing and marketing in the states of Colorado and California, Judge Guinn was appointed one of the commissioners and was selected to make the report to the meeting of the various growers at Tyler. For some years Judge Guinn planted and maintained an orchard of seven thousand trees in this section, but after fruit culture had proved unprofitable, he shifted his interests to pecan growing, and is now one of the most extensive growers of "paper shells" in Texas. He has taken a deep interest in the work of the Farmers' Congress and is a member of the State Horticultural Society of Texas.

In 1902 Judge Guinn was elected to the Twenty-eighth Legislature of Texas, and was chairman of the committee on penitentiaries, and introduced and passed a bill appropriating $150,000.00 for the rehabilitation of the Rusk prison iron industry, which gave new life to the institution for several years, and gave the state some standing and respect as a competitor in the markets of the country. He was on the committee on the Public Lands of the senate, and in the twenty-ninth legislature was the author of the present fruit and nursery inspection law. With the aid of Bennett, of Erath, he got through an amendment to the constitution, making it lawful to levy a tax for the payment of juror fees instead of using the funds of the bridge and road account for that purpose. Subsequently, and when not a member of the legislature, he used his influence for the building of the Texas and New Orleans Railway into Rusk, and is admittedly the cause of the construction of the Gallatin spur.

Judge Guinn owned the Rusk Press-Journal, and edited it during a portion of 1907 and 1908, and was chairman of the local committee having in charge the building of the Texas and New Orleans Road to this point.

In 1907 Governor Campbell appointed Judge Guinn assistant financial agent of penitentiaries, having in charge the penitentiary at Rusk. During the early part of his three years of service, the iron industry here became prosperous. Misfortune subsequently befell the plant because of its physical condition and when the board of managers declined to respond to its needs, Judge Guinn went in his resignation. In local affairs Judge Guinn has been identified with the educational matters of Rusk for many years, and is chairman of the school board.

On December 5, 1882, Judge Guinn married Miss Mary Pope, a daughter of Capt. John T. Aycock, and a granddaughter of Dr. C. G. Raines. Mrs. Guinn died in 1899, leaving the following children: Dr. Fred B., of El Paso; Charles R.; Frank R., and Pope A., the last three of Rusk. On February 18, 1903, Judge Guinn married Miss Stella Cox, and by this marriage are two children,—Mildred and Evelyn. Judge Guinn is not a member of any church. Fraternally he is past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and has sat in the Grand Lodge of the State.

ADOLPH CLARENCE SWANSON. Among those who have played important parts in the colonization and development of Texas, mention of Adolph Clarence Swanson may not well be omitted, for he is one who has been up and doing in a most telling manner for the past twenty years. He has been engaged in the real estate business in Houston since 1892, specializing in farm lands, and his firm is known to be one of the most enterprising of its kind in the state, with a record of having bought and sold more than two million acres in large and small tracts, both improved and unimproved. Since 1906 he has been associated with Edward F. Rowson, under the firm name of A. C. Swanson & Company, with main offices at Brownsville, Texas.

Adolph Clarence Swanson was born in Boone county, Iowa, on January 20, 1874, and is the son of Charles Christian and Elna (Olson) Swanson, both natives of Southern Sweden. They came to the United States in 1867 and settled in Boone county, Iowa, where the father engaged in farming, and came to own a valuable homestead near the town of Mineral Ridge. The subject was raised on the farm home and educated at the country schools of Boone county, and the Baptist University of Des Moines, Iowa. His first independent work was undertaken in 1890, when he became shipping clerk of Hayden Brothers, Omaha, where he remained for two years and then came to Texas. It was in the year 1892 that Mr. Swanson first came to Houston, and soon thereafter he engaged in the real estate business, making a specialty from the first of farm lands.

In the fall of 1906, the firm of A. C. Swanson & Co., associated themselves with the Heywood Bros., S. A. Robertson and R. L. Batts, and organized the San Benito Land & Water Co., and since that time, the company has built the largest canal system in Texas. The system has the capacity to furnish water to 86,000 acres of land. The San Benito Land & Water Company have also built the town of San Benito, which has at the present time, a population of about 5,000, and it is one of the most flourishing and prosperous towns in the whole Rio Grande Valley.

During the year 1908 his firm organized the Indiana Co-operative Canal Company, which has the capacity to water 24,000 acres. The lands which this canal furnishes water for, are located about seven miles east of Brownsville, and it also furnishes water to the famous "Shaw Sugar Plantation," which is owned by F. Augustus Heinze, of New York.

In October, 1909, together with his associates, Richard E. Brooks and Edward F. Rowson, Mr. Swanson became identified with the Compania Agricola La Sautena, Ltd., of Mexico City, and they were granted the exclusive sale, settlement and colonization of the La Sautena lands, comprising something like 600,000 acres in the Northern portion of the State of Tamaulipas, Mexico. These lands are among the most fertile on the American continent, and the tract extends from the Rio Grande on the north. At the present time, on account of the unsettled conditions existing in Mexico, the company has been compelled to suspend development operations.

Mr. Swanson is of a very benevolent temperament and his interests have always been with the laboring people, particularly the farmers. It is his ambition to assist this class of people in becoming owners of their own farms and town property. At the present time his company is interested in the colonization of a 30,000 acre tract of land in the Rio Grande valley, which is known as the San Dominic Colonization Company's Tract. This land has been endorsed by the Catholic Extension Society, and it is being settled with good sturdy German and Bohemian farmers.

His firm is also interested in a number of lot propositions, which they are selling out on terms which are easily met by the laboring class. Among them, are Cottage Grove Addition to Houston, Victoria Addition to Brownsville, Landrum Addition to San Benito, and the townsite of San Dominic.

Mr. Swanson is a member of a number of social orders in Houston, among them the Thalian Club, the Houston Club, the Houston Country Club. He is also a member of Houston Chamber of Commerce; the Oleander Club of Galveston, the Seabrook Hunting & Fishing Club of Seabrook. He has a membership in Holland Lodge No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Houston.

KELLUS CARTER. One of the younger citizens of Llano county, a man whose ability and personal popularity have resulted in his election in the fall of 1912 to the office of county treasurer, Kellus Carter is one of the most prominent men of the county, and from his accomplishments early in life gives promise of a career of great usefulness to his community and himself.

Kellus Carter was born in Llano county, December 21, 1884, and has spent all his life within this section of Texas. His father was George W. Carter, a Kentuckian by birth, who came to Texas when a boy. He was a farmer and stock raiser, but died at the age of twenty-eight in 1888, and is buried in Llano county. The maiden name of his wife was Ellen Conaway, who was a native of Texas and was a member and faithful follower of the Christian church. Her death occurred in 1911 at the aged of forty-four. There were three children in the family, of whom Kellus was the oldest.

Mr. Carter was reared in the country, attained his education from the public schools, and on entering life for himself took up the stock business. In 1911 he was called from his private vocation to the office of deputy district and county clerk, and held that place until his recent election as county treasurer. Mr. Carter is an interested observer of political affairs, is a loyal Democrat, and believes in doing everything possible to promote good government. He is an unmarried man, and his diversions are in occasionally following the sport of baseball, and in participating in the other wholesome activities of his community. He is a firm believer in the greatness and continued prosperity of success, and is always willing to help forward any movement for the betterment of his state.

WILLIAM DAVID SWANN, active vice president of the Guaranty State Bank, of Tyler, Texas, has spent fifty-six years as a resident of Smith county. The record of his activity and of his family is therefore of interest in this work of Texas biography.

William David Swann is a native of Sumpter county, Alabama, and was born March 5, 1845. In 1856 he accompanied his father and family to Texas, and here he has since made his home.

Of his father and grandfather, James H. and Isaac Swann, respectively, we record that the latter, a native of the Emerald Isle, came as a young man to America and cast his fortunes with the people of South Carolina, where he married a Miss Sims. Their children were James H.; Caroline, who became Mrs. Ben F. Marshall and died in Carroll county, Mississippi; Elam F., who passed away in Tyler, Texas, and left a family; William, who died in Grimes county, Texas; Amanda, who married Richard Jenkins and died in Smith county, Texas; Tinsy, who married a Mr. Ellis and went to Mobile, Alabama, where both died, leaving several children who were reared in the homes of Isaac and Samuel D. Swann, of Smith county, Texas; Thomas, Isaac and Samuel all had families when they passed away in Smith county, as did Jack, who died in Tyler.

James H. Swann, a native of Alabama, died in Smith county in 1862, only a few years after his settlement here. He had established his home ten miles north of Tyler, in what was then known as the "Hopewell" community, since named the Swann community, and where at the time of his death he was successfully engaged in farming and owned a number of slaves. He was a man of much force, clung tenaciously to honor as man's best asset, and performed every personal obligation as a sacred duty. He belonged to no church, but he practiced those moral precepts that are everywhere recognized as the mark of a true man. It was said by a well known minister of the county, that "While the Barron and the Swann families produced no statesmen or eminent men of the professions, he had never seen a shabby shoat among the lot." During the Civil war James H. Swann's attitude was that of a secessionist, and he passed away without knowing the fate of his two sons who enlisted in the Southern cause.

James H. Swann married Miss Margaret Sims, whose parents were farmers of Sumpter county, Alabama. They were married at Marengo, and Mrs. Swann's death occurred in Sumpter county, Texas. The children born to them were as follows: Martha, who died, unmarried; Fannie became the wife of D. S. Lavender and spent her life in Smith county, Texas; Thomas died in Smith county in 1908 and left a family of ten children; Irene is Mrs. Ham Thompson, of Smith county; William D., of Tyler; Sallie A. married Newton Stovall and resides in Eastland county, Texas. For his second wife James H. Swann married Mrs. Margaret Stephens, and she bore him four children: Henry M., who resides near San Angelo, Texas; John H., of Comanche county, Texas; James S., of Taylor county, and Alfred R., of Tyler, Texas.

William D. Swann attended the country school for three months yearly, until sixteen years of age. And the greater part of his boyhood was given to work in the fields, assisting in the cultivation of his father's crops. He was attracted to the army of the Confederacy when the war got well under way and served for a time in the Trans-Mississippi Department. In 1862 he enlisted for a long term in Douglass' Battery, First Texas, and joined the army of the Tennessee. With his command he was in the heavy engagements all the way to Atlanta, including Mission Ridge, Dalton, Peachtree Creek, Kenesaw Mountain, Ringgold, and the several battles in defense of Atlanta. His command formed a part of Gen. Pat Cleburne's army in the Confederate force under Hood that made a raid into Tennessee and fought at Franklin, where Cleburne and Adams were killed, and at Nashville, where the usefulness of Hood's army as a fighting machine was destroyed. Then the battery to which Mr. Swann belonged retreated to Columbus, Mississippi, and there spent the rest of the winter. In the spring of 1865 it joined the Confederate resistance at Mobile. When Forts Blakely and Spanish fell the battery retreated to Artesia, Mississippi, where it surrendered and was paroled.

Instead of returning to Texas at the end of the war,

Mr. Swann went to Sumpter county, Alabama, to his relatives, and remained there until the fall of 1866. In the spring of that year he made arrangements to grow a crop on rented land on the shares, having no means with which to maintain himself while a crop was coming on. He continued a tenant for three years. Then he engaged in freighting between Tyler, Marshall and Jefferson. There being no railroad in this section of country at that time, the years he spent in hauling goods showed a profit sufficient to enable him to buy and pay for a farm. He resumed his former vocation and carried on the industry expansively and extensively until 1907. During this time he amassed a fortune in land, represented by 1800 acres in Smith county and a half interest in a ranch with his brother, in Jones county, Texas.

The health of his wife compelled Mr. Swann to abandon Smith county, after he had quit farming and given four years to merchandising with his son at Swann, Texas, and he moved to San Angelo, in the hope that the climatic change would restore the vanishing vigor of Mrs. Swann. Conditions arrayed themselves so that he returned home in a few months and he then took up his residence in Tyler. That was in 1908. Here Mrs. Swann passed away July 15, 1911. She was formerly Miss Sallie H. Hitt, and her parents were Lazarus and Rutha C. Hitt, from Sumpter county, Alabama. She and Mr. Swann were married January 15, 1873, and the children of their union are as follows: William R., a merchant of Swann, Texas, married Miss Cordelia Shank, and their children are Ione, Sadie, Nellie, William and Gladys; J. Roy, the second son is a farmer and stock man near Swann; Fred died at the age of twenty-five years, unmarried; Miss Irene E. is a music teacher in Tyler and Miss Bessie E. is a teacher in the public schools of this city; Elam F. and Harold are young men preparing themselves for business careers.

Mr. Swann built his present modern residence on Mary and Bryan streets in 1912. Since coming in contact with commercial activity in Tyler he has been drawn into it as a banker, and since February, 1910, has been active vice president of the Guaranty State Bank. His political affiliations have always been with the Democratic party, and his religious faith is that set forth in the creed of the Baptist church, with which he has been identified as a member for a period of thirty-five years.

ZACHARY MONROE. One of the popular young men of Goree, Texas, is Zachary Monroe, the postmaster of this growing town. Although not a native of Texas Mr. Monroe has become thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the state, with its energy and broad-mindedness, and no man is more ambitious for its continued prosperity than is Mr. Monroe. In his official capacity Mr. Monroe has given great satisfaction to both the public and his superior officials and his personal popularity is widespread.

Zachary Monroe was born in that pretty little town of many springs, among the Ozarks, Heber, Arkansas, on the 11th of October, 1880. He remained in his home town until he was nine years old and then, in 1889, he went with his parents to Oklahoma. He had been attending the public schools in Heber and now was again placed in school. After two years in Oklahoma City, where his parents had located, he went to Indian Territory and for a year lived in Purcell. He was in school here and then continued his education in the public schools of Duncan, Indian Territory, whither his parents next moved. After two years in the schools of the latter place, he gave up his ideas of any further education and went to work. His first position was in a printing office where he started at a salary of twenty-five cents a day. This salary all went to his widowed mother and the responsibility of caring for her developed and strengthened the character of the boy. He continued to work in the printing business until 1898 and was then engaged as a salesman in a mercantile house, handling dry goods, drugs and groceries. He remained in this work until January, 1903, when he entered the employ of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company, at Lyon, Indian Territory. His work was of a clerical type and he continued in clerical work for various railroad companies in different places until 1908. It was during this year that he received the appointment of postmaster at Goree, Texas. After serving his first term he was re-appointed and is now serving on his second term. He first came to Texas in April, 1903, and has been a resident of the state since that time.

In religious affiliations Mr. Monroe is a member of the Progressive Christian church, as is also his wife. He is a member of the Republican party and takes an active part in politics, though his interests in this line are chiefly concerned with national matters. He is a member of the school board and active in educational work. In the fraternal world Mr. Monroe is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of the Woodmen of the World and of the Maccabees. He is a member of the Commercial Club and was secretary of this organization for two years.

Mr. Monroe was married at Bowie, Texas, on the 25th of November, 1905, to Miss Jeannette McKain, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. McKain, of Bowie. Of the two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Monroe, the eldest, Georgetown, is deceased. The second daughter, Elizabeth, is a baby.

Mr. Monroe prefers this part of Texas to any other locality in which he has ever lived. He says that in his opinion no man with energy and the honest intention of making a home will ever make a mistake to settle in this part of the state.

JOHN B. GUINN. One of the foremost members of the bar in Cherokee county, John B. Guinn, is now serving his second term as county attorney, and is a resident and practicing lawyer in Rusk. Mr. Guinn is a member of that prominent family known to Texas and founded by Judges John W. and Robert M. Guinn, who identified themselves with the Lone Star state commonwealth, after its admission to the Union.

John B. Guinn was born at Alto, Cherokee county, March 10, 1871. His father, Dr. John Napoleon Bonaparte Guinn, settled in Cherokee county in 1854. His grandfather was also John W. Guinn, who had the titles of both colonel and judge, and he died of cholera while a member of the state senate of Texas, and is buried in the city of Austin. Col. Guinn married a Miss Dobson and of their children the following are mentioned: Lee, who died at Homer, Texas; Dr. John N. B.; Gammon, who died at Homer; Capt. James K., who died at Edwardsville, Alabama, and who was a captain in the Confederate army; Kate, who married Rev. Williams; Simon, of Zavalla, Texas; Catherine, who died as the wife of Mr. McGonigal.

The late Dr. John N. B. Guinn, who was born in North Carolina in 1830, died at Alto, Texas, September 10, 1891. He studied medicine in Alabama and North Carolina and began practice before his graduation. He followed his profession from the age of twenty-one years until his death, and while the war between the states was being fought, he spent about two and a half years as assistant surgeon in Captain Knox's command of General Walker's Division, when he was called back home to supply his community with medical service. His civic duties Dr. Guinn performed in a manner becoming an earnest citizen, waiting upon the sick to bring relief rather than to earn a fee, rendering active aid in the foundation of local societies of the profession and serving as president of the county society. He gave his fellow workers the benefit of his wide experience in talks and lectures before the society. He presided over the Masonic lodge of Alto as Worshipful Master, looked after the spiritual welfare of his church as a member of the board of trustees, was a liberal giver to church work, and his material aid to public education exemplified itself in substantial contributions when, as one of the ten men in Alto, he annually donated to the public school fund in order that longer terms of school might be taught. He aspired to no office, though one of the leaders in the Democratic party, and always worked for good government.

Concerning the character of J. N. B. Guinn, the following brief sketch has been published elsewhere, and is here quoted: "He was a most excellent man, a man of very fine judgment upon most important questions, a good husband and father, a friend to all classes and a genuine peacemaker, always preferring a compromise to a lawsuit, and so advised those who often called upon him. His opinion with those who knew him always carried weight. I never saw him take a drink of whiskey, or heard him use a profane word, nor did I ever hear him speak harshly, or condemn a fellow man. He was a member of the Methodist church, and a Mason of high rank. He was enterprising and industrious. As a practitioner, he was a success, having devoted the last forty-one years of his life to the active practice of medicine, and was the best student of medicine I've ever known. He was a Confederate veteran, being a surgeon in Oglethorpe's command. After the war he returned home and accumulated some property, which he left to his family at his death."

Dr. Guinn was married October 12, 1854, to Miss Susan Ann Hampton-Burton, who was born in Georgia, January 12, 1838, and who died November 21, 1889, at Alto, Texas. Her parents were Rev. William Burton, a Baptist minister of Georgia. The Burton family has long been prominent in the south, and the following brief mention is taken from the family annals: "Rev. William Bedford Burton, born June 11, 1781, in 1800 moved to Georgia from Virginia. In the early thirties he visited Texas and procured a grant of land in Jefferson county, but returned to Georgia and died September 25, 1847. His eldest son, Isaac Watts Burton, came to Texas in 1832, and served on General Houston's staff during the battle of San Jacinto. Thomas Walker Burton, a son of William Bedford Burton, was born November 3, 1808, and died January 30, 1854. He was a Baptist minister and was twice married. His second wife was Martha Frances Boswell, who was born in 1814 and died about 1876. The fourth child of this marriage was Susan Ann Hampton Burton, the wife of the late Dr. Guinn. Other members of this generation in the Burton family, brothers and sisters of Mrs. Guinn, were: William H. Burton, born in 1833 and died in 1899, a prominent Baptist minister who was well known in Texas; Mary Elizabeth, born in 1834, and whose home was in Alabama, where she married a judge; Thomas J., born in 1866, who was the last survivor of his brothers and sisters and was a lawyer and judge of probate in Alabama; Emily Frances, born in 1840, and who died at Alto, Texas, in 1867, the wife of Capt. James M. K. Guinn, a brother of Dr. Guinn; Eugenia Hasseltine, born in 1842, and who married Dr. Brannon; Louisa Judson, born in 1844, married C. C. Enloe and lived in Alabama; John B., born in 1847, who was a prominent architect and builder at Alto, and later practiced law in Brownwood until his death; Charles Dalton Burton, who was a lawyer, born in 1850 and died in 1877; Robert R., born in 1852, a newspaper man and now deceased.

Dr. and Mrs. Guinn, during their long and happy companionship, became the parents of and reared the following children: Herbert R., born February 14, 1858, a farmer of Rusk county; Zuella Kate, born in 1861, and first married to James McKnight, died at Alto, Texas, as Mrs. Williams; Nellie Lee, born in 1865, the wife of F. C. Agnew, of Alto; Ernest Edwin, born in 1867, a well-known physician of Jacksonville and formerly surgeon at the Rusk Penitentiary; Paul G., born in 1869, who died at the age of nineteen; John B., whose name has been placed at the head of this article; Lena Rivers, born in 1875 and now engaged in business in Alto; and Frederick Burton, born in 1878, in the drug business at Alto.

John B. Guinn spent his childhood in Alto, and after the public schools attended Battle Ground Academy in Franklin, Tennessee, which he followed with a business course in Temple and Hamilton's Commercial College. As further preparation for his professional career he entered Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, and finished his law course. He was admitted to the bar in 1900, before Judge Thomas G. Davis, after an eleven-hour examination by a committee composed of Judge John C. Box, Hon. W. M. Imboden, Judge Lee D. Guinn, Judge R. L. Robinson and Col. E. C. Dickinson. Mr. Guinn's early career in preparation for the law was not made easy by regular supplies of money from family or relatives, and while attaining his legal education he was also teaching school in Cherokee county. He began that work immediately after his marriage and taught various terms in schools until getting his license to practice law. On being admitted to the bar he formed a partnership with Frank B. and Lee D. Guinn, and was a member of the firm of Guinn & Guinn for five years. The firm name was then changed to Guinn, Norman & Guinn. A year later he went to Hill county, Texas, and became an active member of the bar there until November, 1908. During that time he served one year as assistant to the county attorney, Mr. Clark. On his return to Cherokee county, Mr. Guinn resumed his old place at the bar, and in the fall of 1910 was elected county attorney, and by reelection in 1912 is now serving his second term.

In politics Mr. Guinn is an important factor in local Democratic circles, and attended the state conventions as a delegate at which Governor Culberson and Governor Campbell were nominated for their first respective terms. Mr. Guinn has served on the Cherokee County Executive Committee.

At Alto, Texas, on Dec. 24, 1895, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Guinn to Lillie Westbrook. She was born at Amory, Mississippi, where her father, B. Westbrook, was then living, but he is now a resident of Bastrop, Louisiana. Mr. and Mrs. Guinn have the following children: Grace, Fred, Lucile, John B. Jr., and Ernest Earl.

COL. HENRY LEWIS RIPLEY. The history of the United States army contains no more creditable record than that furnished by the career of Col. Henry Lewis Ripley, retired, of San Antonio. Spending his entire active life in the service, he is an illustration of the well-known, although often disputed, fact, that a man not a West Pointer, given the necessary ability, may rise from the ranks to the highest positions in the army. Colonel Ripley was born at Kingston, Massachusetts, September 16, 1848, and is a son of Lewis and Sarah Brooks (Loring) Ripley. He is descended from military ancestors, his great-grandfather, Kimball Ripley, being a member of the revolutionary army and being wounded in the battle of Trenton. The family has long been known in the New England States, having come to the colony of Massachusetts in 1632 from England.

Henry Lewis Ripley was educated in the schools of Kingston, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, at Boston, from which he was graduated as a civil engineer in 1873. From that time until 1876 he was assistant engineer on the Providence (Rhode Island) Waterworks, but, deciding to enter the United States army, resigned a position paying $1,500 per annum to accept one which paid but thirteen dollars per month. On April 1, 1876, he joined Company E, Battalion of Engineers, and in one month was made a first-class private, and a non-commissioned officer in 1877. His service in this battalion was at West Point, and upon the graduation of the class of 1879 he was made lieutenant, one of the first non-commissioned officers to be promoted under the law of 1878. In June, 1879, he was assigned to the Twenty-fourth Infantry, in which he served along the Rio Grande, from its mouth to El Paso, and then went to the Indian Territory and was stationed at Fort Sill and Cantonment. From 1883 to 1885 he was in the Officers' school at Fort Leavenworth, graduating therefrom at the head of his class. He subsequently was appointed as a member of the staff of the commanding officer of the Department of Missouri, serving as such under Generals Miles, Wilcox, Potter and Merritt, his official detail being engineer officer of the Department of Missouri. From this position he was transferred to the Third Cavalry, joining that regiment at Fort Davis, Texas, as a first lieutenant of cavalry. From Davis he came to Fort Clark, Fort Sam Houston (San Antonio) and thence to Fort Brown (Brownsville, Texas). He then returned to San Antonio and was made engineer officer of the Department of Texas, serving as such two years, when he rejoined the Third Cavalry at Fort Reno, was made quartermaster of the regiment, and went to Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, where he was later promoted captain. He then rejoined his troop at Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, where he remained until 1898, and then went with the Third Cavalry to Cuba, with General Shafter's expedition. He participated in the battles of San Juan and Santiago and the surrender of the latter, and then returned to Fort Ethan Allen, but in 1899 went with the troop to the Philippine Islands, in the meantime having been made adjutant of his regiment, a capacity in which he served four years. On his return from the Philippines in 1902, he was promoted major of the Eighth Cavalry, stationed at Fort Sill, and from there went again to the Philippines in 1905 with his regiment. There he was detailed on the general staff of the army, the first officer detailed on the staff who was not a West Pointer. He served under General Wood as assistant to the chief of staff for two years, with the exception of six weeks while he was acting chief of staff. He returned to the United States in 1907 and was assigned to duty as chief of staff of what for a short time was known as the Southwestern Division, with headquarters at St. Louis, Missouri. In the fall of the same year Colonel Ripley was ordered to San Antonio as chief of staff of the Department of Texas, under General Meyer, and when this detail expired, in December, 1909, he rejoined his regiment, the Eighth Cavalry, at Fort Robinson, Nebraska. He remained there nine months and then went to Fort Huachuca, Arizona, in charge of a squadron of the Eighth, and in December, 1910, was sent to the Philippine Islands for the third time. In March, 1911, he was promoted to lieutenant colonel of the Second Cavalry, which was then stationed in the Department of Mindanao, in the Philippines, and commanded that regiment at Jolo for two months during the absence of its colonel. Subsequently he was sent to Camp Overton, Mindanao, in the command of the squadron at that point. In June, 1912, he returned to the United States and was stationed at Fort Bliss (El Paso) with his regiment, and on September 16, 1912, he was retired. He then came to San Antonio and established his home in this city, purchasing a beautiful residence on Grayson street, opposite Fort Sam Houston. Such is the career of Colonel Ripley; added comment or fulsome eulogy would be futile and would only detract from the impression created by the simple, dignified life of the man himself. A man of few words and many deeds, courteous in his bearing toward all, he is a thorough gentleman and a typical soldier.

Colonel Ripley married a young lady of Texas, Miss Susan G. Pfeuffer, who was born at New Braunfels. They have three children: Barbara, Susan Elizabeth and Henry Lewis, Jr.

CYRUS M. CAMPBELL was born in what is now Austin county, when General Sam Houston was president of the Republic of Texas. Many have been the changes that have come to pass in the history of the great southern state since the days of her independence, and Cyrus Campbell was been the witness of many and participant in others. He established his present lumber business in 1884, and with three of his sons has carried on an immense enterprise in the past quarter century or more.

Cyrus M. Campbell was born on September 14, 1839, and is the son of Cyrus and Rebecca (Rollins) Campbell. The name of the father appears as one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence of Texas, and he is further distinguished as being the man who made the irons and put them on General Santa Ana. He was born in North Carolina and came to Texas in 1828, and all his life he followed the cattle and stock business. He died in 1883 at the age of seventy-two. His wife was born in Virginia, and she came to Texas with her family, settling in the vicinity of Austin, where she met and married her husband. She died in 1845.

The early education of Cyrus Campbell came to him through the medium of private tutors in his boyhood, and when that training was discontinued he carried on his own studies up to the age of twenty, gaining a wide general knowledge in that way. He assisted his father on the cattle ranch until he reached his majority, when he engaged in the cattle business on his own initiative, continuing for perhaps a year. The breaking out of the war at that time caused him to throw over all plans of a private nature and he enlisted in McCulloch's Brigade, serving as quartermaster of his regiment, and serving all through the war. He saw much active service and participated in many of the hottest engagements with his regiment, being slightly wounded but once. When he returned from that service he found himself financially ruined. His cattle had been stolen in his absence, and other personal property reduced to far below par as a result of the war. The young man applied himself to plain, everyday farming, and he carried on that work for about twelve years, gaining prosperity and fortune in the work in that time. It was then that he came to Bell county and established his present business, which he carries on today with the help of his three sons, under the firm name of C. M. Campbell & Sons. The firm handles a full line of lumber and everything used in building work, and they conduct an extensive general retail lumber business. The branch yards of this thriving concern are located as follows: San Antonio, Temple, Killeen and Miles, Texas.

Mr. Campbell is a family man, as has been intimated previously, his marriage having occurred in 1868, when he was married at Brenham, Texas, to Miss Ann Dever, the daughter of William Dever of Brennan. Mrs. Campbell was a devout member of the Methodist church during the best years of her life, and she died in January 1912, at the age of sixty-five years. She left four sons and a daughter, named as follows: William C., who is married, is associated with his father in the business; Charles M., also married, is president of the Vity National Bank of Temple; Thomas T., married, is a resident of San Antonio and is president of the Campbell Lumber Company at that point; Roy, unmarried, is the business associate of his father; and Annie Mae, the only daughter, who is the wife of Dr. E. R. White, a leading physician of Temple.

Mr. Campbell is a member of the Methodist church and of the Masonic fraternity, with Blue Lodge, Shriner and Commandery affiliations. He also has membership in the Elks. Politically he is a Democrat, but not one who takes an active interest in political affairs of the district, his influence being wielded independently rather than otherwise. His citizenship is of a high order, and his identification with Temple is one of the commendable features of the place.

JAMES S. LAVENDER is a native son of the county of which he is now serving as district clerk. He was born in the old Hopewell community, now known as the Swann community, on January 30, 1863, and has passed his life within the confines of Smith county. Mr. Lavender represents an old Alabama family, and is the son of David Smith and Fannie (Swann) Lavender, the father having been born in 1828 in Sumpter county, Alabama, being the son of Robert C. Lavender, who passed his life chiefly in that county and there reared his family.

David Lavender received a limited education in the common schools of his native community, and when he was twenty-eight years old, or in 1856, came to Smith county, Texas, where he proceeded to demonstrate that he had not lived on a farm to that age without acquiring a good working knowledge of the business of agriculture. During the progress of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army, and served throughout the war, coming out without once being wounded or falling into the hands of the Union soldiers. While yet a resident of Alabama he married Fannie Swann, daughter of James Swann, and a sister of William David Swann, mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Lavender died in 1880, leaving children as follows: Maggie, the wife of J. C. Stovall; Mrs. Irene Jackson, wife of John R. Jackson; James S., of this review; Mrs. H. B. Matthews, the wife of County Assessor of Smith county; and Bertha, a graduate of the University of Texas, who now holds the chair of Latin in that institution.

James S. Lavender was trained to farm life, and educated in the schools of his native community, later attending the Summerville School at Omen, Texas, one of the most efficient of the small institutions of its kind to be found anywhere, and under the capable leadership of Professor Orr, now county superintendent of Smith county. After finishing his schooling Mr. Lavender gave his attention to farming for some years, and continued to be identified with his native community until he gave up rural activities to accept a clerkship with A. P. Moore of Tyler. After serving a number of years with this gentleman he went to Goodman Brothers, in Tyler, and subsequently returned to the farm, where he engaged as a feeder and dealer in cattle. Following this experience, he purchased a farm in the vicinity of Tyler and devoted himself to market gardening until he assumed the duties of the office of District Clerk, to which office he was elected in 1912, succeeding Mrs. Pat Beaird in the office.

On December 21, 1884, Mr. Lavender was united in marriage with Miss Emma Clay, a daughter of Robert O. Clay and Priscilla (Matthews) Clay. The issue of their marriage are: William E., who married Miss Laura Elliott and is with the Cotton Belt Railway Company at Tyler; Stanley J., an employe of the same company, and Hazel Lavender. Mr. Lavender is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and his family affiliate with the Baptist church.

HON. YANCY D. HARRISON, one of the prominent lawyers of Marshall, Texas, is a Texan by adoption and has been a resident of the Lone Star state since October, 1884.

Mr. Harrison dates his birth in Tennessee. When he was six months of age he was taken by his parents to Alabama, their settlement being at Sulphur Springs, near Anniston, where he was reared. The greater part of his education was received at Oxford College, Oxford, Alabama. He taught school one year in Randolph county, Alabama, and was a member of the Randolph County Board of Education. In the fall of 1884 he came to Texas and took up his residence at Hubbard City, Hill county. He remained there, however, only a short time. At Bremond he was employed to teach school, and taught until the fall of 1885. While there he was elected principal of Marshall University at Marshall, and in October came here to take up the duties of his position, and Marshall has ever since been his home. He remained at the head of Marshall University until that institution was merged into the public school system, in 1887.

Before coming to Texas, Mr. Harrison had studied law in the office of Pierce and Kelly at Anniston, Alabama, and while teaching he continued the study of law, devoting all his leisure time to it. On retiring from the principalship of the university, he was elected County Superintendent of Schools, which position he filled, and also at the same time served as superintendent of city schools, to which he was elected by the Board of Education. He remained in these positions until 1891, when, having passed the necessary examinations, he was admitted to the bar. Since that date he has been successfully engaged in the practice of law.

In 1894 Mr. Harrison was elected a member of the lower house of the twenty-fourth legislature, to represent Harrison county, and served efficiently in that capacity during the session of 1895.

Fraternally, Mr. Harrison is an Elk, a Knight of Pythias, and a Mason; religiously, a Methodist.

Mr. Harrison married Miss Chase L. Womack, a member of a prominent pioneer family of Marshall, and their children are as follows: Yancy D. Harrison, Jno. W. Harrison and Julian P. Harrison.

GEORGE C. BURRUSS, Tax Collector of Smith County, Texas, is a printer by trade, but has spent many years in public life, serving in various official capacities.

Mr. Burruss was born in Macon county, Alabama, March 6, 1855; attended school up to the time he was fourteen years of age, and then went to work in a printing office. His father, Rev. John C. Burruss, a minister of the Universalist Church, was a native of Carolina county, Virginia, born in the year 1821, the youngest of a large family; was self-educated, and devoted his life to the cause of his church. His calling and his age exempted him from military duty in the Confederate army, but his belief in the justice of the Southern cause was strong and he lent it his earnest moral support. He married Miss Fannie Burks, a daughter of Rev. Charles S. Burks, a minister of the Baptist church, who moved from Georgia to Alabama. Rev. Burruss died in Notasulga, Alabama, in 1910; his wife's death occurred in 1893. Their five children were: George C., of Tyler, Texas; Fannie, wife of J. M. Hardwick, of Notasulga, Alabama; Josephine, wife of L. H. Cawthron, of Defuniak, Florida; Louise, widow of Ed Womack, of Atlanta, Georgia, and Fidelia, wife of Joseph Delbridge, of Notasulga, Alabama.

George C. Burruss learned his trade in the offices of The Tuskegee News and The Plantation, and at Notasulga, Alabama, where the rural community was treated to a weekly paper. Friends in Texas urged him to join the throng rushing hither to gather the crop of opportunities being harvested about 1880, and Mr. Burruss selected Tyler as his abiding place. He found a "sit" on the Tyler Weekly Courier, under the proprietorship of L. M. Green, now the editor of the Courier-Times, the only paper published in Tyler. He remained on the paper until 1887, at that time being associate editor. He severed connections there in order to engage in the job printing business, which he conducted until 1894.

In 1894 Mr. Burruss entered actively into county politics as a candidate for District Clerk, was elected, and succeeded S. J. Morris in that office. He spent six years as District Clerk. The next seven years he lived on a farm. Then, being offered the deputyship under Sheriff Wig Smith, he accepted that position, remained with him through his term, and was with his successor, Joe Land, one year. He left the sheriff's office to become Tax Collector, by appointment to fill a vacancy, and the following November was regularly elected to the office. From a superficial view of Mr. Burruss' life the impression might be gained that luck played an important part in his political career, but a deeper insight into his personality will show that he makes his luck. His genial manner, backed by an honorable, upright life, has brought him the votes, and his qualifications for the office have been proved. He knows how to make and keep friends.

December 23, 1887, Mr. Burruss married, in Tyler, Texas, Miss Lillie Owens, daughter of H. M. Owens and wife, who before her marriage was Miss Georgie Hambrick. The Owens family were originally residents of North Carolina. Mrs. Burruss is the only daughter in a family of five children. Mr. and Mrs. Burruss have two children living, Georgie and Richard.

Fraternally, Mr. Burruss is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church.

COL. AMOS C. BOYNTON, SR. A career of remarkable and strenuous business activity has been that of Mr. Boynton, who is identified in many ways with Panola county, and with his home city of Carthage. He is president and general manager of the Panola Cotton Oil Company, and is president of the National Expeller Cotton Seed Crushers Association. He has lived at Carthage since 1882, and in Panola county since 1851.

Amos C. Boynton was born October 11, 1841, and when a lad of ten years accompanied his parents to Texas. His father was Moses Boynton, who settled at Old "Rake Pocket" now Pine Hill, and spent the rest of his active life there. Moses Boynton was a blacksmith and gunsmith in his old home state of Georgia, and continued working at his trade for a time after reaching fifty. "Rake Pocket" was not a town, but a traveler said it was large enough to "rake out all the money a man had in his pocket"—hence its euphonious name. Moses Boynton settled there with his slaves and disturbed nature sufficiently to make himself a habitation and a sphere for industrial and social purposes. He was rather a noted dealer in slave property and bought more than fourteen thousand dollars worth of negroes as late as 1864. He pinned his faith strongly to the success of the Confederate cause, and could not bring himself to believe that the south would fail in its contest. His substance went out to those fighting and working for a new republic, in many ways, and he was especially solicitous for the soldier who bared his breast to the enemy's bullet and for his family. He was disheartened and discouraged by the results of the war, and was not the same man after it. Close upon the disaster to his country, he paid a security debt which absorbed a large amount of his property and served to subdue both his energy and ambition. He was one of those Primitive Baptists, who held honor above all else, and thought that what was to be would be and could not be prevented. He lived with his son in Carthage for a period prior to his death, and he expressed a wish to spend the fourth of July at the old farm where he could visit the familiar spots and see them for the last time. He had forecast his own death to occur on this visit, and he was stricken suddenly and died about as he feared. Moses Boynton, who was a native of Monroe county, Georgia, and was given a common school education, was a son of Moses Boynton who moved to Georgia from Vermont. This old New Englander had but two teeth, a freak that nature rarely plays with the human race. He was of Scotch-Irish blood, and his first American ancestor came over before the Revolutionary war and settled in Pennsylvania. It is said that a sailing master, John Boynton landed the first European horses in America on the Virginia peninsula at Fortress Monroe, and it is claimed that his was the second colonization vessel to visit the American shores.

The Boyntons have figured prominently in American affairs as soldiers, jurists, professional men and practical workers. Some of them were Revolutionary soldiers under the banner of Betsy Ross (the stars and stripes), and the personnel of both armies during the war between the states included many of the name.

Moses Boynton, the Panola county early settler, married Martha Lary, a daughter of Archie Lary of Forsyth, Georgia, who was a farmer and merchant. Mrs.

Yours truly
A. C. Boynton Sr.

Boynton died in Carthage at the age of seventy-nine years. Her oldest child is Dr. Marion Boynton, who was physician and Methodist minister and died at Shreveport, Louisiana. Antoinette is the wife of Burrell Hambrick, and died in Panola county; Andrew was a Rusk county farmer, when he died; Matilda died in Panola county as Mrs. James Roquemore; Dora married Levi Turner, and died at Carthage; Amos C. is next of the family; Retinea married Ben Templin and lived out her life in Panola county.

Amos C. Boynton had a good English education, and studied the classics in Collingsworth Institute in Talbotton, Georgia. He had just about reached his majority when the war broke out between the states. He was at that time preparing to take up his University course, with a view to a professional career, as in the case of thousands of other youths, the war changed the whole course of his life. He enlisted in Captain Curley's Company A of the Fourth Georgia Infantry, commanded by Col. Doles of Millardsville. The regiment was in Doles' Brigade, Garden's Division, and in the armies of Jackson and Lee during a greater part of the war. During the first year he was in service at Norfolk, under General Hughes, but from there the regiment got into the peninsular campaign, started by McClellan, and closing with the battle of Malvern Hill on the James River. In the defense of Richmond and in Lee's Invasion of the North, Mr. Boynton saw service at the battle of Antietam, Fredericksburg, the Seven Days' Fighting, the Wilderness, Gettysburg, where his command gave support to Pickett's immortal charge, at Chancellorsville, at Spottsylvania, at Cold Harbor and at Petersburg, where a part of his company was taken prisoners by negro troops and sent to Hart's Island, New York. He was finally paroled, June 17, 1865. During the war Mr. Boynton was kept at the front with the sharpshooters and had many duels and close-quarter encounters, and came out of the war bearing scars on his body as mementoes of his long service. He was a sergeant of his company, but at the direction of the colonel, after all the company officers had been either killed or disabled, he took command of the company. That company went out to the front with eighty-seven men in 1861, and only about seven of those who originally enlisted returned, and the survivors at this time are three.

Following his parole Mr. Boynton found a friend who clothed him and provided him with money for the journey back to Talbotton, Georgia. There his sweetheart lived and after a brief visit with her, he went to Morrison, and borrowed enough money from an uncle to buy a good horse. He then rode home with a cousin, Gus Boynton, arriving in Texas several months after the close of the war. In December of the same year, however, he returned to Georgia, and was married on January 29, 1866, to Miss Martha Fort, a daughter of Mrs. Miranda Fort of Talbotton. The Fort family were among the old settlers in that vicinity and very prominent. Mr. Boynton brought his wife to Texas chiefly by the water route as far as Natchitoches, La., and from there to Carthage came overland by private conveyance. With these preparations for the serious business of life, Col. Boynton opened a farm on the head of Murvaul Creek, and continued farming until the spring of 1882. He then moved into Carthage and engaged in the manufacturing of lumber. He conducted a grist mill and a gin, the first mill in Carthage. This town has been built chiefly of the lumber he cut. After his mill had sawed up all the timber tributary to this point, he located his plant elsewhere. Mr. Boynton is one of the firm of the Boynton Lumber Company, with the mill at White City, Texas. Col. Boynton is president of the Panola Cotton Oil Company, a cold-press mill, and is president of the National Expellers Association, which comprises the cold-process oil mills of the township.

By trade Col. Boynton is a blacksmith, but his general acquaintance and expert knowledge of machinery and with electricity have given him a thorough competency as a builder of mills. He erected the Panola Oil Mill after his own plans, every department of which can be operated independently. Col. Boynton is a Democrat, he has never missed a chance to aid in the welfare of Carthage, and by his strenuous business activity has practically worn out his physical body, though his mind and his spirit are as determined and as valiant as ever. He has always lived at a high pressure, and has never considered his duty to himself until the collapse of his physical machinery.

The children of Col. Boynton are: Lee, a groceryman and feed merchant at Carthage; Albert and Moses, who are lumbermen at White City; Amos C., Jr., who is secretary of the Panola Cotton Oil Company; Walker K., who is a saw mill man; R. Lester, who is associated in the operation of the oil mill in Carthage; and one daughter, Stella, now Mrs. Dr. Daniels of Carthage. Col. Boynton has been a Methodist since early youth and is also a Blue Lodge Mason.

LEE OLIVER ALLEN. One of the rising young men in the public life of Texas is Lee Oliver Allen, sheriff of Williamson county, who resides at Georgetown. A son of George A. and Susan (Roberson) Allen, he was born March 2, 1885, and is in every respect a self-made man, having been left an orphan when a small boy, and subsequently meeting the stern realities of life and battling with them bravely.

Sheriff Allen comes of a line of patriotic ancestry. His grandfather, Elisha Allen, was one of the first settlers of Williamson county; was a Texas pioneer and one of the gallant band under Gen. Sam Houston, who on the battlefield of San Jacinto, April 21, 1836, won for the Republic of Texas her independence. His great-uncles, Peter and Nathaniel Allen, were soldiers of the War of 1812, and his kinsmen rendered valiant service as soldiers of the Confederacy during the Civil war. The father of Lee O. Allen, a native of Williamson county, died at Bartlett, and the youth worked his way through the public schools of that place while making his own living. At the age of twenty years he was appointed deputy city marshal, subsequently became deputy sheriff and constable of his precinct, and in those capacities rendered faithful and efficient service. Being a young man of strong convictions, stanch principles, sterling character and fearless courage, his services as a peace officer and his energy and alertness in enforcing the law and apprehending criminals won for him such great admiration and universal commendation that he was eagerly solicited by the people to announce his candidacy for sheriff of Williamson county, in 1912, and his first race was won by a handsome majority, owing to the loyal support of his many friends and the unusually efficient record he had made as a precinct officer. Professional men, business men, ministers, farmers, in fact, good citizens of all classes, toured the county in automobiles, bearing huge banners and making strong and persistent campaign for his election. When he took the oath of office, Mr. Allen had the distinction of being the youngest sheriff in Texas, and his supporters will bear out the statement that he is one of the best in all the great commonwealth in performing impartially the duties of his office.

In 1908 Mr. Allen was married to Miss Effie Meek, of Bastrop, Texas, daughter of a prominent Southern family. Three children have been born to this union: Maid J., named after Mr. Allen's sister, one of the most brilliant newspaper women in the state; Leon Oliver, and Willie Francis. As a man and a citizen, as well as a public servant, Texas can boast of no better resident than this native son, and in that the past may be reasonably taken as a criterion for the future, it may be safely said that Mr. Allen will go far.

NAT W. BROOKS. No brilliant family record of achievement lies back of Nat W. Brooks. He comes of plain country folk, farming people, who lived quietly, honorably and industriously, but who made no noise in the world, and left their children little beyond a stock of brains and energy and a certain stability of character—a combination which, it is safe to say, excels in potency any legacy of a more material nature. As county attorney of Smith county, Mr. Brooks has manifested a considerable ability in that capacity, and his progress in the community as an attorney since 1900 has been a steady, onward one, with promise of greater success in the years to come.

Born on April 7, 1876, in Smith county, this state, Nat W. Brooks is the son of Alexander M. Brooks, who died on his farm in Smith county in 1895, at the early age of forty-two years. He was born in Talapoosa county, Alabama, and came to Texas in 1869, when he was a youth of sixteen years. He was the son of Aaron Brooks, a farmer of Alabama, descended from South Carolina ancestry, and he married a Miss Henderson. They became the parents of five children, as follows: A. James of Alabama; Floyd H., who came to Smith county, Texas, he died in 1892; Alexander M.; Mrs. Missouri Scroggins of Marshall, Texas; and Mrs. Calista Boone, who died in Smith county in 1889.

Alexander M. Brooks was married in Smith county, Texas, to Miss Alice Shackelford, a daughter of Ludia and Elizabeth (Stone) Shackelford. The father was from Tennessee, and came from that state to Texas prior to the Civil war period. The issue of the Brooks union are: Aaron L., a commission merchant of Harlingen, Texas; Nat W., of this brief review; Lela, the wife of Allen Dugger of Los Angeles, California; Ida, married W. M. Scroggins and resides in Longview, Texas, where Hugh A., the next child, also resides; Floyd J., the youngest, is a farmer of Smith county.

Nat W. Brooks followed his country school training with attendance at the popular and efficient school of Professor Orr at Omen, who conducted what was known as a select school at that place, and after completing his studies there engaged in teaching, in which highly commendable work he continued for four years. It may be said at this juncture that Mr. Brooks did not enter the educational field with a view to making that his vocation, but rather as a means to an end, for during his work as a teacher he was assiduously applying himself to the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in March, 1900, when he was twenty-four years old, being admitted before Judge Gordon Russell, now on the Federal Bench of this district. Mr. Brooks began practice almost immediately, and he has since that time carried on his legal work without a partner. His connection with politics was never with a selfish end in view, until he was drawn into it in his election to the office of county attorney. He was first appointed to the office as the successor of Judge Odom in February, 1911, and he met no opposition for election, either in the Democratic primaries or in the election following in November, 1912. His regime has been devoid of business of a sensational nature save in the trial and conviction of Tom Tate, who developed suddenly into one of the most noted criminals of the age, and the receiving of the confession of the negro rapist who met destruction at the stake without the formality of court procedure.

Mr. Brooks was married at Omen, Texas, September 24, 1905, to Miss Lena Arnold, a daughter of William Arnold, a merchant of that place and a native son of Smith county, who married Miss Mary Dickey. Mrs. Brooks is one of their six children, and she has borne her husband one daughter, the only child in the Nat Brooks home.

With reference to the religious tendencies of the family, it would seem that there is no unanimity of opinion on these matters, various members of the family having chosen different church homes, while others remain neutral, as Nat Brooks has done. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, that being the only fraternal affiliation he claims.

ROBERT LEE SATTERWHITE. The proprietor and editor of a newspaper occupies a vantage ground which may make or mar a reputation, or build up or tear down a cause worthy of support or approval by the public. For this and other reasons, the city of Tulia and the county of Swisher have reason for congratulation that the Tulia Enterprise is in such safe, sane and conservative hands. It is considered one of the best general newspapers for the family published in this section, as well as an outspoken, fair-play exponent of the best elements of the Democratic party—in fact, it is in all respects well worthy of the care and sound judgment displayed in its columns, and reflects credit on the editor and publisher, Robert Lee Satterwhite. Mr. Satterwhite was born January 28, 1871, in Nevada county, Arkansas, and is a son of James Lewis and Mary Jane (Basden) Satterwhite.

James Lewis Satterwhite was born in 1848, in Arkansas, whence his father, Dempsey Satterwhite, had come from an eastern State in that year, making his home on a farm in Washita county. James Lewis White was still a lad of tender years when the Civil war broke out, and he at once offered his services to the Confederacy and served until the close of hostilities with an Arkansas regiment. On the close of his military career, he returned to farming, and so continued in his native State until 1885, when he came to Texas. He is now living a retired life, his home being located in Freestone county. He is a Democrat, a member of the Missionary Baptist church, and a public-spirited and highly esteemed citizen. His wife, Mary Jane Basden, was also born in Arkansas, and was a daughter of Capt. W. R. Basden, who came from Alabama in 1848 and settled in a home on a farm. In 1871 he became a member of the Arkansas legislature, and was long prominent in Democratic politics in the State. Mrs. Satterwhite still survives and lives in Freestone county. She and her husband had seven sons and two daughters, and of these, Robert Lee was the second in order of birth.

The early education of Mr. Satterwhite was secured in the public schools of Arkansas and Texas, and at the age of sixteen years he began working on a farm. He then received his introduction to newspaper life when he learned the trade of printer, and four years later, in 1893, established his first paper, the Wortham Signal, at Wortham, Freestone county. This he conducted for two years and then sold out and engaged in farming, which he followed from 1893 to 1896. In the latter year he again engaged in newspaper work, establishing the Wortham Journal, and this he sold in 1898 to his brother, Edward Satterwhite, who still conducts it. In that year Robert L. Satterwhite enlisted for service in the Spanish-American War as a member of Company L, Second Texas Regiment, under General Oppenheim. On his return to the pursuits of peace, he located in Knox county and again engaged in farming, but in December, 1909, moved to Tulia. Here Mr. Satterwhite again entered the journalistic field as founder of the Tulia Enterprise. His efforts in behalf of the reading public have received the support which they have deserved, both in the matter of advertising and subscriptions, and he is now conducting a clean, wholesome newspaper, filled with the latest news, breezy local happenings and well-written, timely editorials. The office is fitted with all modern appliances to be found in first-class establishments, and the job department is equally well equipped, and turns out all classes of job printing in neat, attractive style.

On August 17, 1893, Mr. Satterwhite was married at Fairfield, Texas, to Miss Bessie Weaver, a native of Texas, and daughter of J. M. Weaver, an early settler of Navarro county. Four children have been born to this union: Leta, born August 20, 1894, at Wortham, Texas, and now the wife of James Sanders, a resident of Deaf Smith county; Leroy, born March 27, 1896; Gladys, born July 1, 1900; and Mary Besse, born October 4, 1908. Mr. Satterwhite has been the architect of his own fortunes, for when he left home he was possessed of neither money nor influential friends. He feels, however, that he owes much of the credit for his success to his choice of locations, for it is his belief that this section offers greater opportunities to the man of ambition and determination than any other. He has taken an active interest in civic affairs, and has long been known as an earnest worker in the ranks of the Democratic party. While a resident of Freestone county, in 1901, Mr. Satterwhite was sent to represent his district in the State Legislature. Subsequently, in 1903, he was made assistant reading clerk of the house. He has the respect and confidence of a wide circle of friends, many of whom are fellow-members of the Missionary Baptist church.

A. W. Hoffman & Wife Mary Louisa

JUDGE JOHN W. GOODWIN. A son of Colonel George I. Goodwin, and himself distinguished as a lawyer and jurist, John W. Goodwin is a native son of Texas and one of the oldest members of the bar of Brown county, where he has been in practice for more than thirty years.

Judge John W. Goodwin, now district judge of the thirty-fifth district of Texas, was born in Fayette county, Texas, January 1, 1857, a son of George I. and Sarah (Trammell) Goodwin. He spent most of his boyhood in Bryan, where he attended the public schools, and also the Mechanical and Agricultural College, at the founding of which his father had had so important a part. At the age of twenty-one he began reading law in his father's office, and in 1878 was admitted to the bar. In the fall of the next year he began practice in Brownwood, and in 1880 was elected county attorney for Brown county. After serving as county attorney for one term, he resumed private practice, and soon built up a clientage probably second to that of no other lawyer in this section of the state. Judge Goodwin retired from private practice in the fall of 1900, when he was elected district judge for the thirty-fifth judicial district. This position he has since filled to the entire satisfaction of both the bar and the general public. He is recognized as a just and honorable judge, a man of sterling integrity, and with exceptional knowledge and skill in the law.

Judge Goodwin has always taken an active part in behalf of the Democratic organization in his section of the state, and has been equally devoted to the civic welfare of Brown county and his home city of Brownwood. In December, 1891, he married Miss Kate M. Cabaniss, a daughter of T. R. Cabaniss and Mary (Moore) Cabaniss. The five children born to their marriage are mentioned as follows: George I. Goodwin, now a student in the Rice Institute at Houston; Robert C. Goodwin; John W. Goodwin, Jr., deceased; Richard Goodwin; and Joseph W. Goodwin.

Judge Goodwin is essentially a man of the law, and has devoted his entire life to its study and practice. His scholarship is profound, and his attention and energies have seldom been diverted from the work which he chose as his profession in early life. The judge is a man of quiet reserve, gentle in his disposition, but strong and authoritative in his judgment and character. He and his family enjoy one of the pleasant homes of Brownwood, where the name Goodwin is mentioned with the highest respect and esteem.

MAJOR HENRY N. HOFFER. The scion of one of the oldest German-American families, or, indeed, of the oldest of any nationality in the country today, Major Henry N. Hoffer, retired farmer and well-to-do citizen of Kaufman, takes his place among the reliable and responsible men of his community, where he has long been known and esteemed for his many worthy qualities of heart and mind. Farming activities have, for the most part, held his attention through life, although he has seen a variety of experience, as soldier, public office, school teacher, and scientific farmer. His career has been one of the utmost activity and usefulness to his country, and his retirement from his labors is his just reward.

Henry Hoffer has been a resident of the state of Texas since 1851. He came hither with his father, Henry Harrison Hoffer, making the trip by wagon from New Market, Tennessee, where the subject was born on March 5, 1838. He is a son of Henry Harrison and Sarah B. (Hawkins) Hoffer, and the representative of one of the oldest families extant in America. His ancestry is of considerable interest, and it may be stated briefly that he is a great-great-grandson of the man who established the house of Hoffer on these shores. That worthy gentleman was Matthias Hoffer, the German emigrant, and he founded this now numerous family in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Some of the sons of Matthias Hoffer were soldiers in the Continental army and fought long and valiently for the Independence of the American Colonies of Great Britain. The great-grandfather of the subject was Rudolph Hoffer, whose son, Daniel Hoffer, became the father of Henry Harrison Hoffer, the father of Major Henry N. Hoffer, of this review. The men of this family were chiefly farmers, mechanics or surveyors, and seemed for the most part disinclined toward higher education or the professions, content to exercise their sturdy energies in the middle class walks of life, where so much of the best brain and brawn of our national citizenship is ever found.

Rudolph Hoffer married, and among his children were Daniel, who went to East Tennessee, and who served in the war of 1812 under the stars and stripes, later settling in West Virginia where he died and left a family. Daniel Hoffer married Frances, the daughter of John Allen, and he had children as follows: Henry, Walker, a cabinet maker of Knoxville, Tennessee, who died there when he lacked one month of being ninety-nine years old; Dr. Angus, dentist of Washington, D. C., who died at the age of eighty-six years and left a family; John M., who died in San Antonio in 1861, leaving a son, John, who lives at Winters, Texas; George, who died in East Tennessee, leaving two sons who later settled in Indiana; Henry Harrison, who became the father of the subject; and Jane, who married James Critchlow and spent her life at Murfreesboro, Tennessee.

"John Allen was a private in Captain James Young's Company, First Battalion, Cumberland County Militia, 1780; James Johnston, lieutenant colonel. See p. 81, volume six, Pennsylvania Archives, Fifth Series.

"LUTHER R. KELLER,
"Custodian of Public Records,"

This certificate of service was obtained through the Adjutant General of Pennsylvania.

The following item is a tradition, but was accepted by the D. A. R.: John Allen served in the Revolutionary war. Was in the battle of Bunker Hill. In this battle a bullet passed between his ear and head, making a sleek hairless place the balance of his life.

Henry Harrison Hoffer started life as a tailor, but he later studied dentistry with what books he found available on the subject, and before he came to Texas, he engaged in the practice. He did his work in that profession in Plano, where he first settled in Texas, then in Bonham, and finally in Kaufman, where he retired when he was sixty-eight years of age. He died in 1873, three years after the death of his loved and devoted wife. He was married in 1821 to Sarah B. Hawkins, a daughter of Henry Hawkins, of Granger county, Missouri. Mrs. Hoffer was born on November 7, 1801, and she was the mother of three children: Mary A., who died at Pilot Point, Texas, as Mrs. R. F. Campbell, when she was seventy-six years of age; John, who died in 1861; and Henry N., of Kaufman, and the subject of this review.

Henry N. Hoffer reached manhood while the family was resident in Bonham, Texas, and it was after he had come of age that he entered upon a college course in Lebanon, Tennessee, but the political events of that period which resulted in Civil strife made a soldier of the college student after six months work in Lebanon. He returned home, announcing his intentions firmly, and promptly enlisted in Dallas county in Company K of the Nineteenth Texas Cavalry with Col. Nat M. Burford in command and James Thomas, Captain of Company K. He went with his regiment to Arkansas, where their first service was done along the White river above Duvall's Bluff. He was with General Shelby's command in the fight at Cape Girardeau, Missouri, and other desultory skirmishes and engagements in southwest Missouri of that time. The Nineteenth Texas subsequently became a part of Walker's Division and took part in the battles of Mansfield, Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou, winding up its fighting career at the latter place. The regiment left Arkansas then, and had reached Hempstead, Texas, on its march toward the Gulf, when the news of General Lee's surrender reached it, and the regiment was disbanded at once. Mr. Hoffer entered the service as a private and when he was discharged carried a commission as a second lieutenant.

After the close of the war Mr. Hoffer began life as a teacher in charge of the Kaufman school, then a small institution, as the status and size of the place warranted. After a year of teaching he was appointed deputy county clerk and after three years of efficient service he was removed by the Davis administration. Farming appeared to offer some adequate return for labors expended in its interests, and he engaged in it, only to meet with the discouragement that followed a scourge of grasshoppers in 1867, and he felt impelled to seek another field of activity. He became a merchant's clerk, and after a few years of that service found himself able to enter a partnership with Muckelroy & Son in Kaufman, where he enjoyed a measure of prosperity for the few years in which he continued to be so occupied. He then purchased a farm and returned to his earlier ambition, but results were still unfavorable, and he entered the cotton business as the representative of Skinner & Stone. He represented Martin, Weie & Fitzhugh of Paris for many years after his connection with the first named firm had ceased, and still later he was employed as a buyer for Fitzhugh, Orthwein & Company, of St. Louis, his connection with the business covering, in the aggregate, something like a quarter of a century.

Once more did Mr. Hoffer take upon himself the responsibilities of farm life, in his endeavor to demonstrate that he could farm profitably, and so well did he succeed that he was called from his work to take up demonstration work under Dr. Knapp for the agricultural department of the United States, and he was an assistant in the work with arranging with farmers to co-operate with the Doctor in several counties of North Texas, abandoning the work only when his health prevented his assuming charge of the State of Mississippi for co-operative demonstration work.

As a farmer and stockman Mr. Hoffer introduced the first blooded male Durham into their locality, a movement that did much toward the improvement of the cattle in succeeding years, and on the whole, his connection with the agricultural industry in the state has been one of the utmost benefit to the commonwealth and to the people.

Mr. Hoffer has identified himself with political affairs as a layman rather than otherwise, and his chief work in political circles was his aid as a delegate to the state convention of Democrats that nominated "Sul" Ross for governor.

On November 15, 1866, Mr. Hoffer married his first wife in Kaufman. She was Miss Marion Johnson, a daughter of William Johnson, who came to Texas from Arkansas, and she died in 1869, leaving a daughter, Sallie, who married John T. Parish and died near Fort Worth. Mrs. Parish left a family who mourn her loss.

On October 4, 1871, Mr. Hoffer was united in Kaufman with Miss Louisa Becker, a daughter of William Becker, a cultured German, who came to these shores in 1846 from Badenköff, Germany. He was a practical forester and passed his life in that work. Mrs. Hoffer was born in Kaufman in 1848. To Mr. and Mrs. Hoffer were born six children: Dr. William H. is a dentist of Kaufman; Miss Mary A. lives at home; Jessie is the wife of John H. Williams, of Kaufman; Clarence R. is a stockbroker of Oklahoma City; Dr. Carl W. is also a practicing dentist, of Nashville, Tennessee; Miss Fannie is a popular teacher in the Kaufman public schools.

The family have membership in the Presbyterian church, and the fraternal relations of Mr. Hoffer are represented by his membership in the Masonic order, with affiliations of the Master Mason's degree.

In 1911 Mr. Hoffer and his family took up their abode in a splendid home on Houston avenue, in one of the finest residence districts of the city, and there their many friends enjoy the genuine hospitality which they accord to all whom they welcome within their gates.

HENRY G. SCHARRENBECK. In business circles of Brownwood few men have attained to more deserved distinction than Henry G. Scharrenbeck, merchant tailor, who since 1906 has built up a large and prosperous business in this city. Instances are many of men who have come to this country without means or influential friends and have risen to places of importance in industrial or commercial life, and no better example of this type may be found than Mr. Scharrenbeck. Coming to the United States as a German emigrant, with little capital other than a strong heart, willing hands and a stern determination to win success, he has made the most of his opportunities and stands today in an enviable position among his fellow citizens, a man eminently worthy of being classed with those whose prominence in the business world is the result of their own efforts and abilities. Mr. Scharrenbeck was born in Germany, September 18, 1856, and is a son of John and Anna Scharrenbeck, natives of the Fatherland, where both spent their entire lives, the father dying about the year 1896, and the mother in October, 1883. They were the parents of two sons and two daughters, and of these Henry G. is the oldest.

Henry G. Scharrenbeck was educated in the public schools, and as a youth adopted the vocation followed by his father, that of tailor, to which he served a four-year apprenticeship. He then continued in the same occupation until he entered the German army, as is customary with the youths of his country, and from the fall of 1878 to the fall of 1880 was a member of the famous Dragoons in the cavalry service. He then became again engaged in tailoring, and for some time was the proprietor of a business of his own; but, believing that he could find better opportunities for advancement in the United States, embarked for this country in 1883, and on October 27th of that year arrived at Galveston, Texas. Not long thereafter he went to Weimar, Colorado county, where he established himself in business and remained for one and one-half years, succeeding which he spent more than eight years at his trade at Mexia, Limestone county, and in the fall of 1893 removed to Paris, Lamar county. In 1894 he removed to Roscoe, Nolan county, where he remained about two years, his next location being Sweetwater, in the same county, where he remained a like period. He next took up his trade at Ballinger, Runnels county, and about one and one-half years later went to Dallas, from whence after one year he removed to Meridian, Bosque county. He spent about one and one-half years at that point, a short period at Crawford, McLennan county, and five years at Lampasas, Lampasas county, and in November, 1906, came to Brownwood, which city has since been the scene of his activities. Mr. Scharrenbeck is the owner of a model store, with an up-to-date stock, and enjoys a large share of the city's most representative trade in his line. A skilled workman, has shown himself progressive and energetic, and is to be thoroughly relied upon in all matters of business.

On April 14, 1882, Mr. Scharrenbeck was married to Miss Hellene J. Reimers, of Germany, where her parents were farming people. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Scharrenbeck, of whom three survive: Mrs. Anna Frieda Sanders, living at Dallas, where her husband is foreman of stereotyping for the American Press Association; Gustav W., of Brownwood, who is married and engaged in the oil developing business; and Louise J., who is single and resides at home with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Scharrenbeck are members of the Christian Science church at Lampasas. He has been interested in fraternal work, and is a popular member of all branches of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of the Macabees and the Fraternal Brotherhood. Upon coming to this country, as soon as was allowed by law he took out citizenship papers, and since that time has been connected with the Democratic party. He is a great believer in the future of Texas and has done much to induce settlement here by men of ability and ambition. He is justly regarded as one of Brownwood's most representative citizens.

HON. WILLIAM FRANCIS HENDRIX. In a community where strong men are in the majority, rather than in the minority, which is usually the case, it is difficult to name those who are deserving of especial mention. It is generally safe, however, to follow the opinion of the people and to trust in their judgment as to the merits of the individual whose case is in point. In the field of law, merit alone counts. Training may prepare, inclination may develop, opportunity may aid, but if the inherent ability be not there to perform, the legist remains in the vast army of mediocrity, the ranks of which are ever filled to overflowing, while the leaders are eagerly sought, and found but occasionally. It is for these reasons that the convictions of the people at large hold such weight, for the public, as a whole, is seldom in the wrong. The choice of his fellow-citizens for the county judgeship of Swisher county since 1910, William Francis Hendrix has shown himself eminently worthy of the confidence reposed in him and has won the unquestioned right to be classed among those who are leaders in the profession and of the people.

William Francis Hendrix is a Missourian. He was born at Mexico, Audrain county, May 20, 1862, and is a son of Francis Marvin and Eliza S. (Armistead) Hendrix. His grandfather was a Kentuckian, a successful agriculturist in the Blue Grass State and in Audrain county, Missouri, and in the latter served as sheriff prior to the war between the South and the North. Francis M. Hendrix was born in Oldham county, Kentucky, and was taken by his parents to Missouri as a child, and there early learned the trade of stonemason, which he followed for many years. He is now retired from active pursuits and makes his home at Sayre, Beckham county, Oklahoma. He has never desired public office, but has inherited his father's democratic proclivities, and, like him, also is a faithful member of the Christian church. Mr. Hendrix married Eliza S. Armistead, who was born in Audrain county, Missouri, a daughter of Frank Armistead, who emigrated to that county from Virginia and died when his daughter was but two years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Hendrix had five children, of whom two daughters and two sons are living, one son having died in infancy.

The eldest of his parents' children, William Francis Hendrix was eleven years of age when the family moved to Dallas county, Texas, and there he attended the public schools for three years. In 1877 he accompanied the family to Eastland county, and after completing his primary education there he entered Lawrence & Griffiths' Business College, at Dallas, being graduated therefrom in 1888. Following this, he took up the study of law in the office of Davenport & Connor, and in March, 1889, was admitted to practice, his first field of endeavor being the city of Eastland. Subsequently he followed his profession in Stonewall and Lubbock counties, and was one of the organizers and the first attorney of the latter county. In 1892 he went to Custer county, Oklahoma, and settled at Arapahoe, where two years later he was elected a member of the Third Oklahoma Legislature, and served in that body during 1894 and 1895. In 1905 he returned to Texas and entered private practice at Tulia, and here, in 1910, was elected county judge. His subsequent re-election in November, 1912, evidenced the confidence in which he is held by the people of Swisher county, and he has efficiently and conscientiously maintained the highest tradition of the Texas judiciary. Judge Hendrix is a "people's judge," in that he has ever been known to be absolutely impartial, rendering his decisions as he has seen the right, with utter disregard for the rank or station of those who come under his jurisdiction. Among the legal fraternity he is decidedly popular, which, perhaps, is the best evidence of his equitable and incorruptibility. He is a valued member of the State and American bar associations, where he has made friends and admirers by his championship of the best and truest ethics of his honored calling. In fraternal circles, he is popular with the members of the Masons, in which he has attained the Council degree; the Woodmen of the World, and the Knights of Pythias. He was reared in the faith of the Christian church, and has ever remained true to its teachings.

Judge Hendrix was married April 15, 1891, in Lloyd county, Texas, to Miss Alice Barnes, daughter of J. G. Barnes, an early settler of Texas who came from Alabama. Mrs. Hendrix died at Fort Worth, Texas, July 16, 1910, and was interred in the cemetery at Tulia. Seven children were born to this union, three of whom are living: Ernest C., born at Arapahoe, Oklahoma, in 1894; James Francis, born at that place in 1896; and Rudy W., born also at Arapahoe, in 1898. On September 7, 1911, Judge Hendrix contracted a second marriage at Tulia, Texas, when he was united with Mrs. Minnie Ross, who was born at Glenrose, Somervell county, Texas, daughter of John McCoy. To this union has come one son: Fred Roy, born at Tulia, November 28, 1912.

ROY F. SAUNDERS, M. D. Physician and surgeon, with offices in the Flat Iron Building at Fort Worth, Roy Farra Saunders is a son of Bacon Saunders, long distinguished as one of the most eminent surgeons of the South. The son was born at Bonham, in Fannin county, Texas, August 31, 1879. As a boy associate of his father he manifested special taste and aptitude for the medical profession, particularly in the branch of surgery, and since his graduation and the beginning of his independent practice has performed some of the most difficult operations and now ranks among the foremost in ability of the surgeons of Texas.

Dr. Saunders holds the chair of surgery at the Texas Christian University. He is also assistant chief surgeon of the Fort Worth & Denver Railway, for the Trinity and Brazos Valley Railway and local surgeon for the International & Great Northern Railways.

Dr. Saunders received his education at high school, the Texas Christian University, and the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, where he was graduated in 1906 M. D. He was married April 23, 1908, to Miss Kate Guthrie, daughter of C. E. Guthrie, formerly from North Carolina. They have one daughter, Jane Elizabeth Saunders, born June 18, 1910.

LEE M. TAYLOR. Since the close of the war no family has been more prominently and usefully identified with the city of Georgetown and Williamson county than the Taylors. While banking has been the chief activity of Captain Emzy Taylor, also of his son, Lee M. Taylor, there are a number of enterprises and movements which have owed their success to the Taylor business ability and capital, and Georgetown, as one of the centers of wealth and culture in the state, has long recognized the high position of this family in the community.

Lee M. Taylor, who is himself a retired banker, is a son of Emzy Taylor, and was born at Georgetown, November 17, 1865. His grandparents were Josiah and Catherine (Lee) Taylor.

Captain Emzy Taylor, who was born at Little Rock, Arkansas, October 7, 1841, was brought to Georgetown in 1849, grew up in that city, attended the local schools, and was clerk to his father, an early merchant of Georgetown. In 1861 he enlisted in Colonel Hood's regiment of Texas troops, went to Virginia, but ill health brought about his discharge before the first year of the war was ended. Though he was greatly emaciated by his long confinement in hospital and was said to be suffering from consumption, Mr. Taylor re-enlisted in 1862, going out in the Sixteenth Texas Volunteer Infantry, as second senior lieutenant, and subsequently as first lieutenant, and became captain of the company after the death of Captain Chalmers at Mansfield, Louisiana. He saw nearly three years of active service, and among other battles fought at Mansfield and Pleasant Hill, at Milliken's Bend and many lesser engagements. After the war he was in merchandising at Georgetown in partnership with J. L. Brittain for two years, and was then alone until he sold his business in 1881. His career as a banker began in 1882, when he began conducting a private bank at Georgetown. On June 2, 1890, this institution was reorganized as the First National Bank of Georgetown with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars and Mr. Taylor as president, and his son, Lee M. Taylor, as cashier.

Captain Emzy Taylor in 1876 was the leading spirit in the projecting of a railroad from Georgetown to Round Rock. After the line had been built it was turned over in 1877 to the International and Great Northern Railroad. He was also instrumental in establishing waterworks at Georgetown, and was secretary of the company which brought about the location of the Southwestern University in the city, which still remains the home of that substantial institution of learning. Mr. Taylor was also one of those who brought the Texas Chautauqua to Georgetown, one of the earliest institutions of that kind for education and entertainment in the state.

Captain Emzy Taylor was married July 7, 1864, to Miss Margaret C. Henderson, who was brought to Texas in 1856. Captain Taylor and his wife had two children who reached maturity: Lee M., and Corinna, who married R. T. Cooper of Georgetown.

Lee M. Taylor was graduated A. B. from Southwestern University of Georgetown in 1883 at the age of seventeen, being the youngest graduate to date from that institution. Three days after graduating he took his place in his father's bank as cashier, and has been identified with the First National Bank of Georgetown either as assistant cashier, cashier, or vice president until he recently retired from executive responsibilities. Mr. Taylor owns a large farm in Williamson county, and has investments in the Oil Mill of Georgetown, the Belford Lumber Company and the Georgetown Ice Company.

He is a man who believes in enjoying his wealth, rather than hoarding it, and he and his wife spend their summers traveling, either in the north or abroad. They have but one child, Mabel, wife of W. A. Quebedeaux, who is engaged in the automobile business in Georgetown. Mrs. Quebedeaux graduated in music in 1907 and received her degree, A. B. from the Southwestern University in 1909.

Mr. Taylor served as city alderman for six years, and has often been called on to run for the office of mayor. He is a retiring, unassuming, dignified man, of sterling character, and whether in business or in public affairs has the complete confidence of his community. He and his family are members of the Baptist church.

On November 3, 1887, Lee M. Taylor married Miss Fannie M. Taliaferro. She is the daughter of Rev. Robert H. Taliaferro, a pioneer Baptist preacher of Texas. Mrs. Taylor was also a student in the State University, though she did not graduate. A woman of brilliant intellect, she is active in social affairs of Georgetown and is especially interested in Texas history. Both she and Mr. Taylor are very loyal Texans, and he is author of a book, "The Texan," which has been published and which shows the real character of the present-day Texan in contrast to the Texan of pioneer days.

LOUIS OGE. It must be with considerable pride that Louis Oge looks back upon the share which he has had in the "winning of the West," for he belonged to that band of men who have helped to make the name of Texas famous, the Texas Rangers. Now one of the wealthy and prominent citizens of Antonio, Mr. Oge has vivid recollections of the days when he carried a mail sack over the historic Overland trail, not knowing what danger lurked around the next butte. Such a life proves any man to be courageous and self-reliant and after his days of fighting Indians and desperate characters of various descriptions were over he turned to business with the same determination to win that had brought him out of many a difficulty before. His present position shows that he was successful.

Louis Oge is the son of Adolph Oge and came to this country with his parents when he was only a child. He was born in Alsace-Lorraine in October, 1832, and it was in 1845 that he first saw America. He and his parents were members of the Castro colony and they landed at New Orleans. From this port they came to Galveston, thence to Port Lavaca and so overland to Castroville in Medina county, Texas. It was only a short time thereafter until the family removed to San Antonio.

It was when Louis was fifteen years of age that he first went to work, his employer being John G. Woodward, a farmer, whose farm was located on the Medina river. He remained here until 1850, when he joined the Texas Rangers, being a member of the company commanded by Big Foot Wallace, the famous frontiersman and Indian fighter. Mr. Oge saw service on the frontier between San Antonio and the Rio Grande, a frontier which was at that time infested with Indians. The Comanche and Lipan Indian tribes were bad in those days and the Rangers were in almost continual conflict with them. It was a time of sudden alarms, sharp fighting, fast and hard riding; there were surely nothing but real men in the ranks of the Texas Rangers. Later Mr. Oge entered the government service through his old friend, Big Foot Wallace, who was employed by Henry Skillman to carry mail from San Antonio to El Paso. The latter, Henry Skillman, was given the contract to carry the United States mail between San Antonio and El Paso, and Mr. Oge was one of the seven men chosen by their leader to guard the mail stages against the attacks of Indians and "hold-up" men, and was later in charge of the men. He remained in the work for four years and during this time repulsed many a dangerous attack. He then took up a similar work in New Mexico, being a government mail carrier between Mesilla, New Mexico, and Tucson, Arizona. For four years he was in this service and then he became a conductor, carrying the mail from Tucson to Fort Yuma, Arizona, for Butterfield & Co. This route was a portion of the overland mail route which had been established between Springfield, Missouri, and San Francisco.

It was in 1860 that Mr. Oge returned to Texas. Two years later he entered the cattle business. For the twenty years succeeding he was the owner of a ranch in Frio county, having his headquarters at Frio town. Having built up a modest fortune in the cattle business he ired in 1882 and moved to San Antonio, where he made his home ever since.

Since coming to San Antonio he has largely increased his fortunes by judicious investments. He is the owner of valuable business property in the central business district of San Antonio, on Commerce and Houston streets, and the ownership of this property has placed him among the city's wealthiest citizens. He also owns a handsome home on Washington street.

Mr. Oge has taken an active part in the life of the city since coming here to live. He was chairman of the school board of San Antonio for four years and was also one of the aldermen of the city under the Elmeddord administration.

Mr. Oge married Miss Elizabeth Newton, a native of Mississippi and a daughter of Rev. William C. Newton, a native of Alabama and a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South during the last forty years of his life. Four children have been born to them, namely: Josephine, who is the wife of Henry Flannery; George Oge, a stockman; Annie, the widow of the late Charles Bertrand, who was a prominent young lawyer of San Antonio; and Frank Oge.

MARTIN M. JOYNER. The life of Martin M. Joyner affords ample illustration of the material progress a determined man may make in the business of life, despite the most untoward conditions of early youth and education. As president of the Jester Guaranty Bank of Tyler, Mr. Joyner has been identified with the banking interests of Smith county for the past twelve years, and he is today one of the men in his community who share in the wholesome regard of the best people of the city, possessing their fullest confidence and their entire approbation. In Tyler, where he makes his home, he is referred to as a man standing at the head of the citizenship of the place, and wherever he is known the same generous friendship and esteem are his.

Born near Kilgore, Gregg county, Texas, May 12, 1864, Martin M. Joyner is the son of Thomas J. Joyner, who came into East Texas from Middle Tennessee in 1849 and here settled. He was the son of a Tennessee farmer, and was the sole member of his father's family to identify himself with this part of the United States. He was an uneducated man, and his success in business was of a mediocre nature, which prevented his children from launching their careers with the advantage that would have been theirs in the event of their proper education. Thomas Joyner identified himself with the Confederate service during the Rebellion and was with the troops of the Trans-Mississippi Department of the Confederacy. He moved to Rockport, Texas, in 1905 and died there five years later at the advanced age of eighty-three. He married Miss Sarah J. Laird, a daughter of John Laird, also a native of Tennessee, and she died in 1877 at the age of fifty-four. They were the parents of five children, named as follows: Elizabeth, who married A. L. Still and lives in Kilgore, Texas; Sina, the wife of G. G. Turner, of Overton, Texas; Henderson, of Fort Worth, Texas; D. C., also of Overton, Texas; and Martin M., the subject of this brief review.

Martin M. Joyner unfortunately had no school advantages beyond those of the country schools district, and when he should have been in a higher institution of learning in preparation for the serious affairs of later life, he was performing the hardest kind of common labor with pick and shovel, and this work served to lay the foundation for his future business success. Born on a farm, the circumstances of his parents did not permit more than the humblest advantages, as has already been mentioned, domestic conditions compelling the young family to seek the industrial field rather than intellectual equipment, and when Martin Joyner was seventeen years old he began his independent career as a section hand out of Kilgore on the I. & G. N. Railroad. He applied himself studiously to the work in hand, and with characteristic ability so advanced in the knowledge and understanding of his work that when he was eighteen he was made a foreman, and he remained in the company's service in that capacity until 1892. He had by that time managed to save a small capital from his earnings, and with this fund he engaged in the merchandise business in Troup, where he continued to sell goods for ten years, making a wide circle of friends in the community and establishing a universal confidence in the community by reason of his honesty, sincerity and ability as a business man, such as has been of the utmost value to him in the later years of his life there. In 1902 he associated himself with a few men of Troup who were possessed of greater means than he, and together they organized the First National Bank of Troup, Mr. Joyner being chosen cashier of the new bank. He managed the bank for the ensuing ten years, covering a period of the most intense business activity and of rural and urban development that the district has ever experienced, during which time the institution reflected always the healthy condition of its surroundings. On November 18, 1912, he resigned his position to assume the duties of president of the Jester Guaranty Bank of Tyler, and has just entered upon the responsibilities of his new position. In addition to his connection with the last named institution, Mr. Joyner was one of the promoters of the Arp Guaranty State Bank, of Arp, Texas, and is now a director of the concern. His ability as a banker and financier is acknowledged throughout the county, and he is known for one of the safe and sane financial men of the district, his name alone being sufficient to carry confidence in any banking institution that might come into existence.

Mr. Joyner has consistently eschewed politics, either as a business or as a pastime. He is a Democrat, coming from such a Democracy as developed from the service of his father in the Confederate army. He is an ex-mayor of Troup and served on the board of education of Troup for fourteen years and as Treasurer of the board at one time.

On October 20, 1889, when Mr. Joyner was twenty-five years of age, he married Miss Sudie Arnold, a daughter of James and Mrs. Nancy (Bellew) Arnold. Mrs. Joyner is one of the three children of her parents, and she and Mr. Joyner have six children, named as follows: Letha, who is assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Troup; Benton, who is identified with the clerical department of the same bank; Ernest, Darwin, Jeannette, and Thomas.

Mr. Joyner is a past chancellor of Cascade Lodge, No. 96, Knights of Pythias, and has represented it in the Texas Grand Lodge; he is Past Consul of the Woodmen of the World, and was a steward in the Methodist church, South, at Troup. The family enjoy a high place in their home community, where they are identified with the best social activities of the place.

ROBERT E. LEE SANER, attorney, member of the firm of Saner & Saner, at Dallas, was born on a farm near Washington, Arkansas, August 9, 1871, and is a son of John Franklin and Susan Crawford (Webb) Saner. His father, of Swiss descent, served as a soldier in the Confederate army throughout the war between the states, while his mother was of Scotch-Irish descent. Mr. Saner was educated in the public and high schools of Washington and Hope, Arkansas, and graduated from Hope High School in June, 1887, following which he commenced teaching a school at Seymour, near Washington, being at this time not yet sixteen years of age. This school was considered a very difficult place to teach, as the students had caused two teachers the year before to leave the school unfinished, on account of their obnoxious conduct. He taught three summer sessions of three months at this school and made a record as a disciplinarian that became well known over the county. After the first session taught at Seymour, near Washington, he taught five months' school in the lower end of Hempstead county, Arkansas, at Centreville. During the sessions of the above schools, on Saturdays, at picnics and other public gatherings, made many speeches and had many public debates with other school teachers throughout the county. In this way he became well known as a young public speaker, had many invitations to speak all over the county and won a gold medal for oratory in a contest at Hope, Arkansas, in the summer of 1889. In 1888 he had saved up enough money to enter Searcy College, located at Searcy, Arkansas, after having won a scholarship in a public contest held for that purpose, making a general average of ninety-nine per cent. In 1889, finding that his funds were running short, he, together with a stranded printer by the name of Hill, established and conducted, after school hours, the first daily newspaper ever published in Searcy, which was known as the Searcy Morning Call. This paper was sold by them within a year after its establishment to Mr. James Baugh, and its name changed to the Searcy Daily Citizen, and has since continued under that name. His work upon the little daily paper enabled him to make enough money to finish out the year at the college, where he took high rank in mathematics and was elected president of the literary society.

During his college course he and a classmate, named Sam Deener, engaged with Arthur DeLand and William B. Smith, two other students, in a debate during the commencement exercises. Both Smith and DeLand were capable debaters and having their subject more thoroughly in hand, Mr. Saner felt that they would win did he not anger them and thus cause them to lose their heads. This he proceeded to do, and both DeLand and Smith, being high-tempered, forgot their subject and demeaned Saner, making a vicious personal attack in their speeches upon him, while Saner, having accomplished his purpose, stuck to his subject, not replying to the personal attacks, and by this ruse won the debate for his side, thus demonstrating generalship in handling himself in a contest of this character.

In the fall of 1890 he was offered and accepted a place as general agent for the Searcy & West Point Railroad, a small line of railroad running from Searcy to West Point, Arkansas, and connecting with the Iron Mountain system at Kensett, Arkansas. In this position he was also agent for the Pacific Express Company and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. He succeeded Mr. Thomas Paschall, who left the railway service to take the position of cashier in a newly organized bank, and while Mr. Saner was not an expert bookkeeper, after ten days' training working frequently most of the night on the books, after Mr. Paschall had tutored him during the day, he took over the business with a number of clerks and trained men and others under his charge, and conducted the same successfully until the fall of 1892. This railroad was capitalized at $75,000, and a fact unique in railroad history is that in one year, through Mr. Saner's efforts and effective management, the little line paid dividends of $60,000. By the fall of 1892 he had saved enough money to enter Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tennessee. After the session had closed, and looking forward to augmenting his slender resources by further work, he was engaged by a Chicago school furniture house and canvassed portions of the States of Kentucky and Indiana. Returning to Arkansas, with his brother, John C. Saner, they entered Vanderbilt University in the fall of 1893, and remained together in that institution until the end of the term in 1895. In the summers of 1894, 1895 and 1896 he traveled for Belmont College, a young ladies' school of Nashville, Tennessee, as their business representative, always making enough to continue him in pursuing his studies at the university. He was the winner of the Young medal in oratory in 1893. Before this contest considerable fun was made of him by the older students in the university for his presumption in entering the contest for this honor during his first year at the university. Usually those who entered such contests were either juniors or seniors. His fraternity mates went so far as to have him rewrite his speech several times, and frankly told him they were afraid he would reflect upon them by failing to win a place in the preliminary contest. He, however, persisted, and not only won a place in the preliminary contest, but won the medal at the commencement. The ridicule that he endured during this first year for his supposed breach of the proprieties in entering the contest convinced him that there was a strong faction of upper classmen controlling the student politics of the university and he determined to clip their wings and commenced to organize the disaffected ones, and so thoroughly was his organization perfected that during the beginning of the next session he had everything within his control and was elected president of the Philosophic Literary Society, and the next year was elected business manager of the Vanderbilt Observer, a magazine published by the several literary societies. His success in securing control of the student politics and punishing those who had sneered at him was so complete that he was referred to in the University Annual, issued by the combined Greek letter fraternities, as the "Richard Croker of Vanderbilt University."

During his university career Mr. Saner was an ardent fraternity man, having joined the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity in the fall of 1892 and during his stay at Vanderbilt "spiked" every man that joined his fraternity from the time he joined until he left the institution. He was selected by his chapter as a delegate to the Thirtieth Biennial Congress, which met in Washington, D. C., in December, 1894, and has filled many of the most prominent places of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, the last being a member of the High Council.

In 1894 Mr. Saner was a contestant for the Founders' medal in oratory and came within one vote of winning the same. If he had been successful in this contest he would have broken the record of Vanderbilt University, as no man had ever won the two medals in oratory. The following year he was a contestant for a place to represent Vanderbilt University in the Southern Intercollegiate Oratorical Contest and missed this honor again by one vote, being selected as the alternate. At the end of the scholastic year in 1895 he removed to Dallas, Texas, and entered the University of Texas, at Austin, for the fall term, and while there was again selected in a preliminary contest to represent the University of Texas in the Southern Intercollegiate Oratorical Contest, but failed by one vote in speaking before the Supreme Court of Texas as judges upon this occasion, and was again selected as the alternate. He graduated at the University of Texas in June, 1896, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and after finishing his course came to Dallas and opened a law office. In 1898, during the contest for governor, he was induced by his friends to take the secretary's place for North Texas in the Sayers Campaign Committee. After Governor Sayers was nominated and elected Governor of Texas, Mr. Saner was made secretary of the State Democratic Executive Committee and continued in that position until the latter part of 1899, when he resigned to become attorney for the Landed Endowment of the University of Texas, which connection is still retained by him, and under his efficient management the revenues have gradually climbed up from about $40,000 from land leases to more than $140,000 per year (1912).

Soon after Mr. Saner located in Dallas, the late Governor Barnett Gibbs resigned his place on the Board of Directors of the Dallas Commercial Club and in doing so requested this organization to elect Mr. Saner to the vacancy created thereby. This was done and for several years Mr. Saner was an enthusiastic advocate of Greater Dallas, serving as chairman of the City Development Committee.

Mr. Saner joined the Texas Bar Association at the Galveston meeting in 1899, and seeing the membership that tended the meeting all over the State was so small, the total membership being then less than 100, joined with Judge Philip Lindsley of Dallas in getting them to adopt a new policy and instead of meeting at Galveston each year, as they had for nearly twenty years, to meet in the different cities of the state, thus enthusing the local bars in the different sections. This policy being carried out, being first to Dallas and then to the other cities of the state, the membership of the State Bar Association has grown until it has about 500 members at the present time. In 1901 Mr. Saner was elected a director of the Texas Bar Association and has remained on the board continuously since that time, having been chosen five times as chairman of the Board of Directors, an honor never conferred upon any member before in the history of the association. In 1912 he became the president of this body. He was vice president of the American Bar Association for Texas in 1908 and 1909, is a member of the International Law Association, and a member of the general council for Texas of the American Bar Association and was appointed on a special committee by that body on Judicial Reform in the Federal Courts. He is known in whatever work he is engaged to do as a "doer" of things and has a splendid record in the Texas Bar Association in this connection from the excellent programs arranged by him for their annual meetings. He was a delegate to the Universal Congress of Jurists and Lawyers at St. Louis, in 1904. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Saner is a director of the Commonwealth National Bank of Dallas, president of the United Securities Company of Dallas and is interested in the development of the interurban railways, being a director of the Texas Traction Company and vice chairman of the Executive Committee of the Southern Traction company, now building. Mr. Saner has been prominent in club and social life. He is a member of the Dallas Club and vice president of the Lakewood Country Club, of Dallas, and belongs also to Dallas Lodge, No. 260, A. F. & A. M.; Dallas Commandery No. 6, K. T., and Hella Temple, No. 34, A. A. O. N. M. S., having reached the thirty-second Scottish Rite degree.

On March 31, 1903, Mr. Saner was married at Brenham, Texas, to Miss Ileana Marvin Smith, daughter of Captain Thomas Smith, who was a captain in the Confederate army during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Saner and their one daughter, Dorothy Lee, reside in their comfortable home at No. 1411 Annex avenue.

JAMES T. DANIEL. A prominent figure in many of the legal controversies which have been before the courts of Erath county during the past fifteen years, a man of unerring judgment, and able in the solution of numerous complexities, James T. Daniel, of Stephenville, is accounted one of the eminent legal lights of the bar of Central Texas. His career has been an industrious and interesting one, including the struggle for an education, service in the country schoolroom, assiduous labor in gaining recognition, and final success in the line of his calling. He was born July 28, 1852, near Rome, Floyd county, Georgia, and is a son of Lemuel W. and Jane C. Daniel.

Judge Daniel is of Scotch descent on his father's side and on his mother's side is of Dutch ancestry, and both families were numerous throughout the South, particularly in the State of Georgia, where they were extensive planters and slaveholders prior to the outbreak of the war between the States. Lemuel W. Daniel was born in Georgia, and, following in the footsteps of his forebears, early took up agricultural work as a means of livelihood. He operated his land with slave labor, and did not live to see the struggle between the South and the North, passing away about the year 1853. He and his wife were the parents of five children, of whom James T. was the youngest. After his death his widow was married a second time to James H. Daniel, who, although he bore the same name, was no relation to her first husband.

There were four children born to this union, and the family came to Texas in 1876, locating in Palo Pinto county, where Mrs. Daniel died in 1895. Of the first marriage, two children still survive: L. R., who is engaged in agricultural pursuits at Mineral Wells, Texas; and James T.

James T. Daniel was but a babe when his father died, and he was reared in the home of his stepfather. His early education was secured in private schools in his native State, following which he went to Athens College for three months. The educational advantages to be secured from the southern schools and colleges in that day were somewhat limited, but Judge Daniel made the most of his opportunities, and as a youth managed to secure his teacher's certificate. He came to Texas in 1872, locating first in Smith county, where he was engaged in teaching school for several years, then going west in the State to Palo Pinto county, where his family had located. There he was also engaged in educational work, and taught successfully in the county schools for several years. It had always been his ambition, however, to enter the legal profession, and with this end in view had devoted a large proportion of his spare time to study along this line. In Palo Pinto county he was given opportunities which had not been before granted him, and in September, 1885, he saw his ambitions realized when he was admitted to the bar at Palo Pinto, under Judge T. L. Nugent.

Judge Daniel entered upon the practice of his calling in Palo Pinto, and his connection with a number of serious cases of litigation brought him so prominently before the public as a lawyer of ability that in 1892 he was elected to the office of district attorney, a capacity in which he continued to act for two terms. His advent in Stephenville occurred in 1897, and since that time he has continued in the active practice of his honored vocation here. For more than fifteen years he has held a commanding position at the bar, and his reputation as a legist has extended throughout the county. The convincing style of his eloquence has been the subject of comment and admiration among his associates, and it is a circumstance of note that while his professional duties have brought him constantly into cases where controversy and contention between opposing counsel necessarily prevail, his greatest admirers, among his professional brethren, have been men who at one time, or another have had occasion to meet him at the bar and to feel the force of his power as opposing counsel in the case. In his political belief a Democrat, he has been active in his support of his party's policies and candidates, and has frequently been heard on the rostrum, where his eloquence has done much to aid in the election of the nominees of democracy. He has always worshiped as a member of the Christian church.

On October 19, 1884, at Strawn, Palo Pinto county, Texas, Judge Daniel was united in marriage with Miss Addie Thompson, daughter of Robert Thompson, who was for many years a sheepman of Texas, but retired some years before his death, which occurred about the year 1889. The mother passed away when Mrs. Daniel was an infant. Five sons and one daughter have been born to Judge and Mrs. Daniel, namely: Martin Coke, a railroad man of San Antonio, Texas, who is married and has a family; Olin W., also a railroad man, living at Denison, Texas; Louis M., a resident of Fort Worth, and also engaged in the railroad business; Waite B., following railroading in Fort Worth; Boyer F., a resident of Austin, who has recently enrolled with the I. & G. N. Railroad; and Miss Dora, now attending the public schools, who will further her education in the Mellbany Academy, at Stephenville. Judge Daniel possesses those faculties which make friends, and wherever he has gone he has formed large circles of admirers. He is a man of keen judgment, honorable in all of his dealings, and his transactions have prospered. Kind and generous, he has ever stood for those things that have been for the right, has been bitterly opposed to dishonesty and underhandedness, and ever has been interested in the welfare of his friends and of his adopted place. His residence in Stephenville has contributed materially to the growth of good citizenship and probity in the community.

A. J. NELSON. One of the most sterling pioneer citizens of Williamson county was the late A. J. Nelson, who represented the nation of Sweden as his birthplace, and was one of the earliest of the many colonists from Sweden who have borne important share in the development and commercial and civic prosperity of this state. He possessed to an eminent degree the best characteristics of his people, industry, a sturdy self-reliance, a loyalty to the fundamental principles of democracy, and throughout his residence of nearly forty years in this state was a citizen of the highest rank.

A. J. Nelson was born in Sweden July 24, 1835, and died September 17, 1895, after a stroke of paralysis which invalidated him for the last year. He was reared to the life of a farmer, and at the age of twenty-one started with his father's family for the new world, landing at Boston, and thence going to New Orleans and from there to Texas. His father located a few miles south of Georgetown, and there father and son worked as pioneers to develop a tract of land and were already substantially situated before the beginning of the war. A. J. Nelson during the struggle between the North and the South was engaged in the transport service of the Confederate army. He subsequently became a factor in the live stock business, both as a producer and dealer, and after the severe panic of 1873 began investing in land and the development of its agricultural resources. In 1871 he had acquired the homestead located by his father, and eventually became owner of about eight thousand acres of Texas soil, and several thousand acres were brought under cultivation by his supervision. His father, who was born in 1802, died in 1884, and the maiden name of the mother was Emma Hanson.

Mr. A. J. Nelson was one of the heavy stockholders in the First National Bank of Georgetown and held the office of vice president in that institution until his death. He was a Democrat and a member of the Lutheran church. Williamson county during its earlier and later period of history has owed much to the Swedish people and the Nelson family was one of the most prominent of the early pioneers. On January 4, 1870, Mr. A. J. Nelson married Hedvig Nelson, daughter of John Nelson. She was born in 1850, and has been a resident of Texas since she was seventeen years of age. She is now living in the beautiful home of the Nelsons at Round Rock, and is executrix of the estate, though the successful management devolves upon the eldest son, C. A. Nelson. There were six children: Mary B., Carl A., Oscar A., Alda, Thomas and Walter.

C. A. Nelson, oldest son of the late A. J. Nelson, was born in Williamson county, August 23, 1875, was reared in a home of comfort and as his father was a man of means the best of educational opportunities were extended to him. He was a student of the Southwestern University at Georgetown and later at Bethany College at Lindsborg, Kansas. His father's illness made it necessary for him to leave college without finishing the course, and he has for the past twenty years managed the large estate. Seldom does a father turn over to a son a property which has been managed more capably than has been that of the Nelson estate, which under the supervision of Mr. C. A. Nelson has more than doubled its value since his father's death. A large amount of the estate is still undivided and comprises ten thousand acres of land in Williamson county and fifteen thousand acres in other parts of the state. Each one of the daughters has received a large farm, and one daughter, Mrs. C. N. Avery, and the other Mrs.

M. L. White, both live in Austin. Each of the brothers of C. A. Nelson has a thousand acres of the best land in Texas. Thomas E. was born February 7, 1888, spent two years in the University of Texas and was graduated from Bethany College at Lindsborg, Kansas, and has entered upon a promising career in public life. He served as private secretary to Congressman Buchanan, and since January, 1914, has been superintendent of the Folding Room of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C. Walter, the youngest son, was born February 3, 1891, received his education at Trinity College at Round Rock, and lives at home with his mother and brother and assists in the management of the estate. Though a very young man, he gives promise of becoming one of the leading business men of the state. He is a member of the Masonic Order, as are both his brothers. Thomas E. and C. A. Nelson are Knights Templar Masons and affiliate with the Mystic Shrine, while C. A. Nelson is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. All the family belong to the Swedish Lutheran church.

C. A. Nelson is a partner with his cousin, John Nelson, in the J. A. Nelson & Company's Bank of Round Rock. This bank was organized in 1897 with seventy-five thousand dollars of capital stock. He is also vice president of the First National Bank of Thorndale; director of the City National Bank of Taylor; director of the First National Bank of Georgetown; director of the Weir State Bank of Weir; director of the Texas Trust Company at Austin; and a stockholder in the Nally Grocery Company of Austin. Mr. Nelson owns individually four hundred acres of highly developed land in Williamson county, and a thousand acres in other parts of the state.

J. A. NELSON. A Williamson county banker and business man, J. A. Nelson represents one of the oldest Swedish-American families in that section of Texas and has made himself one of the important leaders in the commercial and civic activities of his county.

Born April 16, 1866, in Williamson county, Mr. Nelson is the only son of the late J. August Nelson. J. August Nelson was born near Jonkoping Lan, Smoland, Sweden, in 1838, a son of Arvid Nelson, the Nelsons in Sweden having been country people of moderate means. J. August Nelson in 1854 left his native land in a sailing vessel bound for Boston, and from that port went south and after a brief tarry at Lavaca in the same year settled in Williamson county. His old homestead lies four miles north of Round Rock, where August and the other children grew up. Arvid Nelson died at the age of seventy-seven, leaving a thrifty property. August Nelson was educated in a somewhat limited manner in Sweden and lived quietly in Williamson county until the Civil war. Enlisting, his service was terminated by sickness, and he afterwards was in the freighting service for the Confederate government. He was later a very successful farmer, and was also a soldier. After the war he resumed his place on the farm, married, and had just begun a career promising much success when stricken in one of the tragedies not altogether uncommon in the older Southwest. He was drawn to give witness against a horse thief, who subsequently took vengeance by shooting him from ambush. The murderer was apprehended years later in Missouri, returned to Williamson county, and given a prison sentence for the crime. August Nelson was married on his father's farm July 13, 1865, to Miss Johanna Augusta Palm, born in May, 1846, a daughter of Johannes and Mary (Anderson) Palm of Sweden. The Palm family is one of the most prominent of the early Swedish immigrants in Texas. Mrs. Nelson after the death of her husband married C. A. Engstrand, and her three daughters by the second marriage are: Bell, wife of O. A. Voight of Round Rock; Hilda, wife of H. G. Brothman of Temple; and Sarah, wife of E. M. Black of Round Rock.

Mr. J. A. Nelson was reared in the country of Wil-

Alexander Campbell

Johnson county, and obtained a common school education. His successful attainments have been due not to fortunate circumstances, nor to influential family connections, but to the quality of industry and integrity possessed in his own character and exemplified during many years in practical business. Mr. Nelson is president of the J. A. Nelson & Company's Bank at Round Rock, and he and his banking associates also carry on a large hardware and lumber business. Besides his bank and mercantile business he is a stockholder in the Austin Fire Insurance Company of Austin, the Great Southern Life Insurance Company of Houston, the Round Rock Broom Company of Round Rock, the Anderson-Nelson Company, General Merchandise, of Round Rock, and The Republic Company of Dallas. Besides a fine homestead in Round Rock, he owns a large farm in Johnson county and lands situated elsewhere in the state.

Mr. Nelson was married October 29, 1889, to Miss Jennie Carlson, daughter of C. J. Carlson of Round Rock. To their marriage have been born six children, namely: Edith, Leroy, Lambert, Lillian, Vivian and Ansel. Mr. Nelson affiliates with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World, and he and his family worship at the Swedish Lutheran church at Palm Valley.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL. Since 1886 Alexander Campbell has been identified with the grocery business in Denison, though he has had, prior to that time, experience in varied other lines of industry, since the beginning of his active career. His success in this enterprise has been praiseworthy, and he is reckoned today among the successful business men of the city.

Alexander Campbell was born on February 14, 1847, at a North Carolina, and is a son of John Campbell, a North Carolina farmer and planter, who died in his native state on December 29, 1846. The mother died in the year 1859. Alexander Campbell was the youngest of twelve children born to his parents, of which goodly family there are but two surviving at this writing—John Campbell, a brother of Alexander, being a resident of Bellevue, Texas, there engaged in the real estate and loan business.

Alexander Campbell had his education, which was somewhat limited, in the public schools of Missouri, and he first came to Texas in 1860. He located in Grayson county and worked in the farming communities thereabout for something like twelve years, after which he identified himself with the railroad service as a bridge builder. It was not until 1886 that he engaged in his present enterprise, and he has since continued, successfully and worthily in the grocery and feed business. His store is located at 830 West Chestnut street, and the building, which he owns personally, is a twenty-five by sixty foot front. A general line of staple and fancy groceries makes up his stock, with a full line of flour and feed in connection.

Mr. Campbell has been twice married. His first wife died on February 14th, 1884, and on June 9, 1887, he married Mrs. Deborah E. Washburn, of Denison. His first wife, who was in her maiden days Miss Bertha Utiger, was a resident and native daughter of Highland, Illinois, and her child died in infancy. Three sons have blessed the second union. Albert J., the eldest, is now twenty-four years of age, and is employed as an auditor for Swift & Company, in Shreveport, Louisiana. Royce A. Campbell is a boiler-maker in Wichita Falls, Texas, and Dayton W. Campbell is with his father in the business in Denison as manager of the store.

Mr. Campbell is a Democrat and has always held to Jeffersonian principles in his political faith. He is a member of the Baptist church, and has been a deacon in the church for the past twelve years.

Despite the large family of which Mr. Campbell is a member, he practically stands alone, the name being represented by but one other of his immediate house and generation. William Campbell, the last to pass on, died in Grayson county in October, 1911, leaving a widow and four children. The Campbell family is one of sterling Scotch ancestry, as the name indicates, and those who bear its name possess many of the splendid traits that have made for character and accomplishment in Scotsmen from time immemorial.

MARION SANSOM. As a business developer in the live stock industry one of the ablest and best known in all the southwest is Marion Sansom. He is president and general manager of the Cassidy-Southwestern Commission Company, with branches in St. Louis, Kansas City and Oklahoma, and has various other connections which are familiar to the stockmen of the southwest. It would be a mistake to classify Mr. Sansom as a broker or commission man strictly. His part has been much more important than that of a mere buyer and seller. For a number of years he has controlled large capital resources, and has handled these resources in such a way as to develop and to promote the live stock industry and business generally throughout the southwest, and due to his effective work it can be truthfully said that in thousands of cases he has caused a production of two carloads of cattle where only one was produced before and has directed his men in such a way that hundreds of farmers and stockmen are indebted to his favors and assistance for their individual prosperity. Mr. Sansom is known and honored in all live stock circles from the extreme southwest to the great cattle market of the middle west.

Marion Sansom is a native Texan born in Walker county on a farm June 20, 1852, a son of R. P. and Susan (Manning) Sansom. The mother was also born in Texas and the father came here in the very early days. His early training was in the common schools and he also attended Trinity University at Tehuacana, but left school before graduating. He was endowed by nature with quick perception, sound judgment, and a capacity for handling large propositions and his schooling and experience have only increased his abilities in those directions. As a boy and youth he lived on the farm with his parents, and thus became thoroughly familiar with the work of raising cattle, horses and other live stock, and thus gained a thorough stock of knowledge which was fundamental in his subsequent winning of success. He several times drove live stock of his father to the New Orleans market, and at an early day acquired the knack of making good bargains, so that he had all the necessary essentials for the successful stockman. When he entered the commercial field for himself he was well equipped to meet any exigency that might arise. Mr. Sansom is a man of few words and has usually followed the precept of acting first and speaking about it afterward.

As the executive head of the large corporation known as the Cassidy-Southwestern Commission Company, he is engaged in the buying and handling of an immense number of carloads of live stock every year. The business is incorporated with a capital stock of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and has a surplus of more than two hundred and eighty thousand dollars. The company was incorporated in 1903. In the year 1913, the company handled more than seven hundred thousand head of live stock, which means more than twenty-two thousand carloads of cattle. An important feature of the business is the large sums directed by the company to loans on cattle and other stock, and at the present time the company has more than three million dollars thus invested and in active use in producing live stock for the market. Mr. Sansom has various other interests outside of the company of which he is president, and was the organizer and first president of the Stock Yards National Bank at Fort Worth. He was also president for more than twenty years of the First National Bank of Alvarado, and is a director in the State National Bank of Fort Worth. He owns large interests in oil mills and cattle ranches, and owns most of the stock in the M. Sansom & Company, wholesale grain and hay dealers. He is a lover of fine stock, and on his own ranches has produced many specimens of live stock which have taken prizes at home and abroad.

Since 1902 the home of himself and family has been in Fort Worth. For a period of ten years he was member of the Board of Directors of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas eight of which he served as president and his splendid business ability and thorough knowledge of agricultural and industries Texas made him a most capable adviser in the direction of the affairs of that institution. While living at Alvarado, Texas, Mr. Sansom married Miss Eliza Powell, daughter of Rev. John Powell. Their three children are: Mrs. Will Schultz; Marion, Jr., and Nina Susan, all of whom make their home in Fort Worth. Mr. Sansom holds membership in the Masonic Order and is a member of the Shrine, and is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

A. CHAUNCEY DELONG, M. D. For twenty-two years active in his profession as physician and surgeon, Dr. DeLong since 1903 has been located in San Angelo, where he enjoys an excellent practice and the thorough esteem of fellow members of the profession.

Representing an old family of Texas, Dr. DeLong was born in Washington county, September 9, 1859, the only son of Chauncey H. and Carrie DeLong, of Washington county. The father, who was a rancher and stock raiser in that county held several public offices, and his death occurred at Burton, in Washington county, February 24, 1874. The mother died in 1893 in Milam county, while visiting with her son, the doctor. Her father was Rev. A. C. Delaplain of Washington county. He was a pioneer Methodist minister who had come to Texas in 1833, when it was a Mexican Province, served in the war for independence, and died at the advanced age of eighty-six years at Caldwell, in Burleson county. For many years he preached the gospel and continued in the good work almost to the time of his death.

Dr. DeLong attained his early education in Union Hill, Washington county. He first engaged in practice in Lee county, where he remained from 1891 to 1900, and then came into west Texas and since 1903 has been located at San Angelo. For about five years he has served as city health officer, and has done much effective work in promoting sanitation and the safeguarding of the public health.

Dr. DeLong has been a stanch Democrat since casting his first vote. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a popular member of the San Angelo Club, and his church is the Southern Methodist.

December 28, 1888, Dr. DeLong married Miss Roxie Womack, a daughter of Dr. R. H. Womack of Lee county. Her father was one of the early physicians, of Texas, and is still living at his home in Lexington, Lee county, where he is active in practice at the age of about sixty-nine years. Mrs. DeLong's mother was born in Texas, and a daughter of a Mr. Newcomer, who was one of the first settlers in Texas. Dr. DeLong and wife have three children, namely: Richard C. DeLong, Miss Susie Carrie, and Miss Willie May. All are at home in San Angelo. The doctor is of French descent and the family in its earlier generations were settlers in Ohio and Illinois.

JOHN R. WESTBROOK. More than half a century of identification with the agricultural interests of this section of Texas has made John R. Westbrook conspicuous among the more successful men of Deport and vicinity, and his fine farm, some two miles distant from the city, is one of the representative places of its kind in the county. Coming to Texas as a child, he freely imbibed the elements of citizenship peculiar to the native Texan and has in later life proven himself to be a positive force for progress in the more vital affairs in his community.

Born in Madison county, Tennessee, on December 17, 1847, John R. Westbrook is the son of Samuel H. and Amelia (Clark) Westbrook, and the grandson of Gray and Margaret (Lassister) Westbrook, and concerning these worthy people it is peculiarly fitting that some mention of them and their lives be entered in connection with the sketch of the subject.

The facts relating to the grandparents of John R. Westbrook are meager enough, but it is known that Gray Westbrook was of German blood and ancestry; that he was the father of eight children, among whom were Professor J. Westbrook, Dr. Richard, who came to Texas and left a family here when he died, Mrs. Brame of West Point, Mississippi, and Samuel H., the father of John R., whose name heads this review. It was also known that Gray Westbrook spent his young life in North Carolina, and that in later years he settled in Tennessee, and died while yet a young man in that state.

Samuel H. Westbrook was born in North Carolina in 1822, and died in 1906 when he was eighty-four years old. He came to Tennessee as a boy and was there reared, gaining no education that might be dignified by that name, beyond the knowledge that came to him in the school of experience. In young manhood he wedded Amelia Clark Worley, who was reared in Tennessee, and she bore him three children,—William, who was killed on the field of battle during the Civil war; Maggie, who became the wife of T. I. Bryant, of Deport, Texas, and John R., of this review. The mother died about 1850, and Samuel Westbrook married Nancy Vickers in later years. The children of their union were four in number, and named as follows: James, a resident of Deport; Susan, the wife of Robert Isbell, of this place; David P., one of the successful farmers living in the vicinity of Deport; and Martha, who married James B. Nixon, and lives near Deport. During the period of armed rebellion incident to the Civil war, Samuel Westbrook joined the army of the Confederacy and served with General Magruder at Galveston, passing through much active military service without meeting physical harm, although his son, William, previously mentioned, fell at the Battle of Missionary Ridge. Sam Westbrook always remained among the more inconspicuous citizens of his community, and his experience in the ranch business in Texas brought him no more notoriety than he had experienced in his residence in Tennessee. It was in 1860 that he moved his family to Johnson county, this state, and after spending two years in the Cordova Bend of the Brazos River in the stock business, he came back to Lamar county, in which he had located first as early as in 1851, later spending some time in Cherokee county, of which they were residents until 1857. Soon after the removal of the family to Texas, the mother died, and the second marriage of the father followed in the course of time. Samuel Westbrook was well advanced in years when he died in 1906, and his name is being worthily perpetuated by the activities of his children in their connection with the business and farm life of their communities.

In the early struggle for existence John R. Westbrook gathered little of value that might aid him in the successful prosecution of the business of life. His father, an illiterate man, was not unduly anxious to facilitate matters with regard to the education of his children, seeing little need of greater advantages for them than he himself had experienced. But though he was untrained in mind, he was thoroughly experienced in the duties of farm and ranch and hands and body re-bonded readily to the duties of the life with which he was most familiar. John Westbrook was but four years of age when his father piloted the family by wagon across the Mississippi river, through Arkansas and into Texas, where they stopped a short time in Rusk county, and where the mother of the boy died and was buried. When in later years, the father and elder brother went to war, the care of the home and family, then increased by the second marriage of the father, devolved upon the stay-at-home-son, and he manfully gave his energies to the provision of the necessities of life for the family, much as he would have preferred to have gone in his father's stead and do battle for the south. When his father returned from the war, the young man, then little past his majority, turned his attention to work on the cattle plains as a cowboy for a short time in the western part of the state. In 1869 he came to Lamar county, became a "bull-whacker" on the trail to Jefferson, Texas, where all the supplies for this section of the state were obtained and brought hither by ox team. Mr. Westbrook, in the capacity above mentioned, was a driver of one of these caravans, spending four years at this work, which netted him some experience, infinitely more excitement, and a very little money.

It was apparent to him that the real opportunities for men of his advantages lay in the cattle business, and when his experience as an ox-driver had palled upon him, he returned to the farm, purchasing forty acres of land and establishing himself as a land owner in the early seventies. Upon that tract his present modern and attractive farm residence and other substantial improvements stand today. Corn and cotton were his chief crops, and the cultivation of them demanded more and from year to year, so that he gathered up various tracts of the rich, black soil adjacent to Deport, converting the virgin prairie into productive farms until his holdings dot the landscape in all directions from his home place. His estate today comprises some fourteen hundred acres of land, and to all of his several farms he has added substantial improvements that add a permanent value to the community and provide homes for a number of families who are dependent upon a landlord for the opportunity to work. Mr. Westbrook's home, built in 1904 at a cost of $5,000, is a two story house of ten rooms, and is one of the fine country places in this vicinity.

In 1882 Mr. Westbrook departed somewhat from his usual occupation and entered the merchandise business at Roundup, and there he conducted a general store for twenty-two years. His early connection with the business was but an experiment, but his success was so pleasing an order that he continued from then until the present time, and he is admittedly one of the most prosperous and successful men of affairs in this vicinity. In 1903, in connection with his son-in-law, he established a business in Deport and four years afterward two of his sons became associated in business with him in a general store. His is one of the centers of trade in this little mart of commerce. His sons have been reared in the school of merchandise and it is needless to say have been a valuable aid to him in the conduct of the business in more recent years.

With the continued accumulation of material wealth, Mr. Westbrook cast about for a proper field of investment. Banking seemed a profitable field to him, and he accordingly took a quantity of stock in the First State Bank and the First National Bank of Deport. He is vice-president of the latter named organization, and in addition is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Blossom, in the First State Bank of Paris and in the City National Bank at the latter named place also. In addition to these interests, he is financially connected with the oil mills of Blossom and Detroit.

While he has taken a passing interest in public affairs and is vitally concerned about the policies of government, he has taken no active interest in party affairs, and no public office has ever tempted him away from his private business activities. He has never been affiliated with any lodges, and has not been a church member at any time in his life.

On September 19, 1877, Mr. Westbrook married Miss Alice Wright, a daughter of W. B. Wright, a farmer in the vicinity of Deport and a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the Army of the Confederacy. Mrs. Westbrook was one of the four children of her parents, and she is now the mother of children named as follows: Bertha; Midie, the wife of Guy Shelton, of Deport; Yuma E., wife of W. I. Lawler, postmaster of Deport; Samuel W., a farmer of this community, who married Mollie Campbell; Joe, who is his father's associate in the store, and who married Hattie Oliver; Miss Inez; Robert, who married Carrie Phillips; and Jesse, who married R. A. Tate, and lives in Deport.

The family is one that has added much to the citizenship of Deport and vicinity, and is undeniably one of the substantial, dependable and reliable ones of the county. Their standing throughout the county and wherever they are known is of the highest, and each has contributed something to the welfare of the community by reason of the high order of integrity that has characterized the family in its various members.

JOHN T. JONES, for many years one of the prominent citizens of the Texas Panhandle, and now president of the Jones Lumber Company of Dallas, Mr. John T. Jones has had a career of noteworthy success in this state where he has resided since he was seventeen years of age, and where his earlier years were spent in subordinate employment in connection with the lumber industry. Mr. Jones possessed the ability and the industry which make successful men, and from one grade he advanced himself to the next higher, until he associated on equal terms with the leaders of the communities in which he had resided, and is now head of one of the largest lumber companies in the state and one of the foremost business men of the commercial city of Dallas.

John T. Jones was born in Robinson county, Tennessee in December, 1872. His parents were William H. and Ann (Holeman) Jones. His father was a tobacco dealer in Tennessee, and in 1882 brought his family to Texas, though after a few years in this state he returned to Tennessee. John T. Jones had a common school education in Tennessee and due in part to the associations and influences arising from his boyhood recollections of Texas, he came in 1889 a second time to this state determined to make it his permanent home. Locating at Waxahachie he became an employe in a lumber firm of that city, and went through all experiences of minor responsibility. In 1895 he established a lumber business for himself at Milford, Texas, which was his home for about two years.

Mr. Jones in 1897 moved out to northwest Texas and became one of the pioneers and one of the organizers of the town of Dalhart, now one of the most flourishing of the young Panhandle cities, but at that time only one among many of the undeveloped town sites of this new country. At Dalhart Mr. Jones established a lumber yard and also a hardware store, and was interested in the local bank. He has the distinction of having served as the first Mayor of Dalhart. That town remained his residence and business headquarters until 1903, at which date he moved to Dallas. For some time previously he had been one of the interested parties in the Jones Lumber Company of Dallas, and in 1904 he was chosen president of this large company, and has since directed its affairs, the business now including a large number of branch establishments in various parts of the state. Mr. Jones is also associated with the South Texas Lumber Company of Houston.

Mr. Jones is one of the best known Masons of north Texas and has attained the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite. His affiliations are with Trinity Valley Lodge A. F. & A. M.; Dallas Chapter No. 47 R. A. M.;

Dallas Commandary No. 6 H. T. and Hella Temple No. 34 Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Dallas County Club, one of the leading social organizations of the city.

In 1896 he married Miss Margaret Wilson, a daughter of Joseph Wilson, of Milford, Texas. Their three daughters are Alice, Emma and Jessie. The Jones residence is at 4935 Junius street in Dallas.

ROBERT H. ARMSTRONG. Thirty-three years of continuous residence in Kaufman have established Robert H. Armstrong firmly in the community life of the place, and his years here have been marked by a wholesome usefulness that win for any man the high regard of his fellows, and make his retirement a source of regret to all. Mr. Armstrong is the retiring postmaster of Kaufman, and it is a deplorable circumstance that his withdrawal from the post is due as much to the ill state of his health as to the new administration. He has in his long and busy lifetime been identified with various phases of activity, his labors including soldiering, farming, cattle ranching, contracting and building and service in the public eye as postmaster of his town. He has accounted well to society as one of its members, and is one whose influence was ever a strong one in whatever cause he chose to identify himself. Especially in politics did he wield an undeniable power, and he did much to shape the policies of the political factors of his community. His service as postmaster was a goodly one, and the Kaufman office expanded most worthily under his regime, instituting a number of rural routes, and adding much to the development of the department. His enforced retirement is deeply regretted by many who have learned to know him for the many excellent qualities that have dominated his life, and esteem and respect him accordingly.

Robert H. Armstrong was born in Shelby county, Kentucky, on October 25, 1836, and is the son of William and Sabrina (Taylor) Armstrong. The father was a farmer who came into the Cornercracker state in 1794 from Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1789, and he was a son of Plunket Armstrong, who died in Bourbon county, Kentucky. Of his numerous children, William became the father of Robert H. of this review. William Armstrong soldiered under General William Henry Harrison from 1812 to 1814 in the United States and Canada in our second war with England, and was one of Kentucky's volunteers for that service. After the war he settled down and devoted himself to a mechanical life in the vicinity of Paris, but remained there only a short time and then moved to Nashville, Tennessee, and then back to Winchester, Kentucky, where he put up a cotton factory. He removed to Shelby county, Kentucky, in 1832, where he took up farming, wool manufacturing, etc. He died there, October 3, 1865. He and his wife became the parents of eleven children, and the mother died in Shelby county, Kentucky, in 1876. They were people of pronounced religious sentiment and were stanch members of what was then known as the Campbellite church. The politics of the Whig faction dominated the family, and when that party yielded allegiance to the Republican party, the men of the house of Armstrong took up the interests of the new party and have since maintained a stanch and worthy connection with it. The children of William and Sabrina (Taylor) Armstrong were as follows: John Edward, who died in 1832 as a lad of twelve years; Jesse T., who died in Plano, Texas, at the age of 72 years; Julia, who first married Richard Booker and died as the wife of J. A. Hornsby in Kentucky; Margaret J., who married Henry Ellis, and is now deceased; Caroline, who died in childhood; W. P., a railroad engineer in Mississippi, and now deceased; Mariam, who married George T. Hill, and died at Shelbyville, Missouri; Robert H., of Kaufman, and the subject of this review; Amanda became the wife of Al Chinn and died in Shelby county, Missouri; J. D. was a mining man and passed away in Salina, Kansas; Mary E., died in LaGrange, Kentucky, the wife of Mark Blakemore; Nancy W. Armstrong makes her home in LaGrange, Kentucky.

Robert Armstrong secured only a rural education, and he was properly trained in the business of farming as a boy at home. Until he made the journey to Texas that resulted in his permanent settlement here, he devoted himself to farm life, and gained a fair degree of success in the enterprise, as might be expected of one of his characteristics. In 1861, when he was twenty-five years old, he withdrew from farm life and enlisted as a private in Company F of the Sixth Kentucky Infantry, Col. W. C. Whitaker in command. His regiment was part of the army of the Tennessee, and he served under Generals Buell and Rosecrans and other corps commanders. At Louisville, for meritorious service, he was commissioned lieutenant, captain at Stone River, Tennessee, and lieutenant-colonel of his regiment at Anderson Station, Tennessee, October, 1864, just before he was mustered out, and his service, on the whole, was one of the highest order. He first took place at Pittsburg Landing, followed by the action at Shiloh, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Peachtree Creek, Marietta and other noted engagements of the Atlanta campaign. After the capitulation of that stronghold, his regiment was ordered back to be mustered out, but General Sherman rescinded the order and placed the command to which Lieut.-Col. Armstrong belonged in charge of the Louisville and Nashville Railway, to guard it from Stephenson, Alabama, to Wartrace, Tennessee. It may be stated that it was during this service that Captain Armstrong was given a Colonelcy. His work along this line continued thereafter until the closing days of 1864, when the regiment was ordered to Nashville and was mustered out there early in 1865.

Colonel Armstrong went from the field of battle to the harvest field, and he thereafter occupied himself with agricultural activities and during a period covering about ten years he was actively engaged in the mule trade, in the Southern States. His knowledge of the Lone Star state, it may be said, began prior to the war, when he had spent two years on the frontier, occupying himself with hunting and fishing as he traveled over Texas, Indian Territory and Northern Mexico, along the Rio Grande. It was in 1857 that he made this memorable trip, passing through Kaufman at that early day, and getting his first glimpse of the town that, unknown to him then, was to become the abiding place of his latter years. In 1859, with his companions, he bought a herd of cattle and with them he went to New Orleans, from which point he returned to Kentucky for another stay of twenty-two years.

In August, 1881, Mr. Armstrong came to Kaufman with the force of men that was employed in the building of the old Trunk Line Railroad, now known as the Texas and New Orleans. His knowledge of mechanics, acquired in various ways, made him a valuable man in the company that employed him, and he found himself in the position of a construction foreman with the company that was then engaged in adding a new artery of commerce to Dallas. He was placed in charge of the distribution of ties and timber along the line, and was operating between Kaufman and Athens for some time. He abandoned the job for reasons of his own, and returning to Kaufman, he identified himself actively with the building enterprise of the place. He continued in the contracting and carpentering work for a number of years, and evidences of his workmanship are still to be seen on every hand in the homes and business houses that add very substantially to the appearance of the county seat.

In his politics Col. Armstrong never failed to announce and emphasize his party adherence. Unpopular though his party might be and was in Texas soon after the war, he acknowledged his loyalty to that faction that had done so much to preserve the integrity of the Union, and he came to be a familiar figure in convention and other poical work in his adopted state. He was a delegate from Kentucky to the National Convention in Cincinnati that nominated Mr. Hayes, and twenty years later he was a delegate from Texas to the St. Louis National Convention, when William McKinley was nominated for the presidential office. It has been his good fortune to know many of the Republican leaders of Kentucky and Texas, and especially in Texas has his political duty carried him into the councils of men who have been potent factors in the shaping of the party policies of the nation.

Some slight measure of reward came to Col. Armstrong for his allegiance and service to his party when Benjamin Harrison was elected president. He was appointed postmaster at Kaufman, May 22nd, 1889, then a fourth-class postoffice, succeeding J. A. Marshall in the office. The second induction of Grover Cleveland into the presidency caused Col. Armstrong's retirement and he was succeeded by one W. H. Ayres. With the retirement of J. F. Peery, Mr. McKinley's appointee, Col. Armstrong was appointed by President Roosevelt on June 5th, 1902, and his subsequent retirement, on June 20th, 1913, completed a service of 16 years as postmaster of the Kaufman office. As has been previously stated, Col. Armstrong has seen a marvelous growth in the affairs of the Kaufman office. During his incumbency it was raised from a fourth to third class office, and his service has been one calculated to advance the importance and efficiency of the department in this city.

Colonel Armstrong was one who manifested a lively interest in the Grand Army movement during its earlier days, and is one of its staunchest members at this time. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, with affiliation in the Blue Lodge, and has membership in the Christian church.

In November, 1882, Colonel Armstrong was married in Kaufman to Miss Alice Leeper, an orphan girl whose birthplace was in Tennessee. Nine children blessed their union, concerning whom brief mention is here made as follows: George M. is city claim agent of the Wells Fargo Express Company in New Orleans; Mariam B. died March 12th in 1911 as the wife of Chester Jones; Essie B. married Ed Sampley of Jerynm, Jack county, Texas, and lives in Kaufman; Robert H., Jr., a clerk in the S. P. R. R., lives in Kaufman, Texas; Miss Nancy M. is teaching school at Coleman, Texas, R. No. 3; William McK. Armstrong, living in Kaufman; Joe W. and Paul R. died in infancy, and one died still-born.

The Armstrong family is one that enjoys the unalloyed friendship and esteem of the best citizenship of the community, and its various members take their places in the leading social and other activities of the city, where they have long been known and where they have earned the steadfast regard that is accorded to them.

MEL KEITH, M. D. Among the learned professions, none has made such rapid strides in the last several decades as that of medicine. It has passed, in its advancement, all other societies of letters or learning. New conceptions of the transmission of diseases have been proven true, new modes of diagnosis have been discovered, and new medicines have been found or invented. Surgery has daringly invaded every organ of the human body; the microscope, in its improved form, is constantly revealing mysteries formerly hidden. No learned profession demands so much of its members. The conscientious physician of today, to conform with the ethics of his calling, must necessarily devote his entire time to its demands, for, when not occupied in caring for his patients he is obliged to apply himself to study and research in order to keep fully abreast of the progress being constantly made in this most noble and humane of all vocations. The roster of physicians of Erath county contains no more distinguished name than that of Mel Keith, M. D., a practitioner, who, by reason of his skill, training and devotion to his patients has attained to a high place in the ranks of his profession. Since 1899 he has been engaged in practice in Stephenville, and has gained the respect, esteem and good will of the people of his community and the gratitude of many who have had reason to appreciate his ability. Doctor Keith was born February 10, 1868, at Stephenville, Erath county, Texas, and is a son of M. L. and Mary J. (Boucher) Keith.

Both the paternal and maternal grandparents of Doctor Keith were among the earliest settlers of Stephenville, where numerous members of both families are to be found occupying honorable positions in the various walks of life. M. L. Keith was born and reared in Stephenville, early engaged in business, and became the first postmaster here, a position he continued to fill for some years. On leaving that office he engaged in the book and stationery business, in which line he was engaged until his retirement, a few years prior to his death, which occurred in 1885. He was a business man of ability and good judgment, making a success of his ventures, and as a citizen none was held in higher esteem. He was married in Stephenville to Miss Mary J. Boucher, a native of this place, of French descent, and she died in 1880, having been the mother of five children, of whom four are now living, all residents of Erath county. During the early history of Texas, M. L. Keith enlisted in the Texas Rangers, with which he served for some years, was engaged in the border warfare protecting the whites from the ravages of the hostile Indians, and at the outbreak of the war between the States cast his fortunes with the Confederacy and battled valiantly under the colors of the Lost Cause. The hardships and exposures of his various military experiences undermined his health, and doubtless hastened his death.

The oldest of his parents' children, Dr. Mel Keith received his early education in the public and private schools of Stephenville, where he received his introduction to the business world as a clerk in his father's store. Subsequently, he took up the study of pharmacy, with the intention of becoming a druggist, and it was while thus engaged that he became attracted to medicine. Accordingly, he entered Fort Worth University, as a student in the medical department, and, because of his pharmaceutical training, he was able to complete the prescribed course in two years. This, however, did not complete his training, as he has been a constant seeker after knowledge, and in 1906 took a post-graduate course in the Chicago Polyclinic College. The Doctor's first field of practice was the town of Gustine, in Comanche county, Texas, from whence he came, in December, 1899, to Stephenville, his old home town, where he had been born and reared. It was not long before his abilities were recognized by the people of his vicinity, and his devoted and conscientious service to the best ideals of his profession have been rewarded by a large and constantly growing practice. He enjoys membership in the various organizations of the profession, and has a wide acquaintance among his professional brethren in this part of the State, in which he numbers many warm personal friends. For some time past he has served Erath county in the capacity of health officer, his wide experience and acknowledged ability contributing materially to the welfare of his fellow-citizens. His political proclivities made him a Democrat in young manhood, and he has continued to be a stalwart supporter of the policies and candidates of that party. With his family, he attends the Baptist church.

Doctor Keith was married December 3, 1890, at Stephenville, to Miss Luella Harwood, a daughter of G. E. W. Harwood, who for a number of years was a farmer and business man of Stephenville, Texas, but who is now living a somewhat retired life at Troy, Oklahoma. One son and three daughters have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Keith, namely: Harwood, born in 1895; Marie J., born in January, 1898; and twins, Lucile Lofin and Lillian Lyle, born February 14, 1904. Doctor Keith is a firm believer in Central Texas, not alone because of its resources and the opportunities which it offers to ambitious young men, but because of its healthful climate. Wherever he has been located he has gained universal esteem and has steadily won friends by his loyalty and warm sympathy. Unsolicited, he has received many testimonials to his skill and kindly interest in his patients. The services of such a man are a valuable boon to any community, and the people of Stephenville manifest their appreciation of the favor conferred by Doctor Keith in choosing this place as the field of his professional labors.

JAMES MONROE WELLS. Among the older merchants of Bonham, Texas, none holds a higher place in the esteem of his fellows than James Monroe Wells. Mr. Wells has been engaged in business in this city for upwards of a third of a century and his business has grown steadily until he is now the senior partner of one of the leading mercantile establishments in Bonham. He is a man of keen business sense, undoubted executive ability and a capacity for handling many different matters at the same time. He is one of the wealthy and influential men of the city and has the respect of the community for his wealth has not been gained at the expense of others.

James Monroe Wells was born February 19, 1854, in Bibb county, Alabama. His father was John M. Wells, who was also a native of Bibb county, Alabama. Jack Wells, the father of John M. Wells, was born in North Carolina, on the bank of the Pedee river, in 1790. He was a soldier during the war of 1812 and after he grew to manhood removed to Alabama, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was engaged in brick contracting and building in Alabama during his active career, but his last days were spent in managing his plantation, and both he and his son, John M. Wells, were slaveholders. He married Didemia Smith and his death occurred in 1862. They were the parents of the following children: Kenyon O., who died at Verbena, Alabama; David died in Bibb county, Alabama; Dr. W. M. Wells, of Durant, Oklahoma; Amanda, who was the eldest married Dennis Askins and spent her days in Autauga county, Alabama; Matilda became the wife of George Farr and also died in Autauga county; Lizzie married William Motes, and Mary became the wife of William Easterling, both of the latter sisters living out their lives in Autauga county, Alabama.

With the above large family there was not much money for education, for an education in those days was an expensive matter indeed, so John M. Wells grew up on the plantation and when he came of age he became a planter. When the Civil war broke out he hastened to enlist for no man believed in the cause of the Confederacy more firmly than did he. He was a lieutenant in a company which formed part of the command of General Joe Wheeler during the early part of the war, and after his service in this section of the army was at an end he returned to Alabama where he became assistant superintendent of the Navy Iron Works, at Briarfield, Alabama. After two years spent in this work he again re-entered the active service and as a forage master in the commissary department of the army served till the end of the war. He was one of the few Confederates who would not take the oath of allegiance to the United States and in consequence he had no rights of citizenship until the general amnesty act gave him the right to vote just prior to his death. In 1865 he moved to Texas and settled on Blue Prairie where he lived until his death at the comparatively young age of forty-two. He married Miss Martha Price, a daughter of James Price, who was a planter in Autauga county, Alabama. She died in 1861, leaving three children, Minnie, who married J. M. Hancock and died in Cleburne, Texas, in 1878; James Monroe, and Mary, who was Mrs. T. J. Humphrey and lived in Paris, Texas, at the time of her death. John M. Wells married for his second wife, Miss Emma Love, in 1867, and they had two children, Thomas D., of Paris, Texas, and Annie, who is the wife of Dr. T. C. Geron of the same city. The second Mrs. Wells was also of Autauga county, Alabama.

James Monroe Wells came to Texas with his father in 1865. His education was received largely in private schools and his first venture in the way of earning his living was teaching school. He later clerked for a time, and then he took a commercial course in a business school in Dallas, Texas, in preparation for a business career. He earned the money for his education himself and his reputation for hard work won him a position with Thomas Forbes, Jr., & Co., who was head of a cotton firm in Sherman at that time. He was sent by the latter as a cotton buyer to Bonham and for three years was thus engaged. He then organized the firm of J. M. Wells and Company, handling cotton in Bonham, and while thus engaged in the cotton business he had an opportunity to make many friends, and this wide acquaintance served him well later on. He was a member of the above firm for seven years, and then, in 1890, associated himself with Zac Smith and the two engaged in a mercantile business under the name of W. A. Nunnelee and Company. This was one of the old and reliable firms of the city, a fact that was strongly in favor of the young merchants, Mr. Nunnelee having a reputation for integrity and ability that made his name a power. After seven years the two partners dropped the old name and appeared under the firm name of Wells and Smith. They conducted the business with success for three years when Mr. Smith sold his interests to Robert L. Nunnelee and the firm now became known as Wells and Nunnelee. After a decade of business under this name, Thomas Humphrey purchased a third interest in the business and since 1910, Wells, Nunnelee and Humphrey has been the cognomen of this house.

The above firm handles one of the largest businesses in the city and in addition to this establishment, Mr. Wells is interested in other enterprises equally as important. In 1894 he aided in the organization of the Bonham Wholesale Grocery Company, and is now vice president, a member of the board of directors and the largest stock-holder in the company. He is one of that group of men who promoted the Bonham Cotton Mills and is a director and one of the largest stockholders. This factory which was established in 1901, is an important industry of this place. The great cotton fields of Fannin and other nearby counties are tributary to it, and the venture has proved to be a most successful one. The mill employs skilled labor as well as common labor and has a large clerical force, so the payroll sustains a considerable element of the city's population. Mr. Wells is also a director of the First National Bank and owns a large block of stock.

Mr. Wells is also interested in an industry of an entirely different kind. In 1900 he purchased three thousand acres of land near Vernon, Texas, and leased as much more and on this extensive grass land he is raising horses and mules from the finest of stock.

The growth of Mr. Wells' business interests have effectually prevented him from taking any active part in political affairs. He has never cared for office and has contented himself with casting his vote as a member of the Democratic party. In religious matters he has been active in the Baptist church for many years, having been deacon for a long time, and having been superintendent of the Sunday school for nearly a quarter of a century. He is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being a Master Mason and belonging to the chapter and commandery.

Mr. Wells was married in Bonham, on the 10th of October, 1883, to Miss Mary Nunnelee, a daughter of Simeon and Erveline (Pace) Nunnelee. Her father came here in 1846 from Dallas county, Alabama, and one of the very early and prominent men of his day

ROBERT ISBELL. Success in life waits not upon an excess of learning, and even the most unlettered men have proven this to the confusion of the many who believe contrariwise. It is true that education is a potent factor in business success, and a quality that is most desirable from every view-point, but the fact remains that men who were strangers to learning have cracked some hard financial nuts and acquainted themselves at first hand with the success that has been denied many of their educational superiors. Robert Isbell, who has lived in the community of Deport practically all his life, is one of these unlettered and untaught men who have depended upon native talent and intuition in solving the problems of finance that have confronted him, and his success has been even in excess of his earliest hopes. All he learned in school was the alphabet. Since he reached man's estate he has learned to write his name and read it, and he has steered a successful course through the shoals of business life without other guidance than came to him through the careful use of his eyes and ears. Plenty of men of education have failed to accomplish as much.

Born in Shelby county, Alabama, on March 15, 1851, Robert Isbell is the son of another of the same name, and the grandson of one Zachariah Isbell, and the latter passed his life in the vicinity of Shelby county, Alabama, there dying at an advanced age. Conspicuous among his family were the following sons and daughters: William, Robert, Ezekiel, John, Rebecca, who became Mrs. William Walker, and Polly, who married a Mr. Watson. These children scattered through Tennessee, Arkansas and Oklahoma, and their posterity multiplied and introduced the name and blood into many sections of the entire west.

Of these children, Robert Isbell, the father of the subject, married Elizabeth Love, a daughter of Allan Love, resident of Calhoun county, Alabama, indicated in a sketch of Samuel Love to be found elsewhere in these volumes. Mrs. Isbell died at Gainesville, Arkansas, February 1, 1866, leaving Nancy, who married George Parker, and died in Pickens county, in the Chickasaw nation; John, who was a Confederate soldier, and who died near Birneyville, Oklahoma; Luraney, who married Jim Gregory and spent her life among the Chickasaw Indians; Rebecca, the wife of Dave Bishop, of Waco, Texas; Robert, of Deport, Texas; Zeck B., who lost his life at the hand of an assassin in the Chickasaw country; Julia, the wife of Stephen Thompson, of Birneyville, Oklahoma; and William, a farmer of Jack county, Texas.

In further mention of Robert Isbell, Sr., it may be said that he was born in 1815, in Shelby county, Alabama, and that he was wholly illiterate. He was of a restless and roving temperament and continued westward until he reached the Chickasaw Nation. During the Rebellion he was a resident of Missouri, and he served four years in the Confederate army in a company in charge of Capt. Cooper, made up about Bloomfield, and as a part of the Trans-Mississippi Department of the Confederate establishment. On his way westward he stopped briefly at Gainesville, Arkansas, and remained but a few years at Lamar county, Texas, but when he left this county he made his way on to Gainesville and was later tempted to cross over into the Chickasaw Nation, where his blood was ultimately mixed among the younger generation of that tribe. He was the first man to bring civilizing influences into the community of Birneyville, and he was murdered there in 1875. His lack of education might not have proved a hindrance to his financial success, had he not been the victim of a nomadic disposition that kept him constantly on the move, so that he passed away at the age of sixty without having accumulated any property, and without any fame save that accorded to him by his devoted family, who knew him for many excellent qualities of heart and mind.

Robert Isbell, Jr., worked as a farm hand for a number of years in the community that today claims him for one of its most opulent citizens. Concerning his earlier years, it may be said that he accompanied his wandering family to Missouri as a boy, thence to Gainesville, Arkansas, and after the war the progress of the family brought him into Texas, where they settled in Lamar county. Robert Isbell was then fifteen years old, and his residence today commands the spot where the camp of Robert Isbell, Sr., was first pitched in Lamar county.

Ambition early manifested itself in the life of this young man, and he thirsted to become a landowner and a man of affairs in his community, wherever that might be. Soon after his marriage, which occurred in 1873, he went to the Chickasaw Nation, there remaining until 1882, and being occupied as a farmer, returning in that year to Red River county, Texas, and buying land on Blossom Prairie. With added experience came increased confidence in his ability to successfully cope with his fellow men in trade and traffic, and he launched out upon a career of land dealing in which he has since continued with profit and pleasure. He has converted raw and unattractive land into fertile farms and has brought neglected places into the fullness of life because of the improvements he has brought about thereon. He has fed cattle for the market and otherwise mingled with the commercial side of life in his locality in gathering together the modest fortune he possesses. From his farm of one hundred and thirty-five acres adjacent to Deport he has sold all but forty-three acres which he has retained for town-site purposes, and Isbell's addition to Deport places his name permanently in the annals of life of this busy little town. He owns a farm of some four hundred and sixty acres south of the town of Clarksville, and cultivates, with the aid of his sons, about three hundred acres of it. Other business connections he maintains in Deport is that with the Deport Cotton Oil Company, in which he is one of the heaviest stockholders, and the First State Bank, of which he is a stockholder and director.

Mr. Isbell was married on June 5, 1873, to Miss Mary Susan Westbrook, daughter of Samuel H. Westbrook, and a sister of John R. Westbrook, one of the leading business men and farmers of Deport, and concerning whom a sketch will be found elsewhere in this work. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Isbell, concerning whom the following brief mention is made: William, the eldest of the six, married Fannie Compton, and was killed in a cyclone disaster of 1907, leaving four children, Lela, Aletha, Beatrice and Norris; Luraney, married Murphy Elkins, and was burned to death in 1905, he left two daughters, Anna and Ophelia; Samuel Robert, Jim Allen and John are farmers in the vicinity of Clarksville, where they manage one of the magnificent farms of their father, and George W. aids his father in conducting the general business of the place.

Mr. Isbell is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and his official connection with its affairs has covered a long period of years. He has represented his denomination as a delegate at state conferences, and in other ways proved his interests and usefulness in the church body. His fraternal relations are confined to the Masonic order, and he is a Master Mason.

DR. SAMUEL HUGH FULTON, M. D., has practiced medicine in Ladonia since 1892, and he has not only the distinction of being one of the leaders of the medical fraternity of Fannin county, but also of being a son of one of the earliest of Texas' frontier adventurers and one who subsequently left his imprint upon Lamar county, where he established his home, and upon the early navigation of the Mississippi river and its navigable tributaries, the Ohio and Red rivers.

The Fulton family was founded in Texas in 1833, when Samuel Moore Fulton made his settlement on Red river, he subsequently building up a business community in Lamar county, at Arthur City, his home for nearly twenty years. He was born in 1800, in Norfolk, Virginia, where his father, Samuel Fulton, was a shipbuilder from the early days of United States history. The latter came to America upon the heels of the surrender of Gen. Cornwallis, at Yorktown, from the Clyde river, where his father was the founder of the Fulton (later Armstrong) Docks, and where they built up the shipbuilding industry from the founding of that great enterprise. The first Armstrong married one of the Fulton daughters and when he came into the great factory, extending now for twenty miles along the Clyde, his personality eventually shook off the Fulton influence and finally supplanted the founder's name. Samuel Fulton, Sr.'s, career as a shipbuilder in America began as a foreman, and time witnessed his development into one of the noted constructors of vessels at the Norfolk yards. When he tired of his strenuous life with the encroachment of age, he moved to Wytheville, Virginia, and there passed his remaining years, dying in 1815, when sixty-five years old. He was married in Scotland to Nancy Cravens, who followed her son to Texas and passed away at Arthur City in 1847, when about seventy years of age. She was the mother of six children. Of the latter, Andrew and David died at Dardonnelle, Arkansas; William died in Lamar county, Texas; and Samuel Moore was the father of Dr. Fulton.

Samuel Moore Fulton was reared in a home of plenty and was influenced toward a life of business by contact with his father. He left his home in 1818 and established himself at Fulton, Arkansas, which place was named in his honor, and there entered the trapping business, working his way into the frontier and gathering up skins as a trapper and trader with the Indians. He first came to Texas while pursuing this vocation as a young man of twenty-three years, and during the trapping season for the succeeding ten years carried on his occupation along Red river, visiting also other points in this Mexican region.

Two years before the rupture of the Texas patriots and the Mexican government, Mr. Fulton came to this State to locate permanently and established himself at an advantageous point on the river with whose waters and possibilities for trade he had an intimate knowledge. When the war for independence broke out, he added his personality to it as one of Houston's men and bore a part of the burden of freeing Texas and establishing a new nation upon the western hemisphere. Soon after the Republic became a fact, he engaged in steamboating on Red river and the Mississippi and came to be an officer of the Ohio, Red River & Mississippi Packet Company, and it was while on one of his trips to New Orleans, in 1853, that he was detained in port by a yellow-fever quarantine and died of the disease himself. His capacity for business and finance was most marked, and his estate of 33,000 acres and 180 negroes shows his principal holdings. He located his league and labor of land along Red river, in Lamar county, in which county he was the largest taxpayer of his day, and his vast interests were managed from Arthur City. Following the Civil War his land passed out of the family by sale and his effective part in the pioneer settlement of the great State of Texas is known only to the records of history he made.

Samuel Moore Fulton was the only member of his family to make a military record. He took great pride in the achievements of the founders of Texas, and was a delegate to the convention having to do with the ratification of the treaty admitting Texas to the Union, being one of the six who voted against the proposition, while the other five were Capt. Allen of Bonham, Capt. Cravens, Ulysses Matthewson, Capt. Harrison and Hi Runnells, a brother of Gov. Runnells of Texas of a later day.

In the early forties Mr. Fulton was a member of the Wright party which explored the country up Red river to the Wichita mountains, they being among the first white men to invade that part of the Indian country. He belonged to the "old school" Presbyterian church, but generously supported all denominations, and liberally donated of his means toward the building of the First Methodist, Presbyterian, Cumberland Presbyterian and Baptist churches, all erected at Paris.

The domestic life of Samuel Moore Fulton began when he was married, at Clarksville, Texas, to Frances McCarley. She was a daughter of George McCarley, and died leaving a son, William, who passed away near Clarksville in February, 1913. William married (first) Miss Jameson and (second) Rebecca Dinwiddie, and left a family of seven daughters by his last union. Samuel Moore Fulton married (second) Clara Roberts, a daughter of Mark R. Roberts. Mr. Roberts came to Texas in 1834 from near Nashville, Tennessee, where he had erected the first house in the western part of that State. He settled in Fannin county, Texas, and passed away in 1879, at eighty-seven years of age. He was well known as an Indian fighter, as colonel of a ranging company, and was a large slaveholding planter. He married Mary McNeal, and fourteen of his eighteen children grew to maturity. Mrs. Fulton died January 18, 1861, having been the mother of these children: Mary, who became the wife of B. F. McCuiston of Lamar county; Nancy, who married A. P. Ryan of Paris, Texas; Maria, who passed away unmarried; Albert McN. and Lorenzo, who died early in life; and Samuel Hugh.

Samuel Hugh Fulton was born at Paris, Texas, June 10, 1852, and passed his childhood in Lamar county, attending Shiloh and McKenzie College, at Clarksville. When still a youth he went to the cattle range of Jacks county, Texas, and made a hand on the trails leading to Kansas, the then shipping point for Texas, following both the old Chisholm trails and helping drive the third herd of cattle over the Sweetwater trail in 1868. He spent a number of summers on the drive and visited the popular shipping stations of Baxter Springs and Abilene. When he abandoned the trail he returned to civilization and engaged in farming in Red River county and later in Lamar county. He lived either at Pattonville or Paris during this period, but left that county in 1880 to take up the study of medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, where he was a student in both the Louisville Medical College and the Kentucky School of Medicine, and graduated from the former in 1892. For ten years he practiced on certificate, and began his professional career at Woodland, Texas, subsequently coming to Ladonia from Jardine, Texas, upon his receipt of diploma from college. In 1896 he took a post-graduate course at the New Orleans Polyclinic, and during his entire career has been identified with the State and county medical organizations. Dr. Fulton is local surgeon for the railroad interests of Ladonia. He has extensive farming operations, having developed from its virgin state and brought under cultivation and improvement seven hundred acres of land, in three farms, provided with homes for a large tenantry, and has otherwise exerted effective force in the modernizing of his section of Fannin county. A large, genial, whole-souled man, bearing his years lightly, the Doctor is popular with all who know him, and with a rare fund of reminiscence and an entertaining manner of recalling events and experiences of the early days, is greatly in demand in social circles.

On November 9, 1887, Dr. Fulton was married in Hunt county, Texas, to Miss Lona Payne, daughter of Capt. William Payne, who came to Texas from Giles county, Tennessee. He married Amelia Campbell, a daughter of Eli H. Campbell, one of the original Texas pioneers, who located his headright in Bowie and Hunt counties. To Dr. and Mrs. Fulton there have been born two children: Edward Lorenzo, a graduate of the law department of the Texas University, class of 1911, who is now assistant county attorney of Wichita county; and Miss Clara, who is prosecuting her studies in the Girls' Presbyterian College, at Milford, Texas.

O. W. Ludd

Dr. Fulton is without a record in active politics, although he supports the policies and candidates of the Democratic party and those movements which make for good government. His fraternal connection is with the local lodge of the Odd Fellows.

CAPT. OTHO WILLIAMS BUDD, on the retired list of army officers since 1891, is a representative of one of the more prominent old families of Maryland, of Welsh origin, and identified with American history since the time of Lord Baltimore, in whose company the first of the Williams family came to American shores. Captain Budd was born at Mercersburg, Franklin county, Pennsylvania, in 1841, and is the son of Samuel and Louisa Jane (Williams) Budd. The former was born in New Jersey and the latter at Williamsport, Maryland. Mrs. Budd was the daughter of Otho Williams, who was a son of General Otho Williams of Revolutionary fame, and who in that long struggle for independence commanded the Maryland line in the Carolinas and won distinction for his achievements at Cowpens, Eutaw Springs and other historic battles in the Carolinas. General Williams was the son of Thomas Owen Williams, who with his father came to Maryland with Lord Baltimore, the Williams family receiving a grant of land in the royal province of Maryland. Their first settlement was in Prince George County, but they later removed to Washington county and founded the town of Williamsport on the Potomac river, where representatives of the family have continued to live during the succeeding generations.

When Otho Williams Budd was five years old his father died, and he accompanied his mother to the home of her father in Maryland, then located near Williamsport, in Washington county. He attended school there and received his college education in Franklin & Marshall College at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in 1861. His people were of southern blood and instinct, and young Budd was anxious to join the Confederate army despite his youth, but his mother prevailed on him to go to Europe instead and continue his education. He spent something like seven years traveling in Europe, visiting England, Scotland, and practically all of Continental Europe, including Russia and Turkey. He also traveled in Egypt, Algiers, Morocco and Tripoli, Africa. Returning home in 1867, he was in the following year appointed second lieutenant of Troop M, Fourth United States Cavalry. His entire military career, ending in 1891, was confined to his activities in the Fourth Cavalry. In 1869 he went to Jefferson, Texas, with his troop, where he was on duty for a year in the reconstruction service. Following this he was engaged in the campaigns against the Indians in West Texas, stationed at Fort Concho, and remained on duty there for about a year. In 1871 he accompanied his troop to San Antonio and for fourteen months was located here, after which he was ordered to Fort Brown, in Brownsville, Texas, near the mouth of the Rio Grande River. While there Captain Budd led a notable raid against the Mexican cattle thieves headed by Cipriano Flores, the successor of the dreaded Cortine. Taking his troop secretly to Santa Maria Ranch, thirty miles above Brownsville, where he crossed the river, he surrounded the desperadoes, shot Flores, who had jumped into the river and attempted to escape, and capturing the others, fourteen in number, hung them all to a giant cypress tree that waited conveniently near on Mexican soil. He was warmly commended for this act by the big cattlemen of that region, who had suffered much from the depredations of the Mexican cattle rustlers, and a few months later, having been transferred to Eagle Pass, Texas, he received at that place a highly complimentary tribute for his achievement from General Phil Sheridan, who was there on a trip of inspection. Shortly thereafter he was promoted to the first lieutenantancy of I troop of 4th cavalry. In this capacity he was ordered to Fort Clark at Spofford Junction, Texas, and from there he was later sent to Fort Sill, Indian Territory, and from the latter place to Camp Supply, Indian Territory. He was there when the war with the Sioux broke out in the Northwest, and was ordered promptly to that scene with his troop, joining the expedition against the Indians that was organized immediately following the Custer massacre. He took part in the battle at Crazy Woman's Fork, in the Powder River country, as well as in other engagements with the Indians. The winter and spring of 1876 he passed at Red Cloud Agency, or Camp Robinson, and then returned to his old station at Camp Supply. In 1880 he was ordered with his troop to join the campaign against the Apaches under Victorio in New Mexico, and was so engaged until that band was put out of business, which was accomplished by driving the Indians on to Mexican territory and into ambush in the Candelaria mountains in Chihuahua, several miles south of El Paso, where all were killed by Mexicans under Col. Trevino.

Following these activities Captain Budd went to Fort Riley, Kansas, for a well earned rest, and his next service was in Colorado and Utah in the campaign against the Ute Indians. In 1882 he received his captain's commission while attending the military school at Fort Leavenworth, being in the first class when the school was first organized under Gen. Sherman. He was assigned to the command of Troop C, 4th Cavalry. In 1884 and 1885 he was engaged in the Apache campaigns of Arizona and New Mexico, the Apaches at this time having Geronimo, chief of the Chiricahua band of the Apache tribe, for their leader. After the breaking up of this raiding expedition, Captain Budd was stationed for some time at Fort Grant and Fort Bowie, all in Arizona. In 1886 he was detached for recruiting service and was stationed for a time in Milwaukee, and while he was on duty in that city he was attacked with pleuro-pneumonia, which subsequently led to such a breakdown in his health and strength that in 1891 he was compelled to take a place on the retired list. For fifteen years thereafter Captain Budd lived at Asheville, North Carolina, and in 1903 he established his home in San Antonio, where he has since resided.

Captain Budd was married in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to Miss Margaret Sanderson of that city. They have one son,—Otho William Budd, Jr., and two daughters: Elizabeth and Margaret. Elizabeth married G. B. Pid-dicord, of Asherton, Texas.

GEORGE C. BAUGHN has resided in Texas continuously since December, 1880, but he knew the state in earlier years, his first acquaintance with it being in 1854. He remained within the borders of Texas only long enough at that time to make him a lasting convert to the state, and he was never quite content until he had established himself permanently in this community. Now past the fourscore mark, George Baughn has retired from active farm life, in which he was long engaged, and is taking his ease in these later years, as befitting one who has toiled long and prospered well.

Born in Cumberland county, Virginia, on September 29, 1832, George C. Baughn is the son of Silas M. and Elizabeth (Carter) Baughn, as the name was then rendered. Mr. Baughn of this review having seen fit to drop from the name the last article that his fathers had retained, and concerning these parents the following brief data are here incorporated: Silas M. Baughn was born in Cumberland county, Virginia, in 1806, and is the son of John Baughn, who migrated to that state with three brothers, from Wales, in the British Isles. The brothers were Joe, Warner, and Payton. The father became a man of importance in Cumberland county, and was a teacher and a surveyor there. He once served the county as Tax Collector, and in other capacities of similar importance. His children were Silas M.; John T., who died single; Joe W., who moved to Tennessee; and Prudence, who married Thomas Flippen.

Silas M. Baughn married Elizabeth Carter, and of the four children born to them, only two reached years of maturity—James W. and George C. of this review. James W. died in that state, leaving a family. Following the death of the mother, Silas Baughn married Elizabeth Rhodes, who bore him one son, William Silas, a farmer near Henderson, in Chester county, Tennessee, and a member of the Primitive Baptist church of that place, where he is popular and prominent. Silas Baughn did a considerable moving about with his family in the years following his marriage, spending some time in North Carolina, Georgia, thence back to his native state, Virginia, and later settling in Tennessee, where he died.

George C. Baughn was but six weeks old when his parents moved from his birthplace, in Cumberland county, Virginia, and settled in North Carolina. A short time after they moved to Georgia, and the mother died in 1839, when her son George was but seven years old. As a boy he had no school advantages worthy of the name. He barely learned to read and write during his attendance at such schools as were provided in his time and his later contact with men and affairs have equipped him with a practical rather than a theoretical education.

In 1854 Mr. Baughn moved to Texas, and there he soon married Sarah J. Shackelford, who died in March, 1857, leaving a son, James M., who survived her death but a short time. In the same year the bereaved young husband returned to Tennessee, and he later married Susan J. Bell, the daughter of Samuel and Mary (McFadden) Bell, the mother being a daughter of Guy McFadden, well known in his community.

Mr. Baughn had contracted for a farm at the time of the breaking out of the Rebellion, and he was just beginning to make some progress toward independence when existing conditions forced him into the army. He differed from his brother in politics, and entered the Confederate instead of the Union army, and in 1862 joined Company F of Col. Browder's First Tennessee Infantry, in Cheatham's Division of Hardy's Corps. His first fight was at Fort Henry, and then came Shiloh and Corinth before the Atlanta campaign. He participated in the battle of Peach Tree Creek and also in the historic engagement of July 22nd before Atlanta. He was later wounded while engaged in sharpshooting, the ball passing through the palm of his left hand. Gangrene complications resulting therefrom left him with a badly crippled hand and caused his discharge from the service in the fall of 1864.

Returning to his family and his home in Tennessee he found that comparatively little of his stock had survived the forage of both armies, which, in view of his pending indebtedness and his crippled hand, caused him some unpleasantness in anticipation. It is a pleasure to say, however, that he was a man who knew to realize substantially upon his faith in God, and he turned his face away from the darkness, applied himself to the care of his farm and his family, and succeeded in winning through the most untoward conditions. He was able to bring up his children in comfort and plenty and came to be known as one of the most prosperous men of his community. In 1880 he sold his property and again came to Texas, purchasing a fine farm of one hundred acres in 1881, and this place he cultivated assiduously until he felt retirement incumbent because of the weight of years. So close to the town of Deport were his land lines as to crowd the city in its growth and expansion after the advent of the railroad, and he sold one-half of his farm to be platted and put on the market for city lots. Upon this addition a considerable portion of Deport has already been built. This district lay immediately in the path of the cyclone of 1907 and none of the homes of the citizens of that part of the city were left standing after the visitation of that storm. Mr. Baughn's own home was demolished into a fair quality of kindling wood, while he himself lay upon a sickbed, but Providence again stood guard over his destinies, and he suffered but slightly from the experience.

Mr. Baughn has long been a member of the Baptist church, having joined that body in his early Tennessee home on July 21, 1850, and he has been a faithful and consistent member of the church through all the long, intervening years. The quality of his faith has been of the most exalted order, and a man less fortified by trust would have fallen beneath the struggle that he experienced in earlier years.

The second marriage of Mr. Baughn was productive of a goodly family, concerning the members of which brief mention is here made as follows: Mary J., the eldest, married B. E. Nobles and resides at Farwell, Texas; John W. is a merchant of Mineral Wells, Texas; George C., Jr., is a farmer of Blossom, Texas; W. Lafayette is a merchant of Deport, Texas; and Milton H. is a lawyer and is filling the office of city attorney in Mineral Wells, Texas. All received liberal educational advantages, attending school in Henderson, Tennessee, as well as in Texas, and the lawyer-son was a student in Trinity College at Tehuacana, Texas, and gained his admittance to the bar at an exceptionally early age.

Mr. Baughn became a member of the Masonic fraternity in 1865 and is a charter member of Deport Chapter. He is well advanced in Masonry and its vital truths, and his membership in that honored old fraternity is a matter of some pleasure to him. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Deport, and such political activity as he has ever manifested has been as an adherent of the Democratic party, although he has never been a man of political ambitions, or more than ordinary interest in affairs of a political nature. A good citizen, concerned in the civic and municipal affairs of his community, he has ever wielded a healthy influence in his home town, but the affairs of the nation he has been well content to leave to the politicians.

REV. CARL G. LINDBERG. Although the Rev. Carl G. Lindberg, pastor of the Swedish Methodist Episcopal Church, has been known to the people of Georgetown, Texas, for but a comparatively short period, he has already impressed the community with his unselfish work in the cause he serves, and has given evidence of the possession of qualities which must assuredly call forth general approbation, even from those who differ with him most sharply theologically and politically. His sincere piety, his intense moral earnestness, his great industry, his kindness and his spirit of tolerance should go far, not alone to make him beloved by his flock and prosperous in the business affairs of his parish, but to gain him the good will and support of those of other creeds, without which no minister of the Gospel considers he has achieved the full measure of success.

Reverend Lindberg was born October 6, 1867, in Sweden, and is a son of Anders Larson, who has spent his life in agricultural pursuits in that country, where he died. He was given excellent educational advantages, and early expressed a desire to enter the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church, and accordingly was sent to Upsala Methodist Seminary, Sweden, from which noted institution he was graduated with the class of 1894. In 1895 Reverend Lindberg emigrated to the United States, and first located at Ishpeming, Michigan, where, however, he remained only two months, then going to his first charge, the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church at Virginia, Minnesota, where he continued for two years. Following this he had charge of the church at Norway, Michigan, for two years, and when his pastorate there expired was sent to Republic, in the same state, where he continued three years. This period was marked by much prosperity for the church at that point, and Rev. Lindberg was also able to erect a church at Crystal Falls, Michigan. He was then transferred to Hector, Minnea, where he remained for three years, and at the end of that time, in 1906, came to Texas, his first charge being at Fort Worth, where he was pastor of the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church for three years and where he acted as parsonage. He next was sent to Manda, Texas, where he erected a church and remained three years, and in 1911 came to Georgetown, where he has continued in charge. A logical, forcible speaker, and an able interpreter of the great truths which he preaches, he is also possessed of much more than ordinary business ability, and in this capacity has been able to do much to advance the interests of the church and to advise those in his congregation. An active, alert member of the community, he is ever ready to give his support to movements making for its business welfare, and among the progressive citizens of Georgetown his judgment is considered excellent upon matters of importance.

In 1897 Reverend Lindberg was united in marriage with Miss Anna Carolina Mordell, of Superior, Wisconsin, who was born in Sweden, but was brought to the United States by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. August Mordell, in childhood. Four children have been born to this union, namely: Florence, Esther, Eveline and Clifford.

CLARENCE NUGENT. For a period of more than forty years the Nugent name has been one of the most prominent in the citizenship and in the professional life of Stephenville, and Erath county. Mr. Clarence Nugent has been a successful lawyer there for the past fifteen years, and his father was one of the eminent attorneys and public men of Texas and lived in Stephenville until a few years before his death, when he moved to Fort Worth, but his remains lay at rest in the East End cemetery at Stephenville.

It is specially fitting that some space should be given to this work to the career of the late Thomas Lewis Nugent, the father of Clarence Nugent. Thomas L. Nugent was born at Opelousas, Louisiana, July 16, 1841, and died at Fort Worth, December 14, 1895. His father was Thomas Nugent, a native of Ireland. It was an old Scotch-Irish and Protestant family, and Thomas Nugent was born on the family estate, near Rashowney, in Queen's county, Ireland, in 1792. Being the younger son of a large family, he resolved to seek his fortune in America. In November, 1816, he arrived in Philadelphia, and in 1818 moved to Natchez, Mississippi, from which place he subsequently went to New Orleans. There in 1827 he married Miss Anne Lavinia Lewis, daughter of Judge Seth Lewis, chief justice of Mississippi territory, and subsequently for many years district or circuit judge of Louisiana. After their marriage they settled at Opelousas, where Thomas L. Nugent was born. The Nugent family in Ireland belong to the church of England, but in America became Methodists. Thomas Nugent and his wife were devout Christians, and from them Thomas L. Nugent inherited a strong love for religious subjects. Thomas Nugent was noted for his honesty and integrity and a sweetness of disposition which was remarkable. His wife was a woman of strong character, and very practical and of strong principles. With her naturally womanly character, she also was very intelligent, and it is said that she could discuss politics with the ablest men of her time, and for that reason was a companion and friend to her son.

The late Thomas L. Nugent in one respect at least resembled the great southern poet, Sidney Lanier, in that he had a fine ear for music, and, though never trained in the art, played the violin with exquisite taste and harmony even from childhood. He kept his instrument by him through college life, and its music was a great source of comfort to him for many years. While in college he was studying for the Methodist ministry, and at that time the possession and performance upon a violin was regarded as inconsistent with true Christian devotion, but he satisfied his own conscience in the matter, and it is said that he continued to give utterance to the music of his soul upon the instrument in spite of criticism.

Thomas L. Nugent was graduated from Centenary College in Louisiana with highest honors in 1861. Immediately thereafter he went to Texas for his health, but returned home in a few months. In 1862 he permanently settled in Texas. Soon after he enlisted in a Texas regiment, and went through the war wearing the uniform of a Confederate soldier. However, he had many doubts as to the righteousness of the institution of slavery and rejoiced when the news of Lee's surrender came. At the close of the war he taught school in Austin and elsewhere, and his work as an educator was exceptional in a time when strictness and sternness was considered essential to the vocation, since he ruled with love and kept the respect of his pupils without any exercise of the harsh measures often then in vogue.

In the meantime he had taken up the study of law, and in 1870 was admitted to the bar. In 1871 Mr. Nugent settled in Bosque county, which was then on the frontier. In 1872 he moved to Stephenville, in Erath county, where he lived, with the exception of two years' residence in El Paso, until his removal to Fort Worth in 1891. The late Thomas L. Nugent served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1875, and did much to give him prominence in that body. In 1879 Governor Roberts appointed him district judge over the newly created Twenty-ninth judicial district, comprising Palo Pinto, Hood, Somerville, Hamilton, Coryell and Erath counties. He was subsequently elected twice, and finally resigned the office in July, 1888. A Democrat during his early political career, he subsequently became a People's party man, and in 1892 accepted the nomination from his party as candidate for governor. During the last five years of his career he practiced law in Fort Worth. Thomas L. Nugent married Miss Clare F. Hardman, a daughter of Gen. W. P. Hardman, and she preceded him in death by several years. There were five children in the family, three sons and two daughters.

Mr. Clarence Nugent, next to the youngest of the family, was born April 1, 1872, in Meridian, Bosque county, Texas. His first education was received in the public schools, and later he took a collegiate course in El Paso. His law studies were pursued under his father at Stephenville, and in 1897 he was admitted to the bar. He began practice at Stephenville, and for the past sixteen years has enjoyed a splendid professional success. Politically Mr. Nugent belongs to what might be called the social democracy.

On May 31, 1903, in Erath county, Mr. Nugent married Miss Aro Irene Graham, a daughter of A. H. and Emma Graham. Her father is an early Texas settler, and for many years an active farmer and stock raiser. He served in the Confederate army, going through the war, and the great battle in which he participated was that of Chickamauga. He is still living and in good health, and very active for one of his years. Mrs. Nugent's mother died in 1904. There are four sons in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Nugent, namely: Lewis Graham, William C., T. L. and J. C. Nugent. Mr. Nugent has lived practically all his life in the town of Stephenville, and has grown up and has always enjoyed the friendships continued from his boyhood days. He is well established in his profession, has a large acquaintance throughout Erath county, and from every point of view is a successful man.

GEORGE WASHINGTON WILEY, retired farmer and highly honored citizen of Ladonia, has been a resident of Texas since 1865, coming to the Lone Star State after a military service unexcelled in the annals of the country for its patriotism and the brilliancy of its achievements while the unsuccessful effort was being made to establish a new flag for the Southland. He came hither bereft of all save courage and personal honor and began civil life as an humble farmer, and with such paraphernalia only as he had saved from the wreck of the old Confederate government. Mr. Wiley was born on the banks of the Cumberland river, in Wayne Co., Kentucky, where his grandfather, a native of Scotland, had settled during pioneer days, after residence in Maryland. The grandfather was a boatman on the Cumberland river, and was one of the first to navigate that stream for commercial purposes. He married Jane Pigg, and they became the parents of the following children: Telitha, who married James Duncan; Cassandra, who became the wife of George Logan; Deborah, who married Elijah Bosley; Jane, who married Mr. Inzer; and George W. All of these save Mrs. Inzer passed their lives in Cooper county, Missouri, she dying at Roachport, in that State.

George W. Wiley, Sr., the father of our subject, was born in 1782, in Baltimore, Maryland, and early accompanied his parents to Kentucky, subsequently passing his life on the borders of civilization. He labored with his hands to maintain his family, following a life of industry and usefulness. He aided as a soldier of Col. Dick Johnson's regiment, under Gen. Harrison, in defeating the British during the War of 1812, and was present at the battle of Lundy's Lane, where the old Indian chief, Tecumseh, was killed, and was within twenty feet of that old savage when Col. Johnson's bullet laid him low. He married Patsy Pigg Turpin, daughter of Aaron Turpin, her father having led a colony into Kentucky among the first settlers of that State. In 1844 Mr. and Mrs. Wiley left Kentucky for Missouri, where they entered a tract of public land in Cedar county, and there Mr. Wiley met with an accident sustained by the falling of a tree, but lived several years afterwards, but died from the effects in 1854. 1866 Mrs. Wiley came to Texas, and her last years were spent in Fannin county, where her death occurred in 1876, burial being made in Smyrna Cemetery, north of Honey Grove. The children born to George W. and Patsy Wiley were as follows: John H., who was killed in the battle of Mine Creek, as a Confederate soldier, on the retreat along the Kansas-Missouri line, of Price's army, in 1864, and was buried where he fell, just east of Fort Scott, Kansas; Aaron Turpin, who died at Sterrett, Oklahoma, and left a family; Mary J., who married Hugh B. Morris and died at Tipton, Missouri; Sarah, who became the wife of A. W. Johnson and resides in Montague county, Texas; George W., of this review; and Telitha, who married William Wallace and lives at Woodford, Oklahoma.

George W. Wiley was born September 15, 1839, and passed through the pioneer "log pen" used for a schoolhouse in Cedar county, Missouri, subsequently witnessing the change from the old to the more modern schoolhouse of a settled community. He had reached his majority before the outbreak of the struggle between the North and the South, and was one of the first volunteers for the Confederate service from Cedar county, Missouri. He enlisted in Company C, Capt. Musgrove, Tenth Missouri Cavalry, under Col. Walker, and was sworn in at Stockton, Missouri, in 1861. The command was ordered to Cowskin Prairie, in Southwestern Missouri, where it was drilled and equipped, and then began field work with the battle of Oak Hill. The battle of Lexington came next in order of prominence, and when the army of Gen. Price fell back to Osceola, Mr. Wiley was discharged by reason of the expiration of his term of service. He returned home and attempted to remain, but knowledge of his connection with the Confederate forces was known to the Federal authorities, and he was kept on the move, constantly harassed, and dodging into the brush, and from one hiding place to another until April 26, 1862, when he was captured. He was released upon his promise to report at Montevilla, eight days later, to take the oath of allegiance to the United States, but instead of being on hand he was in VanBuren, Arkansas, and prepared to again take service with the Confederates. After serving with Gen. Raines' escort for a short time, he joined the Tenth Missouri Cavalry, and renewed his active service, following which came the battles of Springfield, the Hartville, Wilson Creek, Marmaduke and Shelby's raid and the battle of Hartville, Missouri. Succeeding this came the battle of Helena and the long period of fighting which extended from Little Rock to Camden, Arkansas. In the spring of 1864 he was in the battle of Fredericktown, Cape Girardeau, Jackson and Bloomfield, where he was detailed with three hundred men to pontoon the St. Francis river at Chalk Bluff for the passage of his command back into Confederate territory. In the autumn of that year began the movement of Gen. Price's army which developed into his famous raid into Missouri, and began with the engagement of Pilot Knob and included skirmishing all the way to Jefferson City, Herman, California, Booneville, Independence, Glasgow, Big Blue and Westport, Missouri, where the Confederate forces were turned back and pressed by a Federal force far outnumbering their own, and a running fight was carried on along the line of Kansas and Missouri until the battle of Mine Creek, where one of his brothers was killed and the other brother taken prisoner. At Newtonia, which followed, Mr. Wiley turned his only capable horse over to his comrade, "Uncle" Boyd Miller, who had abandoned his worn-out cavalry horse and was found bewailing his ill luck, and gave Miller instructions to go to Texas and to report Mr. Wiley's predicament should he fail to reach Texas himself on foot. Both succeeded in accomplishing the journey and found each other, and Mr. Wiley continued with his regiment into Louisiana. He was detached for service at Pigeon Hill, Louisiana, for a time, and then reported with his company at Shreveport, for surrender to Gen. Miles upon orders from the authorities of the Trans-Mississippi Department, upon the heels of the surrender of Gen. Lee, at Appomattox.

Mr. Wiley's inclination at the end of the war was for settlement in Texas. His attachment to its soldiery and his sympathy for those of the "Lost Cause" were elements entering into his decision to abandon his old home in the North and become actually as well as practically a Southerner. He located eight miles north of Ladonia, and with his old war horse, "Buck," and a pony, he took up the burdens of a new citizenship. Notwithstanding old "Buck" had three bullet wounds in his hide, he dropped as willingly and naturally into civil pursuits as did his master and survived many years and to celebrate the anniversaries of many noted engagements of the war. Mr. Wiley raised his first Texas crop on George Stephens' farm, on Village Creek, and before springtime had come in 1867 had married and established a humble home near the Waggoner farm, where his wife had been reared. Before the tract of land which came to Mrs. Wiley from her father was materially improved it was exchanged for a farm near Ladonia, and adjacent to this city this now aged couple won their modest financial and domestic achievements, and in the town and country close by their substantial holdings still lie.

For many years, and while the soil was still new and fertile, Mr. Wiley devoted his energies to grain and stock, but when obstacles injected themselves into the foreground and threatened further profitable handling of grain, he drifted into "cotton and corn" and terminated farm life as a farmer of this kind. For a period of nine years he maintained a store upon his farm, and for a like period he and his son carried on a grocery business in Ladonia. In his earliest months in Texas he and his brother made their own boots at night, as a matter of economy, and he employed himself wherever there offered an opportunity for profit, gathering seeds and selling them, reaping grain by the acre, or threshing grain by the bushel for hire—all these things and more he did while establishing himself in the new country.

On January 2, 1867, Mr. Wiley married Mary Melvina Waggoner, a daughter of David Waggoner, who came to Texas during the first years of the Republic and settled in Fannin county. He was born in Virginia, a son of

V. H. Horton

Waggoner, a native of Germany who emigrated to Kentucky, his children being brought up at Big Clifty. Waggoner was born in 1810, came to Texas in 1836, a colony, married in Illinois, was a Mexican War hero, fought Indians in Northern Texas during the Republic, and was a justice of the peace and a county commissioner under Statehood. At one time he owned some of the town site of Paris, Texas, to which locality he had moved from Red River county; was a financier of his time and amassed a large fortune in lands situated in Fannin, Hunt and Red River counties, settling his properties largely upon his children before his death. He owned many slaves when the Civil war broke out and his estate was reduced some $40,000 by the Emancipation Proclamation. He was one of the charter members of the First National Bank of Bonham, and owned twenty shares of its stock at his death. Mr. Waggoner had the following brothers and sisters: John; William; Adam; Rebecca, who married Anselm Terry; Peggy, who married Andrew Terry; and Maria, who married John Dow. David Waggoner married Sarah Elizabeth Rattan, and they became the parents of the following children: Ferdinand, who spent his life as a farmer, married Mary Blackwell, now deceased, leaving a family of six children; Virginia, who married Cyrus Perry and resides in San Saba county, Texas; William, who died while in the Confederate service; Mary M., nee Wiley; Aura, who died as Mrs. James Cunningham, of Putnam, Texas; and Minerva, who married Jordan Miller, of Ladonia, Texas.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wiley: John W., of Ladonia, who is engaged in the cotton business and married Dovie Eagleton; David, who is a druggist of Sulphur, Oklahoma; Dr. Charles, who was graduated from the Louisville Medical College, and was engaged in the practice of medicine at Throckmorton, Texas, at the time of his death, in 1904, March 14; and Robert and James, who reside at Rodeo, Arizona.

While Mr. Wiley served for a long number of years as a member of the school board, he has never been an office-seeker, and his political connections have been confined to the support of Democratic candidates and principles. He and his wife, as earnest Christian people, have given their devotion to the Cumberland Presbyterian church.

V. H. HORTON. With only a limited education to begin with, Mr. Horton entered a store when a boy, became thoroughly familiar with the trade, was later connected with the railroad service in Gainesville, where he was promoted from porter to cashier, and for a number of years now has been one of the active managers and second vice president of the largest merchandise store of north Texas.

V. H. Horton was born in Alabama in 1868, a son of C. and Josephine C. (Horton) Horton. His father, who had been a merchant at Scottsboro, Alabama, moved to Texas in 1883, settling at Winnsboro, where he continued as a merchant until his retirement from business in 1907. He now has his home in Sulphur Springs, and since 1898 has been active in the ministry of the Baptist church. The mother is also living. Mr. V. H. Horton was the first of eight children, the others being: James T., a farmer at Sulphur Springs; Jetta, wife of George W. Payne, a rancher at Weaver, Texas; E. M., a farmer at Sulphur Springs; Lettie, wife of L. B. Lemar, a merchant at Tulsa, Oklahoma; Charles B., in business at Fort Worth; and Bernice and Elizabeth, both of Sulphur Springs.

V. H. Horton practically grew up in his father's store, and continued with him until he moved to Gainesville in 1893. As a boy in Alabama, he attended the common schools for a time, but did not complete the course even in the lower grades. After moving to Gainesville, he became connected with the Santa Fe Railroad Company, was first porter and finally became cashier of the local office. He continued with the railroad company for two years after his marriage, and then became assistant bookkeeper in the large establishment of his father-in-law. After four years he had placed himself as head of two of the departments in that store, and he then bought an interest in the firm. He thus became second vice president of the William Kilgore Company, Incorporated, and since then has had charge of all the bookkeeping of the concern. The William Kilgore Company, Incorporated, is one of the oldest general merchandise houses in Cooke county, having been established in 1882. In 1902 it was incorporated with a capital stock of sixty thousand dollars. They do a general retail trade, which extends over all the territory bordering the Red River.

In 1900 Mr. Horton married Miss Maggie Kilgore, who was born in Texas and was an adopted daughter of William Kilgore, the founder of the above mentioned company of Gainesville. He was born in Tennessee, came to Sherman, Texas, during the early days, and has been a merchant ever since moving to this state. Mr. and Mrs. Horton are the parents of one child, William Garrett, now nine years of age and attending school. In politics Mr. Horton is a Democrat without any aspirations for official preferment. He gives all his time to his business, and is one of the leading business men of Gainesville. At the present time he is serving as a deacon in the Gainesville Christian church, and fraternally has been honored with some of the minor chairs in the Woodmen of the World. Both outside and inside of business his hobby is automobiles, and inasmuch as the Kilgore Company have a large trade in motor cars, this diversion never interferes with his business success.

J. FRANK KEITH is one of the prominent lumbermen of Beaumont and is identified as well with other important interests of the city. He has made his way to prosperity and business prominence over formidable obstacles, and his success is one of the creditable ones of the county. Mr. Keith was born in Jasper County, Texas, in December, 1857, and is a son of H. C. L. and Sarah La Porte Keith, both of whom are now deceased.

H. C. L. Keith was born June 19, 1829, and reared in Bainbridge, Decatur county, Georgia, and came to Texas in 1854, settling on a farm in Jasper county. In 1860 he removed with his family to Sabine Pass, but on account of the war trouble he sent his family to Crockett, in Houston County. When the war was over, they returned to Sabine Pass, and there the father died, May 21, 1869. One of his brothers was Captain K. D. Keith, who served under Dick Dowling in the memorable fight at Sabine Pass, where less than fifty Confederates captured a Federal gunboat and nearly three hundred prisoners. The death of the father left the mother more or less dependent upon her own ingenuity to rear her five fatherless children, and she labored heroically to rear them and give them some education.

The responsibility of having to make the living developed upon J. Frank Keith, and his first work was driving the horses around in an old-fashioned gin. After following this and any other work he could get to do around Sabine Pass, in 1872 he went to Columbus, Texas, and there worked for his uncle, John W. Keith. At Columbus he met a Beaumont sawmill owner, Capt. W. A. Fletcher, and in 1874 he came to Beaumont with Capt. Fletcher and worked in the shingle mill of Long and Company, managed by Mr. Fletcher. When the Sabine & East Texas Railroad was built from Beaumont up into the pine woods, in 1881, Mr. Keith went up into the pine region in Hardin county and there built and operated a sawmill for the same Beaumont parties who owned the shingle mill, until 1889. He then returned to Beaumont, becoming connected with the Texas Tram and Lumber Company, also owned by the same interests, continuing with the firm until 1898.

In 1898 Mr. Keith went into the lumber business on his own account, organizing the J. F. Keith Company, who owned two sailing vessels and a lumber yard in Tampico, Mexico. The charter of the company was later amended, changing the name to the Keith Lumber Company and adding to its business the manufacture of lumber, and of this company he is now president. The manufacturing department of this business, including the mill at Voth, Texas, was in March, 1913, leased to and is now being operated by the W. F. Ryder Lumber Company, of which Mr. Keith is one of the owners and vice president.

Mr. Keith built and is the owner of the Keith building, a modern five-story office structure at 618 Pearl street, in the heart of the Beaumont business district, and he has further added to the city by the building of his fine home, known as Arbol Grand, on Calder Avenue, which, with its beautiful grounds and surroundings, is undeniably one of the most beautiful homes in Texas.

Mr. Keith is known in Beaumont as the Father of Keith Park, the park having been named by the city in his honor. This is a beautiful square located in the business district, the land having been set apart for that purpose by the founders of the town. It remained bare and unimproved until Mr. Keith, who in his travels in Mexico and Central America had observed the beauty and attractiveness of the public plazas in the cities of those countries, offered to make, at his expense, the necessary improvements to convert the bare and unattractive square into a beautiful park. This he did, and no other city in Texas today has so magnificent a park so near the business center. Beautiful trees and shrubbery, lawn seats, band stand and a fountain and pond in the center contribute to its general attractiveness, and the city not only named the park in honor of Mr. Keith, but made him Park Commissioner in charge of the same, and retained him in this office several years, or until he insisted upon being relieved.

Mr. Keith is a director of the American National Bank of Beaumont, and is known to be one of the largest taxpayers in Jefferson county.

Mr. Keith married Miss Alice Carroll, of Beaumont, a daughter of the late Frank L. Carroll, a sketch of whose life appears briefly elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Keith has one sister and four brothers, all of whom are prominent citizens of this city and Waco, Texas. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Keith: Cecil, the wife of Chester A. Easley; Olga, wife of H. C. Wiess; Azilee, the wife of V. C. Clark; Miss Alice Keith, and William C. Keith.

ROBERT A. MILLER, M. D. The period just prior to 1877, in Erath county, was prolific in pioneers. There were first pioneers in the various settlements, all of whom, save a score or more of sturdy veterans, have passed away. Next came pioneers in trade, then those who established professions. The minister and lawyer came first, and then the doctor, although it was not until after the little villages began to spring up that practitioners in special lines came to seek for patronage and a livelihood. Doctor Robert A. Miller was a pioneer in medicine in the town of Dublin, where for thirty-six years he has been a resident. During this time he has been a witness to and a participant in the wonderful changes that have made this part of Central Texas one of the most prosperous sections in the State. On his arrival here there was but one double log cabin, where meals could be secured and where the passengers on the stage coaches could rest for a while from their wearisome journey and secure a night's lodging. Also there was one little "raw-hide" general store, a building 20x40 feet, owned and conducted by F. C. Oldham, who is still an honored resident of Dublin and probably its oldest citizen. The Indians had just been driven out of the county, but raids occasionally occurred in the adjoining counties, and the name of the town Dublin was a derivation of the colloquialism "doubling" (or corraling), used to illustrate the manner in which the horses were placed in order to protect them from the Indians. About this time, 1877, began the slaughter of the great American buffalo, or bison, a ruthless slaughter that all but exterminated this noble beast before the government sent troops to stop the killing. Other animals which were here on the Doctor's arrival, and which have since disappeared, were antelopes, deer and wild turkeys, the latter being found in great numbers. The nearest railroad station was at Fort Worth, the terminal of the T. P. Railroad, and everything going further west had to be carried by freight. In comparison to these conditions, it is interesting to note those of today, the flourishing farms, the long miles of railroad, the modern hotels and great business houses, the beautiful churches and schools, and the general peace and prosperity that come only to a progressive, law-abiding country. Much may happen within the span of thirty-six years, but it is doubtful if a greater change has taken place in any section within this period than that to which Doctor Miller has been an eyewitness.

Robert A. Miller was born August 5, 1853, at Lafayette, Walker county, Georgia, and is a son of John L. and Elizabeth (Henderson) Miller, the former a native of Knoxville, Tennessee, and the latter of Greenville, South Carolina, and both of whom moved to Georgia as young people. On his father's side Doctor Miller is of German descent. In his youth John L. Miller took up farming as a means of livelihood, and was engaged in that vocation throughout his life. He came to Texas in 1878 and located at Wills Point, where he was for years engaged in tilling the soil and raising stock, and is still a resident of VanZandt county, being eighty-six years of age and still in good health and spirits. During the Civil war he enlisted as a soldier in the Confederate army, under Capt. J. Y. Woods, in Company G. of the Eleventh Georgia Volunteer Infantry. A brave and gallant soldier, he participated in numerous engagements, and after being wounded at Gettysburg he was not able to do active service, but remained with General Lee's army until the surrender at Appomattox. He and his wife were the parents of nine children, of whom six are living: Dr. Robert A., of this review; Dee L., living in Dublin, and engaged in the dry goods business; Charles A., a farmer of Henderson county, Texas, Chandler postoffice; Tom A., in New York City, a manufacturer of undergarments, who was formerly in the mercantile business; and two sisters. The mother of these children died March 11, 1911, at the age of seventy-eight years. She came of an old and honored Southern family, the Hendersons being for many years extensive plantation owners and slaveholders prior to the war between the North and the South.

The early education of Doctor Miller was secured in the public schools of Georgia; followed this by several courses in medical schools in the city of Atlanta, and eventually became a student in the Louisville (Kentucky) School of Medicine, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1883. He has never ceased to be a student, embracing every opportunity to gain a further knowledge of his beloved profession, and in 1900 took a post-graduate course at the Chicago Polyclinic School, and in 1903 further advanced himself by a post-graduate course in the Polyclinic School of New York. He came to Dublin, Texas, in 1877, and this has been his field of endeavor since he entered practice. During his early years Doctor Miller continued his practice in Dublin, with occasional excursions to the growing villages of the surrounding country, stopping a few days to attend to the needs of the patients which came under his care. His clientele in Dublin has never been merely local, for the reputation that he has acquired for skill and thorough mastery of his profession has brought pats from all the surrounding country to obtain the tment that was not yet accessible near their country es. Dr. Miller has been industrious and prudent, with a sagacity born of native shrewdness and wide ervation, has invested his earnings in property that, h modest improvements, has brought an income, and h shared in the wonderful enhancement of values that marvelous growth of the section imparted to it. He regarded as a master in his profession, and not content a the knowledge which his early study gave him, he kept his eyes open to the progress of the science and adopted every improvement which the progress of icine has introduced. In political matters he has ways been a Democrat, and has worked earnestly in the erests of the party and its candidate. From 1888 il 1901 he was a member of the District Board of idical Examiners, to which office he was appointed by dge Bell. His fraternal connections include member- p in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which has been honored by election to official position, and Knights of Pythias, in which he has passed through chairs.

On October 5, 1876, Doctor Miller was married at gar Valley, Gordon county, Georgia, to Miss Susie G. yes, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Mayes, and his only child. Her father was for a number of years passenger conductor on the Western Atlantic Railroad, and represented his county for two terms (four years) in the State Legislature of Georgia. Both he and his wife passed away several years ago. Five children have en born to Doctor and Mrs. Miller: DeAlva, who mar- ed George B. Doubleday, of Dublin, and now living at urley, Bailey county, Texas, where Mr. Doubleday is engaged in the real estate and insurance business; Dr. ayes, practicing medicine at Seminole, Texas, who is married and has one child; Paul, who has been twice married, and is now a cotton buyer at Tahaka, Texas; om, who is bookkeeper for the Britannia Beach Copper mining Company, is married and a resident of Britannia beach, British Columbia; and Coda, who died when two d one-half years of age. Doctor and Mrs. Miller are nsistent members of the Baptist church.

DAVID NICHOLSON MYRICK. A life record of excep- tional interest and one that should prove an inspiration to young men who must rely upon their own ability to make their way in the world has been that of David nicholson Myrick of Ladonia. He is now retired, after long and successful career as a farmer. Mr. Myrick as lived in Texas since 1877, when he came here from Giles county, Tennessee.

He was born near Pulaski, Tennessee, November 28, 1847, a son of David N. Myrick, who was born in Mur- ray county, Tennessee, and died in Giles county when about fifty years of age. He was a man of education and well informed and was the son of a wealthy slave- holding planter, who moved to Texas before the Civil war and died in this state. The grandfather was a na- tive of Virginia, and traced his ancestry back to Irish immigrants of the colonial days. David N. Myrick, Sr., married Nancy Bolt, a Georgia lady. Mr. Myrick came to Texas before the Civil war and entered the Confed- erate service while here. After the conclusion of peace between the states, he returned to Tennessee, and lived here the rest of his life. His children were Elizabeth, who married a Mr. McCall; David N., of Ladonia; and Mary, who became a Mrs. McMurtrey.

David N. Myrick had to meet the hardships and re- sponsibilities of life at an early age. He was a boy in his early teens when bound out to T. P. Alexander, a Giles county farmer. He thus worked and lived up to the time of his majority and had opportunity to secure very limited knowledge of books. After the expiration of his term of service, he applied himself energetically to his study in the country school and paid his own way through a course of tuition. His first regular employment was as a wage-earner in a country mechanical shop, in Giles county, and in a short time he had become so proficient that he entered into a partnership with his employer, and did the woodwork in the wagon and repair shop. The place was known as Williamson's Shop, and the firm relationship continued about seven years.

Selling out his interest in Tennessee, and with savings amounting to about fifteen hundred dollars, he went out to Colorado on a prospecting tour, visiting Denver and the adjacent mountain countries for several months, and when he reached home half of his savings were gone. He took up his old occupation of farming and continued with some success for three years. At the end of that time he got together as much capital as his possessions would bring and came out to Texas. On the way to this state he stopped in Mississippi, where he married the young lady whom he had met while he was visiting in her old home in Tennessee, and they made the trip to Texas as their wedding tour.

Mr. Myrick located fifteen miles east of Bonham, where he bought a farm, paying part down in cash and assuming the indebtedness as an obligation upon the place. It was one hundred acres, partly improved, and he was soon engaged in producing cotton and corn, with such success that his indebtedness soon disappeared. He remained in that location fifteen years, and then came to Ladonia to be near a good school for the advantage of his children. Starting with the original one hundred acres, Mr. Myrick in the course of a few years had built up an estate of twelve hundred acres, and this is the extent of landed property upon which he now pays taxes and farms it with a number of tenants. He has placed comfortable homes upon his land for his tenant farmers, has built barns for their stock, and his own enterprise is the support and source of livelihood of some twenty families. Besides the small fortune invested in making his farm productive, he has spent generously and wisely of his means for the education of his children.

In 1891 Mr. Myrick brought his family to Ladonia, where he had erected a twelve-room two-story residence, with all the comforts and conveniences of a modern home. Here he has since witnessed the growth to maturity of his children and the passing out of his sons and daughters into the world of affairs. During his residence in Ladonia, Mr. Myrick has lent his capital and his experience to some of the financial and other enterprises of this place. He was an organizer of the Weldon National Bank and was vice president until it was merged into another institution. He helped organize the Electric Light & Water Company, and was connected with its management until March, 1913.

On January 15, 1877, near Verona, Mississippi, Mr. Myrick married Miss Lou Kellum, a daughter of Samuel Randolph and Martha (Williams) Kellum, formerly of Giles county, Tennessee. Mr. Kellum was an overseer before the war and belonged to one of the old families of east Tennessee. Mrs. Myrick was born August 8, 1854, and she and her husband have had the following children: Bela, who was educated in the Mary Nash School at Sherman, and in the Porter College in Bowling Green, Kentucky, and is now the wife of Edward M. DeLoach of Memphis, Tennessee; Earl, who went through the Ladonia schools, attended college in Whitewright, Texas, finishing with a course in Hill's Business College at Waco, is now an employe in the Houston & Texas Central Railway at Dallas, and married Miss Olive Truitt; Latchie, is a graduate of the Ladonia schools, and finished in the noted Women's College of Belmont, at Nashville, Tennessee, and is now a member of the Faculty of the McKendree College at Lebanon, Illinois; Momie, a graduate of the Ladonia School, and a student of the Mary Connor College at Paris, Texas, is now the wife of Dr. Green of the state of Washington, and has one son, Ralph; David N. Jr., after finishing at the Ladonia schools was a student in Sherman and also in McKendrick College at Lebanon, Illinois, later graduating from the Metropolitan Business College at Dallas; Mary Lou, did the work of the local schools and married Franklin Thomas Withers, and is now a resident in Memphis, Tennessee.

Mr. Myrick has carried a portion of the responsibility in city management and of education in Ladonia, as a member of the council and as a member of the board of education. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and the family are Methodists.

BROOKS STAFFORD, M. D. With an experience of more than thirteen years as physician and surgeon, Dr. Stafford holds a high place among the medical fraternity of the city of Galveston. He represents one of the old families of Texas, his paternal grandfather having come to the Republic from Louisiana about 1840, while through his mother he represents a name which has been identified with Texas from the time it was a province of Mexico.

Brooks Stafford is a native of Galveston, where he was born October 5, 1877, a son of Joseph S. and Nannie (Brooks) Stafford. His father was born in the city of Houston in 1841. He was a young man when the war came on, and, entering the Confederate army, became a captain in Hood's Brigade. Following the war he took up business, and for many years was a cotton broker in Galveston. His death occurred about 1885. The mother, who was born in Texas, is now living at Columbus, this state. Members of her family fought in the war of Texas independence.

Dr. Brooks Stafford grew up in his native city of Galveston, received his education in the public schools, and began his practical career as a clerk in the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad company. After ten years of that work he looked for something better and prepared for a professional career in the medical department of Tulane University at New Orleans. After his graduation in 1900, with the degree of M. D., he returned to Galveston, and has since been active in the local profession. For some time he served as assistant quarantine officer at the Port of Galveston. Dr. Stafford has membership in the Galveston County and the Texas State Medical Societies, the American Medical Association.

Dr. Stafford is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is unmarried, and his residence is at 2415 Avenue P.

THOMAS JACKSON CLEGG. Carlsbad is the new health town of west Texas and the site of the State Tuberculosis Sanitarium, which is destined to become a permanent monument to the enterprise and initiative of Thomas Jackson Clegg, who owns the old Collins Ranch, from a portion of which the site for the new town was taken. The Collins Ranch comprises sixty thousand acres of land in Tom Green county, located on the North Concho River, fifteen miles northwest of San Angelo. For many years Mr. Clegg has been one of the largest ranchmen and cattlemen in the west part of the state, but his most important enterprise of a successful career from many points of view will be the town of Carlsbad, which has already brought health and restoration to many.

The Carlsbad mineral waters were discovered while wells were being sunk on the ranch to furnish water for stock purposes. The mineral properties of these wells are particularly valuable, and when the situation and climate are considered Carlsbad can but take rank as one of the most eligible health resorts in the entire state. The samples of the waters as analyzed in the laboratory of chemistry at the University of Texas show large proportions of calcium, magnesium, sodium, chlorine and sulphuric acid radical. The effects of the medical properties contained in the waters are best stated by the medical department of the University: "In small doses these waters act as laxatives and in large doses as purgatives. They stimulate the secretion of the stomach, improve digestion and increase the flow of the urine and the intestinal fluid. They are especially valuable in such diseases as chronic constipation, chronic indigestion, chronic rheumatism, lithemia and gouty conditions, in derangement of the liver and in some forms of Bright's disease. Persons suffering from obesity are also greatly benefited by the use of these waters."

Carlsbad was recently selected by a state commission as the site for the State Tuberculosis Sanitarium. This commission was composed of Governor Colquitt, the state health officer, Dr. Ralph Steiner, and C. U. Connelley, Frank Buskirk and Colonel Charles F. Hume. The state in its first provisions indicated the establishment of two institutions of this nature, but on account of the natural advantages of Carlsbad and its comparatively central location and with a view to economy, the state law was amended by the thirty-third legislature so as to concentrate all the state appropriations to this one institution. The law provides that one thousand acres may comprise the grounds for the institution. A local board of management is constituted, composed of George J. Byrd, M. B. Pulliam, C. W. Hobbs and Thos. J. Clegg, who were appointed by Gov. O. B. Colquitt. The members serve without compensation. The governor and state health officer are also members of the board. The sanitarium was opened for the reception of patients on July 4, 1912, at which time Hon. T. H. McGregor (who wrote the law and is more responsible for the passage of same than any one else), was the orator of the occasion. As now equipped the institution can accommodate about seventy-five patients and its staff of competent physicians and trained nurses are kept in attendance and afford the highest class of service.

The sanitarium and the town of Carlsbad are located about the center of the old Collins Ranch on the Concho, San Saba and Llano Railway, an extension of the Santa Fe Railroad from San Angelo. There is abundance of pure running water besides the water supplied by the wells, and the lands of the sanitarium are devoted to farming and care of a number of pure Jersey milk cows, which are kept for the use of the sanitarium. The grounds are being planted with shade trees and orchards.

Thomas Jackson Clegg was born in Giles county, Tennessee, July 16, 1863, and was named for General Stonewall Jackson. His father, John Clegg, was an Englishman and of old English stock. He came to America and located in Tennessee, where he operated a cotton factory. At the beginning of the Civil war he converted his machinery for the manufacture of guns for the Confederate army. He was an English citizen and always kept an English flag flying over his factory. Curious to state, this flag inspired the respect of both contending armies and protected his enterprise throughout the war, so that he was able to carry on his industry except during such times as the Federal troops were actually on the ground.

Thomas Jackson Clegg was reared in Tennessee and in 1881, at the age of 18, came to Texas, locating in Eastland county, where he was employed on the ranch of Tom Blake at a salary of twenty dollars a month. He later became manager for the Cisco Land and Manufacturing and Live Stock Company, a corporation composed of eastern capitalists, but their business was entirely in cattle ranching. He remained with that firm for two years, after which he took a place with John M. Lane, who furnished the money to buy yearling steers, Mr. Clegg to get one-half the proceeds after running the steers and marketing them. With the money furnished him he bought about twelve hundred and headed them over the open range extending for hundreds of miles in every direction, that being in the days when the grass was free and there were no fences to limit the range cattle industry. He afterward sold his herd to G. W. Bryson, delivering them at the line of the Indian Territory, about one hundred and fifty miles to the north.

D. F. Clegg

profits in this transaction enabled him to start in cattle business on his own account and he operated extensively in west Texas and Oklahoma, and for many years now has been one of the leading cattle men of Texas. When he first engaged in the business he could buy young stock at from six to seven dollars a head, and now similar stock brings from thirty to fifty dollars a head. Mr. Clegg has always been a Democrat, but lives in a tariff which will equalize conditions at home and abroad, and is of the opinion that the farmers and stock raisers should be protected in exactly the same way that manufacturers are and have been protected for many years. By a proper imposition of the tariff the conditions of production would be stimulated and encouraged, and in his opinion it is more important to stimulate production than to pay so much attention to the consumer, who is bound to benefit from the increase in production. Fraternally Mr. Clegg is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the San Angelo Club. His church preference is the Methodist.

In 1889 Mr. Clegg married his first wife, and in 1905 married Mrs. Charles Coppinger, of Fort Worth. Mrs. Coppinger was one of the large cattle men of western Texas, and his son Walter is now in business with Mr. Clegg and has charge of the ranch. There were three children born to Mr. Clegg by his first marriage, one son, Giles Connell, the one living, is attending the Castle School in Lebanon, Tennessee. Mr. Clegg's mother was born in America, and her family has many connections with the old frontier stock in Tennessee. She is still living, at the age of eighty-three, and her home is at Carlsbad.

ALBERT BASCOMB COX, M. D. A physician with a fine practice, and a citizen who stands high in his social community, Dr. Cox has spent about thirty years in practice in Fannin county near or in Ladonia, and is one of the oldest members of his profession in this vicinity. Albert Bascomb Cox was born August 13, 1857, and is the son of Charnee Lee Cox, who brought his family to Texas in 1849 from Perry county, Missouri. The family story goes back to the Atlantic colony. Grandfather Samuel Cox was born in North Carolina in 1780 and died in Texas, February 13, 1862. He was a farmer, a Methodist in religion, and belonged to the Scotch-Irish stock which did so much in the early settlement and contributed such important elements in the social and economic life of the Carolinas. The three children of Samuel Cox and wife were George, who died in North Carolina; Jane, who married George Blunt, and Charnee, father of Dr. Cox.

Charnee Cox was born in Mecklinburg county, North Carolina, March 2, 1817, received an elementary education in the primitive country schools of his native locality, and spent all his life as a farmer. During his childhood he moved to Missouri with his father and other members of the family, and then in 1849 collected his possessions and the family and brought them to Texas by wagon, settling one mile west of Ladonia. During the latter part of the Civil war he served in the state militia, and was under the command of General Magruder. In business he was known as a farmer, raising grain and stock, and was highly esteemed in his locality. Although he wore the uniform of the Confederate soldier he was opposed to secession at the beginning of the struggle and subsequently voted the Republican ticket during his remaining years. He was a member of the official board of the Methodist church. His mind was of an inquiring turn, and his intellectual curiosity caused him to be more than usually well posted in current affairs, and he had the ability to express his thoughts in public address. He married Susanna Abernathy, who was born August 11, 1824, and died in Texas, May 16, 1883. She was a daughter of Aaron Abernathy of Missouri, but originally of the family being from North Carolina. The children of Charnee Cox and wife were: Amanda J., who married James F. Hawkins and died in Texas, May 20, 1875, leaving three children; Eli, born July 21, 1848, and who died in Texas without children; Sarah E., born August 29, 1852, who married W. O. Glascock, and died in Texas, November 23, 1880; Albert Bascomb; John Bell, born August 10, 1861, and died in Fannin county, June 7, 1864.

Dr. Cox as a boy attended the Ladonia high school and when twenty years of age took up the study of medicine with Dr. A. B. King, an old and esteemed practitioner in this locality. He subsequently took a course of lectures in the old McDowell Medical College at St. Louis, where he was graduated in 1882. It was the practice in those days to require of the medical graduates a thesis on a selected subject, and Dr. Cox prepared such an article on the subject of cholera infantum. After graduating he located near Ladonia, and soon acquired an extended country practice, limiting his work entirely to patients who lived throughout the country communities. He continued in that way until 1898, when he moved his office to Ladonia. In 1892 he took post-graduate work in the New Orleans Polyclinic, and took a similar course in the Washington University at St. Louis later. Dr. Cox is a member of the State, the North Texas, and the County Medical Societies.

In business he is only less well known than in medicine. He was one of the promoters of the First National Bank of Ladonia, and was its vice president and director for several years. He assisted in the organization of the Ladonia National Bank, of which he was vice president and director until it was consolidated with the First National Bank. The Ladonia Light & Water Company numbered him among its stockholders, and he was a member and stockholder in the Pecan Gap Cotton Oil Company. He has for many years been interested in practical agriculture, and he now owns two fine farms, one being located at Silver City and this having been developed largely under the doctor's direct supervision. He is the owner of a couple of sections of land in Reeves county in the Toyah Valley, one of the garden spots of western Texas. The doctor has one of the most attractive and comfortable homes of Ladonia.

He is interested in politics to the extent of casting his vote for the man he thinks best equipped for the position, and has taken some part in local affairs himself. He has served as a member of the Ladonia council and has always been ready to offer his co-operation and assistance in any other form for the betterment of his community. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and has been past chancellor of the Ladonia Lodge.

On January 22, 1878, Dr. Cox married, at Ladonia, Miss Mollie Hickman, a daughter of Howard and Mary Hickman, formerly from Pulaski, Tennessee. The Hickman family came to Texas about 1876, and the children were as follows: Mattie, who married G. W. Blunt; Mrs. Cox; Henrietta, wife of Harry Hedges; and Samuel Hickman of San Saba County, Texas. Mrs. Hickman first married John Young, and had one son, William L. Young, now a resident of Savoy, Texas. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Cox are mentioned as follows: Pearl, wife of L. T. Chesney of Fort Worth, and they have one son, Bascomb Newton; Eli R., who married Maggie Webb and resides in Ladonia, being the parents of two children, Edna Verne and Albert Bob; Laura Willie Verne, married Luther P. Keane, who is one of the State Bank examiners of Texas and resides in Ladonia.

CHAS. B. HAYNIE, secretary of the Moody Land Co., Canadian, Texas, is a native son of the Lone Star state. He was born in Llano county, Texas, December 27, 1867, and on the paternal side is descended from stalwart Scotch-Irish ancestry. William Haynie, his father, a Tennessean by birth, came to Texas in 1854 and settled in Llano or Burnet county. In this locality he engaged in merchandising, farming and stock raising, and in his various operations met with success and accumulated a competency. His ability and worth as a representative, public-spirited citizen were soon recognized and he was chosen to fill positions of trust and responsibility. He served as Treasurer of Burnet county, and he also filled other public offices, having been elected on the Democratic ticket, the ticket he has supported all his life. Religiously, he has long been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is now living, retired, surviving his wife, whose death occurred in Llano county, August 1, 1911, at the age of seventy years, a few months after they had celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Mrs. Haynie, before her marriage Miss Susan B. Reddick, was a native of Missouri, who came to Texas in 1853 with an older sister, their parents being deceased. In Burnet county she formed the acquaintance of Mr. William Haynie, and they were married April 27, 1861. Their happy union was blessed in the birth of seven children, four sons and three daughters, of whom Chas. B. was the third-born.

Chas. B. Haynie attended public school in Burnet county up to the age of fourteen years. From fourteen to sixteen he followed the range as a cowboy. Then he entered railroad service as an employe of the Austin & N. W. R. R. Co., his position being that of a clerk. He continued in railroad and express service, with different companies, for a period of fifteen years. Later he accepted a position as bookkeeper for the Diamond Roller Mills at Taylor, Texas, and from Taylor removed to Higgins, where he became associated with the Higgins Mill & Elevator Co., and with the First National Bank, of which he was assistant cashier. In May, 1908, he came over into Hemphill county and settled at Canadian, as private secretary to Robert Moody, and has since been associated with him in that capacity. Also he is secretary of the Moody Land Company.

While Mr. Haynie has always voted the Democratic ticket, he has never been active in politics. He has, however, taken a deep interest in civic affairs, and at this writing is Mayor of Canadian, having been elected to this office April 1, 1913. For the past three years he has been a Justice of the Peace. He is an active member of the Commercial Club, and maintains fraternal relations with the W. O. W. and the A. F. and A. M. His work in Masonry includes the degrees of both lodge and chapter. In religious work also Mr. Haynie is active, being a steward in the Canadian M. E. Church South, and assistant superintendent of its Sunday school.

Mr. Haynie's family consists of wife and six children, four daughters and two sons, namely: Lucile, Marguerite and Grace (twins), Charles Sudduth, Ruth and Thomas Moody. Mrs. Haynie, formerly Miss Emma B. Sudduth, is a native of Kentucky and a daughter of J. Ed Sudduth. Her marriage to Mr. Haynie took place in Burnet county, March 4, 1901.

Mr. Haynie is representative of that class of prosperous citizens of this locality whose success has been achieved through personal endeavor and who are justly entitled to the high standing and many warm friendships they enjoy.

W. S. WALKER, M. D. The career of Dr. Walker during a little more than twenty years' residence at Granbury has been one of broad service to the community, both in a professional and in a civic capacity, and at the same time he has won place and the other rewards which are coveted by all men. He came to this state with a thorough equipment for the practice of medicine, and has never been content with present attainments, but is still a constant student, a close observer and as often as he can get away from his duties he takes special courses in the hospitals and colleges of the larger cities of the nation. Dr. Walker is one of the best known citizens of Hood county.

W. S. Walker was born July 26, 1865, in Dover, Tennessee, a son of William H. and Mary Ruth (McKinney) Walker, both of that state. The doctor is Scotch-Irish on his father's side, and grandfather Walker was a slaveholder before the Civil war, and a prominent planter in Alabama. William H. Walker before the war was engaged in mining, and entered the service of the Confederacy, but after the battle of Fort Donelson was discharged on account of ill health. There were several of his brothers also Confederate soldiers, but he lost sight of all of them and it is supposed that they lost their lives as sacrifice to the southern cause. Dr. Walker was one of a family of eight children, the third son. There were six boys and two girls, and both the daughters died several years ago.

Dr. Walker grew up in his native locality, and first attended the public schools of Dover, which is the county seat of Stewart county. From youth up he has made his own way, and after his attendance at the public schools he qualified for work as a teacher, and spent three years as teacher, studying medicine at the same time. He then entered the Louisville Medical College at Louisville, Kentucky, where he was graduated M. D. in 1890. After two years of practice at his home town of Dover, he went to New York in 1892 and took post-graduate work in the Polyclinic School of Medicine. In the same year he opened his office at Granbury, Texas, and in 1895 again interrupted his private practice in order to take a course at the New York Polyclinic on Thirty-fourth Street in New York City. His work at that time was a general course, and also a special course in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. He also studied and attended clinics at the Knapp's Eye, Ear, Nose & Throat Hospital, situated on Twelfth Street in New York City. His equipment for practice has been broadened by two special courses in the Chicago Polyclinic.

Dr. Walker arrived in Granbury and began practice on the first day of September, 1892, so that he has now been a resident of that city for twenty-one years. For several years he served as county health officer, and for a long time was local surgeon for the Frisco Railroad. Outside of his practice he has had little time for participation in business or in public affairs, but was a director and for several years has been interested in the Hood County State Bank after its organization.

As to politics, he takes a liberal view of national questions, and votes for the best man rather than for the party in local affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and his religious preference is for the Presbyterian church.

On November 1, 1895, Dr. Walker married Miss Eunice Earle Fitzhugh, a daughter of G. W. Fitzhugh, formerly of Tolar in Hood county, but now living in Fort Worth, where he is engaged in the real estate business. The doctor and wife are the parents of three children. The first two are twins, Ila and Lila, born September 30, 1905, and now in school. The third is Earl Marie Walker, born August 30, 1901.

Dr. Walker has owned considerable real estate in different sections of Texas, and from his experience and observation of the growth of Hood county and vicinity he has become an enthusiast as to the possibilities and advantages of this great section of Central Texas. It is his opinion that Hood county is not to be surpassed anywhere in the United States as a locality for climate and the health of its inhabitants. There is absolutely no malaria in the county, and with its altitude of from seven hundred and fifty to eight hundred feet above sea level the county is an excellent place for those suffering from asthma and weak lungs. Also the doctor says the presence of abundance of both surface and artesian water, the latter to be obtained at a depth of from fifty to three hundred feet, gives this region exceptional advantages as an agricultural country. All kinds of fruits and vegetables live in Hood county and it is likewise one of the best stock raising sections of the state.

nearness to available markets is an additional factor in the present and future prosperity of Hood county.

DR. THOMAS J. WATLINGTON, who lives retired on his farm two miles south of New Boston, Texas, is one of Hood county's highly respected pioneer citizens.

Dr. Watlington is a native of the "Turpentine" State. He was born near Guilford Court House, Guilford county, North Carolina, July 10, 1830, son of Jonathan B. and Dorothy C. (Rice) Watlington. In his native county he was reared and there, under the instructions of a private teacher, he began the study of medicine, which he later continued in Philadelphia, at the University of Pennsylvania and at Jefferson Medical College. He is a graduate of the last named institution with the class of 1857, his diploma bearing date of March 4, 1857. Immediately following the completion of his medical course, he returned to Guilford county and entered upon the practice of his profession, which he continued there until 1860. That year he moved to Louisiana and took up his residence in Catahoula parish. Before he had fully established himself in practice here, however, the civil war came on and he tendered his service to the Confederate army. He enlisted in the First Regiment of Louisiana Cavalry, which was known as Scott's Cavalry, and as a second lieutenant in Company K he went to the front. This cavalry joined Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston's army at Bowling Green, Kentucky, where Dr. Watlington was appointed assistant surgeon of the regiment, and in this capacity he served during the rest of the war.

After the war over, he returned to Louisiana, and was shortly afterward united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Walstein, a native of that State. Of the children that have come to bless their home, four are living, namely: Thomas J., S. Brackett, Mrs. Sallie Looby and Miss Annie Watlington.

Dr. Watlington removed to his present home in Bowie county, Texas, in 1866. At Old Boston, then the county seat, he practiced medicine, and he took a prominent part in the affairs of the county. For seven years he was County Physician, and he served as County Clerk for eight years. In these and other offices he rendered service to the public for a total of twenty-two years, longer than any other one man ever served the public in Bowie county. Of late years he has been retired from active life, living in ease and quiet on his farm, surrounded by old-time friends and acquaintances, and having the confidence and respect of all who know him.

SIDNEY O. JONES. With an assured position in the law, and a record of useful citizenship in his community, Sidney O. Jones has practiced law at Marlin, in Falls county, for the past ten years. Mr. Jones was admitted to the bar in Alabama, came to Texas more than twenty-five years ago, was identified with commercial pursuits for a number of years, but has regularly practiced law since 1895.

On September 11, 1856, Sidney O. Jones was born at Carrollton, Alabama. The family was originally from South Carolina, where Thomas B. Jones, the father, was born in the Union district in 1810. When he was a small boy he accompanied his parents to Carrollton, Pickens county, Alabama, grew up there, became a planter, and despite the ravages of the war enjoyed a comfortable prosperity until the close of his life in July, 1885. Thomas B. Jones married Clementine McLendon, who was born in Huntsville, Alabama, in 1820 and died in 1883. Their eight children were named John T., Mary, Rufus H., Savannah, James K. P., Alfred V., Sidney O., and Alice. John, the oldest child, was a graduate of the University of Virginia, and at the beginning of the civil war enlisted in the Fifth Alabama Regiment of Infantry and was killed in service. Mary married R. B. McCafferty, who died in 1910, and she now lives in Pickens county, Alabama. Rufus H. is deceased, as also are Savannah and James K. P. Alfred V., who died in 1911, married Myrtle Jones. The daughter Alice died in 1882, and was the wife of N. P. Wilson.

Sidney O. Jones received his education in the University of Alabama, where he was a student for four years and was also trained in military art and practice as a cadet in that institution. His studies in law were pursued in the offices of Col. M. L. Stansell, a prominent Alabama lawyer, and he was admitted to the bar in Alabama at an early age. In 1887 Mr. Jones moved to Texas, locating at Houston, followed mercantile lines as a clerk and salesman until 1895, and then began the practice of law at Cameron, which was his home until 1903. Since then Mr. Jones has enjoyed increasing prestige and success as a lawyer at Marlin, and has a general practice both in office and in the courts, and in the civil and criminal branches. For one term, with election in 1907, he served as city attorney of Marlin, and gives regular support to the dominant political party in the state. His church is the Baptist. Mr. Jones, besides his ability as a lawyer, is known not only among his close friends but among many readers in the state for his literary achievements, and many of the poems which have come from his facile pen have been published in Texas newspapers and have been read with pleasure by hundreds who do not know the author other than by name. Mr. Jones has a pleasant home, finds his greatest pleasure within the domestic circle, and for outdoor recreation occasionally takes a fishing trip.

Mr. Jones was married at Houston, Texas, on October 31, 1894, to Miss Cora Darnell, whose father, John R. Darnell, is a general contractor and builder at Houston.

JOSEPH SPENCE, JR. For many years Joseph Spence, Jr., has lived and worked in San Angelo, Texas, and he is one of the most respected men in the city, not only on account of his professional ability but also for his strong character. As a lawyer, he has proved an able pleader as well as a keen student of the intricacies of his craft, and his experience as a practical business man has also been of advantage to him in his profession. Mr. Spence has always taken a leading part in civic affairs being keenly interested in seeing the improvement of San Angelo carried out along both economic and social lines.

Joseph Spence, Jr., was born on the 2nd of January, 1858, at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, the son of Joseph Spence and Mrs. W. D. Spence. His father was of Irish descent while his mother's ancestors came to this country from Holland. Joseph Spence, Sr., lived in Tennessee until 1859 when he came to Texas, locating in Austin where he was Commissioner of the General Land Office of Texas. He held this office from 1866 to 1868. He was therefore one of the early settlers in the state and became widely known throughout the state before his death which occurred in 1894. His wife died in 1907.

Joseph Spence, Jr., was the eldest of the six children born to his father and mother. He received his education in private schools in Texas, and when quite a youngster he decided to study law. He later, therefore, became a student in the law offices of the firm of Walton, Greene and Hill of Austin. He was admitted to the bar in 1880, and in the following year he came to San Angelo where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession.

Mr. Spence was elected county judge of Tom Greene county shortly after coming to San Angelo in 1881 and he served on the bench until 1884. He was one of the men who organized the San Angelo Bank and Trust Company in 1907, and he has been a director of that institution up to this time.

In the political world Judge Spence has always been a member of the Democratic party. He is a member of the Masonic order and belongs to the Chapter of that order. In religious matters he is a member of the Southern Presbyterian church, and is an elder of this church.

On the 15th of January, 1885, Joseph Spence was married to Miss Fannie Lee Metcalfe, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Metcalfe of Tennessee, both of whom are now dead. Mr. and Mrs. Spence have five children, four daughters and one son, as follows: Mrs. Margaret Harvin, of San Angelo, Mary Betal Spence, Stella Spence, Charlotte Spence and Harry Metcalfe Spence.

W. D. PATTON, M. D. In point of service Dr. Patton is one of the old physicians of western Texas, where he has practiced upwards of twenty years, and in that time has witnessed much of the most important developments in this portion of the state. For a number of years he has practiced at Amarillo, and enjoys a practice there hardly second to that of any other physician in the city.

Dr. W. D. Patton was born at Bentonville, Arkansas, December 29, 1870, the only son of W. J. and A. J. (Neal) Patton. His father was born in West Virginia, and came to Arkansas during the Civil war. He entered the service of the Confederate army under General Price, and held the rank of colonel. In 1883 he moved to Texas, locating in Stevens county, and has been a stock farmer and merchant throughout most of his career. He is now living in Amarillo at the age of seventy-seven. The mother was born in Missouri, was a girl when the family moved to Arkansas, and her father who was a contractor erected the first brick house in Washington county, Arkansas. Mrs. Patton was born in 1836 and died at Canyon City, Texas, in 1902.

Dr. Patton had a common school education when a boy, acquired partly in Arkansas and partly in Texas. He later took up preparation for his profession, attending lectures at Keokuk, Iowa, and in 1891 graduated from medical college at Kansas City. He began his practice at Wayland in Stevens county, where he remained three years, and then went out into northwest Texas to Cottle county. After three years in Cottle county, he established his practice at Canyon city in Randall county, which was the scene of his professional work for four years, after which he came to Amarillo, where he has now been established in general practice for about eleven years. For the past two years he has been associated with Dr. R. D. Gist, and the two have an excellent clientage in the city and surrounding country. Dr. Patton is a member of the County and State Medical Societies, and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Patton is one of the prominent Masons of northwest Texas, and is affiliated with both the York and Scottish Rite, having commandery degrees in the former and having taken thirty-two degrees of the Scottish Rite, and being a member of the Dallas Consistory. He is also a Shriner, and has filled all the chairs in his local Lodge of Odd Fellows. From 1893 to 1896 Dr. Patton was city and county health officer in Potter county. He is a Democrat in politics and a member of the Baptist church.

On July 4, 1893, at Seymour, Texas, he married Miss Luna F. Lee, a daughter of C. A. and Mrs. P. C. Lee, this family being related to the family of General Robert E. Lee. The four children of Dr. Patton and wife are named as follows: William Jewell, born at Wayland in August, 1894, and now attending Staunton Military Academy at Staunton, Va.; Ruby, born at Paducah, Texas, in February, 1896, and now attending Baylor College, Belton, Texas; Pearl, born in Canyon City, January 7, 1900, and in the grade schools of Amarillo; Roy, born at Canyon City in October, 1901, died March 31, 1913.

LYNCH DAVIDSON. Now president of the Continental Lumber Company, whose main offices are in the Carter Building at Houston, Mr. Davidson began his career on a Limestone county farm, had only a common school education, became connected with the lumber industry when only fourteen years of age, and now at the age of forty is at the head of one of the largest lumber producing corporations of Texas and has a prominent position in financial and other business affairs of Houston.

Lynch Davidson was born at Cotile, Rapides Parish, Louisiana, January 3, 1873, a son of Neil and Laura (Lynch) Davidson. The parents were both natives of Louisiana, where the father was a planter. In 1874 he moved to Texas and became one of the pioneer farmers in the vicinity of Groesbeck, Limestone county. He died there in 1878. During the Civil war he was a member of a Louisiana Regiment, and as a Confederate soldier served from the beginning to the end of that struggle. The mother is still living.

Reared on the home farm in Limestone county, and educated in the Groesbeck public schools, Lynch Davidson at the age of fourteen entered the employ of the Trinity County Lumber Company and in a few years had acquired a knowledge of the lumber industry in practically every detail from the operations in the woods to the disposal of the finished product. Mr. Davidson is as familiar with the work in the lumber camp and at the mill as he is with the executive offices, and it is this broad knowledge and a thorough capacity for every branch of the business that has brought him into such prominence as a lumberman. After leaving the Trinity County Lumber Company, he was also connected with the Cameron & Company, the Jones Lumber Company, and with the Emporia Lumber Company.

Mr. Davidson in 1902 organized the Continental Lumber Company, of which he is president and general manager. He subsequently organized the Benford Lumber Company, and this concern operates two mills in Polk County, with a daily capacity of 125,000 feet, and manufacture large quantities of yellow pine lumber. Mr. Davidson is vice president of the Orange County Lumber Company of Texla, vice president of the Southland Lumber Company of Houston, and is a director of the Lumberman's National Bank of Houston, and a director of the Great Southern Life Insurance Company, whose offices are in Houston and which is specifically a Houston corporation.

Mr. Davidson has numerous connections with civic and social affairs, is a Democrat in politics, and has membership in the Thalian Club of Houston, the Houston Golf Club, the Houston Country Club, the Order of Elks at Houston and the Lumbermen's organization known as the Hoo Hoos.

In 1897, Mr. Davidson married Miss Katie Calvert of San Antonio, Texas. Their three children are Marion, Lois and Katie Lynch Davidson. The Davidson home in Houston is at 1010 Hadley Avenue.

WILLIAM S. KELLY. Among those old pioneers who have seen history in the making in West Texas and who have themselves had a share in it, none has had a more interesting life than William S. Kelly. Mr. Kelly, now a prosperous lumberman, came to this section of Texas in 1871 and has lived here ever since, therefore he has had the opportunity to play an active part in the growth of this country. His own success has come largely through being able to see opportunities and having the courage to venture even though the outcome be doubtful. He has always taken a keen interest in the development and upbuilding of this part of the state and has had an important share in advancing the cause of civilization in this section.

William S. Kelly was born in Milton, Autauga county, Alabama, on the 27th of August, 1847. His father, John S. Kelly, was a native of Ireland, but he came to America and settled in Alabama early in life. His mother, Martha Kelly, was of Scotch ancestry. John S. Kelly was an architect and a contractor and builder. He lived for several years at Milton and then removed to Burns-

Frank Kell

Alabama, where he continued in the contracting business up to the time of his death, in 1855. His widow died until 1901, and her death occurred at the home of her son in San Angelo, with whom she was living.

There were four children in the Kelly family, William Kelly being the only boy and the second in age in the family. He received his education in the schools of Huntsville, Alabama, but the public schools of that day were primitive and the education which Mr. Kelly received was limited. In 1861, just at the beginning of the Civil war, William Kelly, then a boy of fourteen and young to go into the army, sought and found employment in carrying the mail. He carried the mail from Huntsville and Sandtown to the postoffices of Mulberry, Cotton and Autaugaville, Alabama. The trip covered a distance of twenty-five miles, and he made the journey every two days, traveling on horseback. He was carrying the mail over this route at the time of the secession of Alabama, and for three months after this event he continued to carry the mail, when the men who owned the route sold out and Mr. Kelly sought work elsewhere. He now found employment in Greensboro, Alabama, continuing in the mail service, as carrier between Greensboro and Linden, Alabama. In 1863 he was assistant of W. C. Taylor, who at that time held the contract for the mail service in western Alabama. He continued in this work until the close of the war, and he held his commission under John H. Ragin, Postmaster General. Mr. Kelly, like every one else in this section, suffered from the ravages of the war, and after its close he continued in the mail service, under Mr. Taylor, until 1867. In the latter year Mr. Kelly accepted a position with the Southern Express Company, in Selma, Alabama. He was engaged in office work and as an express messenger on the road until 1868, when he received the appointment of postmaster at Greensboro, Alabama. This was during the administration of Andrew Johnson, but he resigned after the election of General Grant to the presidency. He then went to farming, following this occupation for about two years. In 1869 he left the farm and returned to the employment of the Southern Express Company, as messenger.

It was two years later, in 1871, that Mr. Kelly came to Texas, and located at the old county seat of Tom Green county, Ben Fisklin. Here he was in the service of the El Paso Mail Company, which had the contracts for the mail service of western Texas. Colonel F. C. Taylor had charge of this mail business after the death of Major Fisklin. Mr. Kelly continued in this work up to 1873, when he went into the freight business. He hauled freight with mule teams a distance of two hundred and twenty miles from Fort Concho, Texas, to San Antonio, for which he received $1.50 to $2.00 a hundredweight. This journey made his mail routes back in Alabama seem very small by contrast, though in his boyhood days the miles seemed endless. He made a trip with his freight wagons about once a month and in 1874 he took the government contract for the handling of the wood and hay from Fort McKavitt and Fort Concho. It was in 1874, also, that he was appointed a member of the board to receive the votes of Tom Green county, which was formed on January 5, 1875. He continued contracting for the government for several years, but in 1877 he moved from Ben Fisklin to Sherwood, Texas. He had built the first house in the town of Ben Fisklin and during his residence in the town had been prominent in local affairs. Near Sherwood he went to farming and raising stock, but farming never suited him and in 1883 he sold his ranch and moved to San Angelo. Here he went into the lumber business, in which he continued until 1888, when he sold his plant to William Cameron and Company. He became their manager and until 1904 was known as one of the best lumbermen in this section. They sold their business in the latter year and Mr. Kelly again turned his attention to ranching. In April, 1908, he again entered the lumber business in San Angelo and he has continued in this business up to the present time. He is very successful in this field and is accounted one of the men of real worth in the town.

Mr. Kelly has held many important public offices, the first being county commissioner of Precinct No. 3, to which post he was elected in 1879. It was while he was commissioner that the courthouse was built in Ben Fisklin. He was alderman of the city of San Angelo for two years and was afterwards elected commissioner of Angelo precinct of district No. 1 of San Angelo.

Mr. Kelly has been a director and the vice president of the First National Bank since 1887. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party, and has always been active. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is a deacon and a steward in this church.

Mr. Kelly has been twice married. His first marriage took place on the 8th of October, 1868, when he was married to Miss Lou A. Rasser, a daughter of Colonel E. L. Rasser and Jane Rasser of Greensboro, Alabama. Colonel Rasser was a prominent attorney and well-known citizen of that place. Three children were born to this union, only one of whom is living, Charles R. Kelly, who is married and is living in San Angelo, being engaged in the transfer business.

The second marriage of Mr. Kelly was to Miss Mary Van Court, of Tom Green county, Texas. She is a daughter of Alexander Van Court, who was a rancher in this county and died in 1879. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kelly, all of whom are living. Two are married, namely, Grace, who married T. M. Herring, the assistant postmaster of San Angelo, and Van C. Kelly, who married Miss Lucile Blake, of San Angelo, and is now engaged in the lumber business with his father. The other children are W. S. Jr., Catherine, Marie, Benjamin, Blakeney, Samuel and the baby, May M. Kelly.

FRANK KELL. It would be difficult to find a citizen whose business life has been more intimately associated with the growth and development of the grain and milling business in Texas than Frank Kell, of Wichita Falls. His executive ability and practical sagacity have been most important elements in the success of this industry, and through it, in the marvelous growth of various other interests. But while Mr. Kell's business ventures have brought him most prominently before the public, he has been something more than a business man. His career has been dominated by a high sense of responsibility and has been devoted in large part to philanthropy. Diligent in business, he has mastered the art of accumulation by organized enterprise; but he has also been equally a master of the faculty of distributing the fruits of his labors for the welfare of his community and its people. Probably to no other man does the city of Wichita Falls owe so much, and for that reason, if for no other, a review of his career will prove interesting to many in a work of this nature.

Frank Kell is a native Texan, born in Bosque county, December 2, 1859, a son of F. M. and Sarah (Potter) Kell. His father, a native of Indiana, came to Texas in 1838 when a lad of six years with his father, the family settling first in Bell county and subsequently, in 1854, removing to Bosque county, where they became the second family of pioneers, the sister of Frank Kell being the first white child born there. F. M. Kell was reared in Bell county, grew to manhood on the frontier, where he engaged in numerous engagements with the hostile Indians, and at the outbreak of the war between the North and the South saw considerable service as a soldier. He subsequently became one of the successful stockmen of Bosque county, and still survives, making his home with his son at Wichita Falls. He was married in Bell county in 1854 to Sarah Potter, who was born in Spartanburg District, South Carolina, and came to Texas with her parents some time during the "forties." She died in 1871 at the age of forty-one years, having been the mother of three sons and five daughters.

The oldest of his parents' children, Frank Kell received his education in the public schools of Bosque county, which he left at an early age to embark upon a career of his own. He first came to Wichita county in 1888, and embarked in the grain and milling business without capital, and at a time when but little grain was grown in this state and there were few dealers of any experience. Commencing in this humble manner, he brought to the management of his enterprise all the force of his inherent powers and varied experience, and eventually, in June, 1897, came to Wichita Falls and established the Wichita Mill and Elevator Company, which has developed into the largest industry of its kind in the Southwest. As the years have passed he has become connected with ventures of extensive scope, among them the Kemp-Kell Building, the Kemp Mills of Vernon, the Orient Mills of Chillicothe, the Higgins Milling Company of Higgins, the Sherman Mill and Grain Company of Sherman, the Oklahoma Mill and Elevator Company of Oklahoma City, the largest mills in Oklahoma, with a capacity of 1,200 barrels, the Wichita Falls Route, of which he is vice-president, the Wichita Falls & Southern Railroad, in which he holds a like position, and the Southern Life Insurance Company. In company with J. A. Kemp, his associate in business, Mr. Kell built 430 miles of railroad and continued in active charge thereof until selling their interests, since which time Mr. Kell has been vice-president of this road. Prior to the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission and State Commission, Mr. Kell did more to shape and reform the storage in transit rules in Texas and the Southwest than any man in the state. From the very outset of his business career, Mr. Kell has kept in close touch with every department of the industries of whose perfection his own establishment has been so high an exponent. No detail of his great business has been too infinitesimal to command his attention, and his opinion is accepted by his brethren of the trade as final. While he has been identified with the city's development from an early date and has been more than once offered political preferment, he has chosen to remain in the walks of private life, where he could most readily gratify his kindly and generous impulses. However, he has always supported Democratic principles and candidates. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and has proved the breadth of his sympathy with every movement looking toward the possible elevation of humanity by liberal contributions.

While still a resident of Bosque county, Texas, in December, 1885, Mr. Kell was united in marriage with Miss Lula Kemp, a review of whose parents' lives may be found in the sketch of J. A. Kemp, elsewhere in this volume. Like her husband, Mrs. Kell's charities are liberal and continuous, and her ready wit, her kindly disposition and genial manners have attracted to her a circle of friends which mere social prominence could not acquire. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kell: Sadie, a graduate of the State University at Austin, and now the wife of O. C. Bullington, a prominent attorney of Wichita Falls; Willie May, a graduate of the Wichita Falls High School and the State University; Carrie, a graduate of the Wichita Falls High School, and now attending a private school at Sweetbrier, Virginia; Bessie, also a student there; Joseph A., who is attending the Dallas schools; and Sybil and Mary Josephine, attending the Wichita Falls schools.

BENJAMIN F. ROBERTS. A veteran merchant and business man of west Texas, Mr. Roberts lived in Sterling county for the past twenty-seven years. He has been an important business factor in this county and adjacent sections of the state and has witnessed practically all the development from the time this was a frontier country and a cattle range to the present time.

Of Scotch-Irish ancestry, Benjamin F. Roberts was born at Waxahachie, in Ellis county, Texas, April 20, 1862. His parents were W. H. and Susan A. Roberts, who came from South Carolina to Texas about 1858, located in Ellis county. The father, in South Carolina, had followed his trade as a millwright, and continued as a mechanic after moving to Texas. When the war came on he enlisted in the Cavalry, and served until the final surrender of the Southern forces. After the war he moved out to Coleman county, in 1875, Coleman county then being on the extreme western frontier and many miles from railroads. He engaged in the stock business until about 1892, and then sold out and retired. He made his home thereafter among his children and died in 1905 while visiting his daughter, Mrs. W. E. Fisher, at Coleman. There were seven children in the family, three daughters and four sons, and Benjamin F. is the oldest son now living.

As his home was in Coleman county from the age of thirteen, he had practically no opportunity to attend public schools and received such training as he could from private institutions. Later he was a student in the commercial and literary institute at Thorp Springs in Hood county. He began his practical career as a bookkeeper and in 1884 became identified with the live stock industry in Coleman county. He became a citizen of Sterling in 1886 and has been identified with that locality ever since, although much of his activity as a stockman has been in Sterling county. In 1903 he sold out his ranch and about that time engaged in the general merchandise business at Sterling City. He now has a large store and a very prosperous trade. When he first located in Sterling City there was only one store between that place and San Angelo. The postoffice was the principal institution of the village and in the country round about were a few scattering stock ranches and practically no farming whatever. At the present time Sterling City comprises a thriving town of two general stores, two general grocery houses, a hardware store, two good banks with excellent brick buildings, and a fine courthouse built at a cost of twenty-three thousand dollars and constructed of stone. There is a good stone school building, and two drug stores, with a miscellaneous assortment of buildings and shops. The population of Sterling City is now about seven hundred.

Mr. Roberts is a director of the First National Bank and one of the most influential men in this vicinity. He is a Democrat, and is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Woodmen of the World. His church is the Baptist.

On January 28, 1885, Mr. Roberts married Miss Fannie Crawford of Glenceo, Coleman county. Her parents were R. H. and Mahala Crawford of Coleman county, her father having been a farmer and merchant. He went through the war as a Confederate soldier. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have five children. W. H. Roberts, the oldest, is married and lives at Tucumcari, New Mexico. Mrs. Cora Cole lives in San Angelo, and the other children are Miss Benny Bell, Charles and Merle Roberts.

FRANK CAMPBELL. Frank Campbell is a business man of Bonham, but is particularly known for his enterprise as a farmer and planter and has built up and managed a splendid estate, largely comprising the lands of the old Jouett family, with which he is connected by marriage. The Jouett family was established in Fannin county before the county boundaries were defined and when Texas was still a Republic.

Frank Campbell was born in Washington county, Virginia, in 1871. His father, Dr. Edward Campbell, who spent the sixty years of his life in the same county, was a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, was an active participant in the Confederate war as a surgeon in the army of Northern Virginia under the command of General Jackson, and remained until the cause of the South came to its final trial at Appomattox. A member of the affluent class of prodional and planter citizens of ante-bellum Virginia, Campbell owned land and negroes and spent his life early in the service of his community until death, in 1877, when sixty years of age. Dr. Campbell's forefathers were pure Scotch, and the earliest American ancestor came to Virginia when it was an English colony.

Dr. Campbell married Ellen S. White, who died July, 1912, in the old community where she had lived her children. The children were: Daniel Trigg Bonham, Texas; Margaret, who married Colonel Mansans and lives in Columbia, South Carolina; Bessie, who married H. R. Lenoir of Knoxville, Tennessee; Alice, who became Mrs. E. E. Hundley of Farmville, Virginia; W. W., who makes his home at Shreveport, Louisiana; Frank; P. W., an attorney at Abingdon, Virginia; and Dr. Malcolm of Atlanta, Georgia.

After a student career at Abingdon and in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, Frank Campbell entered business as a merchant's clerk at Abingdon. A few years later he went to the coal fields of Wise county, Virginia, and as superintendent of the Swansen Oil and Coke Company, a Virginia concern, was identified with the pioneer development of the coal deposits in that vicinity. At the end of five years as a coal operator, Mr. Campbell left Virginia and came to Texas, where at once identified himself with farming and with the development of a large scope of country on Red River included in the Jouett estate. In October, 1896, Mr. Campbell married Miss Sarah E. Jouett, only child of Captain J. T. R. Jouett and a granddaughter of Judge John C. Jouett.

The Jouetts, originally from Tennessee, were founded in Texas by the late Judge Jouett, who earned the official title as the first county judge of Fannin county. He was a native of Tennessee, but came to Texas after staying in Arkansas. His settlement was at Ragsdale, on Red River. His chief characteristic was the acquisition of land. He patented many tracts in Fannin county and other portions of northern Texas, and at his death many thousands of acres were upon the records in his name. The era of his life as a factor among men was devoted to the handling of live stock in Texas, but he was hardly less prominent as a citizen. Under the authority of the Republic of Texas he was designated chief justice of the first county board of commissioners in Fannin county. The congress of the Republic designated Jacob Black's residence on Red River in Fannin county as the place of holding the first session of the commissioner's court, and it opened April 9, 1838, with chief justice Jouett presiding. The associate justices present were James O'Neal, Joseph Swagerty and Thomas Lindsey. Some of the work done by this court included the appointment of W. R. Baker, John Stephens, Sr. and W. R. Coreathus and Andrew Thomas to create a permanent seat of justice for the county, which committee reported to the court the first Monday of June of that year. At the first meeting of the court it proceeded to levy taxes on all property and to fix the amount of license for certain privileges. All negroes, horses and mules were taxed at one-half of one per cent valorem. On the same day Robert B. Fowler, Thomas Kennedy and M. Gilbert were fined $25.00 each for non-attendance as members of the county court.

Judge Jouett's two children were: Mrs. Sallie Lightfoot, wife of Cole Lightfoot of Paris, Texas, and J. T. R. Jouett, a stockman, farmer and citizen.

Captain J. T. R. Jouett was born at Ragsdale on Red River. While pursuing a college course in Lebanon, Tennessee, the war broke out between the states, and he lost no time in returning to Texas and joining the Confederate army. He went out with the commission as a first lieutenant, and succeeded Captain Bradford in command when the latter was killed at the battle of Brimth. He served in the army of the Tennessee, was twice wounded, and remained on duty until the surrender of Lee's army. The war over, he resumed civil pursuits as a stockman upon his vast estate on Red River, in the atmosphere where his childhood had been spent. His chief delight was a fine horse, and he encouraged the breeding and training of such animals. It was largely through his efforts that the Fannin county race track at Bonham was built, one of the best training grounds in the state and now owned by Mr. Foote, the well-known Dallas horseman. For years he was an active member of the Fannin County Fair Association, and served at one time as its president. However, he left a large acreage at his death. His personal sacrifices in the army made Captain Jouett display much bitterness and partisanship during the remainder of his life. He declined to take the oath of allegiance to his country at the close of the war, and his attitude when he died was that of an unreconstructed Confederate. One of his chief pleasures was in the reunions with his comrades, and his presence was regularly noted at the national encampment. It was characteristic of him that he opposed the plan for the reunion of the Blue and the Gray, and his reason was that "he could not fight a man four years and then make friends with him."

Captain Jouett's first wife was Miss Mary Sims, who died without living children. His second wife was Miss Rebecca Neeley. Of their three children, Sarah Elizabeth, now Mrs. Campbell, was the only one to reach maturity, and she was born in 1872. Captain Jouett, who died December 4, 1908, was a member of the Christian church, and his fraternal connections were with the Knights of Pythias and the Knights of Honor.

On coming to Fannin county Frank Campbell located on the Jouett estate, and remained a resident in the country until 1906, when he moved to Bonham for the educational advantages for his growing family. His enterprise as a farmer resulted in the bringing of some fifteen hundred acres of land under cultivation, and he provided homes for his tenants and in many ways made his efforts effective in the development of a country which hitherto had been largely left to nature's tending. The twenty-seven families that find homes on his estate have an aggregate population of about one hundred and thirty, and their labor works and gathers the crops from twenty-four hundred acres of land. For several years of his residence in Tulip Bend, Mr. Campbell was a merchant as well as a farmer and gin man, serving chiefly the colony of tenants upon his lands, his store being located at Ragsdale, at which point one body of his land lies.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have had three children: Jouett, Ellen and Malcolm. Mr. Campbell affiliates with the Bonham Blue Lodge and Chapter of Masons and is a Knights Templar.

JOHN SPENCER WESTBROOK. Among the prominent men of Laredo, Texas, may be mentioned John Spencer Westbrook, one of the most successful onion growers in this section. The development of this industry, which is Laredo's greatest asset, is typical of the way in which specializing had made farming so very profitable. Mr. Westbrook is one of the most progressive and scientific farmers in this region, and he has done much for the industry. In addition to his business he has also taken a prominent part in the public life of Laredo, and is one of the men most active in the upbuilding of the city.

Mr. Westbrook was born in Dallas county, Alabama, in 1863. His father, James H. Westbrook, was a native of South Carolina, but spent practically all his life in the state of Alabama. He married Mary Spencer Pegus, a native of Virginia and a member of that famous Pegus family which has played such an important part in the history of that state. Of French Huguenot extraction, in the early days of the colony the brilliant Pegus men were leaders, and many of them took part in the Revolutionary war. Richmond Pegus, the father of Mrs. Westbrook, commanded a company of volunteers in Taylor's invasion of Mexico in 1845, in the Florida Indian war, and he brought back with him the scalps of two Indians who had killed some of his people. Other members of the family were prominent in the Civil war, fighting in defense of the Confederacy.

John Spencer Westbrook came to Texas in 1887, locating at Waco, where he lived until 1896, when he came to Laredo. Here he has since made his home, and here he became one of the pioneer onion growers in the district, while for several years he has been a recognized authority in this phase of truck farming. He owns a fine onion farm in North Laredo, adjoining the city proper, and is also the owner of a half interest in another farm in the same vicinity. Each year he makes large shipments of onions to the northern and eastern markets.

Mr. Westbrook is a member of the Board of Aldermen of the city of Laredo, and is at present mayor pro tempore of the city. He is a prominent member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being a member of the Blue Lodge and a past eminent commander of the Commandery. He is, in fact, a citizen of the progressive, honorable type, whom any city would be proud to claim.

In Selma, Alabama, in 1883, he was married to Miss Emma Smedley, a native of Alabama, and they have five children. The eldest, Raymond, is the wife of G. R. Weber, and the others are Mary Belle, Samuel A., Lillian A. and Emmie T. Westbrook.

WILLIAM EDWARD GEE, till recently mayor of the metropolis of the Panhandle, Amarillo, is a Kentuckian who came into this part of Texas as a pioneer more than twenty years ago, has engaged in teaching school for about ten years and since then has been one of the prominent and best known lawyers of Amarillo.

The youngest of six children born to William J. and Mary Ann (Monroe) Gee, Mr. Gee was born in Monroe county, Kentucky, October 12, 1872. The Gee family has been established in America for a number of generations. Three brothers of the name many years ago came from England, locating in Virginia. Grandfather J. B. Gee came with his parents when a boy from Virginia, across the mountains to Monroe county, Kentucky, where the family were among the earlier settlers. On the maternal side the ancestry is Scotch, and was first settled in Virginia, and the great-grandfather of Mr. Gee came to Cumberland county, Kentucky, when a child, the Monroes having located there early in the nineteenth century. William J. Gee, the father, was born in Monroe county, Kentucky, followed farming throughout his active career and died in his native county in January, 1885, when sixty-three years of age. He took an active part in religious, social and political affairs, though he never sought office for himself. He was a member of the Christian church, and a Democrat as a voter. During his later years, partial blindness interfered with his vocation and business, so that he was greatly reduced in financial circumstances. The mother was born in Cumberland county, Kentucky, and is now a resident in Monroe county at the age of eighty-one years. They were the parents of six children, and by a former marriage the father had five children.

William Edward Gee attained his early education in the public schools and in Gamaliel Academy, maintained in Southern Kentucky. Up to the time he was seventeen he lived on the home farm, and on leaving school at the age of nineteen came out to the Texas panhandle, to Willbarger county, where he arrived on the first of September, 1891. In that county he became assistant teacher in the public schools of Harrold, and continued in school work for a period of ten years, all of which was spent in the Panhandle county. During this time he served as superintendent of the city schools of Amarillo for two terms. While teaching he was energetically directing his attention to the law, and after a thorough course of reading was admitted to the bar of Texas in 1900. In 1901 he opened office and began practice at Amarillo in partnership with Mr. J. D. Hamlin, under the firm name of Hamlin & Gee. This firm existed until December, 1902, at which date Mr. Gee was appointed city attorney, and held that office until the spring of 1908. In the meantime he continued in private practice and a portion of the time was in partnership with Mr. F. P. Powell under the firm name of Powell & Gee. From 1908 to the present time he practiced alone and built up an excellent civil practice. In April, 1912, Mr. Gee was elected to the office of mayor, and as chief executive gave a very capable administration of this leading city of northwest Texas. He declined to become a candidate for reelection and is now practicing his profession, handling civil law exclusively.

Mr. Gee is a Democrat in politics, a very progressive man in civic affairs, and is a sincere worker for the public welfare. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having filled all the chairs in the local lodge, and belongs to the subordinate encampment and patriarch militant degrees of Odd Fellowship. He has membership in the county bar association and was a member of the first executive committee. As a church member he is an elder in the Christian denomination.

On Christmas Day of 1899, at Harrold, Texas, Mr. Gee married Miss Mattie Freeman, daughter of A. H. Freeman, and a native of Cannon county, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Gee, who have no children, reside in an attractive home of their own at 1408 Madison street.

BUFORD OTIS BROWN. A newspaper which has had a fine and vitalizing influence in its community is the Hale County Herald, at Plainview, and a publisher and editor who is a journalist from the ground up, and one of the new but prominent citizens in that section of the state, is Buford Otis Brown, who is a thoroughly experienced newspaper man, and one of the young college men whose training and experience makes them forceful and valuable factors in the development of the new country of west Texas.

Buford Otis Brown is a native of Texas, born in Montague, Montague county, January 28, 1882. His father, the late William Jonathan Brown, who died in Denton, Denton county, Texas, in 1909, at the age of sixty-five, was a native of Mississippi, and during the Civil war served in Shelby's Brigade. The maiden name of the mother was Fannie A. Dabney, who was born in Missouri and died in Montague, Texas, in 1888, at the age of forty-two.

Mr. Brown belongs to the class of self-made and self-trained business men. Early in life he acquired the art of stenography, and entered his independent career through that channel. For some time he was stenographer to the general freight agent of the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railroad at Fort Worth. He was secretary to the president, and afterward secretary to the dean of the University of Missouri, where he completed his education, working his way through college, and finishing four years' work in three years' time. He was graduated A. B. from the University of Missouri in 1908, and received his Bachelor's degree in journalism from the same institution in 1912. After leaving college Mr. Brown was secretary to the Agricultural Experiment Station at Tucson, Arizona, in 1909. He was secretary-treasurer of the Polytechnic College of Fort Worth, Texas, in 1910-11. During 1912 he was editor of the Daily Missourian at Columbia, Missouri. With a practical and technical equipment for his profession, he came to Texas in 1912, and acquired the ownership of the Hale county Herald at Plainview, of which he has since been editor and publisher.

In 1908 Mr. Brown served as second lieutenant of the Second Missouri National Guards. He is a Democrat in national politics, but independent in local affairs, and has the broad views of many young men in modern life, as to political and economic questions. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, and has membership the Dana Press Club and the Kappa Tau Alpha honorary fraternity at the University of Missouri. He is director of the Plainview Chamber of Commerce, and secretary of the Western Division, Colorado-to-Gulf, highway. His church is the Methodist Episcopal South.

NEWTON B. THOMASON. While the career of Newton Thomason has for many years been that of the quiet, austrious farmer and business man, he has lived on a whole a full and useful life; was a youthful soldier in the Confederacy; has accumulated much land; has developed the material resources of his section, and one of the most honored pioneer settlers in the community of Guy's Store, in Leon county, to which locality he came in 1870. His previous residence had been in Limestone county, where his family located just before the war as emigrants from DeKalb county, Alabama, where Newton B. Thomason was born March 27, 1843. His father was at the head of the little family party which left Alabama and by wagon crossed the intervening country to the Mississippi river at Helena, and finally stopped near Mexia, where their relatives, the Thomasons, lived.

Mr. Thomason's father was Col. Zachariah Thomason, a Tennesseean by birth, a farmer and trader, whose birth occurred near Woodbury, in Wilson county; was trained to the life of a farmer, and married Miss Matilda Hancock, daughter of Lewis Hancock, a slaveholding planter in Wilson county. Before the Indians were moved from Alabama beyond the Mississippi, Zachariah and Matilda Thomason settled near Valley Head in DeKalb county, where he became a justice of the peace and during the war against Mexico commissioned a captain of infantry in Col. Coffey's regiment, and was in the army of Gen. Scott. Subsequently Captain Thomason became a prominent figure in the Confederacy. As lieutenant-colonel of the Seventh Alabama Cavalry, he was in the command of General Joe Wheeler, was captured at Duck river in Tennessee, and was confined with other Confederate officers at Johnson's Island until the end of the war. From the beginning of the great struggle between the states he had been a strong secessionist, and was never reconciled to the reunion of the states. Following the war he resumed his residence in Limestone county and remained there until shortly before his death. His property interests in Tennessee and in Pontotoc county, Mississippi, caused him to return to those states for the purpose of converting his lands into cash, and he died while away and is buried near Coffeytown, Mississippi.

As an unreconstructed Confederate, Col. Thomason never voted after the war. He belonged to no church, and secured little education, was a man of firmness and obstinacy, and his practical business sense made him more than ordinarily successful. While in the Yankee prison at Johnson's Island he practiced penmanship and became something of an artist for a farmer with the pen. His wife died in Limestone county near Oletha during the '90s. Their children were: Martha Ann, now deceased, who married T. J. Slayton, a business man at Jacksonville, Texas; Daniel B., who was killed near Groesbeck and left a family; Charles M., who was a captain in the army of Stonewall Jackson, was on the scene in the memorable evening when the great Confederate general was shot by his own men and heard the volley which took that leader's life, returned to Texas after the war, became a farmer and merchant, and died at Guy's Store; John C., of Provincall, Louisiana, who served in the Nineteenth Texas Cavalry and spent his life as a farmer; Newton B.; and Wallace of Oletha. Newton B. Thomason received his schooling in the country in Alabama, and had not yet reached his majority when he left the farm in Texas for service in the Confederate army in 1862. His command was Company of the Nineteenth Texas Cavalry, commanded by Captain Beard and Colonel Nat M. Burford, both of Dallas. The regiment rendezvoused at Dallas, went to the front in Arkansas, was in Marmaduke's command during the raid on Cape Girardeau, Missouri, participated in a number of small engagements and skirmishes and its service was confined to the states of Missouri, Arkansas and Louisiana. In the spring of 1865 the regiment returned to Texas and was disbanded on the Brazos river in May, 1865, and Mr. Thomason reached home, never having been wounded or captured.

During the reconstruction era following the war his first work was as a wagoner, engaged in transporting goods from Navasota to Milliken and Bryan. With the capital made as a freighter in 1870 he came to Leon county, was in the saloon business a short time, and then began farming in a small way. For years stock forming the chief occupation of the early settlers in Leon county, and it is only in comparatively recent times that agriculture in the real sense of the word has been taken up by the early settlers. Mr. Thomason acquired some land at Guy's Store, a locality named for Captain Guy, a Kentuckian who settled there after the war, was a factor and something of a character in the community. In his steady and definite way Mr. Thomason went along from year to year, gathering up lands and putting them under cultivation, and in the time of open range had both cattle and hogs, but as the country settled up and the land was fenced in, his industry in that direction has been curtailed. A large number of acres have been brought under tillage by his management, houses have been erected for the habitation of his tenants and workers, and his own domicile is a two-story residence conspicuous among the buildings which form the hamlet at Guy's Store. Mr. Thomason has never been in public life, and has had as little to do with affairs as any man whose interest is that of a good citizen, and never sat on a jury but once in his life. He votes the Democratic ticket, and it is a noteworthy fact that he has never attended a Confederate reunion or given time to similar associations.

On April 19, 1876, Mr. Thomason married Miss Hassie, a daughter of Alexander Toole and Lizzie Burton Toole, both from Tuscaloosa county, Alabama. The children of this marriage are: Wallace Allison, a farmer of Leon county, who married Miss Ella Flemming and has a daughter Maud; Lizzie, the wife of John Rogers of Midway, Texas, and the mother of Lillian; Lou, who married James Rogers of Guy's Store and has a son Max; Lee, of the same locality, who married Hester Cannon and has a daughter Mary Nell; Fred a farmer of Leon county who has a son N. B. by his marriage to Ella Elliott; Roy, who is unmarried.

JOEL JEFFERSON HUNT. Postmaster at Klondike, Texas, also president of the First State Bank, and a large farmer of Delta county, Joel Jefferson Hunt was born near where the village of Klondike now stands, then in Hopkins county, but in 1870 when Delta county was organized this territory was placed in Delta county.

John Hunt, father of Joel Jefferson, was a young married man when he acquired the John Nidever Survey of three hundred and twenty acres of land, and in March, 1851, settled on it and was proceeding to lay the foundation of a home for his family when he was stricken down. That was on July 17, 1852, and his grave was the second one dug in the cemetery site which he had chosen for one of his neighbor's children.

John Hunt, who was born in Missouri in 1814, was a son of Jonathan and Ailsy Hunt, and their other children were: Captain William, who was a Union soldier of the Civil war and spent his life in Missouri; Joel, who went to Kentucky; and Charles, who spent his life in his native state; while two or three daughters whose names are not known to the writer made up the rest of the family. Jonathan Hunt had settled in Missouri while it was a new country and went through all the hardships incidental to a pioneer's life.

John Hunt came to Texas from Morgan county, Missouri, in 1849, along with Aaron Allard and the widow, Nancy Allard, whom he married on April 25, 1850. Their marriage was celebrated near Shiloh church about four miles west of where the town of Klondike now stands, then in Hopkins county, but now part of Delta county. To this union there were two sons born, Joel Jefferson and Jonathan Carroll. Jonathan Carroll, who was born March 3, 1852, died October 29, 1858, leaving Joel Jefferson as the only son.

John and Nancy Hunt had made settlement in the fringe of timber on Honey creek, and their evening light had no answering salute from near neighbors. Texas was a country full of all kinds of game and wild animals, and the wild turkey and deer abounded in the locality, and it was several years before the invasion of settlers drove this game away. The wild mustang were still roaming on the broad prairies. Though the Indians and the buffalo had moved a little farther west, yet the Indians were doing depredations as near by as Dallas county. He found the natural resources of the country almost equal to the country we read about in the Bible, flowing with milk and honey, opportunities for gaining the material things of this world were on every hand, and he had already begun to avail himself of those opportunities for the benefit of himself and family when the summons came. He had not failed to make ready for this call, having previously joined the Christian church.

John Hunt on April 25, 1850, married Mrs. Nancy Allard. She was born August 2, 1813, in St. Louis county, Missouri, four miles south of the city of St. Louis, and her maiden name was Weaver. David Weaver, her father, married Fannie Wommack. Their children were: Matilda, who married a Mr. Carrio and who died in Missouri; Fannie, who married James Gabriel and whose death occurred in Missouri; Mary, wife of Aaron Allard; Nancy; David, who was killed by the Indians in Dallas county, Texas, and Larkin, who died in Titus county. Nancy Weaver first married James Allard, who died in Missouri, November 18, 1847, leaving her three children, as follows: Elizabeth, born January 21, 1835, and who died in January, 1841, at the age of six years; Frances Jane, born March 27, 1837, and died February 13, 1914; William Jasper, born January 10, 1842, and died April 27, 1857. Frances Jane Allard married Hardy H. Hudson May 20, 1854, and only two of their seven children are still living: William Jasper and Mrs. Melven Kimsey.

After the death of John Hunt his widow married for her third husband, Moses Kiser, who entered her home as a helpmate and a father to her only son. When the war came on Mr. Kiser favored the Union as against secession and voted for it; but when the secession convention of 1861 declared the state out of the Union and a part of the Confederate States of America he took up arms for the South and became a member of a company of the Eleventh Texas Infantry, under Col. Samuel Bell Maxey, and served until the struggle ended. His work as a soldier broke his constitution, and his death in 1866 left Nancy a widow for the third time. She was then just past middle life, and henceforth she devoted her time and talents to her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Mrs. Nancy Kiser passed away at Klondike February 28, 1911, having almost completed the cycle of a hundred years and having spanned several important epochs in the development of her beloved country. She was a woman of strong patriotic impulses and fought the movement for secession and rebellion with all the vehemence of her modest nature. She foretold the outcome of the war with accuracy and said that "the government at Washington would whip back into submission the cohorts of the Confederacy and that the union of the states would not perish."

Joel Jefferson Hunt was born February 15, 1851, and his environment precluded his attendance at school.

Upon him devolved, in a large measure, the care of his mother and his sister's family during the war, and by his experience he became an efficient stockman and farmer. When his stepfather died the family had one hundred and eighty acres of land with humble improvements and a few horses and cattle, and these, with the open range, offered the solution of the domestic problem confronting the youthful Hunt. Without undertaking to give the details of his half century of efforts, we state that he helped to develop two farms from the virgin domain; that he owns four farms in different localities of Delta and Red River counties, and of his 1,149 acres more than 730 are under cultivation. In Klondike he is interested in the breeding of blooded horses, cattle and hogs, has supervision of the handling of the mail, takes a part in the affairs of the village as a builder, and lends a hand in the general forward movement through which all civic and educational affairs are passing.

Mr. Hunt's relation to the Klondike community has been exemplified in the numerous ways he has contributed to its welfare. For some time after the Texas Midland railroad was put in operation there was no station in this locality, and the train had to be flagged whenever there was a passenger to board it. This flagging was done at the juncture of the two wide highways which Mr. Hunt was instrumental in securing. Groups of people would gather here to wait for the train. Finally the officers of the road decided upon a depot at the "junction" and came to Mr. Hunt with a proposition. He entered into a contract with them to provide a townsite of sixty acres, some of which was donated, or furnished by other citizens, the railroad to own a half interest in the site in consideration of building a station. This agreement was fully carried out in 1896 and henceforth Klondike has occupied a place upon the postal, railroad and commercial maps. At the same time the depot was built at Klondike, Mr. Hunt erected the first business house in the place and established Mr. Henry Rogers in it, who was the first merchant of the town. Mr. Rogers is related to Mr. Hunt by marriage, having married Mrs. Emma Potts (nee Weaver) Mr. Hunt's cousin. Subsequently Mr. Hunt erected a large double frame business house and occupied it with a general line of merchandise for eight years. He then sold out his business and joined his son in the building of two one-story brick business houses, in one of which the son does a grocery business and the father keeps the post office, for he has been postmaster since the establishment of the office here in 1897. In the organization of a bank for the village he took an active part as a stockholder and was elected vice-president, while in January, 1912, he was made president of the institution.

March 19, 1876, Joel Jefferson Hunt and Joan Looney were married in Delta county, and for thirty-eight years they have traveled life's pathway together. Mrs. Hunt is a daughter of R. G. Looney and wife, whose maiden name was Harrell. She is the oldest of their children, the others in order of birth being as follows: Georgia; LaFayette; Dr. A. D.; Kirby H.; Robert Lee; and Fannie, deceased wife of J. R. Leeman. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are: John A., who was killed by accident at the age of eleven years; Lula May, wife of George Chumbley; Rufus W., who married Alice Lake; Ethel J., wife of Thomas N. Unsell; Bernice, wife of Luther D. Osborn; Joel Jasper, who married Julia McCauley; Everett E.; Herman H.; and Miss Lillian, all living at and near Klondike.

Mr. Hunt has been a member of the Methodist Protestant church since he was a youth of nineteen years and has always taken a great deal of interest in the church, never failing to occupy his pew, unless providentially hindered. Personally he is clear-minded, clean-hearted and genial. Politically, he is a progressive Democrat and always found in the front ranks when it comes to reform or any move for the betterment of country, both state and national. He is a man of strong convictions, always found on the moral side of every question, and is free from all sectional and party prejudice. He has never allowed himself to be troubled by the little worries of life and in his calm way has gone quietly along and has ever proved himself equal to any emergency that has arisen. That he enjoys confidence and respect of his fellow citizens is a well known fact.

WILLIAM W. ARMSTRONG. Proprietor of the only meat and butchering establishment at Midland, Armstrong supplies the local meat trade by converting his own stock into products for local consumption. He is a successful and enterprising business man, and has been connected with the livestock industry throughout his active career.

William W. Armstrong was born in Crittenden county, Kentucky, April 25, 1867, of a Scotch-Irish family. His parents were John G. and Nancy A. Armstrong. His father was a farmer of Crittenden county, Kentucky, and came to Texas about 1877, and continued as a farmer and stock raiser in Goliad and Bee counties about twenty years. Ill health finally compelled him to retire, and take up his residence at Silver City, New Mexico, where his death occurred in December, 1913. The mother passed away in 1907.

In the public schools of Goliad county, Mr. Armstrong continued his education from the time he was ten years of age, and when still a boy learned to ride and do the work of a ranch. He also acquired the trade of butcher and at Goliad engaged in that business for a while, after which he followed butchering in Santa Rita, New Mexico, from 1902 until 1905. In the latter year he moved to Douglas, Arizona, where he remained for about one year. From Douglas he moved to El Paso, and from there to Barstow, and since then has been in business at Midland, where he has the entire local trade of the city. He gets his cattle from the range in this vicinity, and butchers from fifteen to twenty head of own stock every month.

In politics he is a Republican, having been brought up according to those principles of political faith. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

January 19, 1891, at Goliad, Texas, he married Ella Turner, a daughter of George L. and Nannie T. Turner of Goliad. Her father was for a number of years a stock raiser at Goliad and is now living at Silver City, New Mexico, where he continues in the cattle business. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are the parents of three children, two daughters and one son. Mabel and Turner are the names of the children and all are now students in the public schools of Silver City, New Mexico.

LEONIDAS CARTWRIGHT. One of the strongest men in Marshall, Texas, or in that vicinity, both mentally and in a business way is Leonidas Cartwright. He is one of the largest land owners in the state of Texas and gives his time to the management and development of the vast state of which he has control. He is an able business man, with a strong personality that has won him many friends and he is widely known as one of the state's prominent men.

Leonidas Cartwright is a representative of one of the foremost of the pioneer families of Texas, his father and grandfather having located in Texas in 1825, when the colonization of Texas by the Anglo-Americans was just beginning, and very few of the men who were to play the leading parts in the war for Texan independence were yet upon the soil. It was ten years before Santa Anna was to meet his Waterloo at San Jacinto and the great Washington of Texas was still governor of Tennessee.

The Cartwrights were emigrants from Tennessee, and the name was and is a name famous in the annals of war and public affairs in that state. They were from Wilson county, and here it was that Matthew Cartwright, the father of Leonidas, was born on the 11th of November, 1807. The father of Matthew Cartwright, John Cartwright, it is believed migrated from Virginia to Tennessee. He was a true frontiersman, a man of robust physique, large in stature and large in heart and mind. He lived in Wilson county, near Lebanon, until 1825, when he removed with his family to Texas. He established a store in San Augustine, Texas, which he conducted successfully with the aid of his eldest son.

He was not only a successful business man and merchant but was prominent as a buyer and seller of lands. He became a large land owner, believing thoroughly in the value of landed property, and his faith has been justified, and in fact was justified in his time. He died in 1841 at about fifty-five years of age. He was a man of huge frame and during his later years his four hundred pounds of avoirdupois became such a burden that the care of his business interests devolved upon his son. He had seven children, as follows: Matthew, Robert G., George W., Clinton, Richard, Mary, who married William Garrett, and Clementine, who became the wife of Sanford Holman.

Matthew Cartwright was liberally educated for that time and day and was a student and an observer by disposition. He was most brilliant intellectually and his qualities of mind as well as his strong character made him one of the most popular citizens of this section. In business he was simply a genius, though much of his success came from his ability to read men and his good judgment. As a merchant and trader and land dealer the profits which accrued to him were large and in time he had amassed a fortune unequalled in eastern Texas. He was his father's right hand man, and for many years carried on the store which his father had founded. Finally he gave up his mercantile interests and devoted himself almost entirely to his land interests. He spent ten years buying lands previous to his death, and rode thirty-five hundred miles each year for a period covering over ten years, riding the same horse, "Old Red Buck," as he was known throughout this section of Texas, looking after his land interests, through the counties of Wood, Upshur, Jefferson, Van Zandt, San Augustine, Kaufman, Ellis, Collin, Fort Bend, Hopkins, Denton, Cooke and others in this section of the state. He bought during this time something like a half million acres of the finest lands in eastern Texas and when he died in 1870, he left a large share of the land as his estate.

Although best known as a buyer, Matthew Cartwright was also a seller of land, but whereas, he bought land in large tracts he sold in small ones, in order to aid the man of small capital who wished to make a home in Texas. He helped these small farmers in every way possible. He took notes for unpaid amounts on lands and aided his debtors when they had misfortune, aiding them until they were again on their feet. In many cases he gave deeds to lands before the purchase price was all paid, when the husband had died and left a balance due on his land. His attitude toward the poor and toward those who only needed a little help to become prosperous endeared him to everyone, and few citizens of his time were as universally beloved. He, like his father, was a man of large stature, with a heart that corresponded to his physique.

In company with General Brooks, Colonel Blount and a Mr. Crockett he built one of the first steam sawmills in San Augustine county which proved a boon to the citizens. Later a grist mill was added and while the Civil war was in progress many families were dependent on the generosity of Mr. Cartwright and the corn from this mill. He was deeply interested in politics, being a member of the Democratic party. He was a close student of the march of human events and his far-sightedness was often strikingly proved by the working out of events along lines which he had prophesied. He gave three sons to the Confederate service and after the close of the war he spent a few years in business with his sons, Leonidas and Americus P., at San Augustine in this venture being also successful. His death occurred in 1870, on the 2nd of April.

Matthew Cartwright married Amanda Holman, a daughter of Isaac Holman, who was a native of Kentucky, but later settled in Tennessee, in Lincoln county, thence removing with his family to Texas. Mrs. Cartwright died on June 26, 1894. Matthew Cartwright and his wife became the parents of six children. The eldest, Columbus, served in Colonel Lane's regiment in the Confederate army, and after the war became a farmer and a large land owner. He married Miss Sallie Lane and left four sons and two daughters at the time of his death at San Augustine, Texas, in 1901. Americus P. was also a Confederate soldier, being a member of Company "E" of the Third Texas Cavalry. He served under Ben McCulloch, of the Trans-Mississippi department, and upon crossing the Mississippi, and the reorganization of the company, he was made a lieutenant in his command. He later returned to his old department, in which he remained until the end of his service. Leonidas is the next in order of birth. Annie W. married B. T. Roberts and died in Terrell, Texas; Mary C. became the wife of Captain James M. Ingram and spent her last years in Terrell. Matthew lives in Terrell, being one of the large land owners of this section, a ranchman and important man of affairs.

Leonidas Cartwright was born at San Augustine, Texas, on the 27th of November, 1842. He grew up and received the larger part of his education in his native town, also attending the military institute of Bastrop, Texas. On the 25th of May, 1861, he enlisted at San Augustine, in Company "E" of the Third Texas Cavalry, Captain Short commanding the company and Colonel Greer the regiment. He was mustered in at Dallas and formed part of the regiment in which W. P. Lane was lieutenant colonel and George Chilton was major. The regiment was attached to General McIntosh's brigade and later to the brigade commanded by General McCullough. Early in the year of 1862 the regiment took part in the battles of Elkhorn and Oak Hills and was then transferred to the eastern department where it was under the command of General Price. It was now reorganized and dismounted and was soon made a part of Ross' brigade, which comprised the Third, Sixth, Ninth and First Texas Legion of the Lone Star troops. Under this new order the regiment took part in the battles of Shiloh, Iuka and in the Holly Springs raid, in which Van Dorn captured General Grant's supplies and twenty-five hundred of his troops. About this time the authorities decided to remount the regiment and as a cavalry regiment it advanced with the army into Tennessee and after operations in the vicinity of Franklin, fought the battle of Thompson's Station, where another lot of prisoners were captured. At this juncture the army was ordered to fall back and join forces with General Johnston's army in the attempt which he was going to make to relieve Pemberton at Vicksburg. The army remained in the vicinity of Vicksburg until the fall of the besieged city and then fought Sherman's army until the latter retired to Jackson, Mississippi, after which the Confederate forces wintered in the state. In the spring of 1864 the command went to the aid of General Johnston, who was defending Atlanta, and took part in the campaign of one hundred days which resulted in the fall of the city. It was during this campaign that Mr. Cartwright was detailed as a scout under Lieutenant Taylor, who operated in the rear of General Sherman's army, annoying the latter by threatening his communications and obtaining valuable information. Numerous fierce skirmishes were fought and it was in this service that the end of the war found Mr. Cartwright. Just before the final act of the tragedy he was captured at Sataria, Mississippi, but he was exchanged and then paroled and subsequently mustered out at Vanton, Mississippi, during the latter part of May, 1865. He served through the Tennessee campaign as a scout. The Federal government allowed the defeated Confederate soldiers to keep their horses and side arms, and Mr. Cartwright was furnished transportation from Vicksburg to Alexandria, Louisiana. Thence he traveled on horseback until he reached home about June 5, 1865.

After the close of this eventful chapter in his life, Mr. Cartwright engaged in the mercantile business with his father and brother in San Augustine, remaining in this business until the death of his father. He then retired from this business and became the agent of his father's estate. He located on a farm near his birthplace and has devoted himself to a life and work strikingly similar to that which his father had lived before him. He has been engaged in farming and in buying and selling lands, owning more land than anyone else in this section. Mr. Cartwright opened up a ranch in Taylor county and has been engaged in breeding thoroughbred saddle and trotting horses. He also owns a ranch of several thousand acres in Cooke county, where he has been raising blooded Durham cattle, which, although unregistered, rivals any other herd in its class. Now that the range country is being closed up, Mr. Cartwright is bringing his ranch lands into a state of cultivation and comfortable homes are going up in the habitation of the hare and the coyote. Part of the Cartwright estate lies around Beaumont, Texas, where extensive oil developments have been in progress.

It was in 1895 that Mr. Cartwright moved to Terrell with his family, and here he has since made his home, owning his handsome residence on Griffith avenue. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party, and he is a keen student of business, political and social conditions, and is gifted with such conversational powers as to make him a man of wide influence and great charm. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and in the fraternal world is a Mason, having taken the chapter and council degree.

Leonidas Cartwright was married in Sabine county, Texas, on the 17th of December, 1868, to Miss Ludie Ingram, a daughter of William Ingram, and a sister of Captain Ingram, who married Mr. Cartwright's sister. Mrs. Cartwright died on the 24th of December, 1908, the mother of nine children. Of these Amanda is the wife of E. A. Wilson, of Galveston; Annie B. is Mrs. J. J. McClurkin, of Terrell, Texas, and she has the following children: Rowena, Manta, Amanda H., Leonidas C., Joseph J., Mary C., and James Wylie; Leonidas, Jr., lives in Terrell and is an active aid to his father in the management of the vast properties, also being interested in the oil lands around Beaumont; James Ingram married Eugenia Polk Cartwright and he is associated with his brother in the oil development work; Ludie and Mary live at home and keep house for their father, both having been educated at Shorter College, in Rome, Georgia; Grover Cleveland is city engineer of Terrell, and Velma is a graduate of the class of 1913 at Brenau College, in Georgia.

JAMES E. McLEMORE. Whether as a business man or as a worker for social welfare, it is doubtful if any city of North Texas has won more substantial honor and more of the real elements of success than James E. McLemore, who is general agent for the State of Texas, of the American National Insurance Company, has also gained much note as the owner of one of the finest improved farms of the state, and has for some years been one of the ablest laymen engaged in religious and general benevolent activities in Texas.

When he was fifteen years of age, in the city of Waco, James E. McLemore began to learn the art of telegraphy. Beginning as a railroad operator at the country station, he rose in that fascinating profession until he became one of the most expert and widely known com-dial and Associated Press operators in the United States. Many responsible positions were filled by him. He worked from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast. A distinction that can be properly claimed for him is that he was one of the first telegraph operators to use typewriter in transcribing his messages. In Texas he was Associated Press operator at San Antonio, Waco, Dallas, and came to the last named city which has been his home in 1896. For seven years, he acted as Associated Press operator, then engaged in the insurance business under Captain A. J. Brown, with whom he was associated until 1907, when he took his present position as general agent for Texas representing the American National Insurance Company. At the present time McLemore has more than seventy-five competent clerks working under his supervision throughout the state, and he is regarded as one of the leaders in promoting business of high quality in the insurance field in the southwest.

Returning from this brief excursion over the chief events of his business progress, to the beginning, James McLemore was born at Crockett, in Houston county, Texas, in 1870. He is still a young man, for all his accomplishments. His parents were John A. and Martha Helen (Hall) McLemore. His father, who was born in Marion county, Alabama, in 1830, came to Houston county in what was then the Republic of Texas in 1853, and was one of the early settlers in that vicinity. During the war between the states he rendered distinguished service to the Confederacy as captain of Company I, Eighteenth Texas cavalry, Randall's Regiment, Walker's Division, with which he served throughout the war. Captain McLemore organized the company, taking one hundred and sixty-eight men with him from Houston county and the surrounding territory, and at the end of the long and trying warfare returned with only sixteen of his original men. Mr. McLemore's mother was the daughter of James Hall, who had the distinction of serving as the first grand lecturer for the Sons of the Lone Star Grand Lodge of Texas.

Mr. McLemore's position as a landed proprietor and farmer of Texas is the result of his purchase, in 1913, of one of the largest and richest farms in the northern quarter of the state. It is located in Harrison county, near Louisiana line and about twenty miles from Marshall. It contains seventeen hundred and fifty acres of especially fertile soil, devoted to the growing of cotton, corn, live stock, and its orchards contain seventy-thousand trees, mostly peaches. The residence on the place is a Colonial two-story structure, equipped with a complete water system, with baths, electric lights, every modern comfort and convenience which could be desired or would be found in a city home. There is also an adequate provision for tenants, and other labor employed about this magnificent rural estate.

The most notable feature of Mr. McLemore's life in several years past is his enthusiasm for and remarkable success in church and Sunday school work, and his generosity in contributing of his means to the cause of spiritual religious work. He is a member of the Oak Park Presbyterian Church where he has a Bible class of one hundred and sixteen men. His teachings and his counsel have been the cause of some notable conversions in Dallas. He takes a particular interest in boys, and in the upbuilding of their character, and is an honorary member of the National Newsboys Association of the United States. He has always taken a great interest in the education of young men who are fitting themselves for the ministry and for foreign missionary work. His unselfish generosity in financially aiding young men has been so quiet and unostentatious that it is known to a very limited circle that he has provided for the education of two young men for ministerial missionary work, and is entirely supporting one of them, paying him a substantial yearly salary for work in a foreign field. Mr. McLemore makes strong friends everywhere and with all classes. His human sympathy is so genuine and he is so entirely free from cant or bigotry in his religious teachings that hardly any one can fail to be inspired thereby. His occupations as telegraph operator, newspaper man and insurance man have given him a deep knowledge of human nature and broad sympathy for the weaknesses of humanity. This no doubt accounts for the fact that his religious teaching never smacks of scolding or "preaching." The great good that he does he accomplishes through kindly words and kindly and generous deeds.

His family life has been unusually fortunate and happy. His wife before her marriage was Miss Lotta Bracken, who was born and reared at Palestine, Texas. They were married in Waco. Mrs. McLemore represents a prominent pioneer family of Texas, and her grandfather, Rev. Jacob Crawford was noted as having been the first Methodist preacher west of the Sabine River. Their family of children were ten in number, and their names are: Chris, Mozelle, Clyde, Lois, Jim, Dorothy, Pauline, Sam, Ruth and Daniel.

CHARLES L. SAUER, prominent in San Antonio as an auditor and public accountant of exceptional ability and also as Grand Scribe of the Grand Encampment of Texas Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a native son of the state, and was born in New Braunfels, Comal county, in 1851. He was reared and educated in San Antonio, and here his principal business activities have been carried on. He is the son of Justus and Barbara (von der Heide) Sauer, both of whom were born in Hesse Darmstadt, Prussia, and who as a young married couple came to Texas in 1848 and settled at New Braunfels, as members of the famous German colony founded at that place by Prince Solms-Braunfels.

Justus Sauer was a friend and contemporary of the late Dr. Ferd Herff of San Antonio, and other scholarly young men who took part in the Revolutionary movement in Germany in 1848, and who formed the membership of that colony which in that year came to Texas seeking broader freedom. In 1856 he removed with his family to San Antonio, where he spent the remainder of his life, death claiming him in 1882. The wife and mother died in 1908.

Charles L. Sauer was reared and educated in San Antonio, to which city he accompanied his parents when a lad of five years. He received most of his education in the old German-English school, a noted educational institution in its day within whose walls many of San Antonio's most prominent citizens received their educational training. In 1871, he went to Illinois, locating at Pekin, Tazewell county, where in 1872 he was married to Miss Mary E. Devore. In 1873 he returned with his wife to San Antonio where they have since resided.

For several years Mr. Sauer was in public life in San Antonio. In 1892 he was made City Auditor, and soon thereafter he became deputy Tax Collector under the Callaghan administration. He served in that position continuously until September, 1912, when he retired from the same, leaving behind him an enviable record for efficiency and fidelity to his duties as a public official. Early in 1913 he established himself in business as an auditor and public accountant, with office in the Gibbs Building, and his long years of experience in this profession won for him instant recognition and clientage in the work.

Mr. Sauer is one of the prominent Odd Fellows of Texas and has been a member of the Grand Lodge and of the Grand Encampment of the state for many years. In 1896 at the annual meeting of the lodge in Houston, he was elected Grand Scribe of the Grand Encampment of Texas, a position that he has efficiently and worthily filled ever since, having been re-elected at every subsequent annual meeting of the Grand Encampment. In local lodge circles he has filled all the various chairs in both the subordinate lodge and the encampment. He became an Odd Fellow in April, 1873, at Pekin, Illinois, joining Covenant Lodge No. 48, I. O. O. F., of that city. He has been one of the leading spirits in building up San Antonio lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., instituted on July 21, 1849, which is the wealthiest and one of the largest and most influential lodges in Texas, having done a great deal of good along the lines of its work in the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Sauer have five sons, namely: Charles D., Walter G., Edwin, Fred C., and Jessie G., all of whom were born and reared in San Antonio, where they have been given excellent educational advantages and are all substantially situated in business life.

THOMAS W. MASTERSON. From the pioneer times to the present Texas has had families so conspicuous for the attainments and services of its members as the Masterson family. The law, in which many of them gained distinction, furnished a fine field in which they were able to contribute their talents and energies to the service of the community. The Mastersons have been known as able lawyers, successful planters and business men, faithful soldiers, and efficient and prominent public servants and citizens. In the following brief sketch under the name of one of San Antonio's best known lawyers are contained brief reference to three generations of this family in Texas.

The first generation was Judge Thomas G. Masterson, one of the pioneer lawyers of the Texas Republic and for many years identified with Brazoria county. Born in Tennessee, of a family which had large possessions and a valued place in its citizenship, Thomas G. Masterson was a graduate of a law school in Nashville, and first came to Texas in 1832, when he bought large tracts of land, chiefly at Velasco at the mouth of the Brazos river. After four or five years spent in Tennessee, where he was required for the settlement of a large estate, he returned to Texas in 1837, and lived in Brazoria county from that time until his death in 1884, when about sixty-nine years of age. After his return to Texas he gave little attention to the law, but was associated with Judge Edwin Waller under the firm name of Waller & Company in merchandising, and also had the management of extensive plantation property. As often as his private interests would allow he was called to public service. He held the office of chief justice of Brazoria county, for a number of years was county clerk, and during the Civil war was enrolling officer. Judge Masterson married Miss Christianie I. Roane, daughter of Dr. Roane of Tennessee and niece of Governor Roane of that state. Five of their sons saw service in the Confederate army. William Masterson, the oldest, who was born in 1835, reached the rank of captain in the Confederate army, lost his left arm in the battle of Mansfield, where his promotion to that rank occurred, and in after years was a prominent planter and public official. His death occurred in 1908. Judge James R. Masterson, the second son, died at Houston in 1913, was for more than twenty years district judge of Houston and Montgomery counties, and during the war held the office of Judge Advocate in the Confederate service. T. W. Masterson, also deceased, was the commander of the first company which left Austin to join the Confederate army, and was a member of General Wharton's staff during a portion of the war. Judge Arch Masterson, who died at Houston in 1913, entered the Confederate army at the age of seventeen, was kept in Texas during most of his period of enlistment, but was present in Virginia at the surrender of General Lee. Judge Arch Masterson was for some years county judge of Brazoria county. Branch T. Masterson, who was on his way to join the army when the war closed, became prominent as a citizen of Galveston. Harry Masterson, the youngest son, also served as county judge of Brazoria county. The only daughter was Mrs. T. L. Smith. The Masterson family is of Scotch-Irish ancestry.

Thomas W. Masterson, who is a son of Branch T. Masterson and wife, his father having been one of the prominent members of the Galveston bar for many years and still a resident of that city was born at Galveston, June 13, 1879. Educated in the Galveston schools and University of Texas, graduating from the latter in 1900, Mr. Masterson took up the practice of law in his native city, and though a very young man at the time took an active and public-spirited part in the work of restoring Galveston after the calamitous storm of 1900. In order to assist in the work of perfecting the Galveston form of commission government, after the first charter had been granted, Mr. Masterson made a campaign for the legislature, and was elected in 1904 and served during the twenty-ninth session. Following that he was four years a member of the state senate. During the twenty-ninth legislature, Mr. Masterson was author of the drainage act, which has been a factor of great value in promoting drainage operations in southeast Texas. He was also instrumental in having passed the act providing for the raising of the grade in Galveston, a great municipal enterprise which has since been completed, and which was an essential part of the splendid scheme for the rehabilitation of that city.

In the latter part of 1909, Mr. Masterson moved to San Antonio, which city has since been his home. As a lawyer he ranks high, and from the outset of his career he has been successful. A Democrat, he is always found among the workers for civic improvement and civic progress, whether in his home locality or for the state at large.

Mr. Masterson is a member of the San Antonio, the Country and the Travis Clubs, also the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Kappa Sigma college fraternity. His chief diversion is golf, and he is one of the members most frequently seen on the links of the Country Club. In 1905 Mr. Masterson married Miss Beatrice Thomson, and their two children are: Thomas W., Jr., and Miss Beatrice Masterson.

CAPT. CHARLES E. H. GLAZBROOK. For twenty-five years a resident of Southwest Texas, where his extensive operations made him widely known among stockmen, Capt. Charles E. H. Glazbrook is now living a retired life at his pleasant residence, No. 814 Agarita avenue, Beacon Hill, San Antonio. His life has been an exceptionally full one, crowded with experiences of an interesting nature, including military service in several wars in which he won promotion and decorations for gallantry upon the field of battle. Captain Glazbrook was born near the city of Edinburg, Scotland in 1856, but was a son of parents of English birth whose ancestral home was in Somersetshire. He was educated in the University of Saint Augustine's, Canterbury, where he passed the examinations for entrance to Oxford or Cambridge, but the young man, following his own inclinations, decided upon a military career and accordingly entered the English army. He joined what was at first known as the Frontier Army and Mounted Police, which later became known as the Cape Mounted Rifles, in which he achieved distinction for service both as a private soldier and an officer, and in 1877 went with this organization to South Africa and took part in the Kaffir War, remaining there in continuous service during that year, 1878 and 1879, this including also the first Boer War. In 1881 he took part in the Basuto War in South Africa, and in 1884 was commissioned to go to Bechuanaland, also in South Africa, as acting adjutant on the staff of Lord Methuen (now the head of the British army), who headed the expedition to that country. This service extended into the year 1885. He had in the meantime been promoted to the rank of captain on the field of at Maseru, in Basutoland, in 1880. Besides this, Captain Glazbrook had the honor of receiving two medals from his Government, these decorations being awarded upon him for brave and meritorious service. At the time he retired from the army in 1885 he was a captain in the Basuto Native Levies.

The foregoing is only a very brief outline of a military career that was filled with remarkable experiences in a strange, foreign land, and fraught with dangers and hardships the recital of which would make a volume of interesting reading in itself. Captain Glazbrook has many mementoes of his military life in South Africa, and his knowledge of the various campaigns in which he engaged is of much historical value. His collections of Lord Methuen, with whom he still carries correspondence, are especially interesting.

In 1885 Captain Glazbrook came to Texas on a visit to his brothers, who were in the stock business near Waco, in Kendall county. Their success had been such that he was induced to remain, and he has been a resident of Southwest Texas ever since that time. He invested his means in the cattle business, going into Comanche county on the dry Frio, but unfortunately a severe drouth came on at that period and he lost his stock.

He then was offered and accepted the position as manager and superintendent for the Coleman-Fulton Cattle Company, owned by Charles P. Taft, in San Antonio county. This is the famous Taft ranch, which has made such a remarkable success with high-grade cattle and in later years in modern farming. Captain Glazbrook remained with Mr. Taft for eleven years, and then he resigned and came to Bexar county, where, on the Medina river, eighteen miles west of San Antonio, he established a fine ranch of his own, where he handled Polled and Hereford cattle, all registered. Although meeting with success in this enterprise, he wished to retire to life in the city, and in 1911 sold out his ranch of 500 acres and bought property in San Antonio, including his home at No. 814 Agarita avenue, Beacon Hill.

In 1890, Captain Glazbrook was married to Miss Harriet Jones, of Corpus Christi, Texas, granddaughter of General Daniel Moore, a distinguished citizen of Alabama. Their oldest daughter, Williamina, is the wife of George H. Hill, of San Antonio. Their son, Stuart Glazbrook, is now a student at the University of Texas, taking the course in civil engineering. Their youngest daughter is named Margaret.

GENERAL ALFRED PRIOR WOZENCRAFT. A member of the Dallas bar since 1882, General Wozencraft has been known equally well both in the law and in the public life of the State.

Alfred Prior Wozencraft was born in Dallas county, Texas, July 1, 1859, a son of William Thomas and Melia Grant (Oliver) Wozencraft. His parents, in their early life, were educators in Georgia, and from thence moved to Dallas county, Arkansas, about 1850, and spent the remainder of their lives there.

General Wozencraft was reared on the farm and his early education was gained principally by studies at home under the direction of his father and mother.

He studied law on the home farm under the general direction of Col. H. W. McMillan, of Arkadelphia, Arkansas, who loaned him books to read. His mother was his principal teacher of the law. He procured his license to practice law in Arkadelphia in 1882, and in May, 1882, he came to Dallas, Texas, where he has resided ever since.

He was city attorney of the City of Dallas from 1890 to 1898.

Besides devoting himself to the practice of law he has taken an extensive interest in military matters, and was captain of the Dallas Artillery Company for a number of years, which company achieved distinction under his command, winning first prizes in several interstate drills.

In May, 1898, at the beginning of the Spanish War, he was appointed Adjutant General of Texas by Gov. Charles A. Culberson, and served in that office until January, 1899, and as such officer had charge of the mustering of troops from Texas into the United States volunteer service.

Upon his retirement from the office of Adjutant General he was appointed Brigadier General of the Second Brigade of the Texas Volunteer Guard, which position he held until 1902, at which time he retired.

He is a member of all Masonic orders, and also of the Knights of Pythias and Elks.

General Wozencraft has at all times since his residence in Dallas been a practitioner of law and enjoyed a very extensive and lucrative practice.

In 1891 he married Miss Virginia Lee Wilson, who was born and reared in Clarksburg, West Virginia, a daughter of Hon. Benjamin Wilson, who represented his State for several years in Congress and was Assistant United States Attorney General during the first administration of President Cleveland. Mrs. Wozencraft died in 1893. They have one son, Francis W. Wozencraft, now a student in the University of Texas, having completed the academic course in 1913, and being now a member of the law class of 1914.

JAMES GARRISON BOLES. Thirty years ago a farmer in East Texas, later a merchant in Nacogdoches county, and from that becoming one of the influential factors in the upbuilding and development of the great fruit industry in the eastern section of the state, James Garrison Boles recently moved to San Antonio, and in this section is best known through his operations in the oil fields of Bexar county.

James Garrison Boles was born in Rusk county near the line where it joins Nacogdoches county in 1861, a son of Samuel M. and Celia (Nolen) Boles. Both his father and mother were natives of Alabama, in which state they were married, and on coming to Texas in 1853 settled on a farm in Rusk county. His father died in 1877, and his mother in 1910. It was on a farm that Mr. Boles was reared and as to school training he had only the ordinary amount given to Texas boys of forty years ago. His place was on the homestead farm until he was twenty-one, and at the age of twenty-four he engaged in the mercantile business at Garrison in Nacogdoches county. His interests having been sold out in 1887, Mr. Boles moved to Jacksonville in Cherokee county. That section was just beginning to be known as a center for the raising of fruit and vegetables. Mr. Boles did his part in developing the industry as a buyer and shipper, and in 1891 in association with Hodges, Love & Smith shipped out from Jacksonville the first carload of peaches. That was the beginning of a large industry which since has made Jacksonville the headquarters of the great fruit and vegetable (especially tomato) industry of east Texas. In the meantime Mr. Boles began operating as a fruit grower himself on an extensive scale, and in 1901, having sold out other interests, concentrated his efforts at the well known Elberta Fruit Farm, which he bought; that farm was four miles from Jacksonville on the Cotton Belt Railroad, and he had a railway switch for shipping his product, large packing sheds, and every facility for the commercial fruit business. Subsequently he developed another farm only two miles from Jacksonville.

After many years of successful business as a fruit man, Mr. Boles moved his family to San Antonio in September, 1903, and has since given much of his time to the real estate business. However, it is with the production of petroleum that he is chiefly concerned. His field of operations is at Somerset in the southern part of Bexar county. In this new and important industry of the San Antonio district he is associated with Mr. John A. Kerr, a man of wealth and resources, who has employed a large amount of money in developing the new field. In April, 1914, Messrs. Boles & Kerr had four wells producing oil, with prospects of other wells in the near future. The oil obtained at Somerset is exceptionally high grade, averaging fifty-five percent white oil. Its consistency makes it valuable for lubricating purposes, and it therefore commands a fancy price as compared with ordinary fuel oil.

Mr. Boles and family are all members of the First Baptist church in San Antonio. In 1888 he married Mrs. Theodosia (Thompson) Coupland, who was born and reared in McLennan and Cherokee counties, Texas. Their union has been most happy, and especially blest in their son, James Ross Boles, who is now probation officer of Bexar county by appointment from Judge James R. Davis. Ross Boles, as he is known among all the boys of the street in San Antonio, is exceptionally well fitted by nature, training and experience for his important branch of social welfare work. He has always taken an interest in boys, is devoted to his work, and it is his ambition to make it his life profession. Ross Boles was educated in the Baptist Academy at Jacksonville and in the San Antonio high school. At the time he joined the Y. M. C. A. in San Antonio he was the youngest who had ever become a member of that institution in the city. He entered enthusiastically into the work of building up the association, received several prizes in contests for getting new members, and twice was banqueted by the association for honors gained in this work. As probation officer his services have frequently been commended, and he holds an office which presents splendid opportunities for rescuing boys from aimless, drifting or criminal lives and putting them on a new track to useful manhood. It is an office peculiarly demanding enthusiasm, initiative, and a persistent interest in its duties. While Mr. Boles maintains an office with well organized routine, it is not in his formal, official character, but in his personality and ability to mix with and acquire the confidence of boys that Mr. Boles has succeeded so remarkably well in his chosen career. He is a fine, clean-cut, splendid young man, and few citizens of San Antonio are doing more for the lasting good of that community and for humanity in general than this young probation officer. Mr. Boles works in conjunction with the juvenile court system of San Antonio, and while the majority of his cases are individual, he also keeps a supervision over those features of city life which have possibilities of elevation or degradation for boys and girls.

JAMES ELLINGTON CHRISTIAN. For the poor young man whose ambition is for a prosperous and influential place in the world, and who possesses the energy and will to do things in a practical fashion, there is much inspiration in the career and example of James Ellington Christian, of Powell in Navarro county. Twenty years ago he came to this state, possessed of hardly the proverbial "red cent," but he was a worker, had a strong and rugged constitution, could see beyond his immediate horizon, seldom failed to take advantage of opportunity as presented, and has steadily gone ahead until he is now one of the largest and richest farmers in the Powell neighborhood. His home is on a splendid farm adjoining the townsite.

Mr. Christian has been a resident of Texas since December 21, 1891, when as a youth of nineteen years he accompanied two youthful companions from his home neighborhood to the black-land belt of Texas, and here started his independent career. Mr. Christian was born in Georgia, October 21, 1872. His early surroundings were of the countryside, and his preparation for the battle of life came from an intimate acquaintance with the "old blue black speller." He learned a little figuring, also how to read, something about geography, and had a smattering knowledge of United States History. However, his education was largely of the nominal order. His chief equipment was a vigorous physique and a nature filled with industry, and a mind active and alert for the opportunities through which he could win success. His early training prepared him for the growing of cotton, and his experience also comprised other details of farm work, but when he arrived in Texas, and early in the year 1892, became a farm hand near Waxahachie, his entire total capital was seven dollars. In Ellis county, there lived at that time a farmer named Treadway, who had come to Texas from Mr. Christian's home county in Alabama. The Treadway farm was first visited by young Christian, and Mr. Treadway gave him considerable fatherly advice and aid. His first regular work was in the employ of "Lit" Malone at fifteen dollars a month. His experience as a wage-worker on a cotton farm continued for three years, at the end of which time Mr. Christian found himself equipped with a good mule team, and ready to make his first independent start as a farmer. Renting a place near Rice, he lived in that community for seven years with some substantial results to his credit. From there he came to Navarro county, and found a place two and a half miles north of Powell. A part of his store of capital was invested in a farm of ninety-five acres, for which he obligated himself to pay thirty dollars and a half per acre, but the transaction was one largely on time. At the end of five years of intensive industry Mr. Christian was owner of three hundred and ten acres and was raising from fifty to one hundred bales of cotton every year.

In 1910 he bought a farm of two hundred and two acres adjacent to Powell. This land was in two tracts and cost respectively seventy-six dollars and eighty dollars an acre. On December 23 of the year 1912, he moved from his first farm to the Powell place, where he built a splendid and attractive colonial home, the best residence in the village. Nearby was erected a large barn, and the premises were otherwise improved to make it a convenient and comfortable place to live and a profitable business enterprise. This farm is entirely devoted to the cultivation of cotton. In 1913 he made a purchase of 100 acres of black land two miles south of Powell. The farms combined make Mr. Christian one of the largest farmers of Navarro county. He has three houses upon the first farm, seven on the second and one on the last.

James Ellington Christian was born in Clayton county, Georgia, and his father was James Christian, who died in Cullman in 1887 at the age of sixty-five. His father had been a soldier of the Confederate army, and was a native of Newton, Georgia, where he was reared and had the ordinary rural school education. The grandfather was Willis Christian, a Virginian by birth, who had sons Reuben, Elijah, William and James, and among his daughters were Melissa Wilkerson and Mrs. John Copeland. James Christian, the father, married Miss Mary Green, whose home is still in Cullman county, Alabama. Their children were: Julia, wife of Lewis Rowe of Georgia; Clarke, who married George Adams, and died in Alabama; Savanna, who married William Jackson of Savannah, Georgia; Drussilla, who married James Farmer; Ella, who married a Mr. Pritchett; Mattie, wife of Henry McConnell, of Alabama; William T. of Alabama, who married Laura Edlerman; James, who married Minnie Warren; Alonzo, of Rice, Texas, who married Etta Allen; and John of Roane, Texas, who married Gertrude Parks.

James Ellington Christian was married in Ellis county, Texas, December 18, 1894, only a few years after he came to this state, to Miss Minnie Warren, a daughter of W. M. Warren, who came to Texas from Mississippi. Mr. Warren married a Miss Cuthbertson, and reared six children. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Christian are Ruby, aged sixteen; Lilac, aged thirteen; and Catherine, aged three. Mr. Christian was reared in a Methodist home, has always supported the Democratic party, but is not inclined to politics. He has prospered, always enjoyed the high esteem of his associates, as big of heart as he is of body.

PLEASANT F. HALBERT. From a beginning as a farm hand and clerk in Navarro county some thirty years ago and against the handicaps of ill health, Pleasant Halbert has acquitted himself so successfully as to be surrounded himself with all he and his little family need, and at the same time has the highest esteem of those who know him. He is now living retired at Rice, where he has been a resident of Navarro county almost a century, having come here in 1882 from Lincoln county, Tennessee.

Pleasant F. Halbert was born in Lincoln county, Tennessee, September 9, 1861. He grew up as a country boy some miles west of Fayetteville in that state, and the hills of that locality educated him. Coming to Texas reaching his majority, he arrived in Corsicana with about sixty-three dollars in money, and his only acquaintance was an uncle in that town. His first employment was as a farm hand with Nick Graham, an old settler in the county, and he spent three years as a wage earner and sheep herder. With some knowledge of the value of money, after he quit working for wages, he began farming on rented land. After making two years he moved to Corsicana, and was employed by his brother John S. Gibson in an implement house. The following year his services were transferred to the M. E. & Son implement house, and he continued with that firm for fourteen years and was manager of the concern when he left. In the meantime he had come into public affairs and served two years as deputy sheriff under Sheriff West.

His close attention to business undermined his health, and in order to recuperate he bought a farm and left Texas. His farm was located eight miles east of Corsicana at Roane, but at the end of two years his health was still much impaired, and he then left the country altogether and for several years traveled extensively, visiting all parts of Old Mexico, visiting Monterey, Mexico, the City of Mexico, hunting and fishing in different resorts, and finally restored his health. During his travels he also covered most of west Texas and north of New Mexico, and finished his tour with a visit to his old home in Tennessee.

Mr. Halbert in 1897 moved to Rice and has since been partly retired. He is the owner of twenty-five hundred acres of land, about four hundred acres of which is in cultivation. He also owns some of the brick business property in Rice, erected one or two structures himself, and has been quite prominent both as a business man and citizen. He was one of the first board of aldermen. He helped promote the Farmers State Bank of Rice. In politics he is an anti-Bailey Democrat, and was one of the original Wilson men in this part of the state. Externally he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, and belongs to no church.

Mr. Halbert's father was James C. Halbert who still lives on the old home farm in Lincoln county, Tennessee, and was born there in 1838, and has spent his career as a farmer. Before the war he owned slaves, and was for four years a Confederate soldier. His has been a long life outside of his military experience, and he is a member of the Christian church. Grandfather Pleasant Halbert, also born in Lincoln county and of North Carolina parentage, from an ancestry of Scotch-Irish, married a Miss Crawford, and their children were: Maggie, who married Lemuel Suggs; Martha, who married Dr. Yowell; James C., father of the Rice business; Jane, who married Harlan George; Naomi, who married Monroe Clayton; Pleasant W.; Thomas; Dr. J. Halbert; Laura, who married Pleasant Hobbs; and B.; and Tula, who died when young.

Pleasant F. Halbert was married in Navarro county in 1897, to Miss Lizzie Loop, daughter of William Loop, a merchant and ranchman, who died at Rice in 1913. Mr. Loop came to Texas from Indiana previous to the war, and fought on the Confederate side as a Texas soldier. He married Sarah Catherine Naudain, who died in Rice, and had come from Pennsylvania. The children in the Loop family were: Ellen, who married Ceberry Garner; John Loop, Melissa, who married a Mr. Oliphant and died in Navarro county; David M.; Riley; Mrs. Halbert; Mattie, who married W. R. Kenner; and Addie, wife of W. M. Harper. Mr. and Mrs. Halbert have no children of their own.

CHARLES S. MARTIN. It will not be denied that Charles S. Martin, prominent as a fruit grower of Mount Vernon, founded the industry and gave the inspiration to this section of the state to embark in the culture of the famous Elberta peach. To his foresight as a pioneer in this department of pomological experiment is due the presence of numerous peach growers about Mount Vernon and Mount Pleasant, as well as to his leadership in planting, and in providing the means of avoiding the pitfalls of bad marketing conditions. His training in the work in his youth and his knowledge of the requirements for profitable peach culture led him to choose Franklin county as an ideal section for the exploitation of the industry, it was his ambition to found, and in which he has been so successful.

Charles S. Martin was born in Covington, Kentucky, on January 27, 1869. His father, Elias W. Martin, was a real estate dealer there, and went to that state from Florence, Indiana, where he was born in the early forties. He was liberally educated for a man of his time, and passed the years immediately subsequent to the Civil war as a teacher in the public schools. He served in the Union army and bore a Lieutenant's commission, and while on duty as a courier at the battle of Richmond (Kentucky) he was twice wounded. He was a Republican, and felt deeply upon public questions of the hour. He spent his last years in Cincinnati, Ohio, and passed away at his home on Walnut Hill in 1902. He married Miss Belle Hubbard, between whom a separation was fated to occur subsequently, and their children were as follows: Charles S., of this review; W. R., of Idaho Falls, Idaho; Lucy, the wife of Frank Parker, a newspaper man of Cedar Grove, New Jersey; and Shelton, who died in Los Angeles, California, leaving a family.

The father of Elias W. Martin, it may be said at this point was William Martin, who practiced law in Cincinnati during the early and middle years of his life, and then located upon a farm at Florence, Indiana, where he died. His wife was Lucy Jones, whom he married in Cincinnati, and Elias W. was the only child born to them.

Charles S. Martin was a student in the public schools of Cincinnati when he decided to call his education complete, and he entered the service of the Hill Nursery in that city and there studied practical forestry for some time. It was this early training that induced him to launch out in peach culture in Texas when he came to Mount Vernon in 1891. Mr. Martin first saw Texas before he reached his majority. He reached San Antonio in 1885 and took employment on the ranch of Nathan Hall in Tom Green county, and it may be stated that during the two years of his ranch association he acquired the vernacular and mental habits of the youth of the trail. When he abandoned the plains he sought to apply his knowledge of the pruning of orchards, which he had learned in his experience in Hill Nursery, and he carried that work on in California, Oregon, Washington and Idaho, acquainting himself in the meantime with conditions confronting orchardists in that then comparatively new fruit belt of the United States. He learned much that proved of later benefit to him in the four years that he was employed as a wielder of the pruning hook, and in 1891 he returned to Texas, stopping for a time at Paris, where he was employed with the small fruit growers of the community. It was then that he became actively cognizant of the peculiar adaptability of Franklin county to the culture of the Alberta peach. A tour of investigation and prospecting in and about Mount Vernon early satisfied him that this particular section might easily be converted from the conventional cotton field to the more uncommon peach orchard, although it so happened that he was not at the time in a position to inaugurate a movement to bring about such a change in the agricultural activities of the county.

At this juncture matters of a personal nature intervened to restrain him from carrying out the plan that was beginning to assume definite shape and form in his mind. His marriage in Mount Vernon, Franklin county, in March, 1891, was one factor, but the more vital one was the wish of his father, who was unwilling for his son to continue in Texas, and who made flattering concessions to that son to induce him to continue in the old home state. Some few months later the ill health of his wife made it necessary for Mr. Martin to spend a season in Florida, and with the restoration of her strength, they made their way to Texas, where Mr. Martin began his real career a few miles south of Mount Vernon, his aggregate capital at the time amounting to $8.50. It is significant of the man that he preferred to begin life in Texas, to which he was irresistibly attracted, without financial resources of any sort, rather than to continue in the place of his birth in the favor of his father who was abundantly able to start him out in business.

After the return of Mr. Martin to Franklin county, as a permanent resident, his first move was to acquire a farm, and his ninety acre tract was purchased on credit. He went into the work with the most commendable vim and courage, and in the five years of his residence thereon restored the place from an exhausted and altogether unsatisfactory state to one of normal fertility and health, demonstrating beyond all cavil his effectiveness as a farmer by paying for the land and bringing it up to a place where it might be included in the realm of live farm propositions. And when, after five years, he disposed of the place, he was sufficiently in pocket to enable him to locate agreeably at Mount Vernon, which has since been his home.

Having nursed and cherished his early ambition to engage in the peach growing business for ten years, Mr. Martin found that his ambition was now fast approaching the ripening stage, and he took active steps to achieve his goal. He purchased ten acres of soil, none too suitable for his purpose, but the best he could get at the time, and set out his first trees in 1900. Here was planted the pioneer orchard of this locality. In 1903 his seven hundred trees brought him a goodly crop of a thousand bushels, plus a generous potato crop on the same ground, and each succeeding year gave evidence that he had chosen a region ideal in its conduciveness to a pleasing size and flavor of the peach. Having conclusively demonstrated the proposition, he began to make successive additions to his orchard until three hundred of his six hundred acres of land are now devoted exclusively to peach culture.

With his own success, new ambitions appeared among his neighbors and acres of cotton land each year was converted into young peach orchards, until today several thousand acres of land in the vicinity of Mount Vernon constitute a veritable paradise of peach bloom each returning springtime. With the production of peaches in car load lots in this section, presented itself another problem to the peach growers: What to do about a satisfactory market for their product and a reliable agency through which to send the peach to the consumer at a profit to themselves. For a time buyers came to the community and took over the crop at a satisfactory arrangement and price, but this plan came to be unsatisfactory because of the growing disposition of the buyer, who felt himself somewhat in control of the situation, to claim the big end of the profits. Thus the producers came to see the necessity of a better arrangement. The history of selling upon consignment of reliable and responsible agencies in the markets of the north seemed the ultimate solution of the whole problem, which was then assuming alarming proportions.

To achieve this result, Mr. Martin announced to his neighbors that he would visit the market centers and seek out fruit dealers of reputation and enter into contract with them for the crop to be shipped out as the condition of the ripening fruit demanded. He met with distinct encouragement from all those who were increasingly anxious to be relieved of the old time method of marketing the crop, and spent ample time in the Ohio markets of Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus, establishing a business connection that has benefited the peach growers of the section ever since in most unquestionable manner. Out of this trip grew a business relationship with the Fisher Commission Company of Columbus, which has resulted in Mr. Fisher entering this field as a grower in partnership with Mr. Martin. The two have established themselves as shippers from Mount Vernon and Mount Pleasant and are handling all the stuff offered. Under this arrangement, the market price of the product always reaches the grower instead of the consignee's price of the old regime, which threatened annually to bankrupt the grower and return him to battle with a hoe and cotton sack.

Of the three hundred cars shipped out of this section in 1912, one-tenth of them came from the orchard of Mr. Martin himself. He selected his farm most wisely for market and producing conditions, having some two hundred acres within the limits of Mount Vernon, upon which he has located an addition to the town and build and sold a number of homes as a substantial developer of the place. The market for the Texas peach of this locality came as a direct result of the wedge Mr. Martin drove upon that historic trip into the field formerly occupied by the Georgia peach and until another and better locality for its development is discovered, which seems improbable, it will maintain its popularity along the banks of the Ohio.

Besides the fruit industry one of the greatest enterprises Mr. Martin has the last three years undertaken the breeding and raising of Standard bred horses, which will be a great help to the upbuilding of the country. He has quite a few, on his bermuda grass farm, of the very best breeding in the country; such as the Allerton 29 $\frac{1}{4}$ by George Wilkes, by Jay Bird, the Chimes family also the Keweenaw Boy family, all of the very highest breeding, and Mr. Martin is making quite a success along this line, as he now has a good many young colts from this select stock. As he sees it, the horse is one of God's most noble animals and he says that the automobile will never take the place of good drivers and saddle stock in his section on account of sandy and rolling country. While on the other hand, the standard breed seems to thrive and be a great success.

On March 1, 1891, Mr. Martin was married to Miss Smith, a daughter of Thomas Smith, who was born in Dublin, Ireland, and came to Texas prior to the Civil war period. He was a Confederate soldier, zealous in the cause, and a man of the strongest attachments and firmest prejudices. He passed his life in the community in which he first settled in Texas, giving his attention to the business of farming, and he died there. He wedded Miss Matilda Claudel, and their children numbered six. Mrs. Mattie Gill, the eldest, is a resident of Franklin county; Frank is living at Durant, Oklahoma; Mrs. Martin is the third born; Elmer, a farmer, lives in the vicinity of Mount Vernon; Miss Minnie Smith lives at home; and Ross, the youngest is a successful peach grower of Mount Vernon.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Martin are as follows: William R., who married Willie Lee Cowan, and is ated with his father's enterprise here; Lura, and Lucy.

The Martin home occupies a knoll commanding a fine view of the adjacent hills and vales, and is undoubtedly one of the sightly places of the urban community in which it is situated. The residence is of recent modern creation, of the bungalow type and equipped with water and lighting facilities common to metropolitan centers. Here Mr. Martin plans unerringly the reigns with nature that make his favorite industry a source of pleasing profit to him, and other plans as are fostered which add materially to his growing wealth. His motor car or roadster of imposing pedigree is oft encountered on the highways, when he and his family are upon business or pleasure bent, and the family as a whole derive a wholesome and uplifting assurance from the mere fact of living, while each individual is filling a useful place in the niche to which life has called him.

LEMUEL W. LASSITER. There has been a singular lack of display connected with the achievements of Lemuel W. Lassiter all through his career, but that fact detracts in no wise from the status of the man in Bogata to-day. He has seemed content to move along at a steady pace, without undue noise or any attempt to attract attention, and the very quietness and persistency of his efforts has been one of the most potent factors in his business success.

He began business in a small way in Bogata, commencing in about 1891. He erected a place where he carried on his affairs, stocked it with the entire assortment of medicine lines of the town, and in that way established himself in the drug business, the name of the place being Lassiter & Dickson. The death of Mr. Dickson left Mr. Lassiter alone, and he has since continued his business under his own name. To the original stock of drugs has been added first groceries, then hardware, and still later leather goods, so that the establishment now partakes almost of the nature of a village department store. He is also president of the State Bank of Bogata, of which he was one of the organizers, and has continued in this position since its organization. He is now one of the prosperous men of the community, and occupies a well chosen place in the confidence of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Lassiter was born in Callaway county, Kentucky, February 13th, 1846, and is the son of Burton and Susan (Boone) Lassiter. The father was born in Rockingham county, Virginia, in 1792, and as a young man moved in Jackson's Purchase in Kentucky. He served as General Dearborn in the War of 1812, after which he settled down to a farm and devoted himself to stock raising. He and a son, with the aid of a negro slave, sawed the lumber out of which he built their home on the farm, and he lived in that house until 1850, when he left it for his grave. His wife was a daughter of the famous Boone family of Virginia, and she died one year after the passing of her husband. Lemuel W. is the youngest one of a family of fourteen children born to him, and concerning some of the others, only a brief mention may be made. Jesse died in Kentucky and left a family; Andrew died in Kentucky, Texas, without issue, as did also James; Berry was a tobacco trader in Mississippi where he died without a family; Riley now lives in Brant, Coke county, Texas; Francis died in Abbeville, Tennessee, in 1862, while wearing the Confederate gray; Loretta married Martin Ross and died in Kentucky; Esther died in Red River county, Texas, as wife of W. G. Smith; Eliza Jane died in Clarksville, Texas, as Mrs. John Dickson; Mattie A. married T. A. and resides at Vienna, near Washington, D. C.

Lemuel W. Lassiter had scarce finished his country school training when the war broke out in 1861, and he immediately joined a company that was raised in his native county, which entered the Confederacy as a part of the thirty-third Tennessee Infantry at Union City. This action was the result of their fear that the war would be over before they could get into action in a Kentucky regiment, and the company held its place in the Tennessee regiment throughout the war. Company C was commanded by Captain W. F. Marberry and the regiment was in charge of Colonel A. W. Campbell, part of the corps of General Polk. The first fight in which Company C participated was at Shiloh, and the next was at Perryville, where Mr. Lassiter was wounded in the left arm. He was in hospital until the army confronted Murfreesboro, where he rejoined the company and had been on guard duty one day when the Murfreesboro engagement came on. He was next at Chickamauga, then Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain and Dalton, Georgia, where the events of the Atlanta campaign opened up. For one hundred days he was under fire, and on many of them pitched battles were fought in which he participated with his company and regiment. He was in the famous engagement around Atlanta on July 22nd, and after the fall of that city his regiment went with General Hood's command into Tennessee, where the battles of Franklin and Nashville were fought and Hood's army virtually destroyed. The Thirty-third Tennessee was in the command that covered the retreat of the remnant of the Confederate fighting force from Pulaski, Tennessee, and fell in with General Forrest's command en route to Corinth, Mississippi, where Mr. Lassiter was furloughed home. Upon his resumption of the contest he served in Tennessee until the war ended, without any further fighting.

Taking up civil life once more, Mr. Lassiter further prepared himself for a successful career by attending school in his home community, and he began his work as a merchant's clerk in Brandon's Mills, Kentucky. He tired of this after a few months and sought the school room as being a suitable field for his energies, thereafter teaching in the country schools until he left the state in 1870. His name is enrolled as a teacher in Callaway and McCracken counties, in Kentucky, and in Stewart county, Tennessee, and when he engaged in the work in Texas after coming to this state, he gave twenty years to the careful drilling of the youth of the country, and the children who learned of him in those early days are now the parents of the generation that fills the present schools.

Some twenty years ago he came to Bogata, having given up school teaching, and since that time he has been engaged in the merchandise business in this community. His business establishment partakes rather of the nature of a country department store than of the general store, and is one of the flourishing centers of the town.

Mr. Lassiter did not marry until he had reached the forty year mark. His first wife was Miss Mary A. Elmore. They were married on July 19, 1885, at Fulsbrough, Texas. She died one year later, on July 30, 1886, without issue. On July 18, 1893, Mr. Lassiter married Willie Cofield, a daughter of William M. Cofield, and their children are Fauna V., Iva L., Hontas, Britton, Trueman and Mary K.

Mr. Lassiter has undeniably been a potent force in the business life of Bogata during the years that he has carried on his activities here, and his influence has been none the less powerful because it has emanated from so quiet and unassuming a source. He has encouraged in every way that location of business enterprises in Bogata, and has given straightforward service to the community in a civic way. He is a Democrat, reared in the principles of the party, and has ever adhered to them with genuine conviction. He has long been a member of the Baptist church and has shared in the work of that body in his home community.

S. B. EDWARDS. The character of a town or city depends almost wholly upon its business men and financiers, as their reliability, push and enterprise, integrity, and fidelity to contracts and agreements are, in most instances, a measure of the prosperity and welfare of the community. The flourishing city of Hereford, Texas, is especially fortunate in its citizens and men of business, and among them none is held in higher respect than S. B. Edwards, president of the First State Bank of Hereford, and a citizen who in every respect is an exemplification of the self-made man. Mr. Edwards was born at Mexico, Missouri, September 7, 1870, and is a son of J. J. and Fannie (Wilcox) Edwards.

J. J. Edwards was born in Missouri, from whence he enlisted in the Confederate army during the war between the North and South, under Gen. Sterling Price, but, although he fought valiantly and took part in numerous engagements, he was never wounded or taken prisoner. Later in life he removed to Jackson county, Oklahoma, where he engaged extensively in stock raising, and there he still continues to reside, being sixty-eight years of age. His wife, who was born, reared and educated in Missouri, and there married, is also living, and is now sixty-five years of age. They were the parents of eight children, and of these S. B. was the third in order of birth.

After receiving his preliminary educational training in the public schools of Mexico, Missouri, S. B. Edwards became a student in the normal school at Chillicothe, Missouri, from which institution he was graduated at the age of twenty years. He embarked upon his career as an educator and for a number of years taught public schools in different sections of Oklahoma, but eventually drifted into the stock raising business in that State, being associated with his father and others until 1901 in that line. In that year he received his introduction to the banking business, when he became cashier of the Eldorado Bank, of Eldorado, Oklahoma, a position he continued to hold for something more than five years. On severing his connection with the Eldorado Bank, Mr. Edwards came to Texas and located at Hereford, here identifying himself with the Hereford State Bank, which was organized in the following year. In 1909 Mr. Edwards was elected president of this institution, a position which he has continued to fill to the present time. His wise and able management of the affairs of this institution has placed it among the leading banking houses of this section of the State, and has gained him an enviable reputation in financial circles, while his connection with various commercial and industrial interests has made him one of the important factors in the business life of the section. He owns a large cattle ranch in Deaf Smith county, in addition to other valuable property, has his own home in Hereford, and is accounted one of the substantial men of this part of Northwestern Texas, and his success is all the more creditable, in that it has been acquired solely through his own efforts and activities. Like all virile western men, Mr. Edwards is very fond of outdoor life, and finds his automobile a source of great pleasure as well as a material aid to him in his business affairs. Fraternally, Mr. Edwards is connected with the Masonic order, in which he has attained to the Knights Templar degree. His politics are those of the Democratic party, and in 1909 he was honored by his fellow-citizens with election to the office of mayor, serving therein until 1911 and giving the people of Hereford a sound, clean and business-like administration.

On December 24, 1896, Mr. Edwards was married at Eldorado, Oklahoma, to Miss Effie O'Brien, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin O'Brien, natives, respectively, of Missouri and Texas. Two children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, namely: Bryan, born in October, 1897, at Eldorado, Oklahoma, and now attending Laura Phillips school, at Amarillo, Texas; and Lloyd, born in October, 1899, at Eldorado, a student in the high school at Hereford.

D. B. CRAWFORD. Sheriff of Swisher county, Mr. Crawford is a citizen whose career as a farmer and a citizen has brought him the high esteem of all the people of this county, and in his office as sheriff he has a standard of efficiency which his successors will have difficulty in equalling.

D. B. Crawford, who was born at Louisville, in Denton county, Texas, March 30, 1874, is a son of one of the pioneers of north Texas, his father, William Crawford having the distinction of being the first permanent settler to locate in Denton county. William Crawford whose wife was Mary Crawford, was born in Kentucky and at the age of fifteen years moved with his parents to Tipton, Missouri, and thence to Kansas. In 1841 when a youth, he was engaged to drive a bull team across the plains to California, and made the round trip returning to Leavenworth, Kansas, after an absence of between six and seven months. No mishaps or special adventures marked this pioneer journey across the plains, and when he had accomplished his contract he again went out to California, where he remained in the mines until 1851. On his return east he located in Denton county, Texas, and thus in that year became the first settler of that county. After a time he established a shop for wagon manufacturing and carpentry, and was one of the honored and respected citizens and business men of that county until 1904, in which year he moved out to Swisher county, where he now resides, being retired at the age of seventy-five years. During the Civil war he entered the Confederate army from Denton county, and gave four years of his time and service to the southern cause. The mother was married in Texas and is now sixty-nine years of age. There were ten children in the family, of whom D. B. was the fourth.

During his youth he attended country schools in Denton county, and when his practical education was finished he took up farming and stock raising. That was his regular vocation, and he followed it on his own account for twelve years. He was then prevailed upon to accept the nomination for sheriff of Swisher county, and was elected in November, 1910. During the first two years of his service he showed his exceptional qualifications for the place and was again elected in November, 1912, so that he is now in his second term. He has done much to make Swisher county known as a law-abiding community, and is a vigorous, fearless upholder of the law. Politically he is a Democrat. In November, 1908, Mr. Crawford married Miss Jessie Lee Hogan, who was born in Denton county, a daughter of A. A. Hogan. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford have no children. As to Swisher county and this section of west Texas, Mr. Crawford believes it is the finest country in the world for any kind of farming or stock raising. He is the owner of his own home in Tulia, and considerable other city property.

ELONZO T. WOODBURN. One of the most prosperous residents of Hereford, Mr. Woodburn at the age of fifteen was an orphan boy employed as a farm hand in Arkansas. Soon afterwards he had four years' experience in the Confederate army, later became a farmer, and during his forty years of residence in Texas his industrious efforts have been rewarded with many of the best things in life, including a fair share of material wealth and also a happy home and a large family, for all of which he has liberally provided.

Elonzo T. Woodburn was born in Hardin county, Tennessee, July 15, 1843. His father was Thomas Woodburn, a native of North Carolina and a son of an Irishman who came from Erin and located in North Carolina. The father was by trade a blacksmith and died in 1841 when his son was six years of age. The maiden name of the mother was Mary Griffiths, also a native of Tennessee, in the eastern part of the state, and who died in 1851 in Tennessee. Elonzo T., after the death of his mother, moved to Randolph county, Arkansas, where he made his home with an older sister, Mrs. Ruhama Lindsay, up to the time he was fifteen years old. During that time his advantages in school were very meagre.

J. B. Nixon.

he has educated himself principally by keen observation and home study. Having been reared on a farm, found his first work as a farm hand in Randolph county, Arkansas, at ten dollars a month, with board and keep, and worked in that way during his sixteenth and seventeenth years. The war then broke out and he enlisted in Company F of the Seventh Arkansas Infantry under Col. Bat Shaver. For four years he followed the flag of the Confederacy, and saw many campaigns in Mississippi and Georgia, participating in the battles of Shiloh, Murfreesboro, Perryville, Kentucky, Chickasaw, Missionary Ridge and the Atlanta campaigns, in which he returned with Hood's army to Tennessee and fought at Franklin. He was never taken prisoner, was wounded four times by Yankee bullets, though suffered no ill effects from his military experience.

After the war was over he returned to Arkansas, and began farming on his own account, the vocation which he followed until 1901. He took up his residence in Arkansas, in 1874, after first locating in Hood county, which was his home for twenty-six years, during which he was a farmer and stock raiser. In 1899 he came west to Briscoe county, and then in 1907 moved to Hereford. During the six years spent in Briscoe county, he was in the hotel business at Silverton, and was also elected and held the office of county treasurer, until he removed to Hereford, at which time he resigned that office. In the latter city, Mr. Woodburn established Woodburn & Son, in partnership in the drug business, and they have conducted a very satisfactory establishment to the present day. Mr. Woodburn owns a large amount of land in Arkansas, and has his wants all liberally provided for.

He is an active Democrat in politics, is affiliated with the Masonic Order at Hereford and belongs to the Presbyterian church. In Arkansas, in 1868, he married Miss Sarah A. Black, who was born in Arkansas, a daughter of Dan and Emily Black, who were an old family of Arkansas. Mrs. Woodburn died March 6, 1910, in Hereford, where she is buried. Her death occurred at the age of fifty-seven. Ten children were born to their union, of whom nine are living, namely: William R., who married Mary Cooper and is a resident of Dimmitt, Castro county; Rose, deceased, who was the wife of D. Cross, and left two children; Leota, wife of W. O.aires of Weatherford; James D., who married Miss Mel Baker, and a resident of Claude, Texas; Charles, who is associated with his father in the drug business at Hereford, and is unmarried; Luther E., who married Lula Stapleton, and lives at Dimmitt; Mattie, who resides at home; Bell, at home; Meda, at home; and Ernest, at home. There are nine grandchildren in the family.

JOHN WALLACE HARPER, M. D. The present county health officer of Cottle county is a thoroughly equipped physician and surgeon and represents the best training and ideals of the modern medical profession. He has been in practice at Paducah since 1911, and has won success in his chosen field of work.

John Wallace Harper was born November 30, 1878, in Hill county, Texas, near Covington. He was the third of a family of nine children born to John Wesley and Mary Louise (Williams) Harper. Grandfather Elmore Harper moved from Mississippi to Texas in 1849 or 1850, and was a farmer and stock raiser in this state during the war he served in the Confederate army as a member of Walker's Brigade. The paternal ancestry is Scotch, and its first members settled in Virginia before the revolution, and were F. F. V.'s in that state. The maternal ancestry is Scotch-Irish, and they located in New Mexico, the doctor's maternal grandfather having been H. Williams, who came from New Jersey, and was one of the early merchants in Sabine county, where his daughter, the mother of the doctor, was born. John Wesley Harper, the father, was born in Louisiana, in 1849, and followed farming in Texas throughout his active career.

Dr. Harper received his early education in the public schools of Itaska and Hillsboro. He graduated Bachelor of Science in 1900 from Patterson Institute, and then studied medicine for two years in the University of Texas. In 1907 he graduated M. D. from Tulane University in New Orleans, and commenced his first practice in Johnson county, where he remained until 1911. In that year he came to Paducah, and has since had his share of the practice in this county and has also been honored with the position of health officer. The doctor is a member of the Hardeman county and the State Medical Societies, and the American Medical Association. In politics he is a Democrat, and is a member of the Blue Lodge of Masonry, the Woodmen of the World, and the Modern Woodmen of America. His church is the Baptist.

On July 10, 1912, at Buena Vista, Dr. Harper married Miss Myrtle Herron, a daughter of J. Porter Herron, now deceased, and his wife, Mary Herron.

JAMES B. NIXON. For more than forty years James B. Nixon has been a telling factor in the affairs of Lamar county, and as a farmer he maintains a high place in general importance and in the nature of his prosperity. His fine home, situated less than two miles from the town of Deport, almost commands a view of the place, and is one of the landmarks of the district. Like the great majority of those whose efforts have aided materially in the improvement of this rural community, he began the struggle for independence and place with only his hands and generous share of courage and determination as capital. These qualities, it may be said, are assets that will outweigh mere cash in the scales of equity, and they have stood stanchly by their possessor through the years when he was battling for financial supremacy in a new country. His advent into Lamar county dates from July 28, 1870, when, returning from a "cow drive" to Kansas, he stopped for a visit with relatives from his home county. An accidental injury which he sustained while visiting in Atlas detained him beyond his original intentions and resulted in changing the whole course of his life. Thus does the destiny of man depend upon the accidental pranks of fate.

James B. Nixon was born in Perry county, Alabama, on September 27, 1847, and the first nine years of his life were spent in Hamburg. His parents left that place with their three children, a few slaves that had long been in the family, and their principal household gods, in December, 1857, and directed their footsteps toward Texas. They traveled overland, the chief mode of journeying in those primitive days, and in their travels crossed the Mississippi at Rodney, the Red River at Alexandria, and reached their destination in Fort Bend county in January, 1858, after a hard journey, on which they were beset by many untoward happenings, but nevertheless they reached their haven in excellent health and spirits. The head of the family was James Nixon. He died at Wills Point about the time he entered Van Zant county as a settler in April, 1868, and was buried at Cedar Grove. He had devoted his life to the farming industry, to which business he had been born and reared, and when he reached his majority he became employed as an overseer on a nearby plantation. He became a trader in negroes and dealt in human flesh until the Emancipation Proclamation put an end to that traffic for all time. He spent eight years in Fort Bend county, this state, and while he was directly opposed to secession in policies, he bore his share in the expenses of the war that resulted from those issues, and though he himself did not participate in the fray, gave one of his sons to the cause of the Confederacy. He was born in 1807 at Franklin, Georgia, and was the son of Joseph Nixon, who owned a small lead mine in Cobb county, Georgia, where he died in about 1825.

His mother was twice married and the children of the first marriage were as follows: James, John, William, Uriah, Joseph, Lurany and Seramy, twins, and Betsey. The latter died at Crowley's Ridge, in Greene county, Arkansas, where they were early settlers, and she was the wife of a Mr. Thompson at the time of her death. Lurany never married, but her twin sister, Seramy, married Henry Norton. After the death of James Nixon, the widow married a Mr. McCampbell. The mother was in her maiden days Margaret E. Blackburn, the daughter of Daniel Blackburn, a South Carolinian, who passed his life in that state. She was born in 1826, and died in 1886 at the home of her son James.

During the years of their residence in Fort Bend county, James B. Nixon, of this review, got his education in the public schools. Among his playmates of those early days were some who later became leaders in the famous feud in the seventies between the "Jaybirds and Peckerwoods," as they were called,—a feud that cost the county the lives of many of its citizens and which finally had to be quelled by the state militia. The cabin schools of the day gave him his early training and later he attended the Academy at Richmond, where he completed what was a fairly good education for those days. He was the possessor of an alert and active mind and with an exceptionally retentive memory he was better equipped mentally than many another who had greater educational advantages. He was yet a school-boy when he responded to the call of the Confederacy in 1863, first joining the local militia as one of Captain H. H. Good's company, and was mustered into the regular service at the mouth of the Brazos river as a member of Colonel Bates' cavalry regiment. He was soldiering from July, 1863, up to the close of the war, being detailed as a courier and making his reports to the headquarters of General Bates. General Magruder was in command of the department and the principal work of this command was in breaking through the blockades and skirmishing with Federal detachments with which they came into contact. Camp Lublock, at Houston, Texas, was the place of their rendezvous until the tottering of the Rebellion was felt, when the troops were ordered to Columbia, Texas, where they were mysteriously maneuvered about by the department commander, then discharged and ordered home in time for the general to carry out his plan to seize the several hundred bales of Confederate cotton located there and flee with it to France where common report has it that he sold the cotton and subsequently lost the proceeds, later returning to the United States and dying in dire poverty in the city of Galveston, Texas. So much for another phase of the incidents peculiar to the war.

After Mr. Nixon returned home from the war he continued as a member of the parental household until 1870, when he hired out to the Rutledge people at the wage of a dollar a day and his keep, or rather expenses, as one of a party engaged to take a drove of nine hundred cattle to Abilene, Kansas, then the nearest shipping point to Texas. The herd passed up through the Chickasaw nation without untoward incident affecting them, other than the sacrifice of a few head to the Indians in order to prevent a stampede. The caravan was ninety-five days on the trail and spent some time in breaking steers for the market that the frontier Kansas farmers furnished at $75 a yoke. There was novelty and excitement in plenty, and it served to give young Nixon an appetite for more of the same sort of adventure, and it was only his accident in Lamar county and his subsequent location there that prevented him from returning and making another trip of the same kind.

Upon his recovery his attachment to Texas was so strong that he gave up all thought of returning to his native place, and began to speak of Texas as his home, which indeed it has been from then until to-day. He had no worldly possessions to claim his attention and he felt that he could accomplish as much with his bare hands in Texas as he could anywhere, if not more. His first work was on a farm and in 1872 he hired out to a freighter, hauling supplies from Jefferson, Texas, to Paris, his route taking him over what is his present farm. With his four yoke of cattle he drove over the trail leading past Bogata and to Dangerfield, en route to the head of navigation at Jefferson. At the close of the year he returned to his new friends in Lamar county and once more applied himself to farm work, and he hired out to S. H. Westerbrook for a season at twenty dollars a month. While he was attending to the duties of his position as a farm hand, he was also paying a considerable attention to his employer's daughter, with the result that he was married to Miss Westerbrook on January 28, 1874, when he contracted for a tract of one hundred and forty-four acres of school land at two dollars an acre. He erected a board house after a short time and this place constituted his first home as a married man. The story of his forty years of activity as a farmer of this county is partially told when his possession of a fine farm of two hundred and sixty-nine acres of fertile and productive land is mentioned, for it is in the acquiring of that property that he has been most strenuously occupied, and therein lie his chief interests. One hundred and fifty acres of the aggregate is under cultivation, and a splendid home ornaments the place, built in 1897, as well as a number of substantial houses wherein his tenants are domiciled. Mr. Nixon was originally a grain farmer, but the tendency of the farming element of this district was apart from wheat, and he finally gave himself up to the attractions of cotton and corn, the great money crops of East Texas. His forecast in regard to the rise of farm land values led him to become an occasional trader in that class of realty, and some of his wealth has been added in that manner. He was one of the original stockholders of the Deport Cotton Oil Company, whose factory was destroyed by a cyclone, and has lent efficient aid to other local efforts requiring a combination of capital.

Mr. Nixon has served Lamar county as county commissioner, his service dating from 1895 and 1896, and he was a member of the executive board having in charge the building of the present court house. He was appointed by the county court as commissioner to sell the property of the Yates estate at Deport, the same being a most responsible trust, and one that covered a period of four years, but was disposed of in a manner highly satisfactory to all concerned. He has on various occasions officiated as secretary of the farmers' organizations of many other bodies, of a fraternal, social or political character. One of his marked peculiarities is the fact that he is ambidextrous, and his cunning with a pen is remarkable, not to employ a stronger term. He writes legibly and rapidly with either hand and makes his signature either from the left or right side of the page and with either hand.

Mr. Nixon is a Presbyterian and was secretary of the Presbyterian church for twenty-five years, and is now an elder of the U. S. A. congregation of Deport.

As has already been stated, Mr. Nixon married in 1873, his wife being Miss Martha Westerbrook, the daughter of his then employer, Samuel H. Westerbrook. Their children are designated as follows: James S., a farmer in the vicinity of Deport, married Stella Flagon and is the father of Albert and Nora; Lurany is the wife of Jacob E. Philley, of Deport, and has children Noel, Wilis, Beatrice, Lois, Ralph and Herman; John D., also a farmer, married Maggie Staton, and their children are Opal, Ethel, Mary and a baby; Zorada is Mrs. A. G. Singleton, located at Vaughan, New Mexico, and they have one child, Maurine; Asbury, a merchant of Deport, married Pearl Ball, and their son is Jack; Joseph is a farmer, married to Mamie Wright, and they have two children; Vera is the wife of J. A. Phillips of Deport; and Albert Sidney, Jessie Bell and Raymond complete the list of the ten living children of the thirteen to these parents. Mr. and Mrs. Nixon reared a family, all of them having come to fill places of prominence in the various communities that represent home, and as people who have contributed freely to the development and growth of their own district, as well as giving to the country a numerous progeny that have honorably honored the family name, they are entitled to much of respect and consideration at the hands of their fellowmen in their home district and wherever they are.

D. RAMSEY. In 1887 Mr. Ramsey built the first building on the town site of Clarendon, and introduced a supply of drugs and sundries for the trade of this then sparsely populated country. The pioneer merit has been on the ground ever since. A quarter of a century has convinced him that Donley county will grow out of which good, rich soil is capable, and as he himself has been prospered, so he can foresee only wealth and a substantial increase for all the generations who and in the future will possess themselves of this fruitful land.

Mr. H. D. Ramsey is a native of Kentucky, born in Hopkins county, April 7, 1859, a son of John and Joseph (Barnhill) Ramsey. His father, a native of Kentucky, where he was reared and educated, in 1849 led the great exodus to California, spending three years on the gold coast, after which he returned and folded farming in Hopkins county, until his death in 1902 at the age of thirty-six years. The mother, who was born in Hopkins county, September 6, 1882, at the age of forty-two, was born in Webster county, Kentucky. There were two children, of whom the Clarendon merchant and banker was the older.

Mr. Ramsey's preparation for life was largely of the practical kind, in which one learns how to do a thing by doing it. However, he had the advantage of the public schools, and also attended the college at Princeton, Kentucky, for three years. He then accepted a clerkship in a drug store in Princeton, where he remained until he was thoroughly qualified as a pharmacist, and also equipped with a complete knowledge of the drug business as a line of commerce. On moving to Texas he began work for L. M. Brunswick at Fort Worth. From there he went out to San Angelo, during the early days of that town, and was employed as pharmacist by Dr. F. Smith. Returning to Fort Worth he was then engaged in the business with L. S. Kruse, where he continued for several years. Finally, as already stated, he came to Clarendon, when there was no town of Clarendon, except the railroad and the bare site, and opened a stock of drugs in the first business structure on the town location. He was actively identified with the drug business at Clarendon up to 1905, at which time he sold out his establishment. He then organized the Donley County State Bank, of which he became president, and has been the head of this prosperous financial institution to the present time. The Donley County State Bank is capitalized at $50,000.00 and its officials and directors are among the most substantial business men and citizens of Donley county.

Mr. Ramsey is also a director of the Clarendon hospital. His prominent position in the business community has brought him into public affairs, and in 1890 he was elected treasurer of Donley county, and by re-election served five terms or ten years, until 1900. In politics he is a Democrat, and is active in Masonry, having won thirty-two degrees of the Scottish Rite, and filled a number of the chairs of the different branches. His church is the Missionary Baptist.

At Clarendon, on April 7, 1900, Mr. Ramsey married Miss Rosa Hampton, who was born in Virginia, a daughter of Wade Hampton. Her parents were among the old settlers of Grayson county, Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey have no children.

R. C. SMITH, M. D. A physician and surgeon who stands practically at the head of his profession in his community, Dr. Smith has spent more than twenty years in practice in Texas, and since 1909 has had his residence and professional center at Wichita Falls. Dr. Smith entered his profession after a great deal of hard work and self-sacrifice, since his way was not provided by others, and he had to win the means to obtain most of his education. Since beginning practice he has succeeded beyond the ordinary, and has taken a high place in the medical fraternity of the state.

R. C. Smith was born at Seguin, Texas, January 27, 1863, a son of Dr. R. L. and Theresa (Smith) Smith. His father, a native of Mississippi, came to Texas when a child, his parents having settled in DeWitt county, where they were early settlers. The father was reared in that vicinity, attended the common schools, and later medical college, and then began his practice, which he continued with considerable success until his death, in 1906, in Gonzales county. He was seventy-five years of age at the time of his death. During the war he enlisted in the Confederate army, and was surgeon in one of the Texas regiments. The mother was born in Burlington, Iowa, and of an entirely different Smith family from that of her husband. She came to Texas with her parents, who settled at Seguin, where she finished her education and was married. She is now living at the age of seventy-five and spends part of her time with a daughter in Gonzales county and the remainder with her son, the doctor, at Wichita Falls. She was the mother of eight children, all of whom are still living, and Dr. Smith was the second in order of birth.

As a boy he attended public schools, and began his law studies under his father. He obtained a certificate to practice locally in 1888, and did his first professional work at Shiner, in Lavaca county. He finally went away to complete his education at Louisville, Kentucky, where he was graduated from a college of that city in 1893. For two years he practiced in Navarro county, and was then at Clifton, in Bosque county, and in 1896 moved to Cisco. Dr. Smith was the leading physician at Cisco until 1909, in which year he transferred his residence to Wichita Falls. Since then he has acquired a large practice, has bought a fine home, and has interested himself in many business affairs, and is the owner of considerable property in this city. He is a member of the Wichita County Medical Society, is surgeon for the Wichita Falls Traction Company, and surgeon for the Wichita Falls & Northwestern Railroad. During his residence at Cisco he served as alderman for one term and was also a member of the school board. In politics Dr. Smith is a Democrat, and is affiliated with the Masonic Order and has served as Eminent Commander of the Knights Templar Commandery. His membership in the Baptist church dates from 1879.

On October 24, 1888, Dr. Smith married Miss Sally L. Kell, who was born at Clifton, Texas, a daughter of Frances Kell, who came to Bosque county in 1854, and was one of the pioneers in the development of that section of Texas. Both he and his wife are still living and both are eighty-one years of age. The six children born to the union of Dr. Smith and wife are: Francis, Theresa, Emma Jo, R. Clyde, Wells and Lucile.

JAMES E. BROUSSARD. One of the vigorous and progressive young leaders in affairs in Chambers county is James E. Broussard, merchant, county commissioner and closely identified with the industrial and commercial development of this considerably new section of Texas. Chambers county was for many years out of the path of development, but in recent years, largely owing to the influx of capital and local enterprise, its resources are placing the county among the best of the Gulf Coast country.

James E. Broussard was born at the J. T. White home on Turtle Bayou, in Chambers county, in 1883.

His parents were D. L. and Sarah (White) Broussard. His father, who still has home at Turtle Bayou and is a successful cattleman and farmer, was born at Taylor's Bayou, in Jefferson county, where the Broussard family first settled on coming from Louisiana. D. L. Broussard, whose home has been at Turtle Bayou since 1882, is a son of Seven Broussard and a nephew of the late Moise Broussard, these two brothers being among the best known of several members of the Broussard family who built up comfortable fortunes in Jefferson, Orange and Chambers counties of this state. Mr. Broussard's mother was a White, one of the earliest pioneer families in southern Texas.

James E. Broussard was reared and educated in Chambers county, and from the local schools attended school at Galveston, where the family lived for two years; was for two years a student at St. Edwards College, in Austin, and was in the University of Texas, at Austin, three years. After leaving college Mr. Broussard at once took up a business career, and since January, 1906, has been one of the successful general merchants at Anahuac. He is at the head of the extensive firm of J. E. Broussard and brother. His other interests connect him still more closely with the industrial enterprise of this section. Mr. Broussard is president of the Trinity River Irrigation District, which is the source of water supply for a large area of rice-growing land.

Mr. Broussard is one of Chambers county commissioners, representing precinct Number two. He was appointed to that office in the spring of 1912 to fill out an unexpired term, and in the July primaries received the Democratic nomination, his election coming in the following November.

DR. ISAAC N. ROBERSON. Since 1907 Dr. Roberson has been actively engaged in practice in Iowa Park, as a physician and surgeon, and he is one whose accomplishments in his chosen field of work have brought him a fair measure of fame and prosperity. He is known for one of the most efficient and capable doctors in this section of the state, and his success in his profession has been due entirely to his own efforts. Starting life without that aid which so many young men find ready for them, he has worked his way well to the top of his profession, getting his schooling only through his own hard work, and every step of his early progress being fought for step by step. It is successes such as these that are most stable at bottom, and leave nothing to be desired in the way of permanency.

Isaac N. Roberson, M. D., was born on September 19, 1865, in Putnam county, Tennessee, and is a son of William and Louisa (Welsh) Roberson, Tennessee people of old and well-known families in that state. The father passed his life in his native state, and died there in 1883, aged sixty-six years, the mother passing away in 1885, when she was fifty-nine years old. They became the parents of nine children, and of the number Isaac N. was the seventh.

In boyhood days Isaac Roberson attended the schools of Putnam county, and later entered Doyle college, in White county, Tennessee, after which he came to Texas, in 1890, and here entered the Fort Worth Medical College. In 1905 he was graduated from Bailey University, in the medical department, but prior to his graduation he had taken up practice in Colena, Cook county, on a certificate of practice granted him by the state in 1898. In 1901 he engaged in practice, continuing from then until 1907, barring the interval when he was in attendance at Bailey University. In 1907 he established himself in practice in Iowa Park, and here his work has been of a uniformly high order, calculated to inspire confidence and esteem in all who have observed his work.

In a professional way, Dr. Roberson has membership in the Cook County Medical Association, and he is fraternally identified with the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World, in all of which he is active and popular. His religious affiliations are with the Baptist church, and he is a Democrat, though not especially active in the work of the party.

On December 3, 1899, Dr. Roberson was married to Miss Lizzie J. Mathes, of Corlena, Texas, a daughter of W. J. and Mary Mathes. The father is now deceased, but the mother still lives at Corlena, where she has long been known. They were pioneers of that district, and the father was a well-known stock farmer. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Roberson, as follows: Clara Roberson, born in 1901; Allie Mary, born July 25, 1903; and died on July 23, 1905, at Woodbine, where she was born; Cassie, born on the 4th day of August, 1906, at Woodbine, is attending school at home; and Marie Roberson, born on September 15, 1909, in Hood, Texas.

Dr. Roberson has lived in Texas quite long enough to have grasped a realization of the importance and resources of the great southwestern commonwealth, and he has an unlimited faith in the future of Texas. Especially does he feel that Iowa Park will be heard from in later years, and considers his choice of a location a happy one.

DR. WILLIAM H. GRAYSON, a resident of Texas since 1896, has in the intervening years proven himself many kinds of a success. He has prospered as a physician, as a business man and as a farmer, and he has demonstrated his success as a citizen in no uncertain terms. The field of finance also has claimed some attention from him, and as one of the organizers of the First State Bank of Bogata, in which he has since been a director, he deserves some credit in that direction. Born in Tate county, Mississippi, on August 18, 1860, William H. Grayson is the son of Dr. John Grayson, a practitioner of the Regular school, but not a college graduate.

William H. Grayson was born in Huntsville, Madison county, Alabama, and died in Tate county, Mississippi, in 1888. He moved to Arkansas prior to the Civil war, locating in Woodruff, and from there he entered the service of the Confederate army with General Price's troops. Upon his return from the war, he went to Mississippi and there spent his life in its remaining years, dividing his attention between the practice of medicine and the planting business. He was a son of George Grayson, and the grandson of John Clam Grayson, an Englishman who came to the Colonies as the first of the Grayson family, and ended his days in Alabama, where he lies buried. The descendants of John Clam Grayson became slaveholders and were classed with the educated and aristocratic element of the south. George Grayson married Cynthia Hanna and of the large family of children born to them Dr. John Grayson, father of the Bogota physician, was one. John Grayson shared in the liberal education his parents gave the entire family, and that he did not take his medical degree from a college was due to existing circumstances at the time which made it possible for him to engage in practice without that preliminary.

Dr. John Grayson married Miss Rachel Gann, a daughter of Jack Gann, and he is still living at the age of eighty years, and makes her home in the vicinity of Deport. They became the parents of five children, as follows: Sallie, the wife of Stephen Crocket, of Lamar county, Texas; James Napoleon, a Lamar county farmer; Charles, who died in Mississippi, leaving a family; Mrs. Alice Osteen, of Texarkana; and Dr. William H., the oldest of the five.

William H. Grayson was only a schoolboy when he first came to Texas. His life up to that time had been passed in the community in which he was born, and he had a slight degree of learning from the rural schools of his district. He had enough experience as a helper on the home farm to make it possible to earn wages at that work while he was yet very young, and his earnings in respect served to further his education. He studied the school of Captain W. L. Rice, making the most rapid progress, and he later worked with Capt. Rice as teacher in Bogata schools in 1884 and 1885. So it was from the age of sixteen until he was twenty-four, the dollar he had earned had been used in the furtherance of his education. In 1884 he took up the study of medicine in Memphis, Tennessee, as a student in the Hospital College and he was graduated from that institution in 1886. He was forced to resort to the school again in order to replenish his purse sufficient for him to establish himself in practice, and he then spent the year in teaching, after which he began his practice in Murray, Tate county, Miss., continuing in practice there for ten years. He then returned to Texas, and engaged in business and finance, also giving some attention to farming operations, and since that time he has been more or less concerned in business of various sorts, as well as in his profession. Dr. Grayson has not neglected his medical studies at any time in his career, and has had time for post-graduate work at the Memphis Hospital, and in Barnes Medical College in St. Louis in 1893, thus demonstrating his desire to keep abreast of the advances made in his profession and maintain the value of his services at the highest possible point, and at the same time making it possible to serve his patrons with the utmost professional efficiency.

As a farmer, Dr. Grayson has manifested a splendid ability. He gave this industry a try-out while in Mississippi, so that when he turned his attention to it in Texas, it was not as an experiment, but rather as the resumption of his former activities in the agricultural line. In Mississippi he was known for one of the large cotton growers in his section, and his reputation for skill in the business was not suffered in his Texas manipulations. Here he has applied modern scientific methods and has demonstrated to his neighbors the difference between the old-fashioned hit-or-miss farming, and the later variety that calls for all the scientific knowledge a man may bring to bear on the subject. Results have brought him out right in his scientific farming. He has a fine place of four hundred and thirty acres of the best Texas land, of which one hundred and thirty-six acres are under cultivation, and six families of industrious farmers are housed upon his place, the labors of that many being required in the proper handling of his estate. There are no idle tenants on his place, and the Grayson property gives evidence everywhere of a high class of labor applied to its manipulation.

Dr. Grayson added his capital as well as his influence and his good judgment in the establishment of the First State Bank of Bogata, and has been a director of the bank from then until the present time. He is a Master Mason, and an Odd Fellow, as regards his fraternal relations, and his church membership is with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He was a member of the Board of Stewards of that church for fifteen years, has attended numerous of its conferences, and sat in the Dallas conference of 1912. He is a fine example of the thrifty, up-to-doing man of affairs, and the results of his strong and wholesome nature as applied to his every-day business affairs are everywhere apparent in the continued prosperity that has rewarded his efforts. For a man of thirty-three, he is extremely youthful in appearance, and few men, if any, have so strong a hold upon the regard and affections of the people of his community as has Dr. Grayson.

On December 20, 1888, Dr. Grayson was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Gann, a daughter of Joshua and Lou (Laughlin) Gann, of Tate county, Mississippi. Dr. Grayson died in 1898, leaving five children, of whom brief mention is made as follows: Dr. Roy A. Grayson, practicing physician of Bogata and a graduate of Memphis Hospital Medical College of the Class of 1910; William Claud, bookkeeper for the Halley Hardware company of McGregor, Texas; Wilbur D., of Bogata;

Myrtle, the wife of Hugh Guion, of Bogata, and Hobart. On February 7, 1900, Dr. Grayson married Miss Celestial A. Ferguson, the daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Holt) Ferguson.

The Grayson home is one of the finest in Bogata—a large, roomy and altogether comfortable residence, built after the fashion of a country home, and in every way suited to the taste and requirements of a family such as the Doctor's is.

WILLIAM ENOCH DOZIER. As city engineer of Temple, William Enoch Dozier has a position of some importance, calling forth all his latent skill and acquired knowledge of the science of which he is a devotee. The sewerage system being installed in the city under his direction, at a cost of $75,000, is a model of engineering skill, and already reflects great credit upon the man in whose charge the work rests. Mr. Dozier has been identified with civil engineering since he was a boy, beginning the work as an axeman and carrying it forward through each successive step of training until he came to the top of the profession, and he has a reputation in these parts for thoroughness and efficiency in his work that is his most valuable asset.

Mr. Dozier was born at Ashland, Tennessee, on November 13, 1880, and is the son of Jesse D. and Ladonia (Young) Dozier. Both were native Tennesseans, and came to Texas in 1885. Here the father took up farming, in which he continued to the end of his days, death claiming him in 1900, when he was fifty-three years of age. He was long a member of the Baptist church and was a Democrat in his political faith. The wife and mother also is an active member of the Baptist church and a devout and whole-souled Christian woman. She now makes her home in Grant, Oklahoma. They were the parents of seven children, of which number the subject was the sixth born.

Mr. Dozier was but five years old when his parents moved to Texas, and he has made this state his home ever since. He gained his early education in the public schools of Lamar county, with a high school course as the ultimate schooling with which fortune favored him. Up to the age of fourteen years of age he lived with his parents on the home farm, and at that youthful period he set forth to begin making his own way in the world. He began by taking a position with a crew of engineers, his work being that of axeman, and his salary was thirty dollars a month and his board. From that time to the present he has continued in the engineering field, advancing from the more humble stations to those higher up as rapidly as he might through close attention to the work in the field, and such information as he was able to glean from works on the subject, which he nightly perused under the advice and guidance of experienced engineers. Ambition and energy brought its own reward, and Mr. Dozier has since those days held many positions of prominence in engineering circles. He has worked in many states, as well as in Mexico, and operated with various railroad companies and private concerns. He was connected with the Southern Pacific Railroad in Mexico for two years, during which time he superintended the construction of eight hundred miles of track, having charge of the locations between Conliacan and Mazatlan in Mexico. It was in January, 1910, that Mr. Dozier came to Temple as chief engineer of the Temple & Northwestern Railroad Company, and he soon after took up his duties as city engineer, as has already been intimated in the opening paragraph. His work here has shown a quality of excellence that has given him his prominence in his profession, and greater successes are yet in store for him, by all the signs.

On August 5, 1905, Mr. Dozier was married at Cleburne, Texas, to Miss Winnie Mahan, the daughter of Captain and Mrs. J. W. Mahan of that place, and a granddaughter of Major E. M. Heath, who organized Johnson county, Texas, and was long prominent in its development. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dozier—William E. Jr.

Although not a church member, Mr. Dozier favors the church of his parents, although he is never found withholding his support from any worthy cause. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, with Blue Lodge and Commandery affiliations, and is also a member of the Elks. He has been prominent in the Chamber of Commerce as an interested and influential member, and is also identified with the South Side Improvement Association. He is a Democrat and manifests an active and intelligent interest in the movements of the party in his district, although he has held no offices of any kind beyond his present position as city engineer. Mr. Dozier and his wife are socially prominent, and they have a large circle of staunch friends in these parts.

ROBERT SMITH WATKINS. To the numerous Watkins family first founded in Texas by Jesse J. Watkins in the thirties, and subsequently represented by many prominent men in the professions, in agriculture, and in civic affairs, belongs Robert Smith Watkins of Kemp, one of the most successful stock farmers and business men of this vicinity. Though past sixty years, Mr. Watkins is still in the prime of life, weighs two hundred and forty pounds and looks young, notwithstanding his hard labor in winning financial independence.

His grandfather, J. J. Watkins, was the confidential representative of General Sam Houston in treating with the Indians along the frontier at Texas Republic, and who lost his life on a mission undertaken at the behest of General Houston. More details concerning his career will be found elsewhere in this work, in connection with the Watkins family history. The father of the Kemp stock farmer was Rev. Richard Overton Watkins, whose life was devoted for more than half a century to church and school work in the Cumberland Presbyterian denomination.

Robert Smith Watkins was born at Nacogdoches, Texas, January 31, 1852, and was four years old when he accompanied the family to Kaufman county in December, 1855. He was given the advantages of attendance at Trinity University at Tehuacana, which institution his father had nourished and fostered for many years. Following closely upon his career at school, he returned to his native county, and taught one term in the country district. Choosing farming as his occupation, he early became associated with his brother, Richard O. Watkins, for that purpose. They were handicapped by lack of means with which to buy tracts of the rich land which they foresaw would at some time be very valuable, although then very cheap. However, the brothers used their credit in buying parcels of land as opportunity presented, and met their obligations as the soil produced the crops or the grass the cattle, which brought in the cash necessary for their extending operations. It is nearly forty years now since the brothers became partners, and the relationship is still in existence, having been mutually satisfactory and profitable. The brothers have extended the lines of their holdings, buying new tracts and placing some six hundred acres under cultivation, have built houses and other buildings for their tenants and stock, and now own twenty-five hundred acres extending back to Cedar Creek from Kemp and including the fertile region of the Black Land and the Sandy Loam Bottoms along the meanderings of Cedar Creek. In the course of its development their live stock enterprise eventually included mules and jacks, in addition to cattle. The brothers by much patience and skill laid the foundation of a lasting reputation as breeders of jacks and mules. The original stock for this industry they secured from the Wortham herds at Waco. Their treatment of the soil is careful and intelligent, and they have succeeded in producing three-quarters of a bale of cotton per acre without the use of fertilizer. Some half dozen families furnish the labor required to manage their six hundred acres in cultivation, and the Watkins farms are large and productive enterprises, on a plane with many of the best business houses and industries of Texas in importance. Experience has demonstrated to their satisfaction that the "Rowden and Mebane" cotton best fits prevailing conditions on their plantation and they raise that staple altogether.

Mr. Watkins is interested in politics only as a Democratic voter. He is a deacon in the Kemp Congregation of the Presbyterian denomination. Besides his other interests he is a stockholder and director in the Farmers Guaranty State Bank of Kemp.

On April 18, 1907, Mr. Watkins was married in Kemp to Miss Myrpha Collins, a daughter of William Collins of Pontiac, Illinois, city collector of that place. Mr. Collins, born in Ohio, married a Miss Shreve, who became the mother of one child. Mrs. Watkins was born at Russellville, Ohio, spending a portion of her life at Bellfountain in that state. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have a delightful home life, though they are without children.

JAMES T. TADLOCK, M. D. In a profession where progress and position depend entirely upon individual merit, and scientific knowledge of the practical needs of the sickroom, Dr. James T. Tadlock of Dayton has made advancement, and by his close conformity to professional ethics, combined with talent, he has won the respect of his fellow practitioners as well as the confidence and patronage of the public. A resident of this town since August, 1902, he has identified himself with all that has made for progress and development.

Dr. Tadlock was born at Elba, Coffee county, Alabama, May 14, 1872, and is a son of James K. P. and Rebecca Jane (Baker) Tadlock.

The Tadlocks of this article originated in South Carolina, in which the paternal grandfather of Doctor Tadlock was born, he being Allen Tadlock. He was married to Miss Margret D. Kirkley, who died at Lockhart, Texas, at the age of ninety years, as Mrs. Dobbs. The children by her first marriage were: John; Dock; James K. Polk; Malinda, who married John McClain and died at Grand Saline, Texas; Lou, who married William Dobbs and died near Spring, Texas; and Francis, who married (first) W. F. Wood, and now resides at Willis, Texas, as Mrs. Crotwell.

James K. P. Tadlock was born in Georgia, and as a child moved with his parents to Alabama, where he received an ordinary education in the public schools and grew up a farmer and stock raiser. He left Alabama in 1876 and went to Willis, Texas, where his life has been passed quietly. He has done a modest part in the clearing up of his locality, and has added substantial improvements to the community, where he has won the respect and esteem of his neighbors and of all who have had business transactions with him. He served several years as county commissioner of Montgomery county, his only public service.

Mr. Tadlock missed the Civil war, but was a southern sympathizer, and had two brothers who participated in it under the flag of the Confederacy. He was brought up in a Methodist family, and has been faithful to that denomination all his life. Mr. Tadlock married in Coffee county, Alabama, in 1868, Miss Rebecca Jane Baker, a daughter of Joe Baker, who was a farmer and one of the pioneers of that state. To Mr. and Mrs. Tadlock there were born the following children:

Dr. James T. of this review; John W. of Willis, Texas; Joseph B., a resident of Grimes county; Mrs. Georgie Hearn of Conroe, Texas; Ella, the wife of Walter Inglet of Willis; and Miss Ruby, who resides at home.

James T. Tadlock received his early education in the public schools in the country near Willis, whence he had been brought by his parents when he was a child of four years. Later he went to school at Danville, and when he left that institution spent one year in Sam Houston mal school at Huntsville. He began his career as of the world's workers as a convict guard on the watch at Huntsville prison, during the administration of Supt. L. A. Whatley and J. S. Rice, and was promoted to a sergeancy, being given charge of the penitentiary farm in Houston county.

In 1901 he began his medical studies in the medical department of Kentucky University, at Louisville, and in 1904 was graduated therefrom, and between his second and third years at that institution was clinic chief of Broadway Infirmary at Louisville. When he left there he made his permanent location at Dayton, although he had done a few months' practice as an undergraduate at Willis, on a certificate of the State Board of Medical Examiners. He soon demonstrated his ability to cope with the problems of the profession. He is a member of the Jefferson County Medical Society and of the Texas State Medical Association.

For eleven years he has been local surgeon for the Northern Pacific Railroad, and at this time is Chief Surgeon of the Trinity Valley and Northern R. R. and Physician for the Dayton Lumber Company, having held the latter position since the Company's organization. He has business connections here, being a stockholder in the Dayton Lumber Company, a Director of the Dayton State Bank and a stockholder of the Humble Oil Company and the Trinity Valley and Northern Railway Company. Dr. Tadlock's residence is one of the splendid ones of Dayton.

On June 3rd, 1903, Dr. Tadlock was united in marriage with Miss Mattie D. Ferguson, a daughter of John Ferguson, a lumberman and early settler of Montgomery county, now living at Willis. Mr. Ferguson married Miss Mattie Oliver, and five children were born to them, viz.: Mattie D., who married Doctor Tadlock; John, who is a resident of Richards, Texas; Florence, who is the wife of J. B. Tadlock; Laura, who married W. Wood and died at Richards, Texas, and John L. who resides in Houston.

Dr. and Mrs. Tadlock are the parents of one living son, Donald Herbert. James T. Jr., the elder child, died at the age of five months. Masonically Dr. Tadlock is a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter at Dayton, the Commandery in Houston and El Mina Temple of the Mystic Shrine, at Galveston.

He is an honorary member of the Phi Chi fraternity, Ipsilon Chapter, Louisville, Kentucky. During the period of his lengthy residence here he has formed a wide acquaintance, and his friends are numerous in business, professional and social circles.

L. JENKINS, M. D. In twenty-three years of practice Dr. Jenkins has accepted the many opportunities offered to the members of his profession for fine and profitable social service, and has maintained throughout the same the ideals and ethics of the medical fraternity. Now located at Clarendon, he is one of the well-known citizens and has a valued position in the community.

Dr. B. L. Jenkins is a native of the city of Dallas, Texas, born January 4, 1867, the only child of Oscar and Annie (Pyles) Jenkins, both of whom were natives of Alabama. The mother is still living and the father died in 1867, at the age of twenty-one. After their marriage, in Alabama, the parents came to Texas in 1868, locating in Dallas county, where the father was a farmer and stockman during the brief remaining period of his life. During the war, although but a boy, he had the good fortune with fidelity as a private for three years in the 10th Alabama Cavalry.

Dr. Jenkins in early life attended the public schools, Mansfield College, and subsequently entered the Vanderbilt university at Nashville, Tennessee, where he graduated with honors in medicine in 1891. Since then he has taken post-graduate work in the hospitals and colleges of New Orleans and Chicago, and has always kept himself abreast of the advance in scientific knowledge and methods. His first practice was in Palo Pinto county, where he was a prominent member of the profession until 1911, in which year he moved further into western Texas, and located at Clarendon. Dr. Jenkins is city physician of Clarendon and local surgeon to the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway, and while a resident of Palo Pinto county was for ten years local surgeon of the Texas and Pacific Railway, and surgeon for the Strawn Coal Mining Company. He has membership in the county District and state medical societies and the American Medical Association. In politics he is a Democrat, and is an elder in the Clarendon Presbyterian church.

Dr. Jenkins was married at Weatherford, Texas, June, 1894, to Miss Maggie Buster, a daughter of W. G. and Mollie Kendrick Buster, who were both born in Texas, and now have their home at Weatherford. The two sons of the doctor and wife are Oscar, born at Gordon, November 6, 1895, and a member of the graduating class of 1913 at Clarendon College; and B. L. Jr., born at Strawn, November 27, 1900, and a student in the Clarendon schools. Dr. Jenkins, while enjoying a successful practice practically from the beginning, has likewise prospered financially and owns considerable city property and farming lands.

CHARLES T. PARK is a son of the late Major Brown Park, who established what was generally known as the Park Colony at Ambia, in Lamar county, in 1870. He was a member of the household of his father when the family first came to be identified with the fortunes of Texas and as time passed he came to occupy a foremost place in the community and played an important part in the transformation that was worked in the physical aspect of the town. He came to be an extensive landowner and still owns half a section of land in the community, upon which he reared his family and which he operated until his declining years made it necessary for him to relinquish his efforts in the farming industry. He located in Paris in 1889, purchasing a fine suburban home, to which he has added a few fertile acres, the same representing a sort of playground for him in his old age. His career has been an upright one, honorable in its every phase, and through all his life he has taken his place among the leading men of his community.

Born on October 26, 1848, Charles T. Park is the son of Major Brown Park, as has already been mentioned. The father was a native of Mississippi, in Monroe county, and the family in an earlier day came from South Carolina. Major Park, at the time when the Civil war broke out, was a slaveholding planter of the better class, and although well advanced in middle life at that time, he did not hesitate to offer his services to the Army of the South. He volunteered in the first company raised at Aberdeen, Mississippi, and went to the front immediately. His captain was one Rogers, and so apt a student of military tactics did he prove himself that in a short time he was commissioned a Major of the Second Mississippi Cavalry, under Col. Lowrey, in Golston's Brigade of Forrest's Division. He was on the battlefield at Corinth, Jackson and Meridian, Mississippi, and passed on with the main army to the Atlanta Campaign. In one of the engagements of that never-to-be-forgotten campaign he was wounded and was sent home in charge of his son, Robert T. Park, who was serving as a private under his father. Major Park made a good recovery and resumed his place soon after, continuing with the Second Mississippi until the close of the war, and surrendering with his regiment at Selma, Alabama.

Major Park devoted his life to farming, aside from his period of military service, and he attained a marked success as a rural financier, as well as a prosperous country gentleman. He brought up a goodly family and his progeny formed a colony designated by the name of Park in the Ambia community some thirty years ago. One of his sons, Archibald P. Park, a resident of Paris, who abandoned farm life and sought a career in the professions, is mentioned at length in other pages of this volume, more extended mention of the honored father being made in that biographical review.

Charles T. Park was educated in the private schools of Monroe county, Mississippi, and he was but fifteen years old when he enlisted as a private in Captain Johnson's Company F, of the Second Mississippi Cavalry, of which his father was Major. He passed through the service described in the previous paragraph in regard to his father. He was in Northern Mississippi when hostilities ceased, and he returned to the duties of civil life as a youth of seventeen without having been wounded or captured in the service.

Returning from the activities of war, the youth of seventeen turned his attention once more to schooling, and he thereafter added something of value to his education. As a planter's son, he was well schooled in planter's lore, and when he assumed his place as the head of a family he turned his attention to that business, as the one for which he was best fitted by birth and training. He was twenty-two years old when the family moved from Mississippi to Texas and was still a member of his father's household, and he thereafter devoted himself to the planting business in and about Ambia, acquiring a goodly portion of the valuable lands of that district, and taking a foremost place in the business activities of the place during all his active career. The Park family came into ownership of a large portion of the land in and about Ambia, and Mr. Park continued in active farm life there until in 1889, when he located in Paris in a fine suburban home and is now devoting his time to the care of a few acres adjoining his residence. His long and active life has been rewarded amply by material prosperity and he is enjoying to the utmost the fruits of his labors of earlier years.

On April 18, 1877, Mr. Park returned to Monroe county, Mississippi, and there was married to his sweetheart of boyhood days, Miss M. Sue Boyd, a daughter of A. P. Boyd, now of Ambia, Texas. Concerning the family of Mrs. Park, it may be said that A. P. Boyd was born at Lawrence Court House, Lawrence District, South Carolina, in 1821. He came into possession of an ordinary education and in young manhood married Louisa Holland, of Clinton, South Carolina, the daughter of John and Mary (Fulton) Holland. Miss Fulton was a native of Dublin, Ireland, and was the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer, who was pleased to disinherit her because of her marriage with the impecunious young Holland. This John Holland was from the isle of Scotland, and of this heritage his descendants are justly proud. Mr. Boyd moved to Mississippi in young manhood and gave his life to the planting business also. He was past forty years of age when he entered the service of the Forty-third Mississippi Infantry, in the Southern army, and he served throughout the war with distinction under Capt. Veasey, Company C, and was captured at the siege of Vicksburg. He came to Texas in the eighties and here passed his remaining days, passing at Ambia, when 92 years of age, being buried on his ninety-second birthday. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Boyd were eight, and are as follows: Mrs. Parks; Mrs. Ida Sparks, who died in Monroe county, Mississippi; Mrs. Othella Atkins, of Ambia, Texas; John D., who lives at Ambia; Mrs. Lura Brazil, who died in Mississippi; and Thaddeus S., who is also dead. Another son, Addison Lee, and a daughter, Mrs. Lou Ollie Stallings, reside at Ambia, in the vicinity of the family home. The father of Mr. Boyd was John D. Boyd, a slaveholding planter of South Carolina, who married Susan Vance, a second cousin of Governor Zeb Vance of North Carolina, and later a senator of the United States. The oldest of their children was Marcus, who pioneered to Texas while it was yet Mexican territory, and for his services there in those early days he received the customary land grant, which it is believed he located somewhere in the vicinity of Austin. His death in later years, which found him without posterity and without any papers indicative of his possessions, precluded his relatives from the identification of his land. Another son, Thaddeus, passed his life in Mississippi and is now deceased.

The issue of Charles T. and Sue (Boyd) Park are M. Boyd Park, with the City National Bank of Paris, who married Minnie Collins, and who is the father of six children, as follows: Elizabeth, Ruth, M. B., Jr., or "Son," as he is familiarly known to the family and relatives, Charles, Jack and Virginia. Ernest Park is a farmer at Ambia and he married Hester Sharp; Zulu is the wife of Ed. Gartland of Tulsa, Oklahoma; and Zella married Fred Baker of Paris. All have taken leading places in the civic and social lives of the communities with which they have been identified, and have proven themselves worthy sons and daughters of worthy and honored parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Park have long been identified with the Presbyterian church and its activities and brought up their family in the faith of the denomination. Mr. Park has served as deacon of the Ambia congregation, and has taken a worthy part in the work of the church along lines of public usefulness. He is a Democrat in his political convictions, but is without record as a participant in the official affairs of his locality. His citizenship, however, has been one of the best order and he has added much to the growth and advancement of the community that has long held his greatest interests.

HON. JAMES ROBERT ASTIN. Although born in Navarro county, Texas, Hon. James Robert Astin, the representative of the Twelfth Senatorial District, is by nature and training a product of Brazos county, for here he has resided since his infancy and within its borders have lain the scenes of his labors and his achievements. One of the most brilliant and astute members of the Texas bar, his legal attainments have been used to excellent advantage in the securing of important and beneficial legislation for his community and his constituents, and as lawyer, official and man, he has discharged faithfully every duty which has devolved upon him.

Senator Astin is a grandson of James Astin, who spent his life in Alabama and Mississippi. He married Miss Cythia E. Young, and they became the parents of the following children: Martha, who married George Wilkerson and passed her life in Fannin county, Texas; James H.; Sarah Ann, who married J. B. Kendrick and now resides at Waxahachie, Texas; Robert Y., who died in Robertson county in 1888, without issue; Alexander, who lives in Coryell county, Texas, with a family; Green, who is the youngest and resides near Stamford, Texas, with his family. Two older children were by a former marriage: Sam, who went to California at an early day, spent many years there and returned to Mississippi, where he died without a family; and Elizabeth, who married James Reelus and lived in Delta county, Texas.

James H. Astin, the father of Senator Astin, was born in Marion county, Alabama, in November, 1833, and there grew to manhood, receiving but an indifferent education. In 1854 he came to Texas, but soon thereafter went to California, where his half-brother, Sam, was located, and engaged in mining until 1859, then returning to Texas. One trip was made across the plains, while the other was around "the Horn." At the opening of the war between the states, Mr. Astin entered the Confederate service, his company being I, of the Fourth Texas Regiment, Hood's Brigade. His captain was Winkler, who afterwards became colonel of the regiment, and the command went to the Army of Northern Virginia. Mr. Astin was severely wounded at Chickamauga, but upon his recuperation rejoined his regiment, and was again wounded in the seven days of fighting around Richmond. As soon as able he returned to Texas and the same year was married in Navarro county to Miss Celia Allsbrook, a stepdaughter of Mastin White.

Following his marriage three years, Mr. Astin moved to Bryan and for one year followed various occupations, engaging in farming in the Brazos bottom, his residence at that time being a wagon and team, his wife having a baby, and ten dollars in cash. For ten years he was a renter and in 1877 he made his first purchase in George Antonia Nixon Survey, and continued to buy out of the proceeds of his earnings until at the time of his death he owned some 10,000 acres, all of which were practically in the Nixon Eleven League grant. He owned 7,000 acres of this land he brought under cultivation from the wild timber, and he housed it plentifully drilled artesian wells and stocked it and gave employment to some 600 people, through his able and well-directed management. He was a cotton grower, and the cotton gins he erected were kept busy chiefly seeding the land from his own farms. Mr. Astin also interested himself in the development of Bryan and owned some of the property, where he occasionally resided, but died on a plantation near Mumford, October 17, 1897, being aged sixty-four years. He was almost wholly a self-educated man and his reading was confined to current news, while his studies included nothing beyond business affairs. His first wife died in December, 1877, their children being: James Robert, of this residence; William E., a resident of San Antonio, but a member of Robertson county; John E., of Bryan, president of the Lawrence Wholesale Grocery Company; and John P., of Stamford, Texas. In 1878 Mr. Astin married Miss Ona Ward, a niece of E. L. Ward, a merchant of Bryan, and the children of this union were: John H., of Bryan; Daisy, who is the wife of F. B. Hains, of McKinney, Texas; and Roger Q., a planter. John H. is president of the City National Bank of Bryan.

Mr. Astin felt a deep interest in the cause of popular government, but he never sought or accepted public office. He was of the democratic faith, and frequently attended political conventions, as well as local ones, was a warm friend of Col. B. Q. Mills, but declined politely offers of political favors. He was one of the original promoters of the Hearne & Brazos Valley Railway, and was a large stockholder and a director of it when he was in Texas. He was generous, charitable, public-spirited and a potent factor in the affairs of his section. He never identified himself with any church, but sympathized always with such institutions and aided their success by contributions of a liberal nature. He belonged to no political order.

James Robert Astin was born in July, 1866, in Navarro county, Texas, and was one year old when brought to Brazos county. His early education was secured in the public schools of Bryan, following which he took a course in the Agricultural and Mechanical College, and then entered the University of Texas, where he received a degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1887. Following this he spent two years in special work in the University of Virginia, and then returned to Dallas, and from 1890 to 1897 practiced his profession as a member of the law firm of Davis & Astin. He was admitted to the Supreme Court of Texas and to the United States Supreme Court, and since returning to Bryan, in 1897, has practiced law. Aside from his profession, he is interested in cotton planting and is engaged extensively therein in the Brazos bottoms.

In politics Mr. Astin is a Democrat, and in 1908 was elected delegate to the national convention of his party at Denver, representing the Sixth Congressional District. He helped to nominate Mr. Bryan for president. He attended a number of state conventions since 1894, in the controversy over Senator Bailey was a Bailey supporter and carried Brazos county for him. In 1910 Mr. Astin became a candidate for the State Senate, and defeated Judge A. J. Harper, and in 1912 was re-elected. In the announcement of his platform he took issue with and against submission of prohibition amendments, but voted for submission in the Senate because his district went for submission; favored the support of state institutions for the care of state unfortunates; the educational institutions of the state; the income tax amendment to the federal constitution; the election of United States senators by the people; just demands by the State Federation of Labor; and against the collection of more taxes than necessary to conduct the affairs of the state. He has fully lived up to his promises. In the Thirty-second Legislature he was a member of the committee of judiciary No. 1, was on the educational affairs committee, on the finance committee, penitentiaries, public printing, agricultural affairs, and chairman of insurance statistics and history. In the Thirty-third Legislature his assignments were to the committee on agricultural affairs, as chairman, was chairman of the committee on stock and stock raising, educational affairs, public health, finance and military affairs. He voted for both the amendments to the federal constitution, the income tax and the election of United States senators by the people, and was interested in legislation pertaining to educational matters, especially that affecting the Agricultural and Mechanical College, which lies near his heart. He supported Senator Culbertson for re-election.

Mr. Astin is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, for the social features of both, and is a member of the Baptist church here. He is unmarried.

LEE MEAD. One of the men whom the business world of Goree, Texas, rely upon is Lee Mead, one of the most successful merchants in this place. Mr. Mead is one of the younger business men, but he has had years of experience in the business world, having been thrown on his own resources when he was nothing more than a boy. He has only been in Goree a few years, but during this time he has built up a flourishing business and has won the confidence and friendship of the business men of the town.

Lee Mead was born in Rogersville, Tennessee, on the 12th of March, 1875, the son of Gideon and Sarah (Noble) Mead. Gideon Mead was a native of the state of New York, coming to Texas in 1878. Here he followed dairy farming for many years. He was a staunch Republican and an active worker for his party. In religious matters he was a member of the Methodist church, and his fraternal affiliations were with the Masons. He died in 1906, highly respected and liked by his fellow men, being sixty years of age. He married Miss Sarah Noble in New York state, she also being a native of that state. Like her husband, she was an active member of the Methodist church. She died in 1898 at the age of forty-eight and lies buried by the side of her husband in the cemetery at Gainesville, Texas.

Eight children were born to Gideon and Sarah Mead, and of these Lee Mead was the fourth child in order of birth. He was only a child when his parents removed to Texas, and he has always lived in this state. He received his elementary education in the public schools of Gainesville, Texas, and later took a commercial course in a business college. Until he was nineteen years of age he remained on his father's dairy farm, helping with the work of the farm, but when he had reached this age he determined to start out for himself. He had some capital and went to Waco, where he opened a furniture store. He operated this store for two years and then sold out and returned to Gainesville, where he worked in a tin shop for some time, when he entered the dairy. After four years in the creamery business he sold out to accept a position as traveling salesman. He only followed this line of work for a year, however, not caring for the life, and his next move brought him to Seymour. Here he entered the employ of the Texas Supply Company, remaining with this firm for four years. He then came to Goree and established his present business. He carries a fine stock of furniture and undertaking supplies, and also handles implements, wagons and buggies, doing an extensive business in Goree and the surrounding country. In addition to his furniture store Mr. Mead operates a tin shop and a blacksmith shop.

In his religious beliefs Mr. Mead is a member of the Methodist church, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party. He takes an active interest in politics and has been nominated by his party for various offices. He is a member of the Commercial Club and is enthusiastic over the work of this club and over the future of this section of the state. He is a member of the Maccabees, of the Woodmen of the World and of the Fraternal Union of America.

Mr. Mead was married in Gainesville, Texas, on the 29th of June, 1898, to Miss Lulu Dessie Dorsey, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Dorsey, of Marquette, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Mead have six children, namely: Dorsey Lee, Bernice, Ruth, Thelma, George Noble, and Muriel Keiker, who is just a baby.

JNO. G. DAVIS. Since January 1, 1911, Mr. Davis has made his permanent home at Portland, in San Patricio county, Texas, and is one of the most enterprising and reliable real estate men in this wonderful section of the Gulf Coast Country. Portland is a beautiful little village, located on Corpus Christi and Nueces Bays, and is in the southern center of a body of rich black land, that ranks among the best and most steadily productive in Texas. This land has become noted through the agricultural activities of the great Taft Ranch in San Patricio county, the operation under the Taft enterprises having demonstrated the wonderful resources of this section in the raising of crops, more especially cotton and fine stock.

Mr. Davis is one of the active and public-spirited citizens who are bringing this section of the state to the favorable attention of the outside world. He is vice president for San Patricio county of the Progressive League of Southwest Texas, and in every way is devoting intelligent effort to the development of his home town and surrounding country.

He has a beautiful home at Portland overlooking the Corpus Christi Bay, and is engaged in the general real estate business, being particularly interested in getting good farmers located on the splendid black lands adjoining Portland.

The career of Jno. G. Davis began in the state of Alabama, at Greensboro, where he was born in December, 1858. His parents were W. D. and Eliza A. (Scarlette) Davis, the latter still living. His father, who died at McKinney, Texas, a few years since, was a successful farmer, and was among the first in the South to practice intensive agriculture. When Jno. G. was a small boy, the family moved from Alabama to Richmond parish, Louisiana, where they lived for five years. In 1870 his parents established their residence in Collin county, Texas, locating first on the farm, later moving to the county seat, McKinney.

As a youth Jno. G. Davis learned the profession of pharmacist and druggist and engaged in that business at McKinney and Grape Vine, Texas, some years. Following that, for several years he was traveling salesman, exploiting and distributing goods for different houses throughout the central Western states, with headquarters for a time in Chicago and for some years at Kansas City. In the latter years of his traveling commercial experience he did business in automobile supplies, and was among the first to sell the supplies on the road. He retired from the road in 1910, returned to Texas, and since then all of his interest and activities have been centered about Portland.

At Weatherford, Texas, in December, 1883, Mr. Davis married Miss Florence Yantis, a member of one of the most prominent families in that part of the State, whose parents were among the early settlers of Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have two children, Carl Y. Davis and Miss Florence Davis, the latter a teacher in Bay View College at Portland. The son, who is making a notable success in life as an electrician, is a graduate of Armour Institute, Chicago, and is now connected with the Chicago Telephone Company.

JOHN F. GILMORE. A resident at Athens since 1901, general manager of the Athens Cotton Oil Company, and a business man and citizen whose prosperity and leading position are quickly recognized on an investigation of the local conditions, John F. Gilmore is a Texan who has for a number of years traveled a smooth and prosperous road after being on a trail of difficulties and with his only capital supplied by his industry and character. He has been a resident of Texas since the decade of the seventies, when he left Pike county, Alabama, which was his birthplace, and came by water to Galveston and then followed the line of the Houston and Texas Central Railway as far as Greenville before he stopped off and sought his first employment as a worker.

John F. Gilmore was born near Troy, Alabama, July 21, 1854, a son of William D. Gilmore, who is now passing the evening of his life at Troy. The grandfather was William M. Gilmore, a native of South Carolina, who went through the state of Georgia to Alabama, after spending a few years in the former state. He owned a large number of slaves and, like most loyal southerners, lost a large share of his property during the war. His death occurred a few years after the war. He had been a resident of Alabama since pioneer times, and the Indian tribes had not yet left that state when he first found a home within its borders. His wife survived until a few years ago, and was at the great age of ninety-three when called from earth. They were the parents of twelve children, and of those William D. Gilmore is the oldest.

William D. Gilmore, the father of John F., was born at Union Springs, Alabama, in 1832. It was a comparatively pioneer community in which he was reared, and he had only such education as could be supplied in the primitive community. He grew up in the atmosphere of farm life, where all the labor was performed by the slaves. He married Martha I. Bean, a daughter of Marshall Bean, who was an Alabama planter, and before the war was possessed of much land and complete financial independence. In the struggle between the states he enlisted with the Confederacy and served a short time with the Tennessee army. While he himself escaped with only property losses, he suffered the sacrifice of brothers who died while wearing the uniform of the gray. Soon after the war William Gilmore moved to Troy, where he was engaged in the livery and sales business. He has lived quietly, and nothing has occurred to raise him above the fame of the modest and worthy citizen. His wife died in June, 1913.

To the union of William D. and Martha I. Gilmore were born the following children: Mrs. Rhoda Coskrey, of Troy, Alabama; Mrs. Annie Folmar, also of Troy; John F.; Eliza, who married W. H. Henderson and died in Alabama; Mrs. Alice Cochran; Pearl, who married; Miss Alice Gilmore; James L.; and Theodore—all the last named being residents of Troy.

John F. Gilmore was about sixteen years old when he arrived in Texas. Up to that time he had some advantages in the study of books and much practical experience in performing farm labor and in the ordinary occupations of youth. When he came to Texas he was a complete stranger, and his work, at Greenville, was driving two yoke of steers to the pine woods and hauling lumber. He quickly made the acquaintance of people in this new community, was recognized as a young man of more than ordinary capacity and intelligence, and thus became a deputy in the office of County Clerk McDougald, whose acquaintance and friendship he had won.

Julius Runge

a few months he went to Terrell, where he was employed by the Texas Express Company, and for many years served as agent of that company. Early in the 1880s Mr. Gilmore became interested in the cattle business and was associated with Mr. W. H. Norris for that purpose. Their ranch was first established near Montahland and was kept there from 1882 to 1886. They then transferred their interests out to the extreme western part of Texas, in Reeves county, on the state line north of Big Bend City. He continued as an active factor in the production of beef for six years. He subsequently entered in ranching and farming with H. T. Nash in Garza county, and operated in those related lines for a few years.

In 1888 Mr. Gilmore entered politics, accepting a nomination for the office of county clerk of Kaufman county. He was elected, was re-elected, and gave an efficient performance of his official duties for four years. Outside of his own political campaign, Mr. Gilmore has played an important part in active politics. He has attended one or more state conventions, and as a delegate from Kaufman county cast a ballot for the nomination of Charles A. Carson for governor of Texas.

In 1901 Mr. Gilmore identified himself with the oil business, associating with him some Kaufman capitalists and some gentlemen from St. Louis for the purpose of erecting a mill in Athens. When the mill was finished, Mr. Gilmore became its manager, and has since then attracted all his attention to this important local industry. Mr. Gilmore has been generously prosperous. While a resident of Terrell, he built a residence, and at Athens some home is admitted to be the best found in that locality. Situated on Tyler street, the leading residence street of Terrell.

Mr. Gilmore when a young man in Terrell became a member of the Blue and Chapter. He is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. His church is the Episcopal.

At Terrell, Texas, in January, 1881, Mr. Gilmore married Miss Emma Edwards, a daughter of Captain A. D. Edwards, a Terrell merchant, and one of a pioneer Texas family from San Augustine county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore are: Mrs. J. P. Kelley, of Athens, Texas; William A., who is manager of the oil mill at Kerens, Texas. The only grandchildren at the present time are Frank Gilmore Kelley and John Herndon Kelley.

ULIUS RUNGE. The untimely passing of Julius Runge on February 6, 1906, at Galveston, cut short a career of only thirty years, but of large public usefulness. Julius Runge at the time of his death was president of the Galveston Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade, had been identified with the progress of Galveston and of Texas from youth to manhood and until the end of his life, and stood so high as a business man that his name was known in many circles outside his own state. The city of Galveston had no more devoted citizen than the late Julius Runge. As a cotton merchant and a broad and liberal knowledge of conditions, and a made him prominent not only as a dealer but as a man who used his influence to promote the interests of the cotton growers. He was a leader in the first campaign for diversification of Texas agricultural crops, for the progress of diversification methods, which placed the Texas farmer in a position to be independent of the market as a speculator. Among his business associates he was respected with great admiration for his knowledge of affairs and his generosity in counsel and practical help. His broad and liberal charity was well known, and at the time of his death it was a fact commented upon by the many words spoken as tributes in his praise only heartfelt expressions of sincere estimates of what he had done in life.

Julius Runge represented that sturdy and lofty citizenship introduced into Texas during the pioneer times from Germany. He was born at the center of the old German colonization in southwest Texas, at New Braunfels, Comal County, February 1, 1851. Upon the death of his father his mother took him to Germany, and he received his education partly at Cassel, and later in Saxony and Switzerland, where he was trained for commercial pursuits. At the age of sixteen, in December, 1867, he returned to Texas. In 1874, though only twenty-three years of age, he was made a member of the firm of Kauffman & Runge. From that time forward his career was one of large influence and prominence at Galveston and in the state. In 1875 he was appointed German Consul at Galveston, and occupied that honor until his death. In 1879 Julius Runge was elected president of the First National Bank of Galveston, and re-elected several times.

In a city such as Galveston it is given to few business leaders to receive such sincere tributes of admiration and praise for their career as was paid to Mr. Runge at the time of his death. As an estimate the best expression is contained in the following quotation from the resolutions adopted by the directors of the Cotton Exchange:

"Mr. Runge was in his prime and retained almost to the last moment that activity and interest in public affairs which were such features in his character. Honest and upright, eminently fair and just in all his transactions, Mr. Runge early in life had won for himself a position and standing in the commercial world attained by but few.

"As a public-spirited and progressive citizen his record was without a flaw; as a commercial man few had broader views or solved more difficult problems; and as a husband and father his life was beautiful and stainless. These things not only the citizens of Texas but those of many other states knew of him, and we know them as well, but what we knew and appreciate so keenly was his record as a member of our Exchange. The earliest events of our body show him, though at that time scarcely attained to man's estate, taking an active interest in its affairs. Among the half dozen or more who liberally contributed for the purpose of securing a building site and exchange his name appears high up toward the top of the list. From the beginning he was among the foremost and zealous workers for the upbuilding of our organization. For ten or twelve years he labored in the ranks, occupying no more exalted position than that of chairman of some important committee. However, in 1888, by a practically unanimous vote, he was elected President. He was re-elected time and again until, at his urgent request, the honor was passed to others. He was too much an ideal president to remain long out of office, and a few years later, taking advantage of his absence from the city, he was again chosen President by the members. Only one day before his death he was officially declared elected president of the Exchange for the fourteenth time. Mr. Runge was a man who never hesitated to declare himself on any public question; his character was a strong one, and he always had the courage of his convictions, and once convinced that a thing was right nothing could swerve him. He would champion the cause of the weak if he thought that cause was right without the slightest thought of the consequences to himself. His charity was great. In his death we feel that our Exchange has sustained a loss that in many respects is irreparable; that we have lost one of our most zealous and useful members; and that all of us have lost a warm-hearted, generous and highly prized friend."

In 1876 Julius Runge married Miss Johanna Runge, of Galveston, a daughter of Mr. Henry Runge. Of their seven children one, George, died in 1904, and those remaining are: Miss Julia Runge, of Galveston; Mrs. Thomas A. Rose, nee Margaret Runge, of Dallas; Henry Runge II., of Galveston; and Miss Johanna Runge, Julius Runge and Frank Runge, who live in Austin, where the family has resided since the death of Mr. Runge.

JUDGE STARLING W. DEAN. The present judge of the Twelfth Judicial District, whose home is at Madisonville, is one of the distinguished men in Texas public life and has been more or less closely identified with public affairs and his profession as a lawyer for twenty years or more. Besides his own worthy part in life, Judge Dean represents an old and solid family stock, and his lineage goes back to the time of the Texas Republic.

His father is William J. Dean, who is now living at the age of seventy-four at Madisonville and has seen a long and varied career. William J. Dean was born in 1839, in Alabama; came to Texas in January, 1853, when a lad of thirteen years, and the family located in the southeast corner of Leon county. The head of the family at that time was Starling Dean, who spent the remaining years of his life in Leon county as a farmer. He was born in the Abbeville district of South Carolina in 1817; had exceedingly limited education in the country schools, and his active career was passed as a modest farmer and without participation in official affairs. He was a member of the Methodist church, and his death occurred in 1874. He was one of two sons, Edward and Starling, and his ancestry was Scotch. Edward Dean grew up in South Carolina as a bound boy, left the state in young manhood, and his career was never known to his family after that. Starling Dean when a young man moved to Alabama, was married in Autauga county to Miss Mary A. Tyler, who died in Leon county, Texas, in 1882. Their children were: William J.; Edward, of Kosse, Texas; John T., of Madisonville; James F., of Kosse; Benjamin F. of Madison county, Texas; Joseph W., of the old Leon county homestead; Emma C., who died as Mrs. William S. Robinson; Narcissa A., who died unmarried; and Francis M., who died single. William J. Dean, who was born August 24, 1839, spent his youth at a time when schools and means of education were limited, and on May 12, 1862, enlisted for service in the Confederate army in Company K of the Twenty-Fifth Texas Cavalry, under Captain M. M. Singletary and Colonel Gillespie. This command first went into Arkansas, and at Arkansas Post the entire regiment was captured and its members were taken to Camp Butler, near Springfield, Illinois, and remained there until April 8, 1863, when they were exchanged at City Point, Virginia. Mr. Dean with his command was then transferred to the Tennessee army under Bragg, joining it at Chattanooga, and participated in the campaigns of Tennessee and North Georgia until the fall of Atlanta, fighting at Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and the many battles of the Atlanta Campaign. After the fall of Atlanta, the command returned with Hood into Tennessee, and at Columbia, Mr. Dean left the army, sick, and was never with his command again. After being paroled at Macon, Georgia, April 28, 1865, he made his way across the Alabama and Mississippi and by the varied transportation of railroad, steamboat and on foot arrived in Texas at his old home on June 5, 1865. He then resumed farming, and so continued with a substantial degree of prosperity until 1902, when he engaged in merchandising in the eastern part of Madison county, for a few years, and in September, 1908, moved to Madisonville, where he now lives retired.

William J. Dean married Mary Robinson, a daughter of Dr. G. W. Robinson, who was a veteran of the Battle of San Jacinto in 1836, being wounded in that historic conflict, and afterwards practiced medicine in and about Midway, until his death. The children of William J. Dean and wife were: William L., an attorney at Huntsville; Judge Dean; B. F., a merchant at Madisonville; and Mrs. Emma D. Wycough, of Madisonville.

Judge Starling W. Dean, who is thus a grandson of a soldier of the Texas Revolution, was born on a farm in the Elwood community of Madison county, Texas, August 21, 1868. In that locality he grew up, received a public school education, and among the early experiences of his young manhood taught one term in the Mount Tabor District school. Later he was a student in Southwestern University, at Georgetown, taking the classical course and graduating A. B. in 1890. Judge Dean studied law at Madisonville with Col. M. Y. Randolph, and was admitted to the bar in October, 1890, before Judge Kittrell. He was one of the successful lawyers at Centerville, Leon county, until October, 1908, when he moved to Madisonville. Governor Campbell, of whom Judge Dean was a warm admirer and active supporter in politics, appointed him district judge in June, 1908, to succeed Judge Gordon Boone, who had resigned. In November, 1908, the district confirmed his appointment by regular election to office, and he was re-elected in 1912. His district comprises the counties of Leon, Madison, Grimes, Walker and Trinity.

Judge Dean previous to his judicial career had much part in Democratic politics. He attended his first state convention, in 1904, when C. A. Culberson was named for governor, and he had previously been a warm supporter of Governor Hogg during the Hogg-Clark contest for the governorship in 1892. In 1904 he was a delegate when Governor Lanham was named for the second time. Judge Dean was elected to the lower house of the Twenty-Ninth and Thirtieth Legislatures, being elected in 1904 and again in 1906, and was a member of the legislature at the time of his appointment to the bench. When he first entered the house his most important committee was the judiciary, but he was also a member of the election committee. He was closely identified with committee work during the formulation of the Terrell election law, and favored that measure through all its course until it was passed. In the thirtieth session he was a member of the judiciary committee, was chairman of the constitutional amendment committee, and did some important legislative work in other relations. He was especially interested in anti-gambling legislation, and supported the measure, which was passed as an emergency act, making the running of a gambling-house a felony. During that session an act was passed making county supervision of education mandatory in all counties having a scholastic population of three thousand or more, so that the duties which had heretofore been in many counties performed ex-officio by the county judge were turned over to an officer elected for the one purpose of supervising the schools.

Judge Dean is a Knights Templar Mason, has passed the chairs of the Blue Lodge and has sat in the Grand Lodge of the State. He has served as a member of the official board of the Methodist church, and he and his family are prominent in the social circles of Madison county. Judge Dean was married in Leon county June 13, 1894, to Miss Mary Newton, a daughter of R. M. Newton of an old Texas family, originally from North Carolina. The Judge and wife have the following children: Ethel, Jennie Lou, Robert W., Lillie and Luther Frank.

ASA H. SPEER, M. D. Practicing medicine at Madisonville since 1902, Dr. Speer is one of the leaders in his profession in that part of Texas, and entered upon his chosen calling after a varied experience. He is unusually well equipped as a physician and surgeon, and stands in the front rank of his profession in Madison county.

His birthplace was Holly, Houston county, where he was born February 18, 1876. His younger days were spent there and at Lovelady, and in the meantime the public schools gave him his education. His first practical experience was as a teacher in the country, between the ages of eighteen and twenty, and after that he was for about three years a drug clerk at Hallettsville, and then was for a couple of years in the drug business on his own account. While handling drugs he was also studying medicine and took his first lectures Louisville Hospital Medical College, and in April, 1906, was graduated M. D. from the Memphis Hospital College. In May of the same year he established his practice at Madisonville, and it has been growing rapidly ever since. Dr. Speer is not a man to settle and be content with mediocre attainments, but is constantly striving to better perfect himself in his chosen profession.

In 1906 he took a post-graduate course in the Orleans Polyclinic, and during the same year was elected by the state board of health of Louisiana, with a committee of other physicians, on a quarantine expedition to Central and South America. The party consisted of twelve physicians and its purpose was to determine whether the places visited were following the regulations of the Louisiana Board in the matter of quarantine regulations. They visited Havana, Cuba, Port au Prince and San Jose in Costa Rica, thence went to the west side, and to Belise, thence to Colon, to Jamaica in the West Indies, back to Nicaragua and Honduras, and thence to the United States. Dr. Speer from 1903 to 1906 was in the drug business at Madisonville. He assisted in the organization of the Madison County Medical Society, serving as its first secretary, and he also secured membership in the Texas State Medical Society, the American Medical Association.

Coming from an old Democratic family, Dr. Speer has made himself a factor in local affairs, outside of his medical profession. He has served on the county committee, and on the state Democratic committee, and was delegate to the Dallas Convention which nominated Governor Campbell, to the 1910 Convention which named Governor Colquitt, and also to the state convention of the United Farmers. He is now serving as city health officer of Madisonville, and has been a member of the town council. Personally the doctor is a past grand in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a past chancellor in the Order of Pythias. He is one of the elders in the Presbyterian church at Madisonville.

Dr. Speer's father was Rev. Levi Speer, who was born in Houston county, Texas, in 1857, and died in 1892. Possessed of a fair education, he early entered the ministry of the Christian church, and gave his life to that profession.

Rev. Speer was a son of Andrew Speer, who brought the family from Georgia, about 1856, became a land holding planter in Houston county, and died during the war while in middle life. His family of seven were: Benjamin, who died in Houston county; John, of the same county; William, known as "Bud," lives in Eastland county, Texas; Andrew J., of Harrison county, Texas; Asa, who died in Houston county; Levi; and Mrs. Sarah Young, of Runge, Texas. Rev. Levi Speer married Miss Lizzie Manson, a daughter of J. C. Manson, whose wife was a Harrison. J. Manson was an Irishman, a blacksmith by trade, his death occurred in Houston county, about 1880. The children of Rev. Levi Speer and wife were: Dr. H. M.; Dr. Glover, a physician at Madisonville; William, of Lewisville, Texas, a druggist; Sterling B., a druggist at Houston; and Levi of Madisonville.

On March 9, 1892, Dr. Speer married in Houston County Miss Ada Monzingo. Her father Abe Monzingo, a German, and a native of Louisiana, was a farmer, married a Miss Shaw. Mrs. Speer died in July, 1906, leaving a daughter Ione. Dr. Speer was married November 28, 1899, at Batesville, Mississippi, to Miss L. Lomax, a daughter of Dr. A. A. Lomax. Mrs. Lomax, a graduate of the Blue Mountain Female College in Mississippi was for fifteen years a teacher in the public schools. Her father, Dr. Lomax, was a native of Mississippi, a graduate of the State University, and won the credit for having originated real prohibition in that state, and for more than thirty years served as a member of the board of trustees of the State University. Dr. Lomax went through the Confederate army, to the rank of Chaplain, and was one of the distinguished educators and Christian ministers of the state, having been honored with the high collegiate degree of LL. D. The children of Dr. Lomax and wife were: Clifton L., of Greenwood, Mississippi, a lawyer; Mrs. Speer; Miss Jessie May, a graduate of the Blue Mountain Female College and an instructor in the high school at Greenwood, Mississippi; Alexander A., a graduate of Clinton University, and a cotton buyer at Panama, Mississippi. Dr. Speer and wife have one child, Asa H., Jr.

CHARLES VIRGINIUS VAUGHAN, of Navasota, Texas, made his advent in this town in 1869 and is therefore one of its oldest living residents. He came to Texas in 1867, on January 25th of which year he arrived at Navasota, but settled first in Washington county, where he spent two years. There he was an employee of Smith and Matchett, merchants of Washington, but in 1868 made a crop in the Brazos bottom and late in that year returned to Washington and was employed with U. P. Melton, remaining so until 1869, in September of which year the business was moved to Navasota. Mr. Vaughan remained with the same business and employer until August, 1870, when he left and went to work for Elson & Templeman, with which firm he was identified until January, 1873, when he opened a small grocery of his own in Navasota. From that time to the present his career has been one of constant advancement, culminating in well-merited success that places him among the substantial men and helpful builders of the place of his adoption.

Charles Virginus Vaughan was born in Amelia county, Virginia, January 3, 1844, and is now 70 years of age, enjoying good health and getting much out of life. He was a planter's son. His grandfather Vaughan was a Scotchman who married a Miss Truly, an Irish lady, and they settled in Virginia on coming to the United States about the close of the eighteenth century. Among their children were James P.; Mrs. Martha Vaughan, who married a relative; Mrs. Amanda Boisseau; and Henderson, the father of Charles V. Henderson F. Vaughan was a Virginian, was captain of the Amelia County Cavalry during the old muster days, was a planter and slaveholder. He married Miss Mollie V. Walthall, a daughter of Rev. Alexander B. Walthall, a Campbellite preacher, also natives of Virginia. Henderson Vaughan died in Virginia, in the faith of the Campbellite church, and his widow passed away at Navasota, Texas. The children born to them were: Madison P., who died at Roanoke county, Virginia, leaving a son, Gooch, of Roanoke; Charles Virginus, of this review; and Cornelia H., widow of H. J. Palmer, of St. Louis, Missouri. Mrs. Henderson Vaughan married later M. B. Hurt, and came out to Texas. The children of her second union were: Inez, who is the widow of William Redford, of Navasota; Hamlett, who met an accidental death on the railroad, before marriage; Thomas, a resident of Navasota; Berlie, who married Robert Owen and died at Navasota; Jack who died single at Sherman, Texas; and Alexander, who is a resident of Iowa.

Having engaged in merchandize for himself, Charles V. Vaughan continued to sell goods until August, 1874, when he changed his business to that of dry goods, in which line he remained for seventeen years, during which period he was burned out, December 11, 1885, at that time being engaged in business on the present site of the Vaughan building. He rebuilt with brick, in association with other property owners of the block, and when another two years expired he sold out and for a few years was employed by Major Templeman as a clerk. On January 14, 1901, he established himself in the feed business, in which he has continued to be engaged. As a builder in Navasota, and a contributor to the substantial improvement of the place, Mr. Vaughan has erected business houses in blocks, seventeen fronting on Washington avenue, and a business house facing Railroad street, on lot 7, in block 83. The Vaughan building is on lot 1, block 17, Nolan addition, and his own place of business is on lot 3 of block 17. His home is on block 8, Dixon street, where he owns lots 1, 2 and 3. He built his home among the first good residences of Navasota, and it is still one of the attractive structures here. This was built almost wholly of lumber taken out of the pine woods of this section.

When Mr. Vaughan came to Navasota, it was a lively trading point, on one line of railroad, the H. & T. C., and the scope of country to draw from extended as far away as Palestine, Crockett and Huntsville, that being as late as 1871 and 1872. As encouragement for the building of the Santa Fe and the I. & G. N. Railway, Mr. Vaughan joined with the citizens of Navasota in providing the bonus asked of them by the company, and, too, in 1904, the right-of-way for the I. & G. N. Railway from Navasota to Bryan. Mr. Vaughan has been a stockholder of the Citizens National Bank since its organization. He was one of the men of influence in instituting the water works of the city, and was chairman of the water works company while on the council, and served on that body some eight years. Bridges over Cedar Creek were built during this time, connecting different parts of the town.

Mr. Vaughan has an excellent military record. During the strife between the South and the North, he enlisted from Nodaway county, Virginia, in 1861, in Company C, of the Eighteenth Virginia Infantry, commanded by Col. R. E. Withers, of Danville, Virginia. He was a private in the company of Captain Owen, while his brother, M. P. Vaughan was second lieutenant. Joining the company at Centerville, Virginia, he received his baptism of fire at Williamsburg, in 1862, and subsequently participated in the battle at Seven Pines, where both brothers were wounded, Charles V. receiving a wound from a shell in the back, just above the right hip, while his brother was shot through the left leg. Mr. Vaughan's wound rendered him useless as a soldier for thirty days, when he returned to his company and took part in the seven days' fight around Richmond, and there had his right arm shattered at the battle of Gaines Mill. After a period at home of more than a year, he was assigned to Rosser's headquarters in the cavalry as commissary sergeant under Major Smith. He joined his new command at Waynesboro in the winter of 1863, and remained until the surrender of General Lee. The winter of 1864 was spent at Swope's Depot, eleven miles west of Staunton, and the last winter was passed with Lee's army around Petersburg. He and some of his comrades cut their way through the Blue line that was closing in around General Lee's command and made their way to Campbell county, Virginia, expecting to join General Johnston's army, but were unable to do so. Mr. Vaughan now holds membership in Hannibal Boone Camp, Confederate Veterans Association.

On December 5, 1873, Mr. Vaughan was married to Miss Imogene Cabler, a daughter of Edwin S. Cabler. Mr. Cabler was born in Tennessee in 1810, and was fairly well educated. He came to Texas in 1834, making the journey by private conveyance, accompanied by Mr. Cabler's brother-in-law, Abraham Buffington and wife, which party first made a temporary stop at Nacogdoches. From there in 1836 they pushed on to the town of Washington, where Mr. Cabler became a Texas veteran and was indirectly connected with the victory at San Jacinto. In business Mr. Cabler sold goods in Brenham during the Civil War, and moved from Washington in 1867 to Navasota. Prior to his engaging in merchandising in Brenham, however, he was a farmer in Washington county and when he came to Navasota he resumed merchandise. He was the moving spirit in the firm of DeMeret, Cabler & Company until he retired from business in 1874, and continued to live quietly until his death. He was free from political activity, was a Union man on the matter of secession, but helped his people when the state seceded. He was a Methodist in his religious views, and was without fraternal connections. Mrs. Cabler passed away, having been the mother of the following children: Martha, who married a Mr. Stephenson, and died in Washington, Texas, before the war, and left no issue; another daughter, who married Lucius Hamilton, died at Washington without children; and Imogene, the wife of Mr. Vaughan, born December 11, 1848. Mr. and Mrs. Vaughan have had no children.

Mr. Vaughan joined I. C. Stafford Lodge No. 91, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Navasota, March 15, 1870, and has since been identified with it in every possible capacity. He represented it in the Grand Lodge for two successive terms, in 1872 and 1873, was a member of the committee on Milage and Perdiem, has been chairman of the finance committee of the local lodge for thirty-eight years, and was one of the committee that purchased the ground on which the present hall was built, as well as a member of the building committee. Mr. Vaughan is a Baptist, having joined that denomination in 1872, while Mrs. Vaughan is of the Methodist faith. Both are great Bible students, and are now reading it together for the eighth time.

HENRY EUGENE BAYLIS, M. D. Engaged in the successful practice of medicine and surgery at Richards in Grimes county since 1909, Dr. Baylis graduated from medical college and began practice more than twenty years ago and his home was in his native state of Mississippi until 1895, when he moved to Louisiana, and from there coming to Richards five years ago.

Henry Eugene Baylis was born in Jones county, Mississippi, September 7, 1867. His boyhood environment was the yellow pine forests of Mississippi, and the nearest trading point to his locality was about sixty miles from a railroad, while the village center familiar to his boyhood was Shubuta. His early training was in the public schools and in the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi, at which he spent two years, and at the age of twenty-one he took up the study of medicine with Dr. J. F. Moore of Estabatchie, Mississippi. His studies were further pursued in Tulane University in New Orleans, graduating M. D. April 6, 1893. One year was spent in practice at his old home town, and about fifteen years in New Iberia and St. Martinville, Louisiana, and from the latter place he came to Richards in 1909. In 1893 Dr. Baylis took post-graduate work in the Tulane University at New Orleans, and during his residence in Louisiana belonged to both the county and state medical societies. As a physician he possesses exceptional qualifications and his practice has grown rapidly since his location in Grimes county.

Dr. Baylis is a grandson of George Baylis, who came from England to the United States when six years of age, the family locating at Charleston, South Carolina. George Baylis in 1811 moved to Mississippi, becoming one of the pioneers in that state, and was a slave holding farmer and a Methodist minister. In South Carolina he married a Miss Elzy, and their children were: George; William; John McCormick; Wyatt, who was killed during the siege of Vicksburg; Betsy, who married Davis Knight; and Jane, who married Dr. John Gillis.

The father of Dr. Baylis was Dr. John McCormick Baylis, who died in Estabatchie, Mississippi, in 1885, at the age of sixty-one. His birth occurred in Jones county, Mississippi, in 1830, he was graduated in medicine from Tulane University, and was an active and prominent physician and citizen for nearly thirty years. An ardent southerner in all his sympathies and principles, he gave active support to the movement which brought about the separation of the states, and during the war was a major-surgeon in the Twenty-Seventh Mississippi regiment, from the beginning of the war until close. After a wound in which a part of the right leg was torn away he recovered and continued his work until the end of the Confederate government. He was in Vicksburg during the siege, served in the battle of Chickamauga, was on the Atlanta campaign until at the battle of Peachtree Creek, where he received the wound which kept him for some time from service. Dr. John Baylis was one of the leaders of the Democratic party in his county and district in Mississippi, and at the time of his death was senator and never took his seat. He was a member of the Methodist church, a Royal Arch Mason, an able speaker and a man whose professional and general mental equipment made him conspicuous in his community. Dr. Baylis was married in Perry county, Mississippi, to Miss Mary Rawles. Her father, Benjamin Rawles, was from South Carolina, and was of French-Huguenot descent.

Mrs. Baylis, who was born in 1834, now lives in Mississippi, and her children were: George, a farmer at Natchitoches, Louisiana; Charles W., a farmer at Natchitoches, Louisiana; William Fleming, a physician, died at the age of thirty-four at Estabatchie; Mrs. Baylis, Crittenden, of Houston, Texas; Dr. Henry E., of Laredo, Texas; and Mrs. Minnie Gullette, of Laredo, Texas; and Mrs. Minnie Gullette, of Laredo, Texas; and Mrs. Minnie Gullette, of Laredo, Texas.

H. E. Baylis was married March 2, 1897, at Natchitoches, Louisiana, to Miss Vadie Whittle, a daughter of John Whittle, a family which came from Virginia. Baylis and wife have the following children: Lurline, Bernice, Freda, Leona, Theodora, Dorothy and John.

JAMES THOMAS. Today James Thomas sleeps under the shadow of the city which he helped to build, and those who knew him living will reverence him dead. A pioneer of the Lone Star state who helped lay its foundation of prosperity, a soldier in the war between the United States and Mexico, and a business man of ability, the life of James Thomas deserves to be perpetuated in the community where he was universally loved, respected and esteemed.

The Thomas family were closely identified with the growth and early development of northern Texas from the early fifties and as the date usually assigned for the founding of the little settlement at the forks of the Trinity known as Dallas, was the year 1851, the advent of the family and its connections occurred while Dallas was still on the extreme frontier. An interesting fact in connection with family record is that Mary Dallas, daughter of James Thomas, was a cousin of George M. Dallas, vice president of the United States with President James K. Polk in 1845-49, and for whom the city of Dallas was named. The ancestry of the Thomas family is Welsh and that of the Dallas family is Irish. James Thomas was born in Tennessee in 1822, a son of John and Mary (Dallas) Thomas, and he was one of ten children, but all are now deceased. His younger brother, William H., came to Texas at a later date and spent the remainder of his life in Dallas county. In 1850, James Thomas was married to Miss Jane Routh, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Whitman) Routh. The Routh family, of prominent old Tennessee stock, was of English descent, and both grandfathers fought in the Revolutionary war. One of her grandmothers was a Miss Redfarn, of the Carolina colony of Irish ancestry. Mrs. Thomas was the youngest daughter of ten children and the only one now living. She still resides in Dallas, one of the venerated pioneer women of the city. In 1851, a year after marriage and in company with relatives and friends, she made the long overland journey to northern Texas, encountering many hardships, rough roads and danger from hostile Indians and outlaws, but finally reaching Dallas, then better known as the Forks of the Trinity. Her father had died when she was twelve years of age, and her mother accompanied her on the journey to Dallas, passing away just one year later. Her two unmarried brothers, Jacob and Joseph, were also members of the company, both settling on a farm near Plano, Collin county. Her brother George Washington and his family came at that time and settled on Duck creek. Thomas Jefferson, another brother, came in 1850 and also settled in Collin county.

Mr. Thomas joined his wife in Texas a year after her arrival, in 1852, he having been obliged to remain behind to settle his business affairs. The first farm which he owned here, a tract of three hundred and twenty acres, was located near Plano, and on which he settled in 1853, but after one year he sold that place and purchased another of one hundred and sixty acres, which he improved, and which remained in the family until twelve years ago, a period of almost fifty years. In 1869 the family moved to Dallas. The following year, 1870, Mr. Thomas engaged in the general mercantile business with J. M. Patterson, continuing until death severed the partnership. Mr. Thomas made his home on a forty acre plot which he had purchased a few years previously and which he developed into an orchard of fruit trees, and it so remained until subdivided for residential purposes. It is now one of the most exclusive residence districts of the city. During the first years of the family residence, however, all the country was practically unbroken, Indians were numerous and often hostile, and Mrs. Thomas can relate many tales of pioneer hardships and old-time experiences.

The late James Thomas was a soldier in the Mexican war, going out from Tennessee, and he later fought in the war between the north and south. In the latter he was made captain of Company K in Colonel Burford's regiment, Parson's Brigade, and was a brave and efficient soldier. He later became known as one of the most public-spirited citizens of Dallas, ever ready to lend his assistance to any cause for the upbuilding of his chosen city or state. He assisted in the financing and building of the first bridge across the Trinity river, and was one of the prime movers in the old Dallas Fair organization, out of which has grown the present great Fair Association. He was elected and served in the Texas legislature in 1861, but resigned his place as a lawmaker in order to enlist in the army in the spring of 1862. He organized his company, went to the front and gave valiant service in behalf of the south. He was strongly Democratic in his political allegiance, as had been his father before him, and affiliated with the Masonic order from the time of the Mexican war until his death. Although not a church member, he practiced Christianity throughout life, and his career was characterized by honorable dealings and the strictest rectitude of character. His estate, since his death under the management of his widow and her sons, has become immensely valuable, and in the district some of the streets bear and perpetuate the family name, such as Thomas avenue, Routh street, and Colby avenue. Mrs. Thomas owns a large business house in the commercial center of Dallas. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas were: Oliver, Mary T., Clara Ella, Martha, Jefferson Davis, Willie O., James Colby, and two who died in infancy.

James Thomas passed away at his home in Dallas in 1875. When historians tell of those who helped to make Dallas in justice to truth they should pay tribute to James Thomas, pioneer, soldier and citizen, but above all a man.

RICHARD PRESTON BROOKS. The distinction of a long, interesting and varied career belongs to Richard Preston Brooks of Bedias, whose home has been in Grimes county since 1853. At that time a boy just entering his teens, and Grimes county when the Brooks first saw it was still under the domain of nature. Grass stood breast high on the prairies, deer were more plentiful than rabbits are today, and wild turkeys were found in the woods in as many as a hundred in a drove, so that all kinds of wild game were to be had without difficulty, and a regular part of the larder was venison. The Brooks family came to Grimes county not long after the Bedias Indians had departed, and there were still evidences everywhere of the camp and tepee homes of the red men.

Richard Sims Brooks, father of Richard P., brought his family to Texas from Madison county, Tennessee. His household was part of a caravan comprising perhaps a hundred families, with slaves and many wagons of household possessions and animals driven on foot, the company forming one of the larger emigrant trains which left the older communities of the Mississippi Valley for the new country of the Southwest. The journey of such a party was naturally spiced with interest on every hand, and one noteworthy incident was that in crossing Grand Prairie in Arkansas, a locality which had no settlement and was without water, the Brooks party narrowly escaped great suffering and death on account of lack of water. After the party reached Jefferson, Texas, it began to break up, and only a few families finally arrived and made settlement in Grimes county. The father devoted himself to farm and stock, and bought land on the headwaters of the San Jacinto river, establishing his home and opening out a large farm in that vicinity. He had no slaves, but he helped brake up the domain of the wilderness, and he enjoyed a quiet prosperity as a planter and pioneer farmer. At the beginning of the war he was opposed to the secession of Texas, and thereafter lived quietly and unobtrusively till his death in 1866 at the age of sixty-six years. He was a member of the Methodist church, and in politics was a Democrat of the Polk variety. His native state was Virginia, after which he moved to Alabama, was married there, and about the time the Indians were taken west to Indian territory he went into Tennessee. The maiden name of his wife was Vashti Valliant, who died in 1896, at the venerable age of ninety-three years. Their children were: Dr. W. A., who died in Montgomery, Texas, in 1857, leaving a family; Calvin H., who is a Methodist minister, now stationed at Marlin, Texas, and who has a family; Martha, now deceased, who married John Goode and spent her life in Virginia; Dr. John B., who was a surgeon in General Fagan's Division of the Confederate Army and died in the course of the war; Robert, who is a Baptist preacher, is married, and lives in Walker county; James J., who was a captain in the Confederate army and was killed at Marlin, Texas, during the war; Mrs. Minerva Scallion, of Coleman county, Texas; Richard P.; Louisa, who died in Johnson county, Texas, leaving a family by her husband, W. D. Gray; and Thomas J., who is a farmer of Bedias and has a family.

Richard Preston Brooks was born in Madison county, Tennessee, October 2, 1839, and was about fourteen years of age when he made the memorable journey in the large emigrant caravan previously described. His education had been acquired before he came to Texas, and as there were no schools accessible in Grimes county during the remainder of his boyhood his education may be described as a "woods education." After growing up at the family home, having passed his majority, he entered the Confederate army. Previously he had opposed the secession of the state, and before reaching his majority had voted against such a movement. Though the conflict was not of his choice nor of his making, he remained loyal to Texas, and in 1863 enlisted in Captain Singleterry's Company, recruited in Grimes and Walker counties, and in Colonel Gillespie's Regiment of Cavalry, which was attached to Carter's Brigade. The commanders of company, regiment and brigade were all Methodist preachers. Mr. Brooks was with his command at Arkansas Post when it surrendered, but being on the outside of the line with several others he escaped, and reported to the army at Pine Bluff. Soon afterwards discharged from service on account of disability resulting from injuries received during childhood. During the remainder of the war

Mr. Brooks was with the Texas Reserve Corps, and much of the time on detail service. He was discharged at Anderson, in Grimes county, and began his pursuits of civil life as a stock man.

Previous to the war Mr. Brooks had been engaged in wagoning, hauling goods from Houston to towns in middle and north Texas. After the war he resumed this business, and Navasota in the meantime having become the Northern terminus of the Houston & Texas Central, he freighted goods from Navasota north to the various settlements, and continued in the business until the advance of the railway and final completion at Dallas put an end to his business as a freighter. During his earlier years as a farmer Mr. Brooks employed a number of state convicts in clearing land in the Bedias locality, and he can be credited with a great deal of pioneer work in this direction. His present farm now partly encircles Bedias. From the freighting business Mr. Brooks returned to the cattle industry, and finally entered a contracting business in the buying and selling of live stock for western stock men, and the furnishing of stock to the state for penitentiary use. This business together with the management of a store were followed at Prairie Plains for a number of years. In 1884 he moved to Bedias, and followed stock raising there until 1892, after which he was proprietor of a hotel at Bryan for six years. Since returning from Bryan his chief interests have been in farming in the vicinity of Bedias. Mr. Brooks was one of the promoters of the Bedias Hardware Company and is its president, and is president and a director of the Bedias Cotton Warehouse Company.

Physically Mr. Brooks is a giant, standing more than six feet in height, with two hundred and forty pounds of rugged physique, and is possessed of unusual intellectual as well as physical powers. Had he adopted a profession his powers as a talker would have stood him in excellent stead, and as it is he has been not without considerable influence in public affairs. A Democrat all his life, he was chairman of a senatorial district delegation in a state convention at Houston some years ago. In 1892 he was a supporter of James S. Hogg in the Hogg-Clark controversy of that year, and has always been an anti-Bailey man. A number of years ago his fertility in ideas and facility in expression made him a valuable contributor to Texas papers of subjects of current interest, and for seven years he has been a regular correspondent of the Galveston News. Mr. Brooks states that he has been an active member of only two organizations in his life, the Confederate Army and the Methodist church, and has left both of them.

In 1865 Mr. Brooks married Miss Sallie Hubbard, who died in 1873, and only one child of their marriage reached maturity, Charles Sims, who died and by his marriage to Nannie Smith left three children: Richard Lee, Sam T., and Charles Sims. In 1875 Mr. Brooks married for his second wife Miss Sallie Henderson, daughter of Daniel and Jane (Brice) Henderson. The Henderson family came to Texas from Louisiana, and Mrs. Henderson was a sister of Senator Brice of Louisiana. Mrs. Brooks, who was the youngest of eleven children, has no issue by her marriage to Mr. Brooks. It is worthy of note that Mr. Brooks has never tasted whiskey or tobacco, nor has a razor ever been applied to his face.

SAMUEL A. DAVIS. One of the largest and most prosperous business houses of Grimes county is the firm of Sam A. Davis & Sons, general merchandise, at Bedias. Mr. Davis spent much of his life in that part of Grimes county, and is a quiet but forcible business man, with an exceptional executive ability, and possesses as large a share of the real goods of success and prosperity as almost any other local citizen.

Samuel A. Davis was born at Rutledge, Alabama, February 15, 1855, a son of Andrew A. C. L. Davis, who est from Alabama and settled in Grimes county in 1823. The Davis family had long lived in Alabama, and the grandfather was born there in 1823. The grandfather was a generous farmer who left a family of children in the following: Moses, who lived for a number of years in Collin county, Texas; James, who spent his life in Loulides county, Alabama; Andrew A. C. L.; Narcissa Skains, of Trinity county, Texas; and Purdue of Louisiana. Andrew A. C. L. Davis had a limited education in the country and when the war came on joined General Bedford Forrest's command, and followed that gallant leader in all his numerous campaigns, but at the close of the war had neither wound nor record of capture. He married Miss Roxie Skains, whose father was a planter and millman in Butler county, Alabama. Andrew A. C. L. Davis died October 15, 1884, while his wife was away on September 27 of the same year. Their children were as follows: Maria, who died unmarried; Ha, who married Renp Bush and died in Grimes county; Frances, who became the wife of D. M. Burkhead in Fort Worth; Caroline, who married F. E. of Bedias; and Samuel A.

Andrew A. Davis was about sixteen years old when he came to Texas, and reached manhood in the community of Bedias, his education being a product of country schools in Alabama and in Texas. His home was with his parents many years, and his career was devoted to farming and stock until he was thirty, at which time he married, and he then turned his attention to his individual and individual interests on the farm until 1905. That year he moved to Bedias, and has built up a large mercantile business. However, he has never lost interest in agriculture and live stock, and has been busy with the clearing up of some six hundred acres of land in the vicinity of Bedias. His holdings have been improved with nine houses for the occupancy of his tenant families. His farm and country interests employ labor to about eighteen families and he is one of the most extensive raisers of the staple crops of cotton corn in Grimes county. As a stock man he not only receives a large amount of annual wealth from this part of the state, but has done much to advance and improve the grade of live stock raised and handled in that part of the state. He raises a large number of hogs for feeders and keeps many hogs. He has improved his land with special facilities for handling hogs and poultry, and has introduced into the country and kept his own farms stocked with Polled Hereford cattle, with the Berkshire hog and blooded game turkeys.

A brief description of his varied interests indicates a prosperous prosperity, and it is worthy of note that Mr. Davis reached his majority he had no money of his own. His prospects of interest in his father's estate, without either a trade or a profession, simply using the capital of his head and hands, and by using his judgment and aggressive industry has accomplished much more than other men who started life with better opportunities. Mr. Davis was a director of the First State Bank of Bedias, and is a director of the Bedias Warehouse Company and of the Bedias Hardwood Company. He is an ex-member of the school board, and his activity as a Methodist is indicated by his office as steward in the church. He has no part in politics as a regular Democratic voter. Mr. Davis built his own home, and his family are well known socially in that part of Texas. On January 20, 1888, he married Miss Nannie Owens, a daughter of John W. Owens, who came to this part of Texas from Mississippi after the war. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have the following children: Fannie, who is a student in the Texas State University and has taught in the public schools; Sam, who was educated in the Sam Houston Normal, and spent one year in Grimes county, and has since been associated with his father in business, being the junior member of Sam A. Davis & Son; Bernice, who is the youngest of the family.

JOSEPH GREEN DAVIS. A few years ago when the Trinity & Brazos Valley Railroad was constructed through Grimes county and a station established at the little settlement of Shiro, one of the men who joined this community of pioneers in business was Joseph Green Davis. He has been one of the business leaders ever since, though his varied financial and property interests are not confined to this one community. Mr. Davis has lived in Texas since 1881, was a boy soldier during the war, at one time served in the legislature and took an active part in politics about the time of the Governor Hogg administration, and his interest and work in the Baptist church have made him one of the leading laymen in that denomination in Texas.

Joseph Green Davis was born July 28, 1844, in Crenshaw county, Alabama. As his father was a farmer, the son grew up in the country, had only a few months of rural schooling, and about the beginning of his manhood learned the trade of blacksmith and wheelwright, a vocation which gave him a living for a number of years. His first activity in Texas was as a farmer in Walker county, and his home was there from 1881 to 1907, when he moved to Shiro. In that new town he established himself as one of the first dealers in general merchandise under the name of J. G. Davis, and the business has been continued prosperously ever since.

During his residence in Walker county Mr. Davis became a prominent figure in official and political affairs. The county sent him as its representative to the twenty-third legislature, which met in January, 1892, at the time of the second inauguration of Governor Hogg. Mr. Davis was a staunch supporter of Mr. Hogg for re-election and in carrying out the many notable reforms championed by that noted statesman. Among the important measures included in the Hogg platform and subsequently made laws were those providing for the railroad commission, the alien land law, the stock and bond law, and others which are now permanently a part of the Texas statutes. At the end of the session and after the important results had been accomplished, Mr. Davis was satisfied with his experience as a legislator, since it involved heavy expenses and neglect of business, and he accordingly did not accept another election. Subsequently he has served as a delegate to state conventions and helped nominate Governor Culbertson, Governor Sayres and Governor Colquitt. Mr. Davis belongs to a long line of Democratic ancestors, and his father was a man of positive political convictions and of some local prominence. Mr. Davis on first coming to Texas joined the Masonic order and is a Past Master of James A. Baker Blue Lodge, No. 202, at Loma, and was the first master of Shiro Lodge. His family have always been Baptists, and his activity in church work extended to attendance as a lay delegate at conventions of the southern branch of the church. He has long been one of the active supporters of Sunday school both in his denomination and as a general Christian movement for the proper instruction of the young and old.

The father of Mr. Davis was David Davis, who was born in the Lancaster district of South Carolina in 1799, one of three children, the other two being John and Peggy, wife of a Mr. Tanner, and both of these children died in Alabama. David Davis had an education in the common schools, spent his active career as a farmer, owned some slaves, and was a staunch supporter of the secession movement, and his death occurred about the beginning of the war. The Davis ancestry is Welsh and the first settler came during the colonial days and settled in South Carolina and practically all the early generations were farmers.

Joseph G. Davis was married in Crenshaw county, Alabama, December 2, 1866, to Miss Sarah Hudson, daughter of James J. and Susan (Clark) Hudson, farming people who came originally from South Carolina. The other children in the Hudson family were: Mrs. Justice; Malinda, who died unmarried; Mary A., who married James Davis; Cynthia, who married Bunyan Burdeaux; Tabitha, the wife of William Barfield; and Newton Hudson. To Mr. and Mrs. Davis have been born the following children: Mary, now deceased, who was Mrs. J. W. Foster of Houston; H. Beeman, a merchant at Livingston, who married Edith Oldham; Callie, wife of W. W. Kenard, of Navasota; Jefferson, postmaster and merchant at Madisonville, who married Effie Panghouse; W. Claud, who married Esther Boatright, and who is a lawyer at Bryan and has served in the Texas legislature and is now district attorney of his district; Fannie, who married C. W. Fuqua, and lives in Shiro; Thomas B., engaged in the business of ice manufacturer at Hubbard City and who married Carrie Andrews; Wilburn, a merchant of Shiro, who married Daisy Calahan; G. C., who is associated with his father in business and who married Bessie Sandel, and Miss Sallie, the youngest.

Almost his first experience in life was as a soldier. In July, 1861, Mr. Davis joined Company A of the Seventeenth Alabama regiment, commanded by Captain Saddler and Colonel Holcomb, and the regiment was attached to Jackson's Brigade in General Marlow's Division of the army of Tennessee. He did duty in guarding the fortifications at Pensacola, Florida, until March, 1862, was then moved to Corinth, Mississippi, participated in the crucial struggle at Shiloh in April, 1862, was then moved to Mobile, Alabama, and after assisting to guard that city for eighteen months joined Johnston's army at Resaca, Georgia, and was in the great campaign leading up to Atlanta until at Marietta Mr. Davis was captured and taken to Indianapolis, spending eight months in prison at Camp Morton, thence removed to Richmond, Virginia, exchanged and sent home on a furlough which expired after Lee surrendered and the war ended. He went through the entire service without wounds, and as a Confederate veteran has attended the reunions and knows a great many of the Texas survivors of the war.

For many years his interests as a business man have been increasing, and besides his enterprise at Shiro Mr. Davis is a stockholder in the Hogan & Altnoch Dry Goods Company at Houston, in the Fidelity & Trust Company of Dallas, and in the First State Bank of Huntsville and in the Richards State Bank at Richards. He took stock in the Amicable Life Insurance Company of Waco at the time of its organization, and built and owned a gin and cotton warehouse at Shiro. He also owns a plantation in Walker county near Huntsville.

JUDGE ALFRED F. REA. One of the oldest and most respected citizens of Grimes county is Judge Alfred F. Rea, who has lived in the county since 1858. After service as a Confederate soldier during the war, he was in merchandising for many years, and since 1912 has had his home in the new town of Shiro. Judge Rea came to Texas from Lauderdale county, Mississippi, and his introduction to the state was under somewhat unfavorable auspices. He had only a quarter of a dollar on reaching Grimes county, having traveled from Shreveport by stage. His first regular employment was teaching a district school at old Redtop in Grimes county.

Judge Rea was born at Columbus, Mississippi, June 13, 1831, and in 1836 his father moved to Mobile, Alabama, where the boyhood of Judge Rea was passed. Nathan Rea, the father, was a native of Kentucky, died at Mobile, Alabama, and the maiden name of his wife was Miss Fannie Moody. Their children were: Con, who was killed as a Confederate soldier during the Atlanta campaign; Eliza, who married Thomas Bragg and died in Choctaw county, Alabama; Judge Alfred F.; and Martha, who married Ben Price and died at Meridian, Mississippi.

The schooling of Judge Rea came to him chiefly after he was grown, and during his early career he taught in Itawamba county, Mississippi, and followed the same line for three years after reaching Texas. Soon after the beginning of the war he entered service in Captain Stephenson's company of Colonel Elmore's regiment of infantry. Nearly all his work as a soldier was around Galveston and on the Gulf coast, and he participated in the brilliant exploit by which the Confederates captured Galveston. He was in the war till its end and was discharged at Galveston, without wounds or capture and with but a single "scare."

On resuming civil life it was as a merchant at Redtop in Grimes county, and his long and steadily prospering career in that business continued for thirty-eight years until 1903. For the past ten years he has lived retired. Judge Rea and his wife after the war began with two children as their chief capital, and this resource added to a fund of industry gave them the working capital which has since provided them with abundance for all the comforts. Judge Rea credits much of his success to his faithful and diligent wife and companion. He has had little to do with politics, and has served his community chiefly as an honorable business man and good friend and neighbor.

On November 14, 1860, at old Redtop, a community later known as Prairie Plains, Judge Rea married Miss Charlotte Bookman, daughter of Daniel and Sallie (Derick) Bookman, who came to Texas from Lexington, South Carolina, in 1845. Mrs. Rea was the second of the Bookman children, all the others being: Isaiah, who lost his life in the battle of Chickamauga; Frank, also a Confederate soldier, who was killed in the battle of Franklin; Paul, who disappeared from family knowledge after the war; Angelina, who married Amos Travis and died at Redtop, Texas; Judy, who died as Mrs. William Reynolds on Roan's Prairie; Mary J., who married Isaac Callahan of Shiro and died there; W. Cass, who had a family and died at Redtop. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Rea are: Sallie, who married Jefferson Spell and lives in Grimes county; C. Frank, of Shiro; Mattie, wife of Dr. John E. Wilson of Shiro; Clara, who married Thomas Foster, and of her twelve children there are four sets of twins.

JUDGE BEN H. DENTON. On walking down the streets of Paris, Texas, if one were to meet a man not much above the average height, yet with a bearing that made him appear taller than he really was, with a fringe of iron-gray hair showing beneath his hat, with a grave and deliberate bearing, one would say, that man is surely a member of the bench, and the surmise would be correct, for Judge Ben H. Denton surely looks the judge as he walks down the streets. He is one of the most popular members of the bench, and is now serving his fourth term as presiding judge of the sixth judicial district.

The grandfather of Judge Denton, George N. Denton, was an early settler in Texas. He was a native of Virginia, and came to Texas in 1867, spending his remaining years in Lamar county, where he settled. Several of his children spent their lives in this section of Texas, one of his daughters becoming the wife of S. B. Maxey, the well-known Confederate general and senator, a distinguished citizen of Paris. The father of Judge Denton was Isaac R. Denton, who was born in Kentucky, and lived his whole life on his farm in Clinton county, Kentucky. He did not care for political honors and gave his whole time to the working of his farm and the rearing and educating of his children. He had been brought up on the Kentucky plantation of his father and it was from the old home state that he took a wife. He married Elizabeth W. Harrison, a daughter of Benjamin Harrison of the Virginia family of that name. They became the parents of two children, Ben H. and Robbie. The latter ed W. W. Farmer and died in Oklahoma in 1912. Denton died in Clinton county, Kentucky, and after his widow married again, her second husband F. E. Beck. They had five children, of whom two are living, the mother also having died. These two are Charles C. Beck, of Hansford county, Texas, and W. F. Beck, of Oklahoma.

Judge Ben H. Denton was born in Albany, Clinton county, Kentucky, on the 25th of July, 1854. He received his education in private schools and later attended the University of Virginia. Perhaps his best years as a student, however, were those spent in the schoolroom as a teacher, for he learned more in teaching than he had in learning. He had not yet reached his majority when he left his native state and made his way west, locating in Gibson county, Indiana, where he became a school teacher, teaching during 1873 and 1874.

His next move brought him to Texas and to Paris, where he became a student in the law offices of his uncle, General Maxey, who was a member of the famous firm of Maxey and Lightfoot. The young law student was admitted to practice at the bar in the seventies, and Judge Gaines, and he began his career under the helpful eye of his uncle. He remained in the offices of Maxey and Lightfoot for some time and finally was made a junior partner of the firm. This firm of Maxey, Lightfoot and Denton became the leading law firm in the handling of the legal business of the important corporations that came into being as Paris and this section of the state began to grow. They had much of the legal work of the banking affairs of the city in their charge and were active in the promotion of the movement for the building of the St. Fe railroad, and the Baltimore and Ohio telegraph lines into Paris. They secured the rights and represented the company that built the railroad, which was the second to run to the county seat. Judge Denton was a general practitioner of law and did not devote himself to any particular phase, surviving the distinguished founders of the firm. He had no desire for all honors and until he was elected to the bench he always refused all emoluments of this kind.

It was in 1900 that Judge Denton was elected judge of the Sixth judicial district, which comprises the counties of Lamar, Fannin and Red River, and he is now in his fourth term in this position. He is noted for his high sense of justice and for the care which he gives in dispensing justice that shall be impartial. He is a deeply democratic and is simple and unaffected in his manners, and his long study of men has made it possible for him to win the confidence of men where it had seemed impossible. His popularity in Paris is due to his personality no less than to his intellectual gifts, and he is an honored and welcome guest in every home in Paris. The religious influences of the Missionary Baptist church, under which the judge was reared, have always been to be the strongest in his life, and his only fraternal allegiance has been with the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

Judge Denton was married in Lamar county, Texas, on the 29th of November, 1881, to Miss Lizzie Long, a daughter of Edward W. Long, who belonged to one of the prominent families in the county. Her mother was Polly Williams, a sister of Lemuel Williams, one of the most prominent men in the commercial and financial world of Paris just before and subsequent to the Civil war. Judge Denton and his wife are the parents of one child, Lucile, who is the wife of Martin F. Wise, of this city.

JOHN W. WADE. Preeminent among the men who are possessed of real commercial ability in the city of Paris, stands the figure of John W. Wade of the furniture house known as the Rodgers-Wade Furniture Company. Mr. Wade is president of this company and ever since its incorporation has been the leading spirit in its development and growth. The history of the company is that of a small struggling concern brought to power and influence by progressive methods and by a thorough understanding of the economic principles of the law of supply and demand. In addition to this his chief business interest he has other important interests in the city and in various other places.

Mr. Wade was born in England, in Stamford, Staffordshire county, on the 4th of May, 1864. His parents, Joe and Harriet (Creek) Wade, were both born in England and came to this country in 1873, locating after a time in Fulton, Kentucky. Here Joe Wade established a mercantile house on the Tennessee side of the line and built up a thriving business. He died in Fulton in 1910 at the age of sixty-nine. The Wade family in England traced their ancestry back through many generations of farming people, and John W. Wade shows the characteristics inherited from a sturdy, upright independent race. In addition to John W. Wade, the surviving children of his parents are Mrs. C. A. Fall, of Paris, Texas, and Henry Edwin, who is now the manager of the Joe Wade Company at Fulton, Kentucky.

John W. Wade received only a meager education in the schools of Fulton, but his education in the business world began before he was hardly out of knickerbockers, for he was put to work in his father's store as soon as he could handle the goods. Here he spent a number of years and learned the principles of handling a business of this kind under the able tuition of his father. At the age of nineteen he left home and for a year acted as a hotel clerk, at the end of which time he determined to try his fortunes in the west and so came to Texas.

This was in 1884 and he located in Paris, where his experience in the furniture business soon obtained for him a position as clerk in one of the Paris stores. Not long after his arrival he in connection with a number of other men formed the J. W. Wade and Company furniture house and until this company was merged in the present one he was actively connected with the firm. Two years after coming to Paris Mr. Wade began his career as a traveling salesman, being connected with W. H. Bettes, and he has continued in this line of work up to the present, as the representative of various Paris houses, principally of the big concern of which he is the present head. He is especially competent to handle the selling end of a business and the men trained by him are the most successful salesmen in this section of the country.

The J. W. Wade Company was successful after a fashion, but it was evident that an improvement could be made and finally a merger was effected between this company and the J. W. Rodgers Furniture Company, a house of somewhat similar business standing. The founder of the Rodgers company had previously established a horsepower factory for the manufacture of the cheaper grades of furniture and to take care of the common chair trade in the section. This factory was very successful in a small way and offered to the vision of John Wade the possibilities of expansion. The partnership continued as a partnership till 1900, when it was chartered as the Rodgers-Wade Furniture Company, having a capital stock of ten thousand dollars. It was at this time a retail and jobbing house with small possibilities, and nothing save the personalities of the owners to indicate the wonderful future lying before the concern. With the success of the little furniture factory in his mind, Mr. Wade and his partners developed this factory and increased its size until he now has a great plant employing over one hundred and twenty-five people. The buildings, including the factory, warehouse and store, cover fifteen acres of ground and the floor space of the big four-story mercantile house covers six and a half acres.

In 1910 Mr. Wade bought all save perhaps a small share of Mr. Rodgers' interest in the company and upon the reorganization of the concern he was made president. At this time T. B. Revell and W. C. Clark came actively into the firm, the former being vice-president and the latter secretary and treasurer. The capital stock of the company has now reached three hundred thousand dollars and the territory covered by its operations includes the four states of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana. Mr. Wade himself heads the sales department and a half dozen men are kept on the road continuously to dispose of the wares of the factory. The growth and rapid development of this company has been undoubtedly due in large measure to the genius and hard work of Mr. Wade, and it can be scarcely paralleled in the commercial history of this section. It is not surprising, therefore, that he should be regarded as one of the powerful and important business men of this city and that his opinion is often deferred to in public matters.

Mr. Wade was one of the factors in the building of the Paris and Mount Pleasant Railroad and is a financial and moral supporter of the Christian Infirmary that is now being constructed in this city. He is one of the directors of the Paris board of trade and is president of the mercantile house of Joe Wade and Company, the business which his father built up and left to him at his death, in Fulton, Kentucky. He is also the executive head of the Hugo Furniture Company of Hugo, Oklahoma, which is a branch of the Rodgers-Wade Company. It takes a man of considerable energy and enthusiasm to handle all these affairs and Mr. Wade is just this kind of a man, in fact, he is an ideal citizen for a town so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of progress as is Paris. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. In his religious beliefs he is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal church.

On the 4th day of May, 1886, Mr. Wade was married to Miss Augusta Delia Campbell, of Paris, Texas. Mrs. Wade is a daughter of Major J. K. P. Campbell, who settled in this section in pioneer times. Mr. and Mrs. Wade are the parents of two daughters: Ella Wade, who was graduated from Dana Hall at Wellesley, Massachusetts, in 1912, and Bessie Wade, who completed her education at Rye Seminary, New York.

ROBERT ALLEN FARMER, M. D. Representing the modern and thoroughly equipped ability and the skill of his profession and enjoying a large general practice, which he has built up in the brief time since he left the university, Dr. Farmer is one of the young physicians and surgeons of Needville in Fort Bend county. He began practice with an excellent equipment and the test of real practice found him qualified for this very important service among the social profession. Dr. Farmer represents one of the old families of Fort Bend county, and his father, Henry R. Farmer has for many years been one of the conspicuous and public spirited citizens of this vicinity.

Robert Allen Farmer was born at Hanson, in Fort Bend county, October 2, 1882. His parents were Henry and Maria B. (Armstrong) Farmer. On the father's side the remote ancestry is German, while on the mother's side the stock is a mingling of English, Scotch and Irish. The mother was born in Fort Bend county within seven miles of where Dr. Farmer was born. The doctor and his father were both born on the same plantation, a large body of land which the paternal grandfather had taken up many years ago, and developed into one of the large and profitable plantations in the Brazos Valley. The Farmer family came to Texas in the early fifties from near Griffin, Georgia. The mother's people came from the state of Tennessee about the same time, and both families were planters and slave holders and occupied prominent positions in the social life of this part of Texas during the Ante-Bellum days.

Mr. Henry R. Farmer is one of the prominent men of Fort Bend county. He has had a long and active career, has been known to the people of this section practically all his life, and has always represented first-class ability in business and a fine moral integrity and character. He is also a man of superior intelligence and culture, and has always been a reader and observer and a good mixer with men. He is now practically retired, although he still supervises the work on his farm. During earlier years he was active in local politics. He had the distinction of serving as the first district clerk in Fort Bend county under the "Jay Birds" rule, and was an active participant in that strife of local politics. After one term as district clerk he retired to his farm, but subsequently was elected and served a term as tax assessor, and has repeatedly served as a county commissioner. In late years he has often been urged to enter the political arena, but has steadily refused, his choice and all his tastes now inclining him to remain quietly on his farm and look after his interests there. Both he and his good wife are members of the Methodist church. There were seven children in the family, and four of these, all daughters, died when less than five years of age. These were named Mary, Clyde, Charlie and Fannie Henry. The doctor and two others survive, the latter being Edward D. of Houston, and Mrs. L. S. McMicken of Houston.

Dr. Farmer was reared on the home plantation in Fort Bend county, and received most of his instruction from private tutors. Subsequently he was a student for a time in the high school at Blanco, after which he returned to the farm and was engaged in its various activities, until February, 1902. At that time he went to Lane City, Texas, and was employed in a pumping plant for the rice fields. During the seasons of employment, he continued in this work for four years, and then spent a year on a large cattle ranch. It was with this varied experience that he finally devoted himself to preparation for medicine, and such a variety of occupations have undoubtedly been a valuable factor in his subsequent career. In October, 1906, he entered the medical department of the University of Texas, and after a full four years course was graduated M. D. on May 31, 1910. On the first day of September following, he opened his office in Richmond, and the reputation which he had always enjoyed in his home community as a young man of substantial ability and winning personal charms soon brought him his first cases, and from that forward his success has been rapid. Since 1911 Dr. Farmer has served as county health officer. He moved to Needville, Fort Bend county, Texas, in December, 1913, where he is engaged in practice and is running a drug store. He is a member of the Fort Bend county and Texas State and the South Texas Medical Societies, and the American Medical Association. He is secretary of the county society. The doctor is a member of the Baptist church in Galveston.

JOHN B. HERFF, M. D., who died in San Antonio in 1882, has already attained prominence and success as a physician and citizen, though a comparatively young man. He married Eda Kampman, and after his death she married Mr. T. F. Myer of St. Louis, head of the Myer Brothers Drug Company, the largest wholesale house of its kind west of the Mississippi river.

Dr. John Bennett Herff, a grandson of the distinguished Dr. Ferdinand Herff and a son of Dr. John Herff, having thus inherited his profession through two succeeding generations, was born in San Antonio in 1880. When he was nine years of age he went with his mother to St. Louis, and was reared and received his early education in that city. His medical training was acquired in the medical department of the University of Michigan, where he graduated M. D. in 1904. Returning to San Antonio, he took up the active practice of his profession, and since then has been able to uphold in every way the position attained in medicine by his distinguished grandfather, and though he has gained special note as a surgeon, follows a general practice and has a standing second to none among the medical fraternity of the Alamo city.

Dr. Herff is a member of the County and State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. He was married in St. Louis to Miss Florence Harris of that city. Their three daughters are Carol, Florence and Jean.

FRANK W. THOMASSON of Petrolia, Texas, is one of the most enterprising newspaper men in the state of Texas. Young, enthusiastic and energetic, with an experience in journalistic work which dates from the time he was twelve years old, Mr. Thomasson has been extremely successful. Although he takes an active interest in political and other national interests his chief concern is to build up the community in which he lives. He is always in the forefront of any move which has the improvement of this section as its end and his executive ability and qualities of leadership are often called into use.

Frank W. Thomasson was born in Cisco, Texas, on the 25th of May, 1881. He received his early education in the public schools of Central Texas and his later education was had in the practical school of experience. When he was only a child of eight years he had to begin the fight for existence. His first work was carrying water to the cotton pickers in the fields, for which he was paid ten cents a day. During the next two years he worked at such occupations as his child's strength could compass and at the age of twelve he found a position in a printing office. Since that time he has seldom strayed far from the smell of freshly inked paper and the sound of the presses.

For several years Mr. Thomasson worked on various newspapers in different capacities. Three years of this period was spent in New Mexico. His ambition was to own a paper of his own and after many years of careful saving and hard work and much valuable experience, he found himself in a position to buy a paper. It was in Sherman, Texas, that he made his first venture into the business world. He leased the Courier, but ran it for only a few months. He then went to New Mexico and located at Folsom where he ran the El Espano Americano. He sold this paper after a time and spent a short while travelling before he returned to Texas. He now worked for a time on various newspapers and then established the Toyah News, at Toyah, Texas. His next move took him to Weinert, Texas, where he bought the Weinert Enterprise. He conducted the paper for about two years and then moved the plant to Goree and established the Goree Enterprise. He was engaged in the editing and publishing of this paper for some time and built up a circulation which was not only extensive throughout the state, but also had a circulation in nearly every state in the Union. He is now living in Petrolia, Clay county, where he is editing the Enterprise. He is a powerful editorial writer and his editorials are extensively quoted. He is a correspondent of the Associated Press, and as a writer on many subjects is well known. He devotes his paper largely to building up this section of the state.

Mr. Thomasson is often quoted by his friends and acquaintances and some of his sayings are famous throughout Texas. One remark which is characteristic of the man is as follows, "I was born in Cisco in their first cyclone; I live in the Windy West and I am a publisher of a blowing paper. If I get too windy just consider the source."

In politics Mr. Thomasson is a member and an active worker in the Democratic party. He is not a member of any church, but has a strong inclination toward the Protestant Episcopal church. Outside of his work and his family and friends, Mr. Thomasson finds his chief interest in the breeding and raising of fine poultry.

Mr. Thomasson was married at Rogers, Texas, on the 25th of March, 1906, to Miss Ida D. Graham, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Graham, of "The Grove," Texas. Three sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomasson, as follows, Robert Allen, William Graham and Frank W., Jr.

JAMES A. CALDWELL, M. D. Other of the learned professions minister to the needs of the people, but none holds the importance of that of medicine. Man can adjust his quarrels without the aid of members of the bar and bench; he can work out his own religious salvation, but he must depend absolutely upon the skill of the physician and surgeon where his very life itself is concerned. From earliest times the "medicine man" has held a high place in his community, and as civilization has advanced, so have the dignity and prominence of the men of healing power, until today there is no class of men so highly respected and honored as those who have devoted themselves, their lives and their talents to the amelioration of the ills of humanity. While the art of healing is as old as man, however, it has been left for the moderns to penetrate into the most profound mysteries of Nature, and through incessant devotion and untiring research discover the remedy for many diseases once thought incurable. Among those engaged in this magnificent work, Dr. James A. Caldwell, of McKinney, Texas, holds a foremost position. His phenomenal success in the treatment and cure of cancer, that loathsome and once most dreaded of diseases, has gained him a place not alone among the eminent men of his calling, but among the benefactors of mankind.

Dr. Caldwell was born at Bentonville, Arkansas, May 4, 1857, and is a son of Alexander J. and Mary E. Caldwell. His father, a native of North Carolina, was a slaveholder prior to the Civil War, removed in young manhood to Tennessee, where he was married, then moved to Arkansas, and in 1882 came to Texas and located in Collin county, which continued to be his home up to the time of his death, in 1907. The mother passed away about three months later. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell, all living at this time: James A., of this review; Albert J., a prominent medical practitioner of Corpus Christi, Texas; and Cora, who is the wife of John Hall, of Marshfield, Oregon.

The early education of Doctor Caldwell was secured in the public schools of Arkansas, following which he attended the Little Rock Medical College and the Louisville Medical College, from the latter of which he was graduated in 1888 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In the meantime, in 1885, he had located at Rosebud, Arkansas, and subsequently removed to Climax, Collin county, Texas, from whence he came to McKinney in 1889, here entering general practice. In this connection he built up an excellent professional business and rapidly arose to a commanding position among the practitioners of his section. He continued an earnest student, and in 1898 took a post-graduate course in the New Orleans Polyclinic as well as one in the New York Polyclinic, and in 1908 again attended the former institution, since which time he has taken several other courses. During this time he had earnestly devoted himself to study, research and investigation in the treatment and cure of cancer. He had experimented with a number of cases, and his success finally encouraged him to devote himself exclusively to that specialty. Accordingly, he opened a small sanitarium in 1907, for the treatment of this dread disease, and his subsequent success attracted such a great practice that he was soon compelled to erect his present large sanitarium at No. 407 South Tennessee street. The Caldwell Sanitarium represents one of the most magnificent and modernly appointed retreats in the Southwest. The closest observation will readily perceive that there is apparently nothing left undone in the make-up of a complete home for the ailing. It is located on South Tennessee street, about five minutes' walk from the Court House, on property slightly more elevated than in the business district. It is a two-story stone and brick structure, containing forty-three large and airy rooms and an immense basement, where the most improved steam-heating appliances are installed and which furnish the correct temperature for each room and hall in the building. There are two operating rooms, containing every known appliance for the treatment of all specialized diseases; two dining rooms, twenty-four bedrooms, two large reception halls, etc. Hot and cold water, fine bathing apparatus, all necessary electrical appurtenances and a complete bell and sewerage system are supplied. All rooms and hall floors are hard-oiled, while the stairways and main halls are covered with noiseless cork medallions. An extensive flower garden beautifies the front of the building, while fine cement walks surround the entire structure. The most interesting phase of the many comforts provided at this home are the immense verandas, comprising about 600 feet and surrounding the building on three sides, upstairs and down. These may be called either sun parlors or air parlors, inasmuch as patients may recline on the verandas and have easy access to any temperature at any hour. Taken as a whole, the Caldwell Sanitarium is a complete refuge for all sufferers, and its class is not surpassed in Texas. Although not exclusively, Doctor Caldwell devotes his time principally to the cure of cancer and tuberculosis. His treatment of cancer is comparatively painless and does not require the use of the knife or X-Ray method. He treats all kinds of cancer, internal and external, and his record of cures is about eighty per cent, including all cases, many of whom come to him after trying all other kinds of treatment and are within a few hours or days of death when they come. Patients from seventeen states have been cured, and he turns none away, although he states frankly when there is no hope for recovery. Cancer is a malignant growth, having the property of giving rise to secondary growths exactly like itself in distant organs. The tumor grows faster than the new blood vessels required to nourish it, with the result that in time the tumor mortifies, the skin over it breaks down, and a foul ulcerating wound is produced with the result that the sufferer is gradually worn down. For years this disease has seemed to be absolutely incurable, yet from the following testimonials (which are but three from hundreds in Doctor Caldwell's possession) it would seem as though the Doctor had succeeded where so many eminent men of medicine have failed:

"Cincinnati, Ohio, August 15, 1911. To whom it may Concern: This is to certify that I visited Dr. James A. Caldwell's Sanitarium in April, 1910, and was pleased to see some of his patients he had treated and removed some very large tumors without the aid of the knife. Yours truly, C. C. Agin, M. D., 1135 Dayton street."

"I had a cancer on the back of my right hand, pronounced to be such by three regular physicians and treated as such by one of them, for seven months, by means of the X-Ray method, without any lasting benefit. In fact, it continued to get worse under the treatment, though the physician who did the work is a regular physician and stands well as a specialist among his professional brethren. I then went to Doctor Caldwell, of McKinney, Texas, who treated my hand on the 17th of April, 1912, and in eight days the cancer came out by the roots. In twenty-eight days after I had entered Doctor Caldwell's Sanitarium my hand was sufficiently healed for me to return home, and in three weeks more my hand was entirely healed and has been well ever since. John M. Alexander, Presiding Elder Cuero District Conference, West Texas. Subscribed and sworn to before me, by John M. Alexander, a reputable person, on this July 10, 1912. G. P. Box, county clerk DeWitt county, Texas. By J. S. Edgar, deputy."

"Cured of Cancer. Prominent Arkansas Physician Happy Over Relief Found in McKinney. Dr. H. W. Waters, of Highland, Arkansas, left for home today after a six weeks' stay in McKinney. He came here for cancer treatment under Dr. J. A. Caldwell and departed happy in the belief that he is permanently cured. Before leaving our city, Dr. Waters, who is a cultured and extensively traveled old gentleman, said to a representative of these papers, that he could not speak in terms of too high praise for Dr. Caldwell both as a physician and a man. His cancer treatment is wonderful indeed and all physicians should direct victims of that loathsome disease to Dr. Caldwell's Sanitarium, where relief and cure speedily come. Dr. Waters is a graduate of a number of medical schools of the United States and has studied abroad. For 40 years he practiced his profession, but retired a few years ago. He is a man of means and wide observation. After receiving treatment from different specialists and at sanitariums, without relief, Dr. Waters concluded to come to Dr. Caldwell, and now considers that decision to have been providential for him, and he leaves McKinney a very happy old gentleman. Dr. Waters says: 'As an old Regular practitioner, was naturally skeptical, until myself afflicted with a cancer in my ear and I came to Dr. Caldwell. Now then I want to do everything I can to spread abroad the knowledge of Dr. Caldwell's wonderful ability to remove and cure cancers without the knife. It is suffering and hopeless humanity now that I am interested in and want to see it obtain relief from the terrible disease that came so nearly costing me my life.' Dr. Waters said that he had consulted or advised with specialists at Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Indianapolis and other places, where he, being a physician, could have received free treatment and been out only sanitarium expenses. But after visiting Dr. Caldwell's Sanitarium and satisfying himself by a personal interview with its owner, he quickly made up his mind that his best hope of cure was in McKinney, where the Sanitarium accommodations are excellent and where Dr. Caldwell's charges are certainly reasonable, in fact, very low for the great service to humanity that he is rendering.—The Daily Courier-Gazette, April 15, 1914."

Doctor Caldwell is a Democrat and has always been a faithful supporter of his party's principles. He is a member of the Masonic order and a Knight Templar, and holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. With his family, he attends the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he has for years been a member.

On January 24, 1878, in Conway, Arkansas, Doctor Caldwell was married to Miss Scottie Puckett, daughter of a farmer of Arkansas, and to this union there have been born five children, of whom two are living: Gibson, aged twenty-seven years, who is employed as a book-keeper at McKinney; and Roy, aged twenty-three years, who is the proprietor of a grocery establishment.

JEFF D. SUMMEROUR. One of the pioneer settlers of Wilbarger county, Jeff D. Summerour, although he spent many years as a ranchman, is now best known as proprietor of a large wholesale grocery house at Vernon, and by efficient management has made his concern the largest of its kind in northwest Texas. From his early years he has been a worker, and along with industry has combined an exceptional talent for business organization and management, and only a few men in northwest Texas have been so generally prosperous in business affairs.

Jeff D. Summerour is a native of Georgia, born in Forsythe county, November 10, 1861, a son of Harrison and Mary A. (Henderson) Summerour. His father was born in South Carolina, and his mother in North Carolina, both coming to Georgia when young and were married in that state. The father for many years conducted a line of stores in the city of Atlanta, where he was recognized as one of the leading business men. During the war he enlisted in the Confederate army, and fought in the battles of Atlanta and various other cam-paigms. His death occurred in 1881, at the age of seventy-four years. The mother died at the age of eighty-four in 1910 in Gwinnett county, Georgia. They were the parents of nine children of whom the Vernon merchant was fifth.

While a boy he attended school in Forsyth and Milton counties of his native state, and also in the city schools of Atlanta. When he left school his first practical training and experience was in the engraver's trade, which he perfected himself in at Atlanta, and served for three years. He moved out to Texas in 1885, he found no use for his trade, and instead filed on ranch land in Wilbarger county. Wilbarger county at that time was an open range, probably with not a fence over its entire area excepting to enclose some little bit of plow land. In this frontier country he became a stock raiser and farmer, and still retains large interests in that direction.

In 1911, Mr. Summerour came to Vernon and established the present wholesale grocery and feed business conducted under the name of the Summerour Wholesale Grocery Company. He has developed this to the largest concern of its kind in this section of the state, its business being conducted in a building covering ground space of ninety by one hundred and ten feet, and the concrete and brick building is one of the substantial business structures of Vernon. The company keeps five salesmen selling its goods over a large territory. Mr. Summerour is also a director in a Vernon Bank, and has much to show for his well directed efforts through his career, nearly thirty years of which have been spent in Texas.

At the present time Mr. Summerour is serving the city as a member of the city council. In politics he is a Democrat, is affiliated with the Masonic Order, belongs to the Royal Arch Chapter, and the Mystic Shrine. His church is the Methodist.

In Wilbarger county in May, 1892, Mr. Summerour married Miss Nannie Kelley, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Kelley. Her father, who died in 1910, was a farmer and rancher in the vicinity of Vernon, having moved here many years ago from Ross county. One child has been born to the marriage, Thomas J. Summerour, born at Milton, Georgia, in 1893, is now married and in business with his father.

BARTON D. FLANIKEN, M. D. A physician and surgeon who stands very high in his profession at Vernon, Dr. Flaniken has been in active practice there for the past five years, and did his first professional service after leaving medical college in his old home county of Bell.

Barton D. Flaniken was born in Bell county, Texas, December 9, 1878, the only son and child of D. W. and Josie (Moffett) Flaniken. His father was a native of Alabama, and the grandfather came from North Carolina, and became one of the pioneers of Texas. His name was John Flaniken, and he made a success as a farmer and planter in Washington county. It was in Washington county that D. W. Flaniken was reared, and when the Civil war broke out he enlisted in Company I of the Fifth Texas Regiment, and was engaged in scouting service in the army of Lee in Virginia. After the war he located in Bell county, and became very successful and prominent as a farmer and stock raiser. His death occurred in October, 1912, at the age of seventy-seven. His wife, who was born and reared and educated in Texas, died in Bell county, where she was married in 1880 at the age of forty-five.

Dr. Flaniken grew up on the home ranch in Bell county, attended the local schools, the high school at Temple, and the Belton Male Academy. In preparation for his profession he took a course in the University of Louisville at Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated M. D. from the Fort Worth Medical College in 1907. After one year in his native county he moved to Vernon and soon became recognized as an able physician and surgeon, now enjoying a large general practice.

In politics the doctor is a Democrat. He is a Master Mason and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America. His professional associations are with the county and the state medical societies.

At Temple, Texas, July 11, 1908, Dr. Franklin married Miss Ada Hutchins, who was graduated from the Texas State Normal School in 1903, and had been a successful teacher in Texas Schools up to the time of her marriage. Dr. and Mrs. Flaniken have one child, Robbie Flaniken, born at Vernon, January 31, 1910. Dr. Flaniken is interested in outdoor life, and aside from his wholesome recreation is devoted to his profession and his family circle.

JUDGE SAMUEL W. RHODES, one of the big farming men of Van Zandt county, is one of the practical and intelligent agricultural forces that have been recently added to the rural citizenship of Texas. He came to the state in 1906, spending three years in Colorado county, where he owned some seven thousand acres of land of the Gulf Coast country, and it was there that he became a forever convert to the climate of Texas, which has so oft in times past been the element that brought about the adoption of the state as their own by visitors from more rigorous climes.

Judge Rhodes was born on November 18, 1856, near Advance, Missouri, and he is a son of Pleasant Monroe Rhodes, who was born in Cape Girardeau, Missouri, in 1830, himself a son of Dr. Rhodes, who settled in that state from North Carolina in about 1820. Dr. Rhodes settled in Stoddard county among the pioneers and he was an active and important factor in the affairs of that county in the days of its early history. He helped to lay out the county seat, which they named Bloomfield, did something at surveying for a time, later engaged in merchandise in Bloomfield, and was one of the first county judges of Stoddard county. He also acquired immense bodies of land that formed a good share of his estate when he died. His work as a physician was not the least of his achievements in those parts as one of the advance guard in development work, and though he died while still young, his accomplishments were of a wide and varied nature, all sufficient to give him a place of distinction in his county. He passed away in 1858, at the age of fifty years.

Dr. Rhodes came from his native state in company with several of his brothers, and he was married in Cape Girardeau county to Miss Susan Kinder, who came of a family of merchants of German descent. She died in 1861, and her children were named as follows: Pleasant M.; Samuel W., who died in Missouri; Emily, who married Capt. D. W. Beard of the Confederate army, and now resides in Lebanon, Missouri; Caroline, the wife of Dr. Isaac B. Allen, died in Missouri.

The first born of this family, Pleasant M. Rhodes, became the father of Judge Rhodes of this review. He added a very plain and simple education to his very active mentality in boyhood, and early identified himself with farm life. He was an extensive farmer and stock raiser and made a reputation in the matter of his hog breeding, as well as along other lines of stock breeding. His ability was such as to recommend him for public service, but he persistently declined every overture that threatened to connect him with a public office. During the Civil war he took up the cause of the Union, but assumed no part in the conflict. He declared himself as a Democrat and was one of the few of that party who were permitted to vote for several years after the war. In his home community he was one of those men upon whom universal confidence is ever bestowed, and his influence, ever of a goodly order, was felt in politics, business and society.

As a farmer Pleasant Rhodes was a worthy developer of Stoddard county in the matter of "making two blades of grass grow where one had grown before," and when the Cape Girardeau & Southwestern Railway was built through his county he aided very materially in its promotion. He was a Methodist, and the closing years of his life were marked by an especially rigid observance of the precepts of the Bible. His home was located near Advance, sixteen miles north of Bloomfield, Missouri, and there he died in 1902.

He married Elizabeth Masters, a daughter of Henry Masters, in Stoddard county, in the early years of his manhood. Mr. Masters was a North Carolina pioneer to Missouri and was an elemental force in the rural improvement of the county. Mrs. Rhodes passed away in 1863, the mother of Samuel W. Rhodes, who, among others born to them, was the only one to grow up. Mr. Rhodes later married Miss Columbia McFerran, and she bore him three children. William M. is president of the Exchange Bank of Advance, Missouri; R. Seymour is a farmer near Advance, and Murits became the wife of Jesse Abernathy, of Advance, Missouri. Samuel W. Rhodes remained at home with his father until he married and then he settled on a nearby farm. He engaged in the business of grain and stock raising with a generous measure of success, and from his studious and observing nature, gathered a fund of information regarding the ideal conditions for animal life in those parts. He developed one of the model farms of the county, and after twenty-five years of labor and devotion to his place, left it to engage in other enterprises.

It was in February, 1901, when he left his farm and went to Fredericktown, there to enter into the manufacture of brick. There he introduced the first dry-press brick plant in that section of the state, and he spent five years in the business, later exchanging his plant for coast lands in Texas and retiring from the manufacturing business. In Fredericktown he carried on a considerable building, laying out College Hill addition to the place and improving and selling the lots, thus adding in a very material manner to the development of the town. He aided in the organization of the Fredericktown Trust Company, which has since moved to St. Louis and become the Bankers' Trust Company, and was while there a member of its board of directors.

When Judge Rhodes disposed of his brick plant and took in exchange for it land in the Gulf Coast country of Texas, he came to Texas himself and here engaged for three years as a ranchman in Colorado county, putting to excellent use his holdings of some seven thousand acres of land. He disposed of the land after a time and came to Van Zandt county, where he sought and located a farm of many attractive features, located two and a half miles south of Grand Saline. This place, in his estimate, was one that offered him an opportunity to exercise his prowess in farming and farm-making, and it comprised the several tracts in the plantation of Cockrell and Gray of Dallas. The farm contains 1365 acres, embracing the surveys of the two Buckleys, McInture, Cox and A. Gray. The plantation, at the time he sought it, was suffering from continued improper handling and neglect, until it was proving a most unprofitable investment for its owners. Its new fields were a mass of thickets, it was lacking in shelter for tenants, and nothing but the nearness of the markets and the character of its soil was present to appeal to anyone seeking a place for an ideal home.

This, however, was just the place required by Judge Rhodes to prove his capacity as a farmer. Having spent the first forty years of his career in successful agriculture and as a student of woodland soils, he recognized the possibilities that were latent in this neglected tract, when backed up with good management, energy and solid cash. He built a splendid farm home and a barn upon a choice site, cleaned up the fields, set a clearing force to work increasing the area of his tillable lands, built several miles of cross fence of wire and post, introduced scientific methods of breaking and cultivating his lands, and began obtaining results from the first crop. The deep, sandy, loam soil responded promptly and liberally in corn and oats, and an old field, for thirty consecutive years under the plow, yielded him fifty dollars worth of cotton per acre from the very start.

In Missouri he had been successful in hog raising, and although the climate differed considerably, he sought to test out his new farm on its merits as a hog-raising proposition. To do this he experimented with red clover, a very necessary crop for the proper development and nourishment of a young hog, and he has found it to be fairly adapted to this soil. Conditions of soil and proximity to water under subsoil indicate the successful growth of alfalfa, the same being another grass crop that is invaluable in the successful growing of hogs.

In improving his farm Judge Rhodes placed a small saw-mill in his woodlot and made the rough lumber for the building of his tenant houses and for the cutting of dimension stuff required here and there and in the construction of permanent buildings. All these innovations have an air of stability and substantialness that mark an epoch in farm making in this section of the country.

In the matter of politics, Judge Rhodes resembles his honored father in his active participation in party affairs, though he has gone farther than did his father in the acceptance of public office. He was elected on the Democratic ticket in 1894 to the office of County Judge of Stoddard county and spent four years in the office, retiring voluntarily in 1898. His incumbency of that office began about the time when the public was beginning to clamor for a more progressive handling of the affairs of the public, and his administration dealt largely with the questions of higher tax rates, constructing of bridges and other public improvements, the refunding of the bonded debt and the general injection of life into temporary securities of the county. This somewhat radical departure raised much opposition to his administration but the after effect of the move forward was that of crediting the Rhodes court with having accomplished much of real good to Stoddard county. His tax plan chiefly affected those lands of non-residents which lay idle and partook of the benefits of the neighboring improvements, yet paid little in taxes in proportion to the benefits received, and the result was the forcing of large bodies of vacant lands upon the market to home-seekers, thus adding greatly to the taxable values of the county. The refunding of the county bonded debt was accomplished in an advantageous manner, and the raising of funds to meet current obligations raised county warrants to par and made them pass current.

In Missouri politics Judge Rhodes attended several state conventions. He was a delegate to the convention in Springfield in 1900 when "Silver" Dick Bland and "Gum Shoe" Bill Stone fought out the question of United States Expansion to the advantage of the latter, and he was also in that convention that nominated Stone for Governor, as well as the one that named Joseph W. Folk for Governor of Missouri in Texas. Judge Rhodes was sent to the convention at Houston in 1912, which pronounced Woodrow Wilson as Texas' candidate for president, but his remnant of Missouri pride was sufficient to hold him in line for Champ Clark before the primary for the choice of a presidential candidate.

In 1876 Judge Rhodes married Miss Alpha Liggett, a daughter of Jesse B. Liggett, one of the oldest merchants of Stoddard county. Mr. Liggett was a West Virginia man and he married a girl of the name of Gregory, who was born of Indiana parents, who came to Dunklin county, Missouri, in early years. The children of Judge and Mrs. Rhodes living are six, and concerning them brief mention is made as follows: James, the eldest is a dairyman of Houston, Texas, and he married Celia Sterns; Cleveland V., a young man who has traveled widely, is identified in a prominent capacity with work on the Panama Canal; Jual is the wife of B. S. Johnson, of Henry county, Missouri; Miss Nellie; Benjamin; and Jesse, the latter a youth of eighteen years who entered the senior class of Sam Houston Normal at Huntsville in 1912 and completed his course in August, 1913, and is now engaged in teaching as principal of the village schools of Lovelady; George, the youngest child, died at the age of twelve years.

ARTHUR C. HORTON, M. D. For fifteen years Arthur C. Horton, M. D., of Murchison, has occupied a distinctive place among the members of the medical profession of Henderson county. His superior attainments and ability placed him in the front ranks ere he had been engaged in practice many years, and, indeed, from his initial steps in his chosen profession it was manifest that his success was assured. By nature and acquired knowledge he is pre-eminently fitted for his vocation, and his attainments have gained him merited recognition from his medical brethren. Doctor Horton came to Murchison in 1898 as a junior from the old Barnes Medical College of St. Louis, Missouri, and practiced on a certificate from the local district board for three years. He completed his medical course in the University of Dallas in 1902, and at that time resumed his practice where he had left off.

Arthur C. Horton was born in Itawamba county, Mississippi, August 27, 1873, and was but three years of age when the family came to Texas by rail, disembarked at Dallas, and drove down into Hill county, before there was a railroad through that section, settling near Itasca. For several years his parents lived in that section and then moved into Ellis county, and located near Ennis, and it was at that point that Doctor Horton finished his minority and received his preliminary education in the public schools.

Alfred M. Horton, the father of Doctor Horton, died in Murchison, Texas, in 1910, when sixty-seven years of age. He was born and reared in Pickens county, Alabama, and was a son of a small farmer, who was also tax collector of Pickens county for twenty-three years continuously, and passed away there when in advanced years. He was a native of South Carolina, pioneered to Alabama, and was there married. He furnished six sons for the Confederate service during the Civil War, and of these four met death while fighting gallantly in the defense of the cause they considered just. He had three daughters: Mrs. Ware, Mrs. Love and one who never married. Alfred M. and one other son survived the struggle between the South and the North. The former enlisted as a private in Company C, of the Twenty-fourth Alabama Regiment, of Cheatham's division of sharpshooters. Among others he fought in the battle of Gettysburg, and in that great struggle was thrice wounded, and these wounds proved his undoing as an effective soldier and his military career came to an end.

As a citizen Alfred M. Horton lived quietly and privately on the farm until the weakness of age and the effects of his wounds and subsequent hard labor forced his retirement and he came to Murchison to be near his son. He was a consistent member of the Christian church and contributed to its movements, as he did also to those which made for the welfare of his community in other ways. He was never a politician, being content to till his soil and make a comfortable home for his family. For some years he was identified with the Masonic fraternity as a member of the Blue Lodge. Mr. Horton married Miss Nancy F. Mann, a daughter of John Mann, a Mississippi farmer. The children born to Alfred M. and Nancy F. (Mann) Horton were as follows: Otis, who married Carrie McCook, and died in Ellis county, Texas, the father of two children; J. Elvin, an Ellis county agriculturist, who married Fannie Bailey; Dr. Arthur C., whose name heads this review; Hyter, a resident of Murchison, who married Nelia Harrison; and Lela, who became the wife of Pyrd Porter, whose home is in Henderson county.

Arthur C. Horton was reared to agricultural pursuits, but decided upon a medical career and, accordingly, as a youth made his last crop in Ellis county, and entered upon his studies. He attended Barnes Medical College, at St. Louis, Missouri, for three years, and then sought practical experience in the profession upon the authority conferred by the local board. In 1902 he graduated from the medical department of the University of Dallas, and has since that time given himself up wholly to the practice of his profession, his field of activity being the town of Murchison. Doctor Horton is a member of the Texas State Medical Society, and his associates in the Henderson County Medical Society have honored him by election to the vice-presidency of that organization. He is a great student and passes much of his leisure time in perusing the leading journals published in the interests of his profession. It is his laudable ambition to keep fully abreast of the times in all modern discoveries in the treatment and cure of disease and to be progressive in all his methods. He is a partner in the Ard Drug Company, at Murchison, which his business ability has greatly assisted in developing. In political matters, Doctor Horton is a Democrat, but aside from that of a good citizen, takes but little interest in the struggles of the political arena. His religious faith is that of the Methodist church, and his fraternal connection with the Blue Lodge of the Masonic fraternity.

Doctor Horton has been twice married, his first union being with Miss Belle Worshom, of Murchison, who died in 1905, after five years of married life, without issue. On October 20, 1907, Doctor Horton was married to Miss Vinnie Scott, a daughter of S. G. Scott, and a granddaughter of Travis Scott, a brother of the venerable Dr. William D. Scott, of Athens, Texas. S. G. Scott, father of Mrs. Horton, married Miss Allie Johns, whose father belonged to an old family of Henderson county. To the union of Doctor and Mrs. Horton there have been born three children: Ila, Allie and Celia.

CELEDONIO GARZA. A man of vigorous mentality and clearly defined principles of the highest character, the late Celedonio Garza was for many years one of the most active and prominent citizens of Brownsville, and his death, at the age of three score years, was deeply mourned as a loss to the industrial and business circles of his home city, and in the political fields of Cameron county. Descended from an early and honored family, he was born, in 1851, in Brownsville, Cameron county, Texas, and died in the city of his birth, April 3, 1911. He was a son of Juan and Juana (Garza) Garza, the father dying at a comparatively early age, in 1864, and the mother in 1909.

Mr. Garza's father, his grandfather, Remigio Garza, and his uncle, Santos Garza, were all soldiers of the Confederacy, in service in and near Brownsville, belonging to a company commanded by Captain Adrian Vidal. In his early manhood Remigio Garza, a lieutenant in the Mexican army, was in service in that part of Mexico that, in 1836, became the Republic of Texas. For his gallant services as a soldier he was given a grant of land in San Patricio county, Texas, which, however, he never took up. Instead, he located on the Lower Rio Grande, in Cameron county, where he established at Villa Nueva ranch, which has nearly ever since been known as the home of the Garzas, although it was temporarily out of their possession, having been repurchased by Celedonio Garza in 1904, and being now owned by his family. It is a fine estate of three hundred acres, with irrigation, and all modern improvements and conveniences, being one of the most attractive farms in the entire valley.

Villa Neuva, an historic place, was the county seat of Cameron county prior to the foundation of Brownsville, which is located on the Rio Grande, a short distance above it.

After the death of his father, in 1864, Celedonio Garza came to Brownsville to live with his mother and sister, Mrs. Elena Garza de Fernandez. He subsequently attended Saint Joseph's College, and also spent twenty months in study at a school in Matamoras, Mexico, becoming fairly educated in both English and Spanish. After leaving school he clerked for a year at A. Chano's grocery store, in Brownsville, and then entered the employ of his brother-in-law, Victorano Fernandez, with whom, in 1876, he formed a co-partnership under the firm name of Fernandez & Company, dealers in furniture. The partnership being dissolved in 1881, Mr. Garza engaged in general mercantile business for himself, locating at the corner of Eighth and Saint Charles streets. In 1885 he transferred his business to the corner of Jefferson and Eleventh streets, and in 1886 moved to the corner of Thirteenth and Madison streets, where the business is still conducted under the ownership of Mrs. Garza, and under the management of their eldest son, Celedonio M. Garza.

Besides his active connection with the commercial affairs of Brownsville, Mr. Garza was for many years a man of prominence and influence in the public life of Cameron county. He was one of the organizers, in 1872, of the Democratic party in the county through the organization of the "Blue Club," by which Democratic principles were re-established and maintained, particularly among the Spanish-speaking citizens. In 1882, after ten years of faithful endeavor, that organization won a complete victory in Brownsville, and in Cameron county, electing all of the Democratic candidates to office, and ever after retaining supremacy.

In 1884 Mr. Garza was elected county treasurer on the Democratic ticket, and held the office continuously for fourteen years, until 1898. In 1900 he was elected sheriff of Cameron county and served in that capacity continuously, by re-elections, until 1910, the year prior to his death. Mr. Garza was one of the most popular and highly esteemed citizens of the Lower Rio Grande valley. He had high standards of right and wrong, and always lived up to them, ever maintaining in all relations of life a high sense of honor and integrity. Like all of his family, he was a practical and devout adherent of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Garza married, in 1880, Miss Fidela Garza, who survives him. She was born in Monterey, Mexico, but since a child of four years has resided in Brownsville. Seven children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Garza, namely: Celedonio M. Garza; Maria Oliva, wife of Francisco J. Lozano; Fidela Garza; Miss Guillermina Garza; Miss Elena Garza; Master Gonzalo Garza; and Miss Concepcion Garza.

Celedonio M. Garza, the eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Garza, was born and reared in Brownsville. He was educated in the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, where he studied civil engineering, and where he was graduated with the class of 1905. Leaving college, he followed his profession of a civil engineer until 1908, when he began work with his father. At the death of his father, he assumed the entire management, for his mother, of the entire estate, including both the store and the home farm, "Villa Nueva." As business manager of the mercantile establishment, and of the ranch, Celedonio M. Garza is meeting with characteristic success, displaying tact, ability, and superior business judgment.

FRED E. PRINCE. Though his residence in Texas is of recent origin, spanning not more than a decade of time, Fred E. Prince is a potent factor in the industrial life of Pittsburg and the addition of his citizenship when he allied himself with the fortunes of the city may be said to have spelled the practical commercial and industrial salvation of the city. In the ten years of his residence in Texas, the scope and nature of his efforts herein briefly referred to show him to merit undeniably a place among the more substantial builders of the town.

Of New England birth, Fred E. Prince claims Roxbury, Vermont, as his native heath, his birth occurring there on October 7, 1858. His forefathers breathed New England air during Colonial days, and were simple, earnest folk of English blood and ancestry, devoted to the field and the workshop as their sphere of activity. His father was John Prince, an inventive genius, whose mind ran largely to mechanics, and who patented certain machines which he put to use in his factory work, and from which considerable financial advantage accrued to him. He was born in 1828, and early in life identified himself with the lumber and manufacturing business, to which he clung throughout his long career. He operated a factory at Randolph, Vermont, where he made butter tubs, and there he educated his sons as mechanics and factory men. So closely did he cling to his own line of enterprise that matters of public concern, neither civil nor military, failed to claim his attention and participation. He died in 1910, his widow, who in maiden days had been Miss Amanda Clark, surviving him for one year. They were the parents of seven children, but two of whom are living at this writing: Jessie A., the wife of Sherwin Flint, of Chester, Massachusetts, and Fred E. Prince of this review.

At the age of sixteen years, Fred Prince quitted school with what knowledge he was able to gather from a more or less constant attendance up to that time, upon the country schools of Vermont. His career in business began at Randolph in the factory of his father and brother, where he continued until 1882. In that year he started west, going directly to Mount Pleasant, Michigan, and there opening up a butter tub and hoop factory under the firm name of F. E. Prince & Company. After thirteen years of operation adverse conditions prevailing in the community caused his suspension and he returned to New England, with scarcely the price of transportation for his family. He secured a position with George E. Emery and Company in Boston, and was a wage-earner in that concern for six years. The company, whose business was the manufacture of mahogany and cedar lumber, were also importers and exporters, and was one of the leading firms of its kind in New England.

As a wage earner, Mr. Prince having once been a proprietor, was more or less of a malcontent, and his discontent was sufficiently keen to spur him to the saving of a goodly portion of his wage so that in six years time he was in a position to seek another opening as a manufacturer. In his search he was directed by unseen forces to Pittsburg, Texas, with its extinct and decaying furniture industry, and here, with a partner, he purchased of the First National Bank the right to enter upon and convert the premises into a box or fruit package factory. The old plant represented an indebtedness of $21,000, and Mr. Prince was undeniably short of cash. What he lacked in finances, however, he more than made up in self-confidence and business ability, and in 1903 he opened the plant under the name of Prince & Stoner, and engaged in the manufacture of crates. The first year of their operation the plant shipped some twenty cars of goods, made out of the sweet gum of this section, and so economically did it run that the extension of the business to include everything pertaining to the handling of fruit was fully warranted. In 1912, the plant, then operated by Mr. Prince alone, made two hundred and fifty cars of their products, handling in addition thereto another hundred and twenty-five cars, sending some of it into old Mexico, which constitutes Mr. Prince's only export market. Operating the plant at its capacity, Mr. Prince provides labor for one hundred and fifty men and boys, paying out $2,000 a month in wages, and nearly five times as much for raw materials purchased of the land owners adjacent to Pittsburg. While he has been steadily building up a larger plant, and still has cherished plans for the extension of the factory, other like enterprises have yielded to adverse conditions of management, closed their doors and stopped their wheels. Mr. Prince's rating in authorized commercial reports has risen from nothing to almost a quarter of a million during the ten years of his operation here,—a most gratifying record as an asset for Pittsburg, and used with telling effect in its efforts to exploit its resources.

Mr. Prince has assumed no responsibility of a public nature as a resident of Texas, his time being devoted to the enterprise that means so much to the welfare of the community. That he is progressive in his tendency is best evidenced by the fact that he progresses steadily. Not alone his factory, but his home and its surroundings show thrift and enterprise, and his residence is pointed out to visitors as one of the sightly spots in Pittsburg, his grounds indicating most obviously the care and attention of the easterner, born and bred. He sets a nimble pace in industry, and one worthy of all efforts at emulation on the part of his fellows, and his work is amply preparing those who will succeed him for a greater and more successful battle than he has fought.

In November, 1885, Mr. Prince was married in Mount Pleasant, Michigan, to Miss Mary A. Arnold, a daughter of Anson R. Arnold, a civil engineer who came out of Herkimer county, in New York, and whose ancestry dates back to the Continentals of the Revolutionary War. Mr. Arnold located in Michigan in young manhood and there spent the best years of his life. Mrs. Prince was educated chiefly by her parents, who were trained in the best schools of the east, and in young womanhood she taught school in Gratiot county, Michigan. Since her marriage, she has been a splendid assistance to her husband in the carrying on of the work of the office of the factory, and is thoroughly alive to the conditions and possibilities of the business, as well as her husband. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Prince are a daughter and a son. Marian A. was graduated from Wellesley College in 1913, where she won many honors for the excellence of her work there, and she declined a scholarship offered by the school for research work in the Woods Hole College, in Massachusetts. She withdrew her right to the scholarship in favor of a classmate who needed the work for immediate preparation for a position offered her, but which was dependent upon a completion of that particular work. The son, Walter A., is a student in Phillips College, Exeter, New Hampshire, where he is preparing for entrance to Harvard University in the autumn of 1913.

Mrs. Prince, it may be noted here, has membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution, the honor coming to her through an ancestor, who was a soldier in General Washington's army in Revolutionary times.

EUGENE E. WOODRUFF, M. D., a representative member of the medical profession at Cooper, Texas, was born in Panola county, Mississippi, June 19, 1873, but has been a resident of the Lone Star State since his early childhood.

Doctor Woodruff's father, George J. Woodruff, moved with his family to Texas in 1877 and was one of the early teachers of Delta and Lamar counties. Both before and after the war he was engaged in educational work in Panola county, Mississippi. After teaching in Texas for several years he became interested in agricultural pursuits, and is now a retired farmer. He at one time represented Delta county in the State Legislature. He was born in Spartanburg District, South Carolina, January 8, 1837, one of the family of eight children of Amos and Lavania (Bobo) Woodruff. Amos Woodruff was born in Spartanburg county, South Carolina, in 1801, and died in Lamar county, Texas, some Vol. V—7 time in the 80's; his wife passed away in 1889, and side by side their remains rest in McGlasson cemetery. Their children were Sampson B., who died at Hugo, Oklahoma; Pinckney, who died in Winston county, Mississippi; Thomas, who died at Rogers, Arkansas; George J., the father of Eugene E.; Judge E., of Velasco, Texas; Permelia, deceased; Rebecca, wife of J. E. Bobo, of Paris, Texas. George J. Woodruff received his college education at Red Bank, Marshall county, Mississippi, and, as above stated, spent several years in educational work. At the outbreak of the Rebellion, in 1861, he enlisted his services in the Southern cause and went to the front as a member of the Twenty-first Mississippi Infantry, with which he participated in some of the first fighting of the conflict. As a member of Longstreet's Corps he took part in the Peninsula campaign against Richmond. At Malvern Hill he was wounded, a Federal missile tearing through the large muscle of his right thigh, inflicting an injury that laid him up in hospital and removed him from the conflict. Indeed, it was long after the end of the war that he completely recovered.

Some of his relatives and friends having removed to Texas, Professor Woodruff was induced to remove hither, which he did in 1877. His work as an educator here, especially while he was principal of the schools at Roxton, was an influence for good in laying the foundation and shaping the career of many a young Texan. He removed to Delta county in 1886, and in 1913 took up his residence in Cooper. In 1889 the Democrats of Delta county chose him to represent them in the State Legislature, and he served as a member of the lower house in the twenty-first assembly. Being a farmer, he was assigned to the committee on agriculture, and as an educator was given membership on other committees also.

Professor Woodruff was twice married. His first wife, a Mississippi woman, died in that State, leaving him with one son, C. W. Woodruff, who married Miss Janie Stroud and lives on a farm in Delta county. For his second wife Professor Woodruff married Miss Anna Eddins, a daughter of Samuel Eddins, of Tuscaloosa, Alabama. She died April 23, 1911. Her children are Eugene E. and Sallie B., wife of F. J. Carcross of Waurika, Oklahoma.

In his early life, Eugene E. Woodruff had the advantage over many of his companions in that his father was not only a college man but also was a teacher of high order. Young Woodruff finished his literary work in the East Texas Normal School, then at Commerce, and he used the work of teaching as a stepping stone to the profession of medicine. He graduated from the normal school before he reached his twenty-first birthday, and he finished his course in medicine at the Memphis Hospital College in 1901. He began the practice of his profession at Rattan, Delta county, and continued there until April 1, 1913, when he established himself at Cooper, at that time moving his family into one of the new and commodious homes of the Ratliff Addition.

Continuing his professional research and preparation, Doctor Woodruff took a post-graduate course in the New Orleans Polyclinic in 1903, and a like course in the New York Post Graduate School in 1911 and 1912. The last named year he went to London and Berlin and took research work in the hospitals. And it was on his return from Europe that he opened his office at Cooper, where his natural adaptation and superior preparation for his work place him second to none in the medical ranks of this locality. His affiliation with the local societies of medicine—county and state—follows as a matter of course.

Doctor Woodruff is one of the directors of the Farmers State Bank of Cooper. Fraternally, he is a Mason and has received the Royal Arch degrees.

December 22, 1904, Doctor Woodruff and Miss Pearl Brewster were united in marriage, and to them have been given three children: Anna, Julia and Eugenia. Mrs. Woodruff is a daughter of W. L. Brewster, a farmer of Hunt county.

THOMAS JOSHUA FORD. The Madisonville bar has been honored by the presence and activities of Thomas J. Ford since 1895, at which date he was admitted before Judge Smither, and the committee of examination comprised Judge Kittrell, Hon. Tom Ball, J. W. Doremus, J. F. Randolph, M. Y. Randolph, W. L. Dean and J. F. Griffith. Mr. Ford read law under J. F. and M. Y. Randolph at Madisonville, having come to the county seat for that purpose in August, 1893.

Nine miles west of the county seat in Madison county Thomas Joshua Ford was born October 20, 1867. He grew up there on a farm, and his education was supplied by the country schools, and at Madisonville, and a common school training was his preliminary preparation for life. After his admission to the bar, his first case of importance was a criminal one, involving the defense of a murderer. He was appointed with another young and inexperienced attorney for the defense, a thing that he then believed was wrong and still thinks so. Mr. Ford formed a partnership with J. F. Randolph, one of his preceptors, and practiced with him two years, until elected to the office of county attorney in 1900. Mr. Ford succeeded M. J. P. Jackson, and gave very efficient service in the office for eight years. After retiring from that office, Mr. Ford formed a partnership with Mr. E. A. Berry for one year, and has since practiced alone.

Mr. Ford is descended from the Irish Fords, Great-Grandfather Ford having come to the United States during the colonial period. Grandfather Benjamin Ford died about 1830, when some forty-five years of age. A son of Benjamin is Joshua Ford, father of Thomas J. Joshua Ford came from Louisiana, Texas, about 1858, settling in Madison county, and from that community went out as a Confederate soldier, his work being in the Trans-Mississippi Department, and much of it along the Gulf Coast. On returning from the war, Joshua Ford engaged in farming, and continued so in Madison county until his death, in February, 1895, when he was seventy-two years old. He married Miss Martha Terrell, a daughter of Hiram Terrell, from Pike county, Mississippi. Hiram Terrell, who was once a member of the Mississippi legislature, married a Miss Glass, who was from Georgia. Mr. Ford was married in Mansfield, Louisiana, where the Terrell family then lived. Joshua Ford and wife had the following children: Isabella, who died the wife of James A. Jackson; John O., of Jacksonville, Texas; Benjamin H.; David Wiggins, of Madisonville; Thomas J.; and Mrs. Etta Isgitt, of Madisonville.

Thomas J. Ford was married in Madisonville, November 10, 1895, to Miss Minnie Rouse, a daughter of R. H. Rouse, who was born in Louisiana, married a Miss Callahan of Monroe, Louisiana, and now lives at Hot Springs, Arkansas, having spent his active career as a merchant and commercial traveler. Mrs. Ford was the only child of her mother. Mr. Ford and wife have two children: Virgil, a student in Southwestern University; and Mildred. Fraternally Mr. Ford is a Mason, being affiliated with the Lodge, Royal Arch Chapter and Council degrees, his father having taken the same degrees. He is of a Methodist family, and a member of that church. His father demitted from the Blue Lodge and Chapter of Mansfield, Louisiana, in 1860, and the son is a past high priest of his chapter in Masonry.

JABEZ SMITH THOMASON. Identified with Madison county since 1883, Jabez S. Thomason was for a number of years occupied by farming, but abandoned that vocation actively in 1898, and began merchandising at the county seat of Madisonville, where he has since been one of the leading business men. Mr. Thomason still has farming interests in Madison county, is a stockholder in the oil mill at Madisonville, and a member of the firm of Thomason Brothers, general merchants. He comes from a family of merchants, his father having devoted all his active years to that calling.

Jabez Smith Thomason was born in Texas in August, 1854. His father, Jabez S. Thomason, Sr., came to Texas from Lawrence county, Alabama, where he was born in 1827. With a limited education, his first experiences were in business, and he was sixteen years old when he came to Texas, his parents settling in Montgomery county, near Willis, then old Danville. He began merchandising in Danville before the war and remained there until 1876, then moved to Willis, had a store and other interests there, up to 1883, in which year he moved to Madison county and was one of the leading merchants of the county seat in 1903. The senior Thomason entered the Confederate army in 1861, in Captain Wooldridge's company, as a first lieutenant, in Col. Wilkes' Regiment and General Carter's Brigade. His command was in the Trans-Mississippi Department, and after his capture at Arkansas Post, he spent about one year in the prison at Camp Chase, Ohio, until exchanged and returned to Texas. After that he was enrolling officer for Leon county, until the close of the war. He participated practically not at all in politics as an office seeker. At one time he was a voter for the Whig principles, and retained the flavor of those tenets all his life, joining the Democratic party from force of circumstances. On the issues of the war, he was a devoted follower of Sam Houston. He believed in and supported churches, and was a member of the Methodist denomination. For sixty years he was a Master Mason.

Jabez S. Thomason, Sr., married Sophie McCaleb. Her father, Zill McCaleb, came from Jackson county, Tennessee, to Texas before the war, was a farmer, and spent the rest of his career in the Danville locality. Mrs. Thomason now lives at the age of eighty-three, and their children were as follows: Benjamin F., who died in Texas unmarried; George W., who died at Madisonville, also unmarried; Jabez Smith; Matilda M., the wife of Dr. Edgar Walker, of Trinity, Texas; Eloise, who died young; Fannie, who married S. E. Barnes, of Trinity, Texas; James B., who died single; John W., of Hillsboro; Minnie W., who married Dr. E. T. Cook of Hot Springs, Arkansas; Hattie, wife of B. F. Ikerman, of Palestine, Texas; Edgar M., of Madisonville; and Jessie, who married J. M. Martin of Coleman, Texas.

Mr. Thomason, Jr., was married in Montgomery county, Texas, on September 18, 1869, to Miss Susan F. Oliver, a daughter of R. F. Oliver, who was a former county judge in Montgomery county, a business man, and in early life had been a farmer and planter and the owner of slaves. He came from Giles county, Tennessee, and married a Miss Andrews. Mrs. Thomason was born in Montgomery county, Texas, in October, 1854. Her only living child is Elma, wife of T. E. Griffin of Madisonville, who has two children, Jabez Thomason and Lewis Lowe.

COLONEL STERLING C. ROBERTSON. Among the original American families in Texas probably none have carried into the present generation so much of the creative energy, the civic and private character, and a talent for large affairs which were exemplified in the founder of the name, as the Robertsons. Colonel Sterling C. Robertson was the founder of the Nashville colony in Central Texas and one of the richest counties in the state is named in his honor. His descendants for three generations have continued his extraordinary business enterprise, and members of the family are yet prominent in public life and commerce in various parts of the state.

Sterling C. Robertson was born in Nashville, Tennessee, about the year 1785. He belonged to the noted Robertson family, originally of Virginia and later of North Carolina, who in 1770 furnished leaders for a small colony which crossed the Blue Ridge mountains from North Carolina and established a home on the present site of Nashville in Tennessee. John Randolph Robertson of Scotland, grandfather of Colonel Robertson, was the original founder of the family in America. The family name is even more prominently identified with Tennessee than with Texas. Sterling C. Robertson during the war of 1812 served as a major of Tennessee troops, and was at the battle of New Orleans. He subsequently became a Tennessee planter. A man of enterprise, and possessing the hardy pioneer characteristics of his ancestors, in 1823 he headed a company which explored the province of Texas and thus conceived a plan for establishing a colony in that country. Returning to Tennessee, he bought the old Leftwich contract covering an empresario grant of land and requiring the settlement of eight hundred families. An organization known as the Nashville Company was effected to carry out the plans of colonization, but Colonel Robertson was throughout its history its real executive, and in the face of tremendous difficulties worked for years to establish and provide for the welfare of his followers.

Maj-Sterling C. Robertson -

Colonel Robertson was a delegate to the Constitutional convention which met at Washington on the Brazos early in 1836, and was one of the signers of the Texas declaration of independence and helped to formulate the constitution for the Republic. After the adjournment of the convention, he commanded a military company in the battle of San Jacinto, and subsequently served as a member of the first senate of the congress of the Republic.

Colonel Robertson died in Robertson county March 4, 1842, in the fifty-seventh year of his life. From the war of 1812 until his death he was almost constantly engaged in the great work of extending the American frontier, and probably no man ever led a more eventful career.

Some brief account of the establishment of the Nashville Colony and the various disputes and difficulties which interfered with its success, has been published in various works on Texas. The official records on the subject, though now a part of the state archives, have as yet not appeared in any formal historical account, and it seems an appropriate place at the conclusion of this brief article on Colonel Robertson to insert a copy of a document translated from the original Spanish manuscript furnished to Sterling C. Robertson in 1869 taken from the Archives at Monclova, Mexico. This document is an important chapter in the history of early colonial enterprise in Texas, and the following is a copy of the original translation.

Before me, Thos Barnett, constituted Alcalde of this jurisdiction appeared Sam'l Williams, a citizen and postmaster of this place, and says that he gives and grants to Stephen F. Austin, full, ample and complete authority as is legally required by the State; said Stephen F.
Austin, being deputized by the Legislature of this State, to make and confirm for his constituents with the Supreme Government in conformity with the colonization laws of this State of the 24th Mch/25, or any other law that may have been promulgated by the Supreme Government, and Congress to which end and in order that he may fully represent his constituents and remove all difficulties that might intervene, he the said Sam'l M. Williams grants and confers upon said Stephen F. Austin, full, free, general and ample power that he may, by himself, do all what is necessary as fully as if he, the said Williams were present. Wherefore, in order that the acts of my attorney may have full faith and credit given them and to more fully confirm them I hereby sign my name in presence of these Witnesses, who in the absence of a Notary Public sign this instrument with me to give faith and credit to the same;

Thomas Barnett, Samuel M. Williams.

The original being deposited with the archives of this office, which are in my charge I had present Thomas Westall and C. C. Givens to see that this copy was correctly, regularly and properly made besides the witnesses whose names are signed hereto. Village of Austin Dec.
17/30, Thos. Barnett. Witness: Manuel Vidal, Robt.
Taylor, Jr.

To his Excellency, The Governor:

The Citizen Stephen F. Austin authorized by the congress of the State, with all due respect represent to your Excellency that having dedicated myself for ten years past to the work of planting new colonies, in the deserts of Texas, I have the satisfaction of seeing them progress and flourish under the free and liberal auspices and protection of the State. But notwithstanding the advancements already made, it is urgently necessary to relax no effort to augment our population, particularly in the interior of Texas, from whence savage Indian tribes make forays upon the new colonies and all our frontiers.

Moved by these considerations, and knowing that it is the desire of the Government to augment the population of said interior of Texas, I propose to give my practical knowledge to this matter and to introduce and establish 800 families in the interior of Texas, assisted by my associate, who has been a citizen of the State 8 years, and has had 7 years experience in colonization matters in the capacity of Secretary of my colony, and who understands English, Spanish and French. The associate to whom I refer is Samuel M. Williams. In conformity with the above and by virtue of the authority granted by said Don Samuel, which accompanies, this, I ask your excellency to concede to a colonization contract to Stephen F. Austin and Samuel M. Williams, as managers to introduce and establish in conformity with the colonization laws 800 Mexican and foreign families under the general laws and those of the State and that there be set apart the entitled lands within the following limits for said enterprise. Commencing upon the left bank of Vaca Creek 10 leagues from the coast, and following said Creek up to its head Westerly, and from thence in a direct line N W to the Bejar and Nacogdoches Road, known as the upper road, and following said road to the Colorado river; thence up said river to the mouth of the Brazos Salado or Colorado that enters about 15 leagues above the mouth of the Pecan or Neuces river, and from said Brazos Salado in a direct line to the N E to the highlands which divide the waters of the rivers Brazos and Trinidad, and following said ridges towards the S.E. to the principal heads of the San Jacinto river and descending this river to a line of 10 littoral leagues from the coast; said line pursuing a westerly direction to the point of intersection with the first line upon the bank of Vaca Creek; There are excepted from this demarcation the lands selected by the Commissioners General of the Government for the establishment of the Texotiblan above said Bexar road on the Brazos river; parts of the lands above marked out are comprised in the colonization contracts of the managers Stephen F. Austin of June 4th, 1825, and 20th of Nov. 1827, and parts in the contracts of Robert Leftwick for the Nashville Co. concluded or made April 25/25 which contracts terminate six years from the dates thereof so that I ask that this new contract to Stephen F. Austin and Samuel M. Williams may take effect 20 days from the termination of the aforementioned contracts and endure six years from that day for the respective parts. But notwithstanding this new contract will not take effect until the time indicated, I ask that it may be confirmed now and that the testimonio of the same be given to the intersected parties in order that they may proceed at once to form their relations and to measure the lands preparatory to introducing the families from the interior of this Republic and from Europe, that no time be lost in establishing the colony as soon as the other contract terminate. Leona Vicario, Feb. 4/31.

Stephen F. Austin for himself and as atty in fact for Samuel M. Williams.

In addition I ask that an article be inserted in the aforesaid contract that no one shall have any right to select and denounce any lands in the designated limits without the knowledge and approbation of the managers, Austin and Williams, for without this it may transpire that the families contracted for from Europe and the interior of this Republic may find the lands promised them in possession of others upon their arrival, to their great disgust and disappointment, Stephen F. Austin, per se and as atty in fact for Samuel M. Williams, contractors to colonize 800 families of Mexicans and foreigners on lands asked for in the foregoing instrument.

Art. 1. The present project is granted by the government of the State in as much as it may conform with the colonization law passed by Congress Mch. 24/25, and the lands shall be marked out for said managers for the colony, which they propose to settle thereon, as follows: Commencing on the left bank of Vaca Creek 10 league from the coast; thence up said Creek in a westerly course to its head; thence in a direct line to the N W to an intersection with the Bexar and Nacogdoches road, known as the upper road following same in a N E course to the mouth of the Colorado River; thence up the right bank of said River to the mouth of the Brazos Salado or Colorado which enters about 15 leagues above the mouth of Pecan or Neuces river; from the mouth of said

Brazos Salado in a direct line N E to the ridges dividing the waters of the Brazos and Trinidad following said ridges to the S.E. to the main heads of the San Jacinto river; and thence down the meanderings of this river to a line 10 littoral leagues from the coast; thence following the said line westerly to the place of beginning.

Art. 2d. Although in the above demarcation there are comprised other contracted lands made by the Government with Austin and Robt. Leftwick yet there is no obstacle in the way to confirming this as said Austin excepts anything that may interfere with his former contract and although Leftwick was to fulfill the terms of his contract by the 15th of April of the present year, he has not complied up to this time with his agreement, nor any part of it.

Art. 3d. In consideration of these grants the managers obligate themselves to introduce and settle upon these lands, 800 Mexican and foreign families, to which they are obligated both by the General Laws of the Republic and the special laws of the State.

Art. 4th. These lands, with their corresponding titles as marked out in Art. 1, will be respected by the colonists and the managers have entire charge of the fulfillment of this obligation.

Art. 5th. The State retains in itself the right of property in all lands that are left over after partitioning the settlers and managers the lands allowed them by law.

Art. 6th. In regard to Art. 8, of the colonization law the managers are obligated to introduce said 800 families within six years from April 15th, of this year or lose all of the privileges granted by said law.

Art. 7th. The managers are obliged to introduce no criminals nor persons of evil habits, nor to permit any sales to Indians of arms or ammunition by any one, nor allow any one to trade in horses or mules with the Indian tribes.

Art. 8th. When there may be men sufficient to organize the National Militia it shall be done in conformity with the law, regulating this matter.

Art. 9th. The affairs of the colony will be managed by a person appointed by the Government to distribute the lands, who will be guided by the existing state laws and those general laws of the 18th August 1824, and the instruction of Congress connected with them, taking particular care to grant no possession to any one within the designated boundaries who may be objectionable to the managers.

Art. 10. Official documents and communications made use of in the colony shall be written in the Spanish language.

Art. 11. In regard to all matters not mentioned herein the managers and new Colonists will be guided by the general laws and the constitution of the Republic and the official laws of the State.

Before me, Secretary of State, personally came his Excellency, the Governor, and Stephen F. Austin, for himself, and as atty in fact for Samuel M. Williams, and acknowledged themselves obligated and bound by the terms of this contract, and having been instructed to do so I give to the managers a copy of these proceedings as a safeguard and muniment of title, keeping the original amongst the archives of my office as required.

Copy from the office of the political chief of Bexar to the Alcalde of the Village of Austin to eject the families introduced by the Nashville Co. Seal 3rd, 25 cts.

Free State of Coahuila and Texas. For the term of two years from 1830 & 31, 34 & 35. Head of the Department of Bexar.

I send you a copy of the same notice, which I have directed to the Commandant of the Establishment of Tanoxilan in regard to the families introduced by Sterling Robertson, a citizen of the United States of N A in violation of the law of last year April 1/30, and contrary to instructions of the Commandant of the town of Nacogdoches Col. Jose de Las Piedras, so that you may confer with the Agent of the manager of that colony and urge him to return them to the country from which they started with an order to the Alcalde of Nacogdoches, who will take care that they reach the other bank of the Sabine safely, giving me notice of the result so that I may be able to take such steps as are necessary in the matter.

Ramon Musquiz, Citizen Alcalde of the Village of Austin.

Copy from the office of Samuel M Williams to the Alcalde of Austin in which he proposes to receive the families of the Nashville Co. who have been expelled and established them in the colony of Mr. Austin. Third seal 25 cts.

A seal which states Headquarters of the State of Coahuila and Texas, for the years 1830, 1831, 34 & 35, (Seal).

I have received the notice of yesterday from your office, containing a copy of a letter from the Chief of this Department, dated March 29th, relative to some families introduced by Mr. Sterling Robertson and in reply will say that I have heard a rumor to the effect that said families are up between the Bahia and Bexar roads on this river, and in the same manner I have understood that these same families are miserably poor with many children of tender ages and without the necessary means to continue their journey being without animals and as their journey thus far has been at the expense of Mr. Sterling Robertson they have no way to maintain themselves but by their daily labor.

Said families are not comprehended or included in those of this colony, but if I can obtain the approbation of the Supreme Government for their admission, I will receive them on account of their integrity and great poverty. Whatever proceedings you may think necessary to take in connection with me will receive my attention. This is all I can say at this time in reply to yours.

Village of Austin, April 8th/31, Sam'l M. Williams.

Alcalde of this Village San Felipe de Austin.

This copy is a declaration of witnesses relative to the business of the colony of the Nashville Co.

3rd Seal 25 cts. Done by the State of Coahuila and Texas, for the years 1828, 29, 30, 31, 32, & 33. Williams, (Seal).

Know all men by these presents that for various good causes and considerations I have this day nominated and appointed Sterling C. Robertson my true and lawful agent and attorney in fact that he may for me and in my name and for the association of Texas, use any and the necessary means to populate the district of country in Texas heretofore granted by the concession of contract to Leftwick who was constituted a manager of colonization by an act of the Government of the State of Coahuila and Texas, in the year 1827, and I hereby ratify and confirm every act and thing whatsoever which may be done by my said attorney in fact, confirming said contract and granting full and complete power and authority to my said atty in fact as if I was myself present and acting in my own person.

San Felipe de Austin Oct. 10/30, H. H. League, Empresario. Witnesses T. J. Chambers, Ira R. Lewis.

To the Citizen Alcalde, only constitutional Alcalde of the Village San Felipe of Austin, Francis W. Johnson.

Citizen Sterling C. Robertson, a member of the Nashville Co., appears before you and says that the said Company under whose authority he appears by power of atty from the Empresario H. H. League, which I herewith formally present, having contracted with the Governor of this State to introduce a certain number of settlers under the colonization laws and as a member of this Company having acted by authority of the Empresario and the Company, having introduced and contracted with something like 300 settlers, and being informed that the Government has been misinformed not only in regard to the number introduced by their entrance into this department has been disputed. I desire to make the necessary proofs to establish my rights and protect my reputation and perpetuate this memorial.

Wherefore, I ask you to examine carefully the documents referred to and admitted and the evidence presented therein. I ask pure justice. San Felipe de Austin, Dec. 6, 31. Sterling C. Robertson.

On the margin. Decree of the Alcalde. Being presented and admitted to the petition to take the declarations asked, I as well as the citizen Walter C. White, first Judge of this Jurisdiction acting through the information of the Alcalde, having witnesses, through lack of a notary public subscribe my name in said village Dec. 7/31 Walter C. White. Witnesses Jno. Dinsmore, Louis J. Veeder. On the margin. Declaration No. 1.

Immediately Diadem Millican appeared before me, the said Judge, and being duly sworn says he will tell the whole truth, that his name is as written above, his age 21 years, his residence in this colony and his occupation a farmer. Being questioned in regard to his knowledge of these matters says: I am well acquainted with Sterling C. Robertson. I know by public statements and documents that I have seen that he is a member of the Nashville Co. to populate a colony in this country. He was then asked what he knew in relation to said Robertson having a contract with a certain person to come and establish themselves as settlers under the colonization laws and the contract of said Company with the Government, and said that the said Robertson informed him that he had made a contract with about 300 persons and that those names follow he knows had seen and spoken with and they had told him that they had contracted with the said Robertson to settle on the lands of said Company as colonists as aforesaid, viz: Jas. Ledbetter, Dan'l Ronee, Josiah Curdo, Overton Kennedy, Thos. J. Wooten, Geo. A. Kerr, Jas. Farmer, Jno. Wilson, Thos. Jonis, Quinton Dynes, Jeremiah Turner, Elijah Koonce, Henry T. Parr, Wm. Jonis, V. Wm. Gill, Robert Rankin, Robt. P. Lockbridge, Eliphelett Rollins, Dennis Harrold, Jno. W. Beasley, Dan'l E. Beasley, Elgin Kersey, Joel Joins, Marcus D. McKenzie, Isaac H. Simmons, Jno. F. Lightfoot, Jesse N. Evans, Joseph L. Swan, Wm. D. Thompson, Augusta T. Keer, Wm. P. Kerr, Jno. Keer, Hugh Kerr, Fleming Cleaney F. Clarke, Wm. Lewis, Mark W. Smith, Geo. Glenn, Wm. Mansfield, F. Jos. Scott, Euclid Scott, Jas. Scott, Norham Farmer, Andrew M. Shutes, Francis Slaughter, Jno. Parr, Nicholas Sherman, Alexander, Thompson, Tandy Walker, Thos. Dawson, Fielden Ruble, Lije Evans, Dan'l Gandy, Wm. Sheperd, Holden Evans, — Hood, — Milton, Jno. Millican, Dan 'ls S. Milligan and Elliott M. Millican.

Being asked if he knew the said Robertson had introduced any colonists in the Department before April 15th of the current year, replied that he did, that the 49 persons named in above statement had told him that they came with the said Robertson before that time, as settlers in the Nashville Colony, that a part of said persons were now established in the Austin Colony and that he did not certainly know where the others had gone to, and that those not named in said statement were now settled in said colony Being asked if said Robertson had furnished provisions to said families, and if they had houses to live in he said that some of them had very good houses and that said Robertson purchased provisions from his brother for them and gave orders that they should not suffer for lack of anything, but that afterwards an order came from the Government for their expulsion, but that much sympathy was expressed at the time for their situation and their sufferings. Having thus expressed himself he said that he knew nothing of the details of the law and had nothing more to say that the above is the truth and the whole truth under the oath taken all of which he affirms and ratifies and signs same with me and the following witnesses.

Walter C. White; Diadem Millican, Lewis C. Veeder, Jno. Dinsmore.

In the said Village on Dec'r. 22d, 1831, citizen Dan'l Millican appeared before me the said Judge, and being by me duly sworn declared that he would respond truly to all questions asked him.

Having inquired his age, residence, and occupation he said, that his name was as above stated, his age 34 years; his residence in Austin colony and his occupation a laborer. Being asked what he knew of the foregoing matters he said that he was well acquainted with Sterling C. Robertson and that he knew from public opinion and documents which he had seen that he was a member of the Nashville Co., to establish a colony in this country.

Being asked what he knew of the matters and facts contained in the foregoing declaration made by Diadem Millican, after he had read it he said that he knew them to be true and that besides the persons already named the following families had contracted with said Robertson to settle as colonists in said Colony, viz:

John James, Phineas Grayson, Jacob Pruitt, Thos. Barron, Colbert Baker, Jno. Money, Chas. Knight, Jno. S. Black, Parker, Williams, Jno. Teal, Elijah Boring, Michael Boring, Jos. Boring, Jnow. Whitesides, Wm. N. Smith, Francis Smith, Ann Taylor, — Borch, Thos. Morrow, Sr., Thos. Morrow, Jr., Henderson Campbell, — Campbell, Jno. Henderson, Jas. Hendson, Michael Sessums, Elijah Sessums, Wm. Marshall, — Trudo, Matthew Boren, S. Morris, Sr., — White.

Having thus stated he said that he knew nothing of the law relating to the matter, but after reading the above he declared it was the whole truth and signed the same under the oath in presence of the following witnesses: Dan'l L. Millican. Witnesses: Walter C. White, L. G. Letcher, P. S. Gerlad.

In the same Village on Jan'y 2d, 1832, Citizen Jno. S. Black, appeared before Horatio Chrisman, first Alcalde of this jurisdiction, and having been duly and solemnly sworn declared that he should say would be nothing but the truth and the whole truth. Being asked his name, age, residence and occupation he said that his name was as above, that he was 41 years old and resided in Austin Colony, occupation laborer. Being asked what he knew of the foregoing matter he said that he was well acquainted with S. C. Robertson and knew from public statements and documents he had seen that he was a member of the Nashville Colonization Co. Being asked what he knew of said Robertson's tract with certain persons to settle themselves as colonists in this country under the colonization laws and the contract said Company had with the Government, he said that said Robertson had contracted with something like 300 families or persons whom he knew whom he had seen, with whom he had talked and who said they contracted with said Robertson to settle in this country as colonists and that said persons were as follows, viz.:

Levi Taylor, Joshua Taylor, Wm. Clemans, Alfred Hays, Coleman Hays, Ashby Stephens, John Harris, M. J. Graham, Augustus McCuester, Wm. Barkley and his son-in-law, whose name he did not know, Weatherford Taylor, Jno. Harris, Marcus S. Black, Jas. Collons, Jas. Pruitt, Wm. Bridge, Wm. McCoy, Jno. Waters, Jno. S. Black. Being asked if he knew that said Robertson had introduced any colonists prior to the month of April last, he said, yes, that all the persons he had named were settled in this country having been brought by said Robertson previous to that time, with the object of settling in the Nashville Colony. He stated that he had not acquainted with the law in the matter and having nothing further to add he ratified and affirmed the above after hearing it read.

In the same village on Jan'y 10/32.

Before me H. Chrisman, came Levi Bostick and having been by me duly and solemnly sworn said his name was as above, age 55 years residence Austin's colony, occupation laborer, said he was well acquainted with S. C. Robertson (Statement of all the following parties exactly the same as the foregoing).

Names Given: Levi Bostick, Jas. Bostick, Henry Tisdale, Geo. Taylor, Jas. B. Martin, Elmelech Swearingen, Robert Cunningham, Wm. L. Sarijo. He then states that Robertson introduced all these parties into the country prior to April last as colonists. Then following the same statements as in the others.

Signed, H. Chrisman, Levi Bostick. Witnesses: S. G. Letcher, Levi Bostick, S. R. Splane.

Then following the statement in the same language of Joe Scott giving the names of the persons known as Empriam Roddy, — Roddy, Thos. Collins, — McCrackin, Wm. Hair, Wm. Evans, Wm. Michael, Joas W. Scott, Jos. E. Scott, Jos. Scott. Then following the statements &c. signed H. Chrisman, Jos. Scott, Witnesses: S. G. Letcher, P. R. Splane.

Then the same statement made by Daniel Arnold, Alexander Thompson, Sam'l Herndon, names of persons known by them: Sam'l Bocoman, Holly Arnold, Hezekiah Arnold, &c &c., signed H. Chrisman, Daniel Arnold, Sam'l Harndon, Alex Thompson Witnesses: James Whitesides, Gabriel Egan.

Then follows statements by Jesse M. Coans, Henry Applewhite, and Socrates Mosely, in same words.

Persons known by them, Jos. H. Bull, Dan'l Gray, Thos. Gray, Wm. McNamara, Jas. F. Gerald, Wm. W. Taylor, Matthew Brookhume and Henry Applewhite, said that they knew that said Robertson had introduced said families before the 15th day of April, and that a part of said 300 families were now living in Austin's colony, and they did not know where the others were. They said that said Robertson provided provisions for them and good houses in which to live up to the time they were ejected by the Commandant, but after the order from the Government for their expulsion they suffered many hardships, being exposed to the weather, and suffering from sickness. Said they knew nothing of the law, in the case &c &c. Signed H. Chrisman, Jesse M. Evans, Socrates, S. Mosely, Henry Applewhite, Witnesses: Francis Adams, Wm. McGuffin.

In the same village before me, H. Chrisman in the same year appeared R. Williams, who being duly and solemnly sworn said he would state the whole truth and nothing but the truth, giving his name, age, &c., said he was well acquainted with S. C. Robertson, who was a member of the Nashville Company. Being asked if he knew anything of the concessions made to S. F. Austin and Sam'l M. Williams, he said that in the latter part of the last month Jno. Austin told him that he had purchased from S. F. Austin, for $6,000, said colony and he said that Benj. Smith told him that he, the said Smith had purchased an interest in 1,200 leagues of said John Austin to be colonized on in said colony and that he had been selling privileges of settling on said lands for $50 a league and that he said he would sell privileges of settling on said lands for $50 each league; he said the above was the truth and he had nothing more to add.

Signed H. Chrisman, R. Williams. Witnesses: T. J. Chambers, Ira A. Lewis.

In the same village on Dec. 15, of same year before me, same Judge appeared Wm. Pettus, who, being duly sworn said &c &c. that he was 45 years old, that he was well acquainted with S. C. Robertson and knew a good deal about the grant made by the Government to the Nashville Company of which he was a member. Being asked if he knew that said Robertson or said Company had contracted with any families to colonize as a colony under said contract and if any of said families had come to this country under said contract, with said object in view, he said that said Company employed an agent in 1826, to attend to organizing said colony and settling them in this country under said contract and that quite a number of the families did, under said contract establish and settle themselves, in this country, in said colony in 1826, and they told him (said declarant) that they came under and by authority of said Company but that afterwards said families left said colony and joined Austin's as your informant was told by the persuasions of Stephen F. Austin. In 1830, S. C. Robertson came as an agent of said colony bringing with him a great number of families and told your declarant that he had contracted with about 300 families who would arrive herein a very short time, and your declarant, soon after saw a large number of families arrive who informed him that they came to establish themselves in said colony but who afterwards established themselves in Austin's colony. Being asked what part Stephen F. Austin, had taken in this business, he replied that being very anxious to have said colony settle in the county for greater protectionable against the Indians, he went with said Robertson to see Col. Austin to solicit his assistance and kindly offices in procuring from the Government an extension of time in which to settle the affairs of said Colony, that Col. Austin appeared to take a great interest in the matter and promised to make every effort to assist in said colonization scheme; that Austin went to Saltillo under authority from Congress and before his return word came that said Austin had secured said colony for himself. Your declarant not believing that Austin would act so perfidiously took the liberty of denying positively said rumor, and on Austin's return your declarant asked him if he had done so and which Austin denied and continued to deny until the following Autumn, when Col. Austin himself, and his secretary Saml M. Williams published the truth from their office, stating that orders had arrived to expel said Robertson from this country. Your declarant went and inquired into the truth of this and was told that it was so, but Col. Austin pledged him his word that he would use every possible means to get said order revoked, afterwards your declarant was informed that no such order had ever existed, but only to expel some 8 or 10 families brought by Robertson during the following Autumn. When Austin has made known the fact that said colony had been turned over to him, your declarant asked him why he had been denying it, and he said that there had been great difficulties produced by said Robertson and he hoped that he would abandon the country and he would then be able to better serve said families.

Being asked how long he had been in the country and if he knew that Austin had brought any families into the country, at his own expense, and if Austin had been in the habit of selling the land to the settlers, he said that he had come to this country when it was first established, that he paid his own expenses and that he did not know a single settler whose expense had been paid by Col. Austin, and that he believed that all came to this country at their own expense. At the commendment they were charged a bit an acre afterwards $50 a league, and later the price was lowered and remains until now $60 a league exclusive of surveyor's and commissioners fees and price of making out the papers, seal &c., and often after receiving the money from the colonists for the land and promising them certain tracts of land they had been swindled and the same land given to other parties who would also pay for them. These facts can be proven by hundred of persons. Having stated that he knew nothing of the law in the matter and had nothing more to say, he signed under oath with me and the following witnesses.

H. Chrisman, Wm. Pittus. Witnesses, Ira R. Lewis, Jno. H. Money.

In the same village on the same day before me said Judge came Nathaniel Townsend and being duly sworn according to law said that his name was as stated, aged 28, occupation a merchant, residence in this village. Being asked what he knew of the foregoing matters, said he was well acquainted with S. C. Robertson and knew by public statements and documents seen by him that he was a member of the Nashville Company. Being asked if he knew anything of Austin's connection with said Colony and if he was selling those who obtained lands in said Colony by purchase from the Government the privilege of taking possession of the same within the limits of said Colony, he said that being an agent of a Native of Illinois, he had endeavored to take possession of 11 leagues of land that the Government of this State had sold him and asked Col. Austin's permission to take possession of said land, which was in the limits of said Nashville Company, Col. Austin told declarant that he had transferred all his rights to Jno. Austin in said Colony but that he thought that he would be permitted to take possession of said 11 leagues upon the payment of $50 a league &c &c.

Signed H. Chrisman, Nathaniel Townsend. Witnesses: Ira R. Lewis, Jno. H. Money.

Before me, H. Chrisman on this day appeared Manuel Valdez, resident of this village, who being sworn in due form to tell the whole truth says, that the copy herein made of the preceding matter is a true exact and correct copy as found in the archives of my office, from when it was taken at the request of the parties interested and I herewith sign my name with the following witnesses.

Third seal 25 cts. Granted by the State of Coahuila and Texas, for the term of two years from 1828, & 29, 30 & 31, 32 & 33. Williams Report of the Corporation or Body of Magistrates of the municipality of Austin upon the affairs of the Nashville Colonization Co. (From this point on page 51, of the original to — on page 55, it is all English and needs no translation. Austin.)

3rd Seal 25 cts. Done by the Free State of Coahuila and Texas for the year 1830, 31, 34 & 35.

To His Excellency, the Governor of Coahuila and Texas:

The Corporation of the municipality of Austin respectfully state that on Feby 5th, 1834, Sterling C. Robertson whom we know to have been the agent and a member of the Nashville Colonization Company of the State of Tennessee United States of N A solicited by this body to take some steps to investigate the statutes of said colony toughing the contract made with said Company to colonize in this country and receive a grant of lands in the province of Texas, originally conceded to Robert Leftwick and confirmed to said Company by the Free State of Coahuila and Texas. This council in compliance with said petition having carefully examined into the facts and the evidence which has been presented to them, and having carefully examined into the rights of said Company as to the said land grants forward the following information to your Excellency, accompanied with proofs obtained by us or made before us. That this council in accordance with the facts laid before it by S. C. Robertson relating to said Nashville Company is of the opinion that said contract was not forfeited or violated by said Company but that prior to the passage of the law of April 6/30, the said Robertson had introduced, with the object of colonizing on the lands of said Nashville Company at least 100 families, who according to the opinion of this body under article 8 of the colonization law of March 24, 1825, of the State, was a fulfillment of the contract as far as said 100 families were concerned. That this body is of the opinion that when the law abolishing article 11 of the law of April 1830, took effect, said Nashville Company possessed the privilege of right of having one year in which to fulfill their contract with the date of the abolishment of said article 11 since the effect and operation of said law was opposed to said contract, said S. C. Robertson was prohibited positively by said order from his excellency the General Manuel de Alier and Texas from settling the families that he had introduced. That by the industry perseverance and indefatigable labors of said S. C. Robertson in his efforts to establish said Nashville Colony he had gained the general and universal admiration not only of the public, but of this body and we are well satisfied that a very great majority of the people of Texas anxiously desire that he be recognized as the head of said colony.

In conclusion this body respectfully request your Excellency to take into consideration the actual situation of the country and the uncertainty regarding the time that should have been allowed said Nashville Company to fulfill its contract and that you will kindly appoint a commissioner to straighten up and grant the titles to the settlers of said Nashville Company as soon as you conveniently can and that considering the diversity of the matters contained in this memorial your Excellency will be as expeditious as the Justice due the interested parties will permit. God and Liberty. San Felipe de Austin, 6th Feb. 1834.

R. M. Williamson Prest. W. B. Travis, Secretary.

Petition directed by Sterling C. Robertson member of the Nashville Company and Agent of Hosea H. League, manager of same to the Honorable Congress.

Honorable Congress.

Sterling C. Robertson member of the Nashville Company or colonization association of Texas, and agent of Hosea H. League manager of said Company with the most profound respect, presents the enclosed petition to your Honorable Body. The Nashville Company has ever desired to introduce and establish in the Department of Texas, the colonists, stipulated for, and to fulfill in every particular the contract concluded with the Government of this State on Oct. 15th, 1827, and to promote the interest of the country in agricultural, manufacturing enterprises, Art., &c and to increase the population and to make this permanent home and country of its relatives and friends and under the beneficent and liberty laws of the government born of this new Republic, has directed all its efforts and indefatigable energies to these laudable ends. But after having spent about $32,000 in this business it finds that all its efforts have been interrupted and frustrated by an uninterrupted course of misfortunes and intrigues and unforeseen opposition and by the rascality and perfidy of agents and deceitful friends which this company could neither control nor direct. The trouble which this company had with its first agent, Robert Leftwick, is too well known to the Supreme Government to be referred to here. It suffices to state that they were great and costly. Afterwards when Hosea H. League was appointed agent of this company and made manager of the same by the Government, the association animated with renewed hopes, made a great preparation to fulfill its contract with the government. But another misfortune soon befel it. The agent was accused in Austin's Colony with being accomplice to homicide, was imprisoned and guarded for the long space of 16 months, suffering bitter and rigid prosecution until the people, outraged at the violation of the law and justice, and seeing no other remedy, presented the Alcalde with a petition with 600 or 700 signatures, asking his release from prison. This persecution was so bitter and unreasonable that the Alcalde could do no less than look upon it as a strange and notable thing. Meanwhile the association, in the autumn of 1829, despatched your humble servant to your Honorable Body with a number of families. On entering the country he encountered great difficulties, the Military Commandant at once demanding their passports, which unfortunately some of the families did not have, the Mexican Colony being nearly 300 leagues distant from the point from which they started. Others did not consider passports necessary, thinking your contract sufficient, having observed that simple certificate from Col. Austin sufficed to admit persons coming into this colony. And was it not natural to conclude that the laws of the country were open alike to all. I procured a license from the military commandant of Tenotiblan to remain on the boundary of our grant while I explored the country and selected the most favorable point for a settlement, hoping to receive a resolution from his Excellency, Genl Teran, and from the Government that, I flattered myself, would be favorable. On my return I found the response from the Government, stating that they hoped our Colony would remain and that they were desirous of having it do so. Thus favored with the protection of the government and the good will of the Commandant at that point I arranged everything for the comfort of the families that I had introduced into the country and returned to the United States of N. A. in December of that year, 1829, in order to bring in other families. Early next year I introduced directly or indirectly into the country over 300 families. I also contracted with many families living near our frontier to transfer them to our colony, so that if no impediment had been thrown in the way we would have established at our own cost and expense almost the total number of 800 families, being the number stipulated in our contract. But shortly before my arrival I received notice for the first time given in the law of April 8th, 1830. Many families had already arrived and all of them had sold their effects and disposed of their homes and left their friends and native land. What could they do? To return was ruinous. Confiding in the kindness and good faith of the Government, in the contract they had made with us and in the important principle in the constitution prohibiting the passage of a retroactive law violating the obligation of contracts, they came to this country with all their property and their hopes. It is difficult to express the surprise, confusion and desperation of these families, when, after arriving, they learned that they were expelled from the country and would not be permitted to settle in it. It was utterly incomprehensible to me. Having returned to Tennessee to bring out other families, assured by the authorities of the country of the protection of the Government, believing and knowing that we had a contract with it in almost exactly the same words as the one made with Col. S. F. Austin, and that new settlers from the United States of North America were admitted almost daily into the colony of that gentleman, under the principle that the contract with him was made previous to the passage of the act of April 8th, 1830, and knowing also that ours was made prior to his and that we had commenced the settlement as early as 1826, I was confounded, and not until long afterwards did I know that all this was occasioned by false information given to the Government in this business. In a visit made by me to his Excellency, General Teran, he informed me that notice had been given the Government that we had only introduced eight families into the country (see the enclosed statements). Its falsity you will see from the statements accompanying this and the memorial from the illustrious council of San Felipe de Austin upon this matter. In this state of our affairs with such a great number of families introduced and denied the right of settlement in conformity with our contract sustaining immense expenses, scattered and terrorized by false rumors set afloat to induce the settlers or immigrants to deny that they were from Tennessee, I presented myself to Mr. Austin, soliciting his intervention and kindly offices with the Government in our favor, ignorant of the language of the country or of the facts that he was the cause of all our misfortunes. This gentleman, pursuing the same insidious policy that had ever characterized his nefarious and perfidious designs, received me with smiling countenance and promised me upon his word of honor, before witnesses (see enclosed statements), to use all his influence to obtain from the Government permission for the settlement of said families in our colony, and a prolongation of the time in which to fulfill our contract occasioned by the difficulties we had before labored under with the Government and authorities of the country.

Knowing that he had just been elected a Deputy by the Sovereign Congress of the State, and informed of his great and almost infallible influence with the Government (a thing which made him so despotic with these unfortunate people) we consoled ourselves with the hope of being able to obtain the protection of the Government by the means of his interposition. But what was his conduct after having compromised his honor? Before the expiration of the time given for the fulfillment of our contract, he succeeded in engrafting our colony with the one he had obtained for himself? His friends denied this perfidy and he himself on his return, also denied it until the fact was made public by the parties who had seen his contract with the Government. After he confessed that he had denied it on account of the difficulties of the position in which he was placed and that he had hoped that I would meanwhile leave the country, disgusted with so many obstacles (see declaration), using every artifice to cause me to flee the country, menacing me with disgrace and punishment from the Government, stating that he had an order for my expulsion, that if I went away he would provide for the necessities of the unfortunate families and receive them into his own colony (see the declarations). Thus has Mr. Austin ever advanced his own interests by the labor of others and prospered by their misfortunes. We had introduced about 300 families into the country within the time allowed by our contract, commencing as early as the year 1826, undergoing immense expense and fulfilling both the spirit and letter of the colonization laws of 1824 and March, 1825. But we were not permitted to settle them in our own colony (see Order No. 1 from the Political Chief), and we have had no reward whatever.

Mr. Austin never introduced a single family into Texas at his own expense, and settled his colonies with families excluded from the contracts of the Empresarios by Art. 16 of the aforesaid law, and with those introduced by us and other empresarios, thus failing to comply with Articles 8 and 12 of aforesaid law (see declaration No. 9). But it is notorious that Mr. Austin was allowed to receive families that we were prohibited from introducing, as can be proven by letters seen by various persons written by General Teran about this matter. We have been at immense expense in complying with the law and been denied the privilege of settling our colony according to contract. While Mr. Austin, who has never spent a dollar in introducing families, but on the contrary has always sold the lands to settlers in his colonies (see declaration No. 9), has been made large grants of land.

We have administered to the necessities of our colonists at our own expense, while Mr. Austin has sold the lands to his, and after receiving the money has taken the land from them and sold them to other parties at new prices (see declaration No. 9). We lost our colony and Mr. Austin acquired his from it. We complied with our contract before the expiration of the time agreed upon with the Government, and one month and 18 days before the termination of our contract Mr. Austin had contracted with the Government for it. We made great efforts to fulfill the contract and increase the population of the country. Even before receiving the contract with the Government, Mr. Austin had made arrangements to make a private speculation with it and afterwards sold it for $6,000.00 (see declarations 8 and 10). He is still making a speculation of it, selling land grants at $50.00 a league to purchasers, giving the government title to it (see declaration), instead of using the lands to get the country settled up, and enriching himself at the expense of the state and its citizens and perverting the colonization laws and especially the additional article of instruction to the Commissioner from its legitimate and generous intention and disgracefully abusing the latter part of Article 9 of his contract, which he had inserted with this premeditated end in view. Is it just for us to lose our rights that he may secure his base ends? Does justice demand the sacrifice of all our labor, property and affairs in order that an interested party, through false and lying statements, may secure it all by his wicked practices?

I will recapitulate to your Honors the established facts proven by the documents I have the honor to present, which I vow and obligate myself to prove at any time and place it may be necessary.

On April 15th, 1825, there was a contract of colonization made by and between the Supreme Government of this State and Robert Leftwick for the Company of Nashville, to introduce 800 families into a colony, the boundaries of which were marked out in said contract, according to the colonization law of March 24th, 1825. Within six years from the date of the contract, which would terminate April 15th, 1831 (see contract). As early as 1826 we had settled some families in our colony (see declarations). Before the passage of the law of April 6th, 1830, we had introduced over 100 families (see Memorial of the Illustrious Council of San Felipe). Before the expiration of our contract we had introduced into the country over 300 families (see declarations). The first families we introduced were expelled by the Mexican authorities, as I believe, through false information given by Messrs. Austin and Williams (see the order from the Political Chief of Texas from the office of Mr. Williams to the Alcalde of San Felipe). Some of these same families were afterwards incorporated with Mr. Austin's Colony under a contract made by him with the Government, almost at the same time ours was and by virtue of the same law (see declarations and official statement of Mr. Williams). How could the law of April 6th, 1830, be construed against us and in Mr. Austin's favor at one and the same time. On February 25th, 1831, Austin, for himself and Mr. Williams, closed a new contract with the Government for the grant of an immense tract of land, including within its limits the whole of ours and the time for the expiration of ours did not come for one month and 18 days after Mr. Austin closed this new contract with the Government. At the same time Mr. Austin was working to obtain this contract he had his word of honor pledged to the Nashville Company to ask for the appointment of a Commissioner and the extension of the time for fulfilling their contract, on account of the obstacles placed in our way by the authorities (see declaration No. 9). These gentlemen procured their new contract without doubt by abusing the confidence of the Government and the false information they gave it. Since Article 2 of the same explicitly declared that it was made with the intention and understanding that the Nashville Company had absolutely failed to comply with any part of its contract. From these undeniable facts it appears to me that the following consequences incontestably result. That the contract made with Austin and Williams, made February 25, 1831, is void as far as the lands of the Nashville Company are concerned for two reasons. It was void "ab initio" because it could not be made while there was another contract in existence at that time for the same lands. The Nashville Company could not lose its rights until its contract expired, because although they might not have introduced a single family until the last day of their contract and then brought in the full 800, it would have been complete fulfillment of their contract and none could be made with any one else until then.

It was void also because it was made under a supposed mistake and error, which was that the Nashville Company had not complied with a single part of their contract (see Art. 2 of the contract). There is no doubt but what the Government was cheated by the false statement of these two gentlemen. It is a fact also that the Nashville Company have an unquestioned right to establish the 100 and more families which they introduced before the passage of the prohibitory law of April 6th, 1830, and with this conception I ask the Supreme Government to appoint a Commissioner to place them in possession of the lands due them. And finally, it appears to me very unjust for the time to be counted against me while the Mexican authorities kept us from doing anything, being one year and nine days, and this while our families were coming in every day, and in consequence of it many of them had to hunt homes in other colonies by these same authorities. In consequence of all the foregoing I ask your honorable body, earnestly, without soliciting a prolongation of our contract, to assert our rights and to declare the contract of the partners Austin and Williams, celebrated the 25th of February, 1831, is null and void so far as the lands granted our colony are concerned, that the families introduced by our company before the expiration, be settled in our colony and if you think it right and just that your Honors extend the time for the termination of our contract one year and nine days from the time which the Mexican authorities prevented us from entering on our lands. I believe that I have asked nothing of an extravagant nature, nor anything more than pure justice in my petition. I am well aware of the many instances, not only of vigorous justice but also of great generosity shown by your Honors in cases analogous to the present. We believe confidently that your Honors will not deny the justice of our cause, and that not only our Colonists, but all Texas will see that justice will be meted out alike to all.

Wherefore I supplicate your Honors to grant my petition so that we may get justice.

Sterling C. Robertson. (Seal.)

Monclova, April 2nd, 1834.

I further state: In case that you may not be able to decide upon these matters during the present session on account of lack of time for investigation, that I trust your Honors the aforesaid contract of the partners Austin & Williams, as far as the lands of the Nashville Company are concerned, until you can reach a final decision, as this appears to me to be no more than is justly due to us.

Most Excellent Sir: The Honorable Congress in session on the 24th of this month have seen fit to submit to your Excellency the Resolution passed by them in regard to the Colonization Laws as applying to the statements made by the Empresario Sterling C. To His Excellency, Gobernador del Estadio:

In fulfillment of the order communicated to me by the Honorable Congress, dated April 26th, of this year, after having examined the statements of the Stranger Sterling C. Robertson and the documents accompanying it, knowing that the contract with the partners Austin & Williams made with this Government, February 25th, 1831, was merely conditional, nor could it be otherwise with regard to the lands set apart for the Nashville Company, and in virtue of the information furnished by the Council of San Felipe de Austin to the effect that said Company had introduced at least 100 families prior to April, 1830, in accordance with instructions and decree of the Government I will make the following dispositions:

First: This Government considers void the Austin & Williams contract so far as the same embraces the lands granted to the Nashville Company, spoken of in Art. 2 of said contract, the interested parties being able to deduce the concessions granted them in each contract, and the Government will designate other lands equivalent in value to be set apart to Austin & Williams, provided there is not a sufficient amount of land left within the limits of their colony to supply the families they have obligated themselves to introduce.

Second: The families introduced by the Nashville Company before the termination of their contract should and ought to be settled on their lands.

Third: The limits designated for the Nashville Company's land are just as stated by Art. 20 of the disposition made by this Government in the presence of Citizen Stephen F. Austin on Oct. 15th, 1827.

Fourth: The families introduced into said colonies at the expense of the partners Austin & Williams will be protected in the possessions they have acquired legally and this will not release the contracting parties from the number of families they have agreed to introduce, although they may adjust their difficulties in regard to changing settlements.

Fifth: Certified copies of the foregoing will be sent the parties interested for their information.

Supreme Government of the Free State of Coahuila and Texas.

Most Excellent Sir: The citizen Sterling C. Robertson, a member of the Nashville Company, organized for the purpose of establishing a colony in Texas, and agent of the Empresario of said Company, with the most profound respect represents to your Excellency that having already introduced a considerable part of the families contracted for by our Company and desirous of rapidly fulfilling completely our contract made with the Government, and according to the last disposition made of this matter and to augment the industry and prosperity of the people, I entreat your Excellency to appoint a Commissioner to expedite the titles to the settlers as they properly are entitled to them, according to the laws and our contract. I trust your Excellency will confer said nomination upon Citizen William H. Steele, if you consider him worthy the confidence of the Government. I hope your Excellency will respond to my solicitation and that I may receive Justice and favor.

Jose Maria Falcon—2nd Officer (Seal)

Most Excellent Sir: Sterling C. Robertson, a member of the Nashville Company, organized to establish a Colony in Texas, and agent of the Empresario of the same, Hosea H. League, with the most profound respect represents to your Excellency, That said Company, desirous always of complying in every respect with the contract made by it with the Government on April 25th, 1825, to introduce 800 families on the lands designated in said contract, as early as the year 1826 had introduced some families and before the passage of the prohibitory law of April 30th, had introduced over 100 families, as shown by the sworn documents accompanying this memorial. After the passage of said law they introduced many more families but neither the first nor the last families were settled upon our lands nor in our colony, according to the contract made with us on account of orders issued prohibiting same and expelling them from the country. Notwithstanding all this they never left the country and are found to-day scattered in various places in the Department of Bejar, without homes or lands, awaiting the final action of your Excellency. Mr. Austin being deputized by the Congress of the State and about to go to the Capital, promised me, upon his word of honor, to secure the appointment of a Commissioner for the Nashville Company to put the families belonging to the same in the legal possession of their lands, and also to solicit an extension of the time to fulfill our contract, on account of the obstacles and difficulties placed in our way by the Mexican Authorities, but oblivious of the good faith which should ever actuate all right minded men, and despising those principles of Honor, which are never forgotten only by the perfidious and evil, he blinded the Government with false information, causing them to believe that we had never taken a single step towards the fulfillment of our contract. And the result, that with these false, insidious statements he succeeded in securing our colony for himself, and his companion in iniquity, Samuel M. Williams, which he accomplished on February 21, 1831, celebrating with the Government a contract which included all the lands of our colony. But this last contract was void "ab initio" because the Government could not contract these same lands to others while there was contract for them pending with us, and although we might not have introduced a single family until the day that our contract expired, and on that day brought in the 800, our contract would have been legally fulfilled and the Government could not have disposed of the lands until, as it appears to me, that day was past, not even if we had introduced a smaller number than the 800. But the contract of said partners is void because they obtained it through false and perfidious representations and the Government granted it, acting upon an erroneous and mistaken knowledge of the true facts, which was that we had never taken the first steps towards fulfilling our contract, as can be ascertained from Art. 2nd of the contract made with the partners Austin & Williams, all of which is proven by the accompanying documents. In consideration of all this I earnestly solicit the appointment of a Commissioner by the Government to legally place the 100 and more families introduced by us previous to the passage of the prohibitory law of April, 1830, in possession of the land due them under the contract. I also entreat your Excellency to transmit this petition and the accompanying documents to the Honorable Congress and recommend their favorable consideration, and that they may please to declare the contract made with Austin and Williams, null, also that all the families introduced by us after the passage of the prohibitory act of April, 1830, may be established in our Colony according to the stipulations of our contract and the proper colonization lands.

I entreat your Excellency to grant my petition so that I may receive justice.

Monclova, April 2nd, 1834.

E. STERLING C. ROBERTSON, son of Empresario Sterling C. Robertson, of the Nashville colony, was the worthy son of a great father, and in his day and generation one of the ablest of Texas patriots and public leaders.

Born in Nashville, Tennessee, August 25, 1820, when twelve years of age he was brought to Texas, attended school at San Antonio for three years and acquired the facility in the Spanish language which in later years did much to increase the value of his services to the state. When he was fifteen years old he became a clerk in the land office of Robertson's colony, and at that early age took his share of the fighting along the frontier against the hostile Indians. In the spring of 1836 he was a regular soldier in his father's company and was engaged in a brief service with the Texas army against the forces of Santa Anna. After the Mexican dictator was driven across the Rio Grande he again resumed a position in the Ranger forces.

After the successful issue of the Revolution, he returned to Tennessee and finished his education. In 1839 he was again in Texas, was in the postoffice department, and within a few weeks was made assistant postmaster general of the Republic. In 1840 he was postmaster general of the Republic until he left his office to take part in repelling another invasion of Mexicans. In 1841 he was elected secretary of the Senate, and in 1842 joined the Somerville expedition, being commander of a company which assisted in driving the Mexicans across the Rio Grande. In 1844 General Houston appointed Mr. Robertson a colonel of the Second Regiment of Militia. He was admitted to the practice of law in 1845, and in 1848 became Spanish translator in the general land office, a position involving at that time most important duties.

In 1852, having resigned his office, Colonel Robertson located in Bell county, about nine miles south of Belton, and there became prominent in the upbuilding of the village of Salado, and founded Salado College, which for a number of years was the most important factor in training the youth in the state of Texas. In 1858 he was elected chief justice of Bell county, Texas, and under his regime the first court house was built.

The closing years of his life were marked by almost constant service in the larger affairs of the state. He was a delegate to the secession convention of 1860-61 and a prominent leader in that body. He served on the staff of Gen. Henry McCulloch and at the close of the war held a commission as brigadier-general in the Confederate states army. During the years following the war he gave close attention to developing his large and extended business affairs, and at the same time lent his co-operation and efforts to every movement and enterprise which were designed to enable the locality or state to recover from the heavy burdens of the war and the reconstruction period. In 1875 he served as a delegate in the state constitutional convention of that year, and his services are particularly notable for the part he played in behalf of public education and for the retention of the homestead provision in the state land laws.

Mr. Robertson died October 8, 1879, and left surviving him a family of twelve children, six sons and six daughters. Of these nine are still living. Concerning the more personal side of his career the following estimate has been written: "In the social relations he was a most conspicuous example of tenderness and affection, manliness and generosity, purity of character and uprightness of life; decided in his religious beliefs, and with no uncertain convictions on any subject which concerned the welfare of the human family; the genial current of his warm heart was free and uninterrupted in its flow to the unfortunate of all classes. He was a typical Texan of the stormy days of 1836, and his state pride and patriotism, next to his family, was at all times a matter of the greatest concern to him."

HULING P. ROBERTSON. One of the most prominent business men of Temple, and for thirty years closely identified with political affairs in the state, Huling P. Robertson, is a grandson of the original member of the family in Texas, and a son of E. Sterling C. and Mary E. (Dickey) Robertson. He was born in the old town of Salado, in Bell county, April 26, 1857, and received most of his education in his native town and in the school which had been founded and developed by his father, and was at that time the leading educational institution of the state. He was graduated in 1876, and subsequently spent the sessions of 1877 and 1878 in the University of Virginia. After a brief mercantile experience at Salado, he took charge of the estate at the time of his father's death, in 1879, and in July, 1891, moved to Temple. With the prestige of a splendid name in Texas, and on the basis of his inheritance, Mr. Robertson through his individual keen business sense has built up a large practice, largely through real estate dealings, his properties having been scattered over many counties of Central and West Texas, and through his relations with a number of financial and industrial enterprises.

Huling P. Robertson became an active worker in the Democratic party of Texas in 1882, and through every subsequent campaign for many years was active as a delegate to local, state and national conventions, and served altogether six terms in the legislature, during the Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth, Thirty-first and Thirty-second sessions. During his service he served on every important committee, rendered conspicuous service in the shaping of legislation, and for one term was speaker pro tem.

Mr. Robertson was married in 1885 to Miss Mary G. Cook, who was born in Virginia, a daughter of Charles Cook. They are the parents of two children: Huling P. Robertson, Jr., and Christine, the daughter being a young lady of remarkable beauty and culture. Huling P. Robertson, Jr., who was born in January, 1887, after graduating from the State University of Texas, entered Yale University, and was graduated from the law school LL. B. in 1911 and with the degree LL. M. in 1912. He is now engaged in the practice of law at Temple and has every promise of becoming a leading lawyer and will no doubt continue the many distinguished services of the Robertson family in this state. Mr. Robertson's home at Temple is one of the finest residences of the city.

MACLIN ROBERTSON. The old Gen. E. S. C. Robertson homestead at Salado, in Bell county, erected in 1860, is yet, after more than half a century, regarded as one of the finest old homes of the state. It contains eighteen rooms and has splendid quarters for servants, and around it centers some of the most interesting associations connected with the Robertson family and also with the many eminent men and cultured women who at various times were entertained there. The first child of General Robertson and his wife Mary E. (Dickey) Robertson born in that old homestead was named Maclin Robertson, who for many years has been one of the most prosperous business men of the state.

Maclin Robertson was born in Bell county in 1860, was educated in the Salado College, and at the age of twenty-one began his career as a farmer and stock raiser. It was chiefly through this staple Texas industry that Mr. Robertson acquired his fortune. For many years he was noted as a breeder of fine horses and high grades of cattle, and his work was a very important influence in raising the standards of live stock production in his part of the state. Mr. Robertson now owns the fine old homestead where he was born, but resides in a palatial residence at Georgetown, and from that city directs his various interests, which extend to a number of counties in Central and Western Texas.

Maclin Robertson was married June 10, 1886, to Alice Woods, who was born in Texas, a daughter of Capt.

T. E. and W. A. (Wilkinson) Woods. Their children are: Mary E., wife of T. S. Sutherland, a stockman at Harlingen, Texas; Gladys, wife of Dallas McLain, a farmer at Rogers, Texas; Birdie, wife of J. D. Howell, and they live in the old Robertson homestead at Salado; Maclin Jr., E. Sterling C., Alice and Gordon.

ARTHUR VISER. This well known Madisonville citizen comes from a family of Texas merchants, and is a son of William W. Viser, who was the first man to sell goods at Midway in Madison county. Arthur Viser has the distinction of having been the first mayor elected after the incorporation of Madisonville, and that is an honor which will always fix his name in local history. The Visers are of French origin, and descended from one of Lafayette's soldiers, during the Revolution, this patriot having remained in the United States after the conclusion of the war.

Grandfather William Viser was originally a resident of Tennessee, moved from there to Mississippi, and in 1842 brought his family to Texas, settling in what was then Montgomery county, but is now Walker, and at the site of the present town of Huntsville. From there he moved to Madison county before the war, and settled four miles below Midway, where he died in 1866, when about seventy-three years of age. Grandfather William Viser married a Miss Ford, and they died the same year, their children being as follows: Mrs. McGary, whose first husband was a Word, and she had children by both marriages; Mrs. Finney, who spent her life in Madison county; Dr. Napoleon, who died in Lavaca county, Texas; Washington, who died in Grimes county; and William W., the father of Arthur Viser, died in Madisonville, in 1901.

William W. Viser was present at the lot sale in Madisonville in 1853, when the town was first opened for settlement. However, he did not take up his residence there until 1873. He was a man of more than ordinary local prominence, and before the war was elected county judge of Madison county, and during 1873-74-75 taught the Madisonville schools. He subsequently served several years in the office of county clerk and on leaving that office engaged in the drug business at Madisonville, in which he continued until his death. He was a Democrat in politics, an active worker in the Methodist church, which he served as steward for many years and as teacher in the Sunday school, and his fraternal affiliation was with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He left the impress of his business activities on Madisonville, having erected some of the business houses in that little city, and he gave service to the town as a member of the school board.

The late William W. Viser was also honored as a Confederate veteran. He went out in Captain Forest's Company of Gould's Battalion, subsequently being elected captain of the company, and serving in the Trans-Mississippi Department. At the battle of Mansfield he was wounded and continued on in the ranks until the close of the war. Previous to the Mansfield campaign, his command had served along the Arkansas River in the vicinity of Little Rock. Before the end of the war he was promoted to major of his battalion. For many years he was an active member of the Confederate Veterans. William W. Viser married Amanda Johnson, a daughter of B. D. Johnson, who came to Texas from Madison county, Mississippi. She was born about 1831, and died in 1868. Her children were Thomas B., who spent his life as a merchant at Madisonville and was associated with Arthur Viser for some time, and by his marriage to Norah Wommack left a family; Edwin died in Madison county unmarried; Effie married J. D. Jones, and lives in Waco; Percy, of Madisonville. In 1873 William W. Viser married Mrs. E. A. Hawkins, and by that marriage there was a daughter Fannie, wife of E. M. Thomason of Madisonville.

Arthur Viser was born near Midway, Texas, January

27, 1862. The Madisonville schools supplied him with his education, since he was about eleven years old when his father took up his residence at the county seat. A portion of his early career was spent on a farm, but since twenty years of age he has been closely identified with mercantile affairs in Madisonville, having conducted a general mercantile business for thirty years or more. The firm of W. W. Viser & Sons, long an important business house at Madisonville, has since been succeeded by that of A. Viser. Mr. Viser is one of the directors and one of the organizers of the Farmers State Bank of Madisonville. Besides his office as the first mayor and his services in putting the municipal government into operation he has served the public schools as a trustee. Mr. Viser is a Democrat and assisted in the nomination of J. M. Pinckney for congress and also for Mr. Pinckney's successor, Congressman Moore. For twenty-two years Mr. Viser has been a steward of the Methodist church and one of the leaders in that denomination locally. On June 6, 1883, at Madisonville, he married Miss Ida Callahan. Her father died in Claibourne Parish in Louisiana, where he was at one time county clerk. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Viser are: May, wife of Dan Connell of Madisonville; Maud, wife of Rev. T. B. Anderson of Little Rock; John W., who is associated with his father in business and who married Henrietta Boyd.

WILLIAM COLUMBUS MOONEY. The manager of the Williams, Cameron & Company lumber business at San Angelo is one of the popular young citizens of that city and has been identified with the lumber business all his active career.

He was born May 24, 1876, a son of Columbus D. and S. M. Mooney, of Mississippi, where the father was a planter until he moved to Texas in 1891, settling in McLennan county. He and his wife still live there and he is engaged in farming and raising stock. They were the parents of twelve children, three sons and nine daughters, and William C. was the oldest of the children.

For education he attended the public schools of this state, and his first business experience was in the lumber trade at Oglesby, where he became manager for the S. Amsler Lumber Company. He continued with that firm up to 1906, and then moved to the center of the lumber business in south Texas, at Houston, where he was with the Texas & Louisiana Lumber Company, as shipping clerk, for several years. In November, 1910, he moved out to San Angelo, to become manager of the Williams, Cameron & Company, and his abilities and thrift have been important factors in building up the local business of this firm over a wide radius of Texas.

Mr. Mooney is a good and loyal Democrat and fraternally affiliates with the Masonic Order, the Woodmen of the World, and his church is the Methodist south. On December 24, 1900, Mr. Mooney married Miss Kate Casson, daughter of T. W. and Julia Casson, of Oglesby, Texas. Her father was a farmer, coming to Texas in early days from Alabama, and is still living on the old estate in Oglesby, with his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Mooney have one living child, Chester Mooney, aged five years. The Mooney family is of Irish descent, its first ancestors having come to America during colonial days, settling in Pennsylvania, but afterwards moving to south Carolina. The maternal ancestry is of French stock.

ROBERT LAVAN MCGAUGH. Admirably fitted by education, inclination and experience for the legal profession, a man of settled purpose and firm convictions, and practical in his aims whether as citizen or attorney, Robert LaVan McGaugh, of Brownwood, has advanced steadily to a high and substantial professional position, and during the ten years that have marked his residence in this city has taken no small part in the realization of those projects which are advanced by all good citizens of modern tendencies. He is a native of Marshall county, Tennessee, and was born November 29, 1876, a son of Mathew W. and Jennie McGaugh.

The McGaugh family, of which there are several branches in different States in the South and Southwest, is of Scotch-Irish origin, the progenitor having been the great-great-grandfather of Robert L. McGaugh, who emigrated from Scotland to America at an early date in the history of this country, and from whom all who spell their name in this fashion have descended. Mathew W. McGaugh was born in Tennessee, where the family owned numerous slaves and large plantations, and during the Civil war he served for some time in a Tennessee regiment in the Confederate army. He migrated to Texas in 1890 and settled first in Grayson county, but subsequently removed to McCulloch county, where he was engaged in farming and raising stock. In June, 1901, he disposed of his interests there and came to Brown county, engaging in the mercantile business at Elkins. He is still so occupied and is enjoying a profitable trade. His wife is also living, and they have been the parents of five daughters and two sons.

Robert L. McGaugh received his early education in the public schools of Arkansas and McCulloch county, Texas, following which he attended Howard Payne College, at Brownwood, and the State Normal School at Denton. Upon leaving the latter institution, he adopted the profession of educator and for four years taught school at various points in Texas, in the meantime assiduously prosecuting his legal studies. He was admitted to the bar at Brownwood in 1903, and since that time has built up a large and representative professional business. He is known as one of the most reliable and progressive members of the Brown county bar, and his reputation among his professional brethren is of the highest. A stalwart Democrat in his political affiliations, he has ever been active in the support of his party, which has honored him by election to positions of responsibility and trust. In 1904 he became city recorder of Brownwood, and upon the completion of his term, in 1906, he was elected county attorney of Brown county and served in that office until November, 1912. He proved a conscientious and hard-working official and handled the duties of his office in an able and efficient manner. Mr. McGaugh is well known in fraternal circles as a member of the Masons and the Odd Fellows, in both of which he has numerous friends. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal church, South.

On August 28, 1902, Mr. McGaugh was married to Miss Mollie Ula Hughes, of McCulloch county, Texas, a daughter of W. G. S. Hughes, who came to Texas from Mississippi as an early settler of Fayette county. He was a veteran of the Confederate army, was engaged in farming and stock raising for many years, and served as county clerk, county judge and county commissioner. He is still one of the prominent men of that county, where he owns a large tract of farming land. Mr. and Mrs. McGaugh have two children: Gracie Marie, born June 17, 1903, and Alton B., born September 27, 1904, both of whom are attending the public schools of Brownwood. Mr. McGaugh has met with a large measure of success, and it is but natural that he should feel grateful to the community in which he has gained his distinction, and this accounts, perhaps, for a part of his enthusiasm as to its numerous opportunities. Aside from this, however, he is a firm believer in this section as a cattle country, and on all occasions encourages men of ambition to locate in Brown county, where he is confident those with the real determination and ability will have experience similar to his own.

JAMES A. THOMAS. One of the well known members of the San Angelo bar, James A. Thomas, has filled the office of county attorney and has been an active member of the local bar since 1904.

James A. Thomas was born February 28, 1874, at Liberty Hill, Texas, a son of Jesse E. and Jennie

Thomas, of Liberty Hill. His father came to Texas about 1840, and first settled at Lexington, then in Burleson county. He was a farmer and stock raiser, and enlisted for service in the Confederate army at the beginning of the war. He was in the great battle of Shiloh, where he was slightly wounded and continued a soldier until the close of the struggle. He was made a prisoner at Vicksburg. After the war he continued as a farmer, and from Lexington moved to Williamson county, about 1870. He died at Brownwood June 25, 1914, and the mother died in December, 1911.

Next to the youngest in a family of nine children, James A. Thomas obtained his first education from the public schools of Williamson county, and also attended the college at Liberty Hill. His career began as a school teacher, an occupation he followed successfully for ten years. In 1904 he moved out to San Angelo, studied law with Hill & Lee of that city, and was admitted to the bar in 1904. Since then he has been in active practice. He was elected a county attorney in 1906, and re-elected in 1908, voluntarily retiring at the close of his second term.

In politics Mr. Thomas has always supported the Democratic standards. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, and the Masonic Order, and is a deacon in the Baptist church. On August 26, 1900, he married Miss Minnie Harvey, of Taylor, Texas, a daughter of John S. and Emma Harvey. Her father was a well known farmer and stockman at Taylor, who in his younger years saw service as a Confederate soldier, and is one of the old-timers of Texas. He now resides in San Angelo. Her mother is also still alive. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have one child, Ruth, aged about three years. Mr. Thomas is of Scotch-Irish and Dutch descent.

JOHN A. O'CONNOR. Among the citizens of Kingsville, Texas, to whom his fellow citizens may point with pride is the Honorable John A. O'Connor. His life might be placed before any young boy as an example of what may be accomplished by grit, perseverance and good hard work. Prior to coming to Kingsville Mr. O'Connor was one of the prominent lawyers in the city of San Antonio, a position which he had won entirely through his own ability. A man of brilliant mentality and a speaker of force and magnetism, it is not surprising that he should have attained success. Although he has only lived in Kingsville a short time he has already made numbers of friends.

John A. O'Connor was born near San Antonio, Texas, in Bexar county, on the 6th of March, 1859. His father, John L. O'Connor, was born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, as was also his mother, who was Miss Melvina Rogers before her marriage. On both sides of the family Mr. O'Connor is descended from the fine old Tennessee families, his mother being related to the Taylors, of which family Governor Bob Taylor is a member, and she was also a relation of General Joseph E. Johnston. John L. O'Connor and his wife came to Texas in 1854, locating on the Salado creek, in Bexar county, not far from San Antonio. In 1860 they removed to Kerr county and there Mr. O'Connor died in 1868. His wife did not survive him long, and John O'Connor was therefore a small boy when he was left an orphan.

It is a very hard position for any boy to be left in, but in this section of the country and at this time in its history the prospects for anything that might be termed a future looked exceedingly dim. With the courage and determination which have always characterized him young John O'Connor set out to earn his living. He worked at whatever came to hand, believing that any work that was honest was worthy of his efforts. He grew up in Kerr county, working on the farms or in the cattle business. When he was twenty-five years old he came to San Antonio. Here he helped to lay the paving for the Alamo plaza and later became a member of the police force. He served on the police force four years under Mayor Bryan Callaghan and during all of this time he never lost sight of his goal, which was to become a lawyer.

He was finally in a position to take up the study of law and Judge T. S. Harris became his tutor. In 1895 he was admitted to the bar, having passed an examination which was pronounced perfect by Judge Newton and the committee who examined him. He began the practice of his profession in partnership with Judge Harris and in this same year, 1895, he was elected to represent Bexar county in the House of Representatives, this being the twenty-fourth session of the Legislature. He was re-elected in 1897 to the twenty-fifth session, and during both sessions proved himself an able legislator. With the exception of four years as an alderman for the city of San Antonio in Mayor Hick's administration, his two terms as congressman have been Mr. O'Connor's only political offices. After his return to San Antonio in 1899 he again took up his law practice. He was at one time a partner of the late Nat Jones and he continued to practice very successfully until the summer of 1913 when he removed to the prosperous little city of Kingsville, the county seat of the new county of Kleberg. Here he has opened a law office and is rapidly winning a practice which seems destined to be a large one.

Mr. O'Connor has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Josephine Creekmore, a native of the state of Mississippi. She died in 1908 leaving seven children, namely, Mrs. Alice Williams, Mrs. Winnifred Gayle, Mrs. Ethel Banta, Robert W. O'Connor, Margaret O'Connor, John A. O'Connor and Louise O'Connor. Mr. O'Connor's present wife was Mrs. Anna Mitchell and she was born in Missouri.

In the fraternal world Mr. O'Connor is an enthusiastic Mason, being a Knight Templar, a member of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and a Thirty-second Degree Mason. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Knights of Pythias.

MARCELLUS KLEBERG. Judge Marcellus Kleberg has all his life been a resident of Texas, this being his birth state, and none is prouder of being a native son of Texas than is he. He has been identified with the practice of law in the state since 1904, when he initiated his activity in his chosen profession in Galveston, just following his graduation and it was not until 1909 that he came to Ballinger and here took up the practice of law. He was elected county judge of Runnels county in 1912, and is now filling the office in a manner wholly creditable to himself and to the best interests of the county as well. He held certain public offices while a resident of Galveston, and in them, as in his present office, gave an excellent account of himself in his official capacity.

Judge Kleberg was born on October 9, 1879, in Galveston, Texas, and is a son of M. E. and Emilie A. (Miller) Kleberg. The father was a native of Texas, born in Dewitt county, this state, and he, too, was an attorney, practicing law in Bellville for several years. He went to Galveston in early life, however, there engaging in practice, and he continued to be so connected until his death in 1913, on the first day of March. He was well known in his section of the state, and in Galveston and in the county was regarded as one of the most successful attorneys there known, and a leader in his profession.

Of the six children born to these parents, there were three sons and three daughters, all of whom are yet living, with the exception of Rosa Kleberg, who died March 19, 1914. Judge Marcellus Kleberg, of this review, is the second born in the family. He received his early education in the private schools of his native community, later attending the public schools, and in the autumn of 1899 he entered the University of Texas, graduating from the academic department in 1903 with the degree of Bachelor of Literature, and in 1904 from the law department with the degree of LL. B. In the same year of his graduation in law he entered practice in Galveston, as has been already noted, continuing there for five years, and in 1909 coming to Ballinger. Here his progress has been rapid, as, indeed, it was in Galveston, and he has won his place to positions of prominence in the county. As county judge he is one of the most prominent that ever sat upon the bench in this district, and he has a reputation for skill and adroitness in his profession that is well worthy of the admiration of his colleagues.

As a resident of Galveston and a practicing attorney of that place, Judge Kleberg served as recorder pro tem for several months, by appointment. He is a Democrat, earnest and ever up and doing in the interests of the party.

Judge Kleberg is a member of the Order of the Sons of Hermann and the Knights of Pythias, while he has membership in his college fraternity, the Sigma Chi. He is also a member of the Ballinger Club.

On February 16, 1913, Judge Kleberg was united in marriage with Miss Ora V. Peters, of Chicago, Illinois. The marriage was solemnized in Dallas. Mrs. Kleberg is a daughter of Mrs. Lulu M. Harris, who has been twice married. Her first husband, the father of Mrs. Kleberg, was for several years land agent and abstractor of titles at Lamar, Missouri.

JUSTUS BERNARD CHAFFIN, M. D. Among the well known physicians of San Angelo, Dr. Chaffin, though a recent comer to this city, has found a place consistent with his abilities, and now enjoys an excellent practice. Dr. Chaffin is well equipped both in talent and in professional preparation for good work as a physician and a surgeon, and has already demonstrated his ability along this line.

Justus Bernard Chaffin was born in Tennessee, August 12, 1876, the fifth in a family of ten children, equally divided between sons and daughters, whose parents were L. C. and Sallie J. Chaffin. The paternal ancestry is Norwegian, and on the mother's side is Irish. Both families have been identified with the southern states for several generations, and most of them were planters and slave holders before the war. On the maternal side the Rives family is conspicuous, and it was one of the oldest and best known southern families in the southeastern states. The doctor's father was a west Tennessee farmer, and enlisted from that section for service in the Confederate army, volunteering at the age of eighteen. He went through the war and after its close continued as a farmer, until he came to Texas in 1881. He first settled at Lorena in McLennan county, where he continued to raise stock until his death on April 11, 1913. The mother still resides at the old home, being about sixty-seven years of age.

Dr. Chaffin attained his first education in the public schools of Spring Valley, Texas, and after that was a student in the Southwestern University of Georgetown until he had finished his junior year. Then in 1897 he became a teacher, and continued in that vocation for three years until he had acquired the necessary resources to put him through medical school. In 1902 he entered the medical department of Galveston, of the University of Texas, and was graduated M. D. in June, 1906. His first practice was at Mooreville, and in 1911 he came to San Angelo. The doctor has always been a staunch supporter and worker for the Democratic party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Loyal Order of Moose, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having held the office of Master of Work in the Knights of Pythias, and also an official in the Woodmen of the World and physician to that order. He and his family worship in the Methodist church south.

Dr. Chaffin was married October 27, 1901, to Miss

Amy E. Barnes of Florence, a daughter of E. Barnes, who was a farmer and stock raiser, and who died in 1910 at the age of sixty-nine. Mrs. Chaffin's mother is still living and has her home with the doctor and wife in San Angelo. She is now sixty-nine years of age. Her father came from England, from the City of London in 1879, settling in Kyle, Texas, where he remained until his death.

W. W. SKELTON. In his capacity of tax collector of San Saba county, Texas, W. W. Skelton is one of the best known men in the city, or indeed, in the county, as well as one of the most highly esteemed and generally popular. He is a native Texas product, born in Denton county, on June 13, 1878, and has made his home in these parts all his life thus far.

W. W. Skelton is a son of J. M. and Sarah (Whitaker) Skelton, formerly from Alabama, who came from that state to Texas in 1853 and settled in Denton county. A farmer and stock raiser, J. M. Skelton devoted himself to that industry in Denton county until 1882, when he came to San Saba county and there took up the same work. He is still living and active in his farm operations, known for one of the capable and prosperous men of his community. Of the ten children born to the parents, eight are living at this writing, and W. W. Skelton of this review is the third born of the children.

After the removal of the family to San Saba county, W. W. Skelton attended the schools of this county, where he gained the bulk of his practical education. When he came to man's estate he identified himself with farming activities, in which he had been well trained by his father, and he continued until 1902, when he engaged in the mercantile business in Locker, San Saba county, continuing there until 1907. In that year he disposed of his interests and went to Richland Springs, in this county, there remaining until 1910, when he was elected to the office of tax collector for the county. Mr. Skelton was elected on the Democratic ticket, whose adherent he has ever been, and he takes a leading place in the party ranks in the county. Fraternally Mr. Skelton is a member of the Masons, with affiliations in the Chapter, and he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has held a number of official positions in both orders in the years of his membership, and is popular and prominent in them. He is a member of the Baptist church, and is serving now as clerk of the church as well.

On Christmas day, 1898, Mr. Skelton was married to Miss Cora Jones, of Locker, San Saba county, a daughter of Henry Jones, a pioneer merchant of that place. He was an early settler and an Indian scout in the early days of Texas, and he died on June 11, 1901. The aged mother still lives and makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Skelton, where she is accorded every courtesy and attention to which her age and her station entitle her to. Mr. and Mrs. Skelton have three children—two sons and a daughter. Denver Howard was born on December 1, 1899; Henry Ward was born on March 22, 1907, and Opal was born on October 2, 1911. The first named is attending school in San Saba.

Mr. Skelton comes of a family that was long established in Alabama, and of English descent. Most of his ancestors were slave holders. Three older brothers of his father fought in the Civil war in the defense of the south. Two uncles of his father also gave themselves to the service on contending sides—one serving as a general in the Confederate army and the other in a similar position in the Federal army.

HENRY H. TAYLOR, M. D. One of the younger and rapidly advancing physicians and surgeons of San Saba is Dr. Henry H. Taylor, who identified himself with practice in this city in 1912, after several years of practice in various other points in the state. He was born in Bell county, Texas, on March 16, 1877, and is a son of J. and Martha J. (Stewart) Taylor, of Bell county. The father was born in Tennessee and came to Texas in about 1875, settling in Bell county where he married and engaged in farming and stock raising. He later moved to Miller county and there continued to farm until his death in 1905. The mother still lives in Goldthwaite, Texas. Mr. Taylor served in the Confederate army during the Civil war, and lost one finger, that being the only injury he sustained all through his long service.

Dr. Taylor as a boy attended the public schools of Temple in Bell county, and when he finished his high school training he entered Memphis Hospital & Medical College at Memphis, Tennessee, and being graduated from that institution in 1900. He has taken post-graduate courses in that school and in the Medical College of Chicago, specializing in gynecology in his later studies. Dr. Taylor first located for practice in Sanderson, Texas, continuing there until 1905, when he established himself in practice in San Angelo. In 1908 he went to Goldthwaite, and there he was successfully occupied in his profession until 1912, when he came to San Saba. Here he has made a considerable headway in his work, and already has gathered to himself a large general practice.

Dr. Taylor is a staunch Democrat, but not particularly active in political matters. He is fraternally associated with the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias, as well as the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he has membership in the Baptist church.

In 1901 Dr. Taylor was married to Miss Daisy Johnson of Sonora, Texas, a daughter of Mrs. N. M. Johnson of that place. She bore him one daughter and died. In 1903 he married Bell Gillispie, and a son, Robert Hamilton Taylor, now seven years of age, was born to them. The daughter, who is named Daisey Lee Taylor, is eleven years of age.

Coming of one of the most widespread families in Texas and Tennessee, Dr. Taylor is especially proud of his pure American blood. His family was early identified with the fortunes of Tennessee, later migrating to Texas, and in the earlier generations having been large plantation and slave owners. With secession troubles the fortunes of the family waned very perceptibly, and they became scattered through other southern states, where they may be found in their various communities, devoting themselves to the best interests of their home places.

MAJOR ROBERT COBB. Now living retired at his modest little home in Wichita Falls, Major Robert Cobb is one of the distinguished surviving officers of the Confederate army, and was for half a century successfully engaged in the practice of law in his native state of Kentucky, and at Wichita Falls, which city has been his home since 1885. Major Cobb retired from practice in 1911, but is still in the full enjoyment of life, and takes a great interest in the past, particularly in the great war through which he served with a gallantry well deserving of the promotions which he received. Major Cobb is descended from an old American family, established on the Atlantic Coast during the Colonial period.

His birth occurred in Caldwell (now Lyon) county, Kentucky, May 21, 1836. He is a son of Robert L. and Cornelia Barbour (Mims) Cobb. His father was born in what is now Lyon county, Kentucky, October 8th, 1804, and was a son of Gideon Dyer and Modena (Clark) Cobb, the latter a granddaughter of Governor Chittenden, and both were natives of Burlington, Vermont, and represented staunch old New England stock, subsequently, in 1800, transplanted to Kentucky. Robert Livingston Cobb, who died at Paducah, Kentucky, in June, 1873, was for more than half a century a merchant at Eddyville, Kentucky; was a Whig in politics, until the dissolution of that party, and a faithful member of the Episcopal church. His wife died at Paducah in 1875. Of their children, Maj. Cobb was the first-born, and there are seven others still surviving, the younger having died in infancy.

Major Cobb grew to manhood at Eddyville, Kentucky. His father was a man in prosperous circumstances, and had advanced ideas concerning education; the son therefore was afforded opportunities much above the ordinary. He attended school for some time at Cadiz, Kentucky, and was subsequently a student in the Western Military Institute at Drennon Springs, Kentucky, an institution of which the noted Bushrod Johnson was at that time president and principal. His early schooling thus gave Major Cobb a limited military training, which was destined to receive a thorough trial in the four years of the war between the States. On leaving the military school, Major Cobb studied law in the University of Virginia, and in 1858 was admitted to the Kentucky bar, and engaged in practice at Eddyville, until 1861. When Major Cobb retired from active practice, in 1911, his career as a lawyer had covered more than half a century, though it was interrupted during the war, and at various times, by his business affairs.

Soon after the war had settled into a serious conflict between the north and the south, Major Cobb took a prominent part in organizing at Eddyville a company, which thereafter bore a conspicuous share in the activities of the Confederate army, and which will always be known in history as Cobb's Battery. He went out with his company, Company F, 3rd Kentucky Infantry, and was elected first lieutenant, and upon the promotion of General H. B. Lyon, who was first captain, became the captain of the company, continuing until it was, in September, 1861, transferred to artillery. Major Cobb saw active service from the battle of Shiloh, where he received his baptism of fire, until the close of the war, winding up his military career at the final surrender at Meridian, Mississippi, May, 1865. He was never seriously wounded or captured, was always ready for service, and his merit as a soldier is well indicated in his promotion at the recommendation of General John C. Breckenridge to the rank of major of artillery on February 22, 1864. After the war Major Cobb resumed practice in Kentucky, lived for some years after his marriage in Mississippi and Paducah, Kentucky, and in May, 1885, located at Wichita Falls, Texas. His family had preceded him to Texas, arriving at Wichita Falls, November 18, 1884. Here he continued in active practice in all the courts until his retirement in 1911.

Major Cobb after the war, in Aug., 1865, married Miss Virginia Walker, who was born in Monroe county, Mississippi, October 31, 1844. Her parents were John A. and Mary Boone (Grimes) Walker; her father a well-known Mississippi planter, who died in 1872. Her mother passed away in 1858. Mrs. Cobb, who was the third in a family of four daughters, received part of her education in Monroe county, Mississippi, and finished at Judson College, near Marion, Alabama. The family of Major Cobb and wife consist of the following children: Robert, born in Monroe county, Mississippi, June 6, 1866, became a prominent lawyer in Wichita Falls, where he died in 1913; Virginia Leoma born in Monroe county, Mississippi, February 2, 1868, and is the wife of H. C. Harding, a well-known cattleman of Amarillo, Texas; Cornelia Mary, born in Mississippi December 8, 1870, married A. S. Stinnett, who is a commission merchant at Amarillo, Tex.; Susie Clair, who died in infancy; Greta, born at Paducah, Kentucky, is the wife of Robert Donaldson Thorburn, of Wichita Falls; Ethel, born in Paducah, lives at home; and Percy, born at Paducah, August 28, 1878, is a traveling salesman and lives at home in Wichita Falls. Mr. Cobb has always supported the Democratic cause in politics, is a member of the Episcopal church, and is prominent in Masonry, having at one time been master of Sewanee Lodge, No. 160, A. F. & A. M., at Eddyville, and had the Chapter and Council Degrees

JOSEPH B. TOWNSEN, M. D. Dr. Joseph E. Townsen has been established in the practice of his profession in Lometa since 1893, when he received his well earned medical degree, and here he has since carried on his life work, making continued advances in his profession and rising steadily in the esteem and confidence of his fellow-men as well. He is one who has amply demonstrated his ability in his profession, and he stands well up among the leading men of the medical fraternity in the county. Dr. Townsen comes of a family that has been identified with the history of Texas since 1856, and men of the name have borne worthy parts in the development of those sections of the state with which they have been variously identified.

Joseph B. Townsen was born on September 11, 1869, at Townsen's Mill, in Lampasas county, Texas, and he is a son of L. J. and Mary Ann (Stanley) Townsen, of Lampasas county. The parents came to Texas in 1856, from Carroll county, Tennessee, and they were the first settlers in Smith county, whence they moved to Lampasas some years later. There the father engaged in the milling business and stock raising, with a tanning business on the side, and to him is ascribed the credit for having built the first water mill west of Waco, which he later replaced with the first steam mill known to that locality. The mill was built on the Lampasas river and was a source of much profit to him. During these years he established a ranch near Fort Chadbourne, operating the ranch for some years, and in 1906 he sold out and retired, moving to Lampasas where he took up his residence. He died there on May 27, 1913, aged eighty years, one month and twenty-one days. The mother passed away in 1906. They were the parents of ten children—seven sons and three daughters, Dr. Townsen of this review being the third born of the number.

In the public schools of Lampasas county Joseph B. Townsen received his elementary education, and his high school training was followed by attendance at the Centenary College of Lampasas. He then embarked on a medical course at Tulane University in New Orleans, finishing his education in medicine at the State University at Galveston, and receiving his M. D. degree in 1893. Soon after that important event, Dr. Townsen engaged in practice in Lometa, where he has since enjoyed a pleasing practice and a lucrative one.

Dr. Townsen has always been a Democrat, working whole-heartedly for the best good of the party, and is well pleased with the present status of the Democratic party in the country. He is a member of the Masonic Order, of the Royal Arch degree, and is prominent in the Order.

On August 2, 1893, Dr. Townsen was married in Lampasas county to Miss Anna Alexander, the daughter of William Alexander, of that county. He was long prominent as a sheep rancher, and he died December 24, 1913. Six children were born to the Doctor and his wife, four of whom are living today: Ima, aged eighteen; Amy, now sixteen years old; Lila, fourteen years old, and O. B., who is twelve. The two younger ones are yet in school, the others having finished the local high school course.

JUDGE J. ROSS BELL. The lifelong professional activities of Judge J. Ross Bell, of Teague, Texas, have been confined within the limits of Freestone and adjoining counties, and his acquaintance in the district is a most comprehensive one, indeed, though not exceeded by his prominence as a member of the well known law firm of Boyd & Bell. Judge Bell is not a Texas product in reality, though he is essentially such by reason of having been a resident of the state from earliest infancy, and in spirit and purpose no native Texan is more nearly a part or product of the Lone Star state.

Vol. V-8

J. Ross Bell was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, on May 25, 1858, and a few months later, in the same year, the family moved into Texas. He is the son of James Hamilton and Louisa (Robbins) Bell, and the grandson of ——— Bell, the latter a Virginia man who died in North Carolina in early life, and whose wife was in maidenhood a Miss ——— Vance. The children of these parents were six in number—four sons and two daughters, and were James Hamilton, father of the subject; Col. Robert J., who died in Highpoint, North Carolina; Benjamin F., who passed away in Seattle, Washington, in 1911; Samuel, who died in Tehuacana, Texas, in 1881; Mrs. Lula Sullivan, who passed out in Greensboro, North Carolina, in 1878, and Mrs. Lucy A. Lindsey, a resident of Oak Cliff, Dallas, Texas.

James Hamilton Bell was reared in North Carolina, and in his native vicinity he married Louisa Robbins, a daughter of a Protestant Methodist Minister of North Carolina. The wife and mother died in 1901, and her issue are George A., who died at Kingsville, Texas, July 19, 1913; he was a former member of the Texas State Legislature, and had been active in the practice of law; Robert T., of Coolidge, Texas, who spent his life in the lumber business and as a farmer; J. Ross, of this review; Mrs. Alice Mitchell, of Mexia; Samuel Bascom, a lawyer, of San Antonio; Mrs. Lula Peyton, of San Antonio; Miss Ada, a well known voice teacher of Chicago, who long maintained a studio in Bush Temple, that city, and is still active in her work.

James Hamilton Bell came to Texas in 1858, bringing his family, and settled first in Navarro county, taking up his residence near Dresden, and there devoting himself to the business of agriculture. In the fall of 1869 he moved to Tehuacana Hills, in Limestone county, and there he spent the remaining years of his long and busy life, passing out in 1898. In Tehuacana Hills he became one of the first trustees of Trinity University, and it was there that his children had their college training. He was an active man in the Presbyterian church all his life and was one of the large contributors to the building of the large stone college building at Tehuacana, Texas, which was finally presented to the Methodist Protestant church.

Mr. Bell, it should be said, served in the Confederate army, enlisting from Navarro county early in the war period, and served in Col. Harrison's regiment of Waco. His command did duty in the Trans-Mississippi Department, and he participated with it in the Mansfield campaign, which included the Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou battles, besides the activity at Mansfield, and he continued with his command to the end of the struggle, without suffering either wounds or capture. His original company was a cavalry organization, but it was dismounted early in the war. He was discharged at Hempstead, Texas, in May, 1865, after having passed through four years of military activity in the interests of the southland.

Mr. Bell was a Democrat, but he never held office nor permitted himself to be named as a candidate, being one who was absolutely without predilection for official service or political preferment.

J. Ross Bell had his higher education in Trinity University, at Tehuacana, Texas, and upon the completion of his college course he turned his attention to teaching. He put forth his first efforts in that work in the Navarro schools, subsequently having similar work in the schools of Hill county, spending one year in Navarro county and one in Hill county. Having chosen the profession of law for his life work, Mr. Bell began preparation for his career in the offices of Col. J. M. Anderson, of Waco, and he was admitted to the bar there in February, 1884, before Judge Rhimes, following his examination, which was conducted by Judge Prather, Col. Alexander and W. D. Kelley.

Immediately upon his admission to the bar Mr. Bell went to Fairfield, Texas, and there formed a partnership with his brother, George Bell, who was there prominent in active practice of their joint profession. In the autumn of 1886 J. Ross Bell was elected County Attorney, serving one term in the office. Then resuming private practice, he continued there until the latter part of 1902, when he was elected county judge of the county, serving two terms as the successor of Judge H. B. Davis, now District Judge of this district. At the end of his second term he was sent to the legislature as Freestone county's representative to the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly, and he was re-elected to the Thirty-first Assembly, having his election on the Democratic ticket.

His services in the legislature were varied in their nature. In his committee assignments he was chairman of the committee on counties and he was a member of the committee on education, taxation, privileges and elections, and on the committee of criminal jurisprudence. In the second session he served on practically the same committees. He took an active part in the Campbell measures, especially the "full rendition" measure, as it was called, and the bank and guaranty laws. He was the author of several bills amending the statutes which were passed. He served on several conference committees to adjust differences between the House and the Senate, and in many ways his service was especially valuable and pleasing to his constituents.

When Judge Bell was elected county attorney he severed his connection with his brother, but later resumed it, though he finally separated from him again to engage in a partnership with B. H. Gardner. This event took place in 1890, and the firm was known as Gardner, Bell & Boyd. A year later the firm became Gardner & Bell, and continued as such until 1902. He then became a member of the firm of Bell & Moses, and still later practiced with Mr. R. M. Edwards under the firm name of Bell & Edwards, until he was elected to the office of County Judge, when the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent. He did not again associate himself in practice with another until 1909, when G. W. Fryer became his partner. In October, 1911, Mr. Bell moved to Teague and joined W. R. Boyd in practice in this city, the firm of Boyd, Bell & Fryer coming into existence then, with office in Fairfield and Teague, and in May, 1913, was organized the firm of Boyd & Bell, which is now operative in this city.

In his political activities Judge Bell did some work in the Bailey campaign as an anti-Bailey man, and he also was active in the candidacy of Judge R. V. Davidson for governor. He was a Wilson man, and was alternate delegate to the Baltimore convention from the Sixth Congressional district of Texas, but did not attend. In his earlier days of political work he attended several of the State conventions, beginning with the "Car-shed" convention at Houston, in the year 1892. He was a Hogg supporter and managed Freestone county in the interests of that gentleman. In his senatorial preferences he supported Morris Shepherd, and his sympathies have always been anti-Colquitt. He is a strong prohibitionist, in practice as well as in theory, and is the advocate of state-wide prohibition, voting for it in the legislature and speaking in behalf of that provision.

Judge Bell was married December 22, 1891, to Miss Bessie Anderson, a daughter of James I. Anderson, of Fairfield, Texas, a Confederate soldier, who came to Texas from Mississippi, prior to the War period. Here he married Miss Paralee Chandler and Mrs. Bell is one of three sons and three daughters born to them. Judge and Mrs. Bell have had two children—Gladys and Fannie Vivian. The last named daughter died at the age of eleven years.

The Judge is fraternally identified by his affiliation with the Blue Lodge of Masons, Fairfield, and with the Woodmen of the World. He and his family are also members of the Order of the Eastern Star. He and his daughter are members of the Presbyterian church, and the judge is an elder in that church, which office he has held for a quarter of a century.

R. S. DAVITTE. As manager of the Dublin Oil Mill, at Dublin, Texas, R. S. Davitte occupies a prominent position in his community. He has been engaged in his present line of business since the time he left school, and has risen to the office which he now holds solely through the force of his own industry and well-directed effort. Mr. Davitte is a native of Texas, having been born at Cisco, Eastland county, May 24, 1882, and is a son of John S. Davitte.

Mr. Davitte is of Irish descent, and the family has long been prominent in Texas, his father having been one of the early settlers of Comanche county, while his mother was a daughter of a pioneer of that section. John S. Davitte early engaged in freighting and dealing in hides and wool, and this occupation he has continued to the present time, now being one of the successful business men of Brownwood. Of the family, beside Mr. and Mrs. John S. Davitte, and R. S. Davitte, one sister is now living in Texas, Mrs. Shropshire, of Brownwood.

The oldest of his parents' family of six children, R. S. Davitte received his early education in the public schools of Eastland county and subsequently took a course in the Daniel Baker College at Brownwood, where he was graduated in 1893. He received his introduction to the business world as a bookkeeper in the offices of the Brownwood Oil Mill Company, and in 1905 was sent to Stephenville, to become manager of the oil mill there. His work at that point was so satisfactory, that in 1907 he was transferred to Dublin, where he has continued as manager to the present time. Although a young man, Mr. Davitte has had wide experience in his line, and among his associates is held in the most implicit confidence. In political matters he has not been active, except as a firm supporter of Democratic candidates and principles. He takes an active interest in the welfare of his community, however, and at all times has endeavored to secure the passage of beneficial measures and the election of competent men.

On April 7, 1903, in Brownwood, Texas, Mr. Davitte was married to Miss Erma Pinson, daughter of R. O. Pinson, of that city, who was a cowman up to the time of his death in 1893.

NATHAN D. LANE. A federal service within the last two or three decades has had no more important nor popular branch of its activities than that of the weather-bureau. In every city which is officially designated as a station of the weather-bureau, the official in charge enjoys a particular interest and esteem on the part of all local citizens. At the bureau station in El Paso is located one of the oldest men in the service, Mr. Lane having become connected with the government work forty years ago, and having been almost continuously in the present branch of service.

Nathan D. Lane was born in the interesting town of Minot, Maine, on March 7, 1851, a son of Benjamin F. and Lydia L. Lane. As a boy he attended the public schools at Minot and Poland, and also took a special high school course. When he was sixteen years of age he left school in order to take up his own battle with the world, and earned his first money as a clerk in a mercantile establishment at Portland, Maine. He remained with that firm until he was twenty years of age, and then entered the government service. Throughout practically all the succeeding years he has been in the weather department, and in this long service it has been part of his work that he should accept assignments to stations in many parts of the United States and in various capacities. In the spring of 1891 he was appointed to take charge of the weather bureau office at El Paso as official observer, and has resided here ever since.

Mr. Lane was married at Mesilla, New Mexico, to Miss Jennie Casad, daughter of Thomas Casad of Mesilla, New Mexico. They are the parents of two children, one son and one daughter: Ada V. is the wife of Julius W. Lorentzen of El Paso; and Wallace C. is in the brokerage business with his brother-in-law at El Paso. Mr. Lane is in politics an Independent, and takes little part in practical party affairs. During twenty years of residence in El Paso he has been an enthusiastic advocate of its many charms and opportunities. As a particular authority on climate, his judgment is that few other points in the United States equal El Paso for the equability and general salubrity of the climate.

JAMES W. FIELD. Strictly speaking, we have no new country, and pioneer life no longer exists. The traveler journeys by rail, and the morning after he arrives at his destination may read of the fact in the daily paper; but in ante-bellum days things were very different. At that time the people who left their homes in the East, the South and the Middle West for the Lone Star state were looked upon as venturing into practically an unknown region, and their future destiny was believed to be uncertain. At this time the advance guard of civilization is composed of all sorts and conditions of men, but in those days the lazy, the shiftless and the weak-hearted remained at home, and thus the new communities formed in the Southwest were composed of strong and resolute characters and to know of a man who came to this part of the country in the fifties is to know that he was a man of positive and earnest character.

James W. Field, vice president of the Continental State Bank of McKinney, Texas, is an admirable representative of the earnest, pushing and courageous men who came to Texas more than a half a century ago. A veteran of the great struggle between the North and the South, for years a successful agriculturist, and now well known and influential in banking circles of the state, his entire career has been characterized by industry and well-directed energy, culminating in well-deserved success. Mr. Field was born August 4, 1839, in Cooper county, Missouri, and is a son of Jesse and Martha Ann (Oglesby) Field, is of English descent, and has numerous relations on both his father's and mother's sides in this state. Jesse Field was born in Virginia, and as a young man moved to Kentucky, where he was married, going thence to Missouri, and, in 1858, coming to Texas and locating in Collin county, where he purchased land at $12.50 per acre. He did not live long to cultivate his Texas fields, as his death occurred in 1863, the mother surviving him some years. Of their family of nine children, James W. was the third in order of birth.

The early education of James W. Field was decidedly limited, being confined to attendance at the old primitive country log schoolhouse in the vicinity of his father's home in Missouri. His first business was as a farmer and stock raiser, and he was so engaged at the time of the outbreak of hostilities between the states, when he joined the Confederate service by enlisting in Company H, Second Missouri Volunteers, an infantry organization. His regiment was first assigned to the Department of the Mississippi, and with that force participated in the engagements at Corinth, Iuka and Vicksburg, at the latter of which places Mr. Field was made prisoner when the city was surrendered, and immediately paroled. Upon rejoining his regiment he was attached to the Army of the Tennessee, under General Johnson. He participated in the Atlanta Campaign, and then took part in the bloody battle at Franklin and the fierce struggle at Nashville, and at the time of Lee's surrender returned to his home. There he resumed the simple duties of civil life, taking up his farming and stock-raising operations where he had left them off. He was industrious and ambitious, overcame what obstacles arose in his path by his energy and indomitable will, and as the years passed added extensively to his acreage. In 1908 he found himself ready to retire from agricultural activities, and in that year rented his property and became one of the organizers of the Continental State Bank of McKinney, and was elected its vice president, a position he has continued to retain to the present time. Mr. Field now lives in his pleasant home on the corner of West Louisiana and North College streets. He has seen marvelous transformations in his day, and yet retains sufficient vigor of body and mind to interest himself in the busy life that surges around him, and to enjoy the good things with which Providence has crowned his life of probity and industry. Each day finds him at his office in the bank, located on the north side of the Public Square, and his associates look to him frequently for counsel and guidance in matters of importance regarding financial affairs. Politically, Mr. Field has always been a Democrat. He belongs to the Christian church of McKinney, of which he is a liberal supporter.

Mr. Field was married in 1868 to Miss Medora T. Barnes, a daughter of Thomas and Susan (Field) Barnes. The father was an early settler in Collin County, Texas, and a prosperous farmer and cattleman, who is now deceased. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Field: Lula Love, wife of R. G. Love, a farmer and stockman of Denton county, Texas; Mrs. Annie McDonald, the widow of Harry McDonald, and now a resident of Amarillo, Texas; and Mrs. Jennie Field Anthony, wife of Joe Anthony, who is connected with a large Fort Worth department store. The grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Field are Earl P. Love, Robert Field Love, Lyman F. McDonald and Jimfield McDonald.

CHARLES L. ALDERMAN. President of The Western Telephone Company at Big Spring and until recently president of the Big Springs Water Company, Mr. Alderman is one of the forceful and broadminded men of enterprise, whose courage and initiative have been useful and important factors in setting western Texas so rapidly toward the front in all lines of improvement.

Charles L. Alderman was born in Morgan county, Ohio, August 23, 1862, a son of Arza and Lois (Wheeler) Alderman, both natives of Ohio. The Alderman family has been represented in Ohio since 1808, a period of considerable more than a century. Arza Alderman, the father, was for many years influentially connected with Morgan county, being a well known banker at McConnellsville. The First National Bank of McConnellsville, of which he was president, was one of the first 50 national banks started in the United States. Arza Alderman in 1884 was on a tour through the west and stopped at Big Spring, which had only recently become a town, along the way of the Texas & Pacific Railroad. He noted with particular favor the presence of the fine soft water springs a little south of the town, and soon afterward bought a large tract of land in Howard county, including these springs.

It was this purchase which led Charles L. Alderman to identify himself in so prominent a way with Big Spring during the last thirty years. He came to take the management of his father's land, and Mr. Alderman has been an enterprising and valuable citizen here ever since. He spent his early career in his home county in Ohio, where he received a public school education, and when twenty-five years of age became cashier of the Citizens National Bank of McConnellsville. He continued in that position until he permanently located in Big Springs in 1895. He came to Texas at that time to assist in the construction of the Big Springs Water Works, and he and other members of the family continued to own most of the stock in that water company until January, 1913, when the water works were sold to the city of Big Springs.

In 1903 Mr. Alderman was one of the organizers and incorporators of the Western Telephone Company, the corporation, with headquarters at Big Springs, having installed telephone exchanges and a general system connecting all the towns over two dozen or more counties in this portion of west Texas. The company has now over 2000 telephones installed, 1000 miles of toll lines, with thriving exchanges at all the large towns in this territory. It is noteworthy that the Western Telephone Company did a pioneer work in stringing the first copper wire circuits and building the first standard exchanges and copper toll lines in western Texas. While first in the field ten years ago, The Western Telephone Company has never released its premier position, and on the plan of giving the very best service it is possible to produce the company have installed the finest telephone switching equipment to be had. The Big Springs Telephone System gives the citizens of that community telephones that are reliable in their signaling, clear in their transmitting, good and durable in heavy service, with quickest and surest switchboard operation.

The technical experts who have examined the Big Springs System claim that that town has the finest exchange office, construction and switchboard west of Dallas. The Big Springs switchboard is of the latest magneto-multiple type, large enough to allow for future growth of this enterprising city. The exchange apparatus is built of fine material, the board itself being of solid mahogany, the switching apparatus being of heavy material of durable quality for long wear and practical use. The switchboard gives quicker service than the older type, because in the multiple exchange each operator answers call from one locality only, yet every subscriber can instantly reach every other line, no matter on what part of the board the connection terminates. Thus there are no "transfers" in connecting, and there is no repeating of numbers.

Mr. Alderman, as president of the Telephone Company, has introduced many enlightened ideas for the improvement of the service. He has been as much interested in securing efficiency and contentment and loyalty among his employes as in getting a mechanically perfect equipment of switchboards and other apparatus. In line with these progressive ideas he has built many modern bungalows in the smaller towns to serve as the telephone central and home of the operators, one room of the bungalow being used for the exchange and the others planned with good living comforts for the benefit of the operators. The central office at Big Springs has been compared to a large bank rather than a switchboard plant, and in every way will measure up to the best exchanges to be found in many of the larger cities. An interesting fact is that the first young lady operator employed by the Western Telephone Company ten years ago is now chief operator of the system, and this is but one instance of the loyalty of the various employes and the consideration and attention which Mr. Alderman pays to the merits of his subordinates.

Mr. Alderman and his family have given liberally of their resources and have usually been first in enterprise in any matter affecting the larger general welfare of the country about Big Springs and the city itself. In politics he is a Democrat, but has been content to exercise his influence through business and other channels rather than through public office. His church is the Methodist, to which both he and his wife belong. Mr. Alderman was married at McConnelville, Ohio, November 22, 1882, to Miss Lizzie M. Staubery, a native of that city. The five children born to their marriage were: Stanbery, Blanche, Carmen Sylvia, Justus and Maydelle, all of whom are living but Carmen Sylvia.

Mr. Alderman takes just pleasure in the collection of books and rare coins, and at the present time owns a library of several thousand volumes, selected as his taste has indicated and including many works of rare edition and of exceptional value and interest to book lovers. At one time Mr. Alderman is said to have owned one of the finest collections of rare coins to be found in the United States. Outside of his private library and his business, his chief recreation is travel, and especially in traveling about the country attending meetings of the various Masonic bodies. He thinks nothing of traveling from five hundred to seven hundred miles in order to enjoy a Masonic meeting. He is one of the best known and most prominent Masons in Texas. He has affiliated with Dallas Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and a few years ago was granted the ultimate and honorary thirty-third degree in that Rite. He is a past officer in all the local bodies of the York Rite, having represented his lodge and chapter in the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of the state and having been Most Excellent High Priest of the Grand Chapter. He is a charter member of Dallas Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret, and belongs to Hella Temple of the Mystic Shrine, the Royal Order of Scotland and St. Mark's Conclave of the Red Cross of Constantine. Mr. Alderman took a leading part in the building of the Masonic Temple at Big Springs.

FOX STRIPLIN. Few men in west Texas, in whatever business or occupation they have engaged have made a success equal to that of Fox Striplin, now one of the most active and influential citizens of Big Springs, and enterprising real estate man and possessed of a large amount of real property of his own.

Born in Collin county, Texas, May 3, 1872, educated in the public schools and finishing in the high schools of Nevada, and Denton, Texas, until he obtained a diploma as teacher he was for twelve years engaged in the noble but unremunerative occupation of teacher in Wichita and Collin counties. In Collin county he was one of the ablest educators. His last work as teacher was two terms in the schools of Buffalo Gap and four terms at the Garden City. In the meantime, by much thrift and self denial, he was saving his earnings and in 1901 invested two hundred dollars which represented all he had been able to economize on during his years of teaching in Howard county land. This sum of two hundred dollars he used to make the first payment on three hundred and twenty acres of land. He still taught school for some four or five years after this investment made him a land holder and in the intervals between his school room duties he sowed the three hundred and twenty acres in milo maize and cotton, and managed to cultivate and harvest his crops at the same time. He continued as a teacher until 1905 when he permanently left that occupation and opened a real estate office in Big Springs. Since then with such experience as he had acquired in the few years before, he has prospered beyond all expectations and during the past year his tax on his own real estate amounted to more than his first investment in lands in this county. Though all his early career was spent in teaching, an occupation which is singularly devoid of opportunities for real business training he has used his talents and opportunities in such a way that he now owns real estate to the value of $25,000.00, including much good business property in Big Springs and his present home in that city. His offices are in the West Texas National Bank. Considering his means and his opportunities, it is doubtful if any man in Big Spring has done more to advance his own resources and at the same time has given most generously of time and money to the improvement of his city than Mr. Striplin. He has for many years served as secretary of the Commercial club.

Fox Striplin was born in Collin county, a son of Elisha and Sarah (Puckett) Striplin, both parents having come to Texas immediately after the war and located at Farmersville in Collin county. The father was a native of Alabama, and the mother of Louisiana. The father gave four years of service to the Confederate cause during the Civil war, and after locating in Collin county became a substantial farmer and stockman. He died in 1880 when fifty-five years of age, and his widow now resides with her daughter Coma, the wife of Mr. Curtis, at Knowles in New Mexico. Mr. Striplin was the oldest in a family of four children. His sister, Coma, just mentioned, is the wife of E. C. Curtis of New Mexico; Ola, the wife of Scott Biggs, of Muskogee, Oklahoma; Frank, who is a farmer in Grapevine, Texas; and Elisha, who is in business at Grapevine.

Fox Striplin is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and he and his family are active members of the Methodist church. On May 19, 1897, he married Miss Fannie Hayes, who was born in North Carolina, the daughter of J. L. Hayes, and a sister of Dr. Charles Hayes who is a physician and surgeon at Fort Worth. The five children of Mr. Striplin and wife are Chloe, who is a student in the high school; Hayes; Joseph; Robert; and Allen. There is not a citizen in Big Springs who can count more men of more prominence and influence as personal friends than Mr. Striplin. This respect and esteem have come to him not only for his splendid record as a self-made man, but also due to his enterprising good citizenship, and the fact that he has been honorable in the relations of his life and has given his best both to family and friends. It is Mr. Striplin's opinion, as a well informed real estate man, that what Howard county now wants above everything else is more settlers. The county has plenty of room, has cheap land, has good water, and if new comers will only adapt themselves to the country in its natural conditions, they are bound to prosper.

JAMES T. BROOKS. Mayor of Big Springs and coming here seven years ago, Mr. Brooks almost immediately took a successful place in the law and in public affairs, was elected and served one term as county attorney and since then has devoted his entire attention to the increasing demands of a practice which represents the most important litigation and general counsel work in the county.

James T. Brooks was born in Brown county, Texas, January 16, 1878, and belongs to an old family of the state. His parents were James T. Brooks and wife, both of whom were born in Alabama, and were children of about four years of age when they accompanied their respective parents into Texas, locating in Upshur county, where the grandparents were farmers and stock raisers and the early settlers and developers of that section of the state. The parents were reared and married in Upshur county, and after their marriage moved into Browns county where they lived for many years and now make their home at Italy, Ellis county. There were seven children in the family, and the Big Springs lawyer was next to the youngest.

Like many other successful men in the profession Mr. Brooks got his start by hard work and self-denial, and was a school teacher for several years before he was able to work his way through law school. He received his first educational advantages in the public school of Ellis county, and was later a student for a time in Baylor University at Waco. He completed his literary studies in the University at Valparaiso, Indiana, and on returning to Texas after his course there secured a certificate and taught school for three years. He was also elected county superintendent of schools at Ellis county and was head of the county school system for two years. With the earnings from this work, he was then enabled to enter the University of Texas at Austin, where he completed his studies in the law and was graduated LL.B.

After being admitted to the bar, Mr. Brooks opened his office at Big Springs, on April 1, 1907, and in six years time has acquired a position hardly second to any among the lawyers of the county. He was elected county attorney for one term, and then did not seek re-election owing to the fact that his private practice absorbed all his time and energy. He has held the office of city attorney at Big Springs since 1907 and in April, 1914, was elected mayor of Big Springs. In politics Mr. Brooks is one of the young and aggressive leaders of the Texas Democracy, and has always interested himself in party affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and the Pretorians. Since beginning practice he has placed most of his financial accumulations in Big Springs and Howard county real estate, and would be willing to stake all his possessions in this class of property, since he foresees a time not many years distant when the population of Howard county will be several times as great as it is now, and all property is on the rise and will continue to rise for a good many years.

JOSEPH ALLEN MYERS. As postmaster at Bryan, J. Allen Myers has an unusual record of service, covering a period of twenty years, though not consecutive. He was first appointed under the Arthur administration in 1882. President Cleveland removed him two or three years for "offensive partisanship," but when President Harrison went to the White House, he was again appointed and served out his regular four year term. For the past twelve years he has been in office, beginning with an appointment from Theodore Roosevelt. Mr. Myers has witnessed and has helped inaugurate and improve many changes in the service. During his first term, thirty years ago, two-cent postage was a novelty, and within his own time has been introduced such monumental improvements as free rural delivery, postal savings bank, and the parcel post for many years, and in fact until recently, the hours of post office employees were practically without limit, depending upon the season of the year and the amount of work to be done. Mr. Myers about a year ago spent much time in studying out a schedule by which the local employees might comply with the new federal law, imposing eight hours as a maximum of individual service in a single day. During his continuous administration of the past ten years, the Bryan post office business receipts have increased from about eight thousand dollars a year to more than sixteen thousand dollars. The office at Bryan is a neat brick building, owned by Mr. Myers, and which was leased by him to the government for ten years. Adjoining the present post office a site has been secured by the government, and under an appropriation of fifty thousand dollars for the construction of a federal building, work has been begun which will give Bryan one of the most attractive post offices in the state.

Joseph Allen Myers, who was born at Montgomery, Alabama, April 13, 1855, came to Texas in 1863 when a boy of eight years. His own public career and business record are notable, and he belongs to one of the permanent families of the south. Its origin goes back to Rudolph Von Moyer, who with his brother Conrad emigrated from Switzerland to America during the early part of the eighteenth century. Rudolph settled in South Carolina, near Columbia, and Conrad located near Albany, New York. The Von Moyers were connections of the Austrian house of Hapsburg, and of distinguished family lineage. In religion they were Catholics. Rudolph brought with him a family of two hundred German tenants, who remained about him, and a certain relationship existed between the Myers' and the families of these original emigrants, until the death of Rudolph's grandson David. Some years after the family located in America, the name was changed to its present American spelling. A son of Rudolph, John Jacob Myers was sent back to Germany to be educated in Heidelberg University, and while there married Catherine of Saxony. Subsequently he served as a judge in colonial times, was a major in General Marion's Command during the Revolution, and was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, at the close of the war. The grandfather of the Bryan postmaster was Col. David Myers, a son of this Rudolph, the original American settler. Col. David Myers was born November 29, 1768, and died March 3, 1835, his death resulting from assassination. He served with the rank of colonel in the war of 1812. He was born in Richland district of South Carolina, was a successful planter, and a wealthy man, represented his district in the South Carolina legislature, and was also a member of the senate of that state. He married Phalby Mills, daughter of William Mills, of North Carolina. David Myers and wife owned old Fort Marion property near Columbia, where they are buried.

Robert Clendennen Myers, father of J. Allen Myers, was born in Fairfield District of South Carolina, in 1821, was a southern aristocrat, a man of college education, and combined a peculiar political independence of thought and action which made his course difficult and he was often misunderstood in his community. He moved from South Carolina to Montgomery, Alabama, in 1852, from Montgomery, Alabama, to Dallas, Louisiana, in 1857, and moved from Dallas, in 1863 as a refugee slave holder, settling in Robertson county near what is Setton, in the Tolephus Johnson community, near the old town of Sutton, Texas. There he engaged in planting, and in September, 1865, moved to Millican, a new terminal of the Houston & Texas Central Railway, where he was engaged in merchandising. He continued to be one of the prominent men of that place until 1871, when he died. By reason of his peculiar physique he was exempt from military service during the war. While he favored the union of the states he was a slave holder, and suffered the loss of that property by the fortunes of war. In politics he was an active Republican after the war, and at one time served as justice of the peace. Though a supporter of the United government and of the Republican party, he was not less opposed than his Democratic neighbors to the carpet-bag regime in the south, and it is easy to understand that this attitude was one that brought him into frequent disfavor with both sides. He was married in his native state to Miss Mary Harrison, a daughter of John and granddaughter of Reuben Harrison, who was a first cousin to President William Henry Harrison. She was born in 1831, and died in 1873. Their children were: John H., who died at Hearne, without a family; Nannie Allen, who married W. B. Baldrige and died at Hearne; Lucy R., who married Frank P. McLemore and died in Hearne; J. Allen; William Mills, of Sinton, Texas; Cornelias R., of San Angelo; Robert C., of Waxahachie, Texas; Bessie M., who married H. H. Holt, of Waco.

J. Allen Myers, as a boy had a limited education, though his father brought out from South Carolina two governesses, Miss Ellen Coe and Miss Hattie Williamson, for the instruction of the children in the household. Later he attended a country school at Millican. When he left school he earned his first regular salary by selling newspapers as a "butcher" on the Houston and Texas Central Railway. From that he naturally gravitated into railroading, and became a brakeman on that line. September 17, 1873, while coupling some cars, his right hand was mashed, the accident occurring at Manor, Texas, and when he recovered from that he went to Oakwoods, and began his business experience as clerk for Lee Cannon & Company. The same firm employed his services at Palestine. After his marriage Mr. Myers moved to Bryan, and was employed here in drilling water wells until August, 1876. Boyle and Sons, grocers, secured his ability as a salesman for their store, and he was later with J. W. Johnson in the same business for a year. On leaving Johnson Mr. Myers went to T. J. McQueen, and was with him four years. In October, 1882, he was appointed postmaster at Bryan to succeed A. D. McConico. After his removal from that office by President Cleveland, he was elected county clerk of Brazos county, and was reelected, but resigned in order to accept again the appointment of postmaster. His second term was served out for the regular time of four years. This took him into the Cleveland administration, but he was suffered to remain in the office. During the next interim Mr. Myers was engaged in the book and stationery business, as a member of the firm of Myers & Haswell. He sold out in that line to establish a hardware business at Bryan. Two years later, Allen Carr came into the firm, and subsequently bought the stock from Mr. Myers. The latter then secured the business of William Koppe, and was actively identified with the hardware trade until 1911, when he sold out. He then built the brick wholesale and retail house occupied by the Myers Hardware Company, took a large block of the stock, and has since been president of this well known mercantile concern. He is also a stock holder in the Gordon-Sewell Grocery Company. Mr. Myers began his third term as postmaster in 1904, under appointment from President Roosevelt, and has been twice reappointed to the office. His selection for the honor came without any solicitation or application on his part.

Since casting his first presidential vote for Rutherford B. Hayes, Mr. Myers has been actively affiliated with the Republican interests. Since 1884 he has represented as a delegate his district in every Republican State Convention and was a delegate to the national convention at Minneapolis, and has attended every one since then. For several years he was a member of the State Executive Committee, and while in politics has made the acquaintance of many notable political leaders. Of the older generation he knew personally Matt Quay of Pennsylvania, President McKinley, Governor Black of New York, Mark Hanna, and others. Mr. Myers is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, has passed all the chairs and has served in the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and though reared in the Episcopal faith joined the Christian church after his marriage.

At Bryan on October 5, 1875, he married Miss Laura Erwin, a daughter of Dr. L. Erwin. Their children are: Frank A., a merchant of Bryan, being assistant manager in the Myers Hardware Company and who married Miss Nita Cook; Alice, wife of J. E. Kyle, who is professor of Horticulture and dean of Agriculture, in the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas; Robert Rudolph, who lives in Bryan, and married Miss May Nicol; William Harrison of Bryan, who married Miss Lessie Mawhinney; J. Allen, Jr.; and Charles Stilwell.

VAN ALVIN PETTY. Among the men who have made fortunes in the exploitation and development of the vast resources of the state of Texas, one of the most successful is Van Alvin Petty, for years engaged in the manufacture and distribution of the lumber products of South-eastern Texas, and now one of San Antonio's most honored citizens. While retired from the lumber business, Mr. Petty is still active in the financial world, and has become one of the most effective factors in the creation of the new commercial city of San Antonio. Gifted by nature with the qualities of leadership, with striking executive ability, Mr. Petty is a successful man from whatever point of view his career may be regarded.

Van Alvin Petty is a native of the state of Texas, which is perhaps one of the reasons why he has always taken so keen an interest in the upbuilding of the state. He was born at Bastrop in Bastrop county in 1860, son of E. P. and Margaret E. (Pinner) Petty. His father, Captain E. P. Petty, who was born at Dover, Tennessee, January 1, 1828, studied law and began the practice of his profession in his native town, and on January 3, 1849, just twenty-one years of age, married Miss Margaret E. Pinner, who was born in Stewart county, Ten-essee, in 1832, daughter of Dr. Joseph Pinner of Dyersburg, Tennessee. In 1852 Captain Petty and wife came to Texas; they were located for a short time in Seguin, but in November, 1852, moved to Bastrop, the county seat of Bastrop county, where he established himself in the practice of his profession. His partner was the late Colonel W. Jones, who gained his military rank in the war and was long one of the most distinguished lawyers of the state. At the beginning of the war both members of the firm deserted the law to serve their country. Colonel Jones was in command of the Seventeenth Texas Infantry and Mr. Petty enlisted in his regiment. He became first lieutenant in Captain John M. Finney's company, and a short time later on the reorganization of the company became its captain. Captain Petty commanded his company through the various campaigns in Arkansas and Louisiana, taking part in many battles and skirmishes, and among them the battle at Mansfield, Louisiana, during the Red River campaign. A short time later, at the battle of Pleasant Hill, Louisiana, on April 9, 1864, while gallantly fighting at the head of his company, or rather of the small remnant of his company that had escaped death or wounds, Captain Petty fell with a bullet wound in his breast. Many tributes, and these of the highest kind, have been paid to the memory of Captain Petty by his friends and comrades in the great war, all of whom have spoken of him as a noble and sincere gentleman, and a brave, wise and efficient soldier and officer. His wife, Mrs. Margaret Petty, died at the home of her son in San Antonio, August 15, 1911.

V. J. Delly

Van Alvin Petty grew up in Bastrop, received a good education there, and his first experience in business came in 1882, when he went to Beaumont, the center of the lumber industry, and entered the employ of Olive & Sternberg. In a few years his services had become so valuable to the company that he was given varied executive responsibilities and in 1890 acquired financial interests in the Olive, Sternberg & Company. In 1905 the company was reorganized as the Olive-Sternberg Lumber Company. From the beginning his rise in the business world was rapid, due not only to his acquisition of a thorough knowledge of lumbering in every department between the lumber camp and the sale of the finished product, but also due to his gifted natural business ability. His associates also say that Mr. Petty has always shown a peculiar judgment and discrimination in selecting opportunities, and for the past quarter of a century has been on the safe side of growing prosperity. The Olive-Sternberg Lumber Company as manufacturers of yellow pine lumber succeeded to Olive & Sternberg, who had their first mill at Beaumont, but subsequently established their milling headquarters in the town of Olive in eastern Texas, and conducted both manufacturing facilities and maintained extensive lumber yards in various sections of the state for the distribution of the product. The timber holdings of the company were finally exhausted in 1911, and though the company is still in existence it is no longer engaged in manufacturing. The firm was one of the most successful of the independent concerns in Eastern Texas, and its members all became wealthy through its operation. Since retiring from the lumber business Mr. Petty has interested himself in other fields as a capitalist and investor, and has been generally successful and has increased rather than dissipated his fortune.

Mr. Petty was one of a number of men who financed and built one of San Antonio's most splendid modern hotels, the Gunter, and is now one of the directors of the Gunter Hotel Company. He is also president of the Mission Wood and Coal Company, and vice president of the Campbell-Petty Lumber Company, both of which are prosperous concerns.

Fraternally Mr. Petty has always taken a keen interest in Masonry, and his affiliations are with the Blue Lodge, Pine Lodge No. 642 at Kountze, Texas, the Royal Arch Chapter No. 188 at Beaumont, the Knight Templar Commandery No. 7 at San Antonio, and the Ben-Hur Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Austin. He also belongs to the Hoo Hoos, to the Young Men's Christian Association, to the Texas Automobile Association, the San Antonio Automobile Club, the International Club, the San Antonio Country Club, and the Texas State Industrial Congress. His beautiful home is at 10 Tenth street, and he and his family have lived in San Antonio since 1901.

Miss Cordelia Dabney became the wife of Mr. Petty in 1887. She was born not far from San Antonio, on the Cibola, and was reared at LaGrange. Mr. and Mrs. Petty have three sons: Van A. Jr., Dabney E. and Olive S. Petty. Van A. Petty Jr. studied law in the law school of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, graduated with the degree Bachelor of Laws, and began practice at San Antonio in 1913; the other two sons are attending the Georgia School of Technology at Atlanta.

EMERY E. WISEMAN. As a young business man who has found and utilized his opportunities, Mr. Wiseman is an excellent representative of the progressive younger generation who have done so much and are doing so much for the development and great prosperity of west Texas. Mr. Wiseman is in the automobile business at El Paso, began here several years ago as a workman for others, and by his individual initiative and energy has built up a large and successful business of his own.

Emery E. Wiseman was born in Pittsburg, Kansas, January 21, 1887, a son of John A. and Elizabeth Wiseman. His early education was acquired in the public schools of his native state, and he finished with a course in the State Manual Training School. His first money was earned when he was about seventeen years of age, when he first obtained regular employment in the automobile business, and that introduction to automobiles has laid the course for his subsequent career. He established a business of his own at Pittsburg, his native city, and was getting along with fair prosperity until a fire destroyed his prospects. When he was about twenty-two years of age he moved to Oklahoma, and after a few months, during which he continued in the automobile business, he came to El Paso. Here he spent about two years as a salaried man, at the end of which time he formed a partnership with Mr. E. D. Anderson, under the firm name of Wiseman & Anderson. They bought their present plant, which had been established about a year previously, and they handle a full line of automobiles for sale, maintain a first class garage, and deal in automobile sundries and supplies, specializing in the Remy electric ignition device.

Mr. Wiseman was married at El Paso June 21, 1911, to Miss Madeline McPike a daughter of William McPike, of El Paso. They are both members of the Baptist church, and Mr. Wiseman is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In politics he is Independent, and has never manifested any activity in party matters, although regularly casting his vote as a good citizen. For diversion he is of course fond of automobiling and takes much interest in the theatre and in concerts and other high-class entertainment. He believes that for the young man who is willing to work there exists no better state in the Union than Texas. He himself has prospered here, and in addition to establishing a large and prosperous business, has also built himself a beautiful residence. He is a hustler, not only in his private business affairs, but in regard to the resources and future of El Paso, and this city has no more enthusiastic or loyal citizen than Mr. Wiseman.

JUDGE A. S. J. EYLAR. In the office of probate judge of El Paso county, Judge Eylar has shown an unquestionable devotion to the public welfare, and also that sort of efficient honesty that is everywhere needed in the public service. He has been judge and head of the county fiscal administration for the past six years. No county in the state now has a more progressive and economical administration than El Paso county. Every dollar collected in taxes is honestly and economically spent with a view to securing results. Only a few years ago, though there was a higher tax rate the county did not have a mile of paved road, nor a bridge, its highways being dirt, and its court house and jail being old and unsanitary. New business administrations came in with Judge Eylar, and since then the county has built upwards of seventy miles of paved roads, has put in steel bridges, concrete bridges, and planted shade trees along the roads. The county jail has been remodeled and enlarged, and a handsome addition has been built to the court house. While these and other improvements were being made the tax rate was being reduced, and though the county administration has determined upon a broad and comprehensive scheme of improved roads, an investment which will ultimately pay large dividends, El Paso county is at the present time in a more prosperous condition in its fiscal affairs than it has ever been before.

A. S. J. Eylar has spent about thirty years in Texas. He began his career here as a school teacher in the Rio Grande Valley, and has since attained to leadership as a member of the bar and as a public official in west Texas. He was born at Youngstown, Ohio, August 2, 1868, a son of John and Ann Eylar. He spent the first twenty-four years of his lifetime in his native state, and from the public schools entered the Ohio State University. A considerable interval separated his early schooling from his University career, and that time was spent in hard work during which he earned the means for his higher education. He worked his way through the University, and as soon as he had completed his work in university he came to Texas. This was in the year 1892, and he first located at Del Rio, where for three years he was engaged in teaching school. From there he moved to Dallas, where he remained three years and studied law and was admitted to the bar. He then located in El Paso and took up the active practice of law. He became successful as a lawyer, and soon entered actively into public affairs, and has spent most of his years during his residence in this city in some kind of public activity. He served as county attorney of El Paso county, and also as corporation judge of the city. In 1907 he was elected probate judge and has since held that important office.

Judge Eylar is affiliated with the Elks, the Moose, and the Woodmen of the World. His politics is Democratic, and he is one of the influential men in local party affairs. He is a member of the Texas State Bar Association, and is interested in all outdoor sports and amusements. It is Judge Eylar's opinion that the irrigated district of the Rio Grande Valley will some day be the finest part of the United States. Opportunities are unexcelled, the climate is ideal, and since everything under the sun will grow here, it remains only the lapse of a few years to prove in all verity his assertion. The judge is a practical advocate of every movement and enterprise for the development and upbuilding of his home city, and is a loyal friend of both El Paso and Texas.

WYCLIFFE J. BRYAN. One of the more successful young attorneys of El Paso is found in Wycliffe J. Bryan, who established himself in practice here in 1908, and has since continued to enjoy the patronage, good will and friendship of all who share in his acquaintance. He is a native son of Kentucky, born in Louisville on Christmas day, 1883, and he is the son of John D. and Mary (Bowman) Bryan, both natives of Kentucky.

John D. Bryan died in El Paso, Texas, on November 21, 1908, when he was seventy years old. He came west in July, 1884, first settling in Las Cruces, New Mexico, where he remained from 1884 to 1899, and in January, of the latter named year, moved to El Paso, where he passed his remaining days. He was a lawyer and a graduate of Central University, in Danville, Kentucky. During his residence in New Mexico he served as district judge of Lincoln and the two adjoining counties, and one time served as district attorney. He was a Democrat and a Roman Catholic and during his residence in El Paso was active and prominent in the political work of his party, as well as in all civic affairs. He was known for one of the leading attorneys of New Mexico and of Southwestern Texas. He gave service in the Civil war as a member of the Confederate army, and was with Generals Wheeler and Morgan. When General Morgan was captured, he also was taken prisoner, but during his incarceration made his escape by a bit of well carried out strategy, and swam the neck of the Chesapeake in so doing. He returned to Kentucky and while organizing a new company for service, news came of General Lee's surrender. Mr. Bryan was wounded in the battle of Stone River in Kentucky, and the marks of the wounds received there he carried throughout his life. He left the service with the rank of Colonel, after having served throughout the whole course of the war, with honor and distinction.

The wife and mother is now living upon her ranch in New Mexico. She was the mother of five children, two of whom are now living, John B. and Wycliffe J. of this review. The first named is a resident of New Mexico and is manager of the Francis E. Lester Company, a well known jewelry and curio house of the state. He was born in 1876 and was the eldest of the five, while Wycliffe J. was the youngest but one.

Wycliffe J. Bryan received his early educational training in the convent schools of Las Cruces, New Mexico, and continued his training in the Agricultural College of New Mexico, now known as the State College. He did not finish his work there, however, owing to the removal of the family to Texas. He entered work of an independent nature about that time, and his first position was with the W. G. Walz Company, Jobbers of Mexican goods, and he continued in their service from 1900 to 1907, when he resigned his position, went to Louisville, Kentucky, and entered the Jefferson School of Law, there to carry out a long cherished design to fit himself for the legal profession. He was graduated from that institution in May, 1908, with the degree of L. B., receiving a license to practice in Kentucky before his graduation took place, although he did not engage in practice. In August, 1908, he returned to Texas and locating in El Paso was the first to receive a written legal examination in this city. He engaged in practice almost immediately thereafter, and his work has been one of the greatest successes from first to last.

Mr. Bryan is a member of the Cactus Club, of which he is secretary, and is also a member of the County and State Bar Associations. He is a Democrat and has given a generous share in his time to the political and civic activities of his district. His citizenship is of an exceptional order, and commands the respect and esteem of all who know him. His success has come to him wholly as the result of his perseverance and ambition, and he secured his professional education unaided by family or friends, giving up a lucrative position in El Paso to prosecute his studies in Louisville. In this phase of his character, his Scotch and English ancestry make themselves felt in a most decided manner, his mother having contributed the English blood, and his father the Scotch. Mr. Bryan is a Roman Catholic, in which faith he was reared, and he is unmarried.

GEORGE PENCE has the distinction of being the second oldest real estate man in El Paso, where he has been active in that business since 1899. Prior to that time he had passed through a long period of railroad service with various roads and in various capacities, and in numerous states in the Union. He had begun independent life as a boy of tender years, advancing step by step from menial positions, until when he retired from the railroad service in the late eighties he was in an important position with the C. B. & Q. R. R. He has made his own way through life, without fear or favor, and such success as has come to him has been fought for all along the line. In addition to the real estate business he has been engaged in the manufacturing business in El Paso, and has prospered in that part of his enterprise as well as in real estate.

Born in Cass county, Illinois, on August 4, 1864, George Pence is the son of Samuel and Fannie (Paine) Pence, both born in the state of Ohio. The father moved to Illinois in 1859, settling in the state in its pioneer days, and locating in Peoria where he was occupied as a farmer. He later engaged in the practice of law, and was in early life a personal and intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln. He has experienced a moderate success, and is now living in Quatman, Missouri. He is a Republican and a member of the Methodist church. The mother married her husband in Ohio, where she was born, and moved to Illinois in company with him. She died in 1876 at the age of forty. Eleven children were born to them, seven of that number being yet alive.

George Pence was the fifth child of his parents. He received his education in attendance at the district schools during the winter months, and later received some training in the schools of Montgomery county, in Iowa, where the family moved in 1870. He was only eleven years old when he started out in life on his own initiative, a circumstance due no doubt to the early death of his mother. He worked for a year on a farm, receiving his board and clothes in return for his long hours of daily service, and during his next year received a salary of $2.50 a month in addition to his keep. After the second year he left the farm and secured work with the C. B. & Q. R. R. at Creston, Iowa, beginning in a minor position and advancing year by year for a period of twelve years. When he gave up his service there he was enjoying the favor of his employers as a conductor on the line. In 1889 he came to Texas for the first time, and in Clybourne, Texas, worked for the Santa Fe road for a time, and then removed to El Paso. Here he became associated again with the Santa Fe, and for the past fifteen years has been a permanent resident of the city. It may be mentioned in passing that he was the original exploiter of the idea of head-on railroad collision exhibitions, and for a year he was engaged in the work, putting on these spectacular exhibitions wherever they were required. In 1899 Mr. Pence engaged in the real estate business, and has enjoyed a splendid success in that enterprise. He has been very active in his field of work, and has been one of the most enterprising and progressive men of the city. In addition to his real estate business, he has carried on for some time the manufacture of a Mexican Herb Hair Tonic, which is finding a ready market wherever it is introduced, and is making profits for its manufacturer steadily. He also owns a small but productive farm in El Paso county, which adds something to his capital from year to year. His residence is located at No. 2201 Texas street, where he also has his office.

On October 4, 1894, Mr. Pence was married to Miss Amy Dowl, and to them have been born four children, three of whom are yet living as follows: George, Manila and Franklin, all living at home.

Mr. Pence is a member of the Knights of Pythias, of Chicago, Illinois, but maintains no other fraternal relations. His political activities are with the Republican party, but he is not active in the work beyond the demands of good citizenship, in which he by no means falls short. He has the best interests of El Paso at heart at all times, and in his business has been the means of inducing a greater growth and development in the city.

JOSEPH J. COCKE. Probably no resident of the Lower Rio Grande valley has a more definite knowledge of its land values and boundaries than Joseph J. Cocke, of Brownsville, who while following his profession of a civil engineer surveyed a large part of the rich alluvial prairie land of Southern Texas, and became prominently identified with development and growth.

Born, in 1841, in King William county, Virginia, Mr. Cocke received his elementary education in the local schools of his neighborhood, and in Roanoke county was fitted for the University of Virginia. The breaking out of the Civil War prevented his entering that institution, and in May, 1861, he enlisted in a regiment later known as the Fifty-Ninth Virginia Volunteer Infantry, which formed a part of General Wise's Legion. He was afterwards detached from that regiment, and in the latter part of the winter of 1861 and 1862 employed as a drill-master in the Peninsular country of Virginia. In the spring of 1862 Mr. Cocke joined the Second Company of the famous Richmond Howitzers, and was subsequently actively engaged as an artilleryman during the remainder of the conflict. With his command, Mr. Cocke participated in the battles of Williamsburg, Seven Pines, Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, and other historic battles of his native state. He was twice seriously wounded by bullets; first at Fredericksburg, and again at Spottsylvania. With the remnant of nine thousand men in his command, he was present at the surrender at Appomattox.

After returning home from the field of conflict, Mr. Cocke remained in Virginia three years, and then, in 1868, came to Texas, locating first in Lavaca county, and in 1870 went to DeWitt and there taught school for two and one half years. He was also appointed deputy county clerk, and later deputy sheriff, deputy clerk, and deputy surveyor, and still later elected county and district clerk and superintendent of schools. In 1877 he came to Cameron county, where he has since lived, his home being in Brownsville. He was for several years state land agent for the state of Texas, surveying lands from the New Mexico line to the mouth of the Rio Grande. Very soon after his arrival he was made assistant county surveyor, and a short time later was elected county surveyor, a capacity in which he served efficiently for seven years. During that time, in 1884, Mr. Cocke made one of the best and most accurate maps of Cameron county that has ever been created.

The pioneer civil engineer and surveyor of the Lower Rio Grande Valley, Mr. Cocke was the promoter of various projects that have since resulted in some of the most important developments of this section of the country. He was associated with Lieutenant Chatfield, of the United States Army, in making preliminary surveys for irrigation works in Cameron and Hidalgo counties, which, although failing of consummation at that time, has since resulted in the development of the large tracts of irrigated lands in the Lower Rio Grande valley.

As the locating engineer, Mr. Cocke, in the early nineties, made a complete survey for a proposed railway line from Corpus Christi to Brownsville. That project, also, fell through, but the agitation caused therefrom materialized, in 1904, in the form of the Saint Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railroad, extending from Houston to Brownsville. He was one time collector of customs under Cleveland, during the latter's first term as President of the United States.

Fraternally Mr. Cocke is prominent in Masonic circles, being a member of Rio Grande Lodge, No. 81, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; of Rio Grande Chapter, No. 317, Royal Arch Masons; of Council No. 257, Royal and Select Masters; and of Brownsville Commandery, Knights Templar.

Mr. Cocke married Miss Mary Pleasants, of De Witt county, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Anita; Joseph J. Jr.; Elizabeth; and Virginia.

U. S. GOEN. By birth and training a son of the West, U. S. Goen belongs to a family that has been identified with the history of Texas for many years, its members always being connected with the best interests of their several communities, and rising to positions of prominence in business and professional life. Mr. Goen is worthily maintaining the family reputation along these lines, and today is known as one of the leading members of the legal profession of El Paso county, where he has been engaged in general practice since 1901. His connection with a number of cases of more than ordinary importance has made him more or less a familiar figure in the courts, and his reputation in his profession and the general public is that of an able, astute and thoroughly learned legist. Mr. Goen was born at Moody, McLennan county, Texas, November 10, 1876, and is a son of David Nelson and Sarah Rebecca (Wood) Goen.

David Nelson Goen was born in Indiana, and was thirteen years of age when he accompanied his parents to Texas in 1857, the trip being made overland from the Hoosier State. The family settled in McLennan county, where Mr. Goen soon began to receive training in ranching and farming, occupations which he adopted as his life work, and in which he was engaged throughout his active career. He was uniformly successful in his operations, was known as a good and public-spirited citizen, and at the time of his death, February 13, 1886, left a wide circle of friends to mourn his loss. His wife, Sarah Rebecca Wood, was born in McLennan county, Texas, on the present site of the town of Moody, grew up and was married there, and after the death of her husband came to El Paso, where she still makes her home with her eldest son, U. S. Goen, who is the only survivor of a family of six children.

U. S. Goen received his early education in the public schools of the town of Moody, and was reared to the work of the farm and the ranch. As a youth, however, he developed an inclination for a professional career, and, deciding upon the law as his life work, became a student in the law department of the University of Texas. Graduating from that institution in 1901, with his degree, he immediately established himself in practice in El Paso, which has since been the scene of his activities. His subsequent labors have resulted in the accumulation of a large and representative professional business which includes some of the leading interests of this section of the Southwest. He maintains well appointed offices at No. 306 Mills building, and is widely known in professional circles. Ever faithful to the unwritten ethics of his calling and to the interests of his clients, he belongs to that class of attorneys who have given El Paso such a high standing in this connection, and his activities as a citizen give him prestige among those who have recognized the responsibilities demanded of a municipality's influential men. He is a Republican in his political views, but has sought no other office than that of United States assistant attorney of his district, from which he resigned June 1, 1913.

Mr. Goen is single and lives with his mother in El Paso. In addition to the State Bar Association, he belongs to the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has manifested his fondness for all manner of amusements, and his wide circle of friends testify eloquently to his popularity in the city that he firmly believes will be the leader of Texas municipalities within a few years.

THE LORETTINES IN EL PASO (St. Joseph's Academy). In this history of the great state of Texas much space is given in the different volumes to the work and institutions of the Catholic church, and the following interesting article sketches the rise and development of a very important branch of the church in El Paso, familiarly known in that city as St. Joseph's Academy.

Striking, indeed, would seem the contrast if some honest pioneer settler, who some twenty years ago looked with reverent eye upon the first Catholic institution of learning in the city of El Paso, could now pass by and behold the array of substantial school buildings, the spacious and even stately new academies which tower in the midst and proclaim the rapid advancement made by that body of religious teachers called the Loretines, or Sisters of Loretto at the foot of the cross.

Like the mustard seed that grew into a great tree, spreading itself like the mighty oak of the forest, Loretto has built itself up here as in so many pioneer hamlets of the west; for instance, Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, where the sisters accomplished marvelous results, which now place them in the van of religious instructors both east and west. They prospered beyond all human expectations in those distant and at the same time trying missions.

In September, 1892, the community of San Elziario, Texas, was transferred to El Paso; its members numbered only five, Sister Magdalen being the local superior. The present old building, St. Joseph's Academy, which was purchased from the Rt. Rev. Bishop Bourgade, of Santa Fe, and which had previously been occupied by the Sisters of Mercy, served for the first two years as a boarding and select day school. The building and surroundings were remodeled and conditions gradually improved. The boarders numbered eighteen, the day pupils increased rapidly, and at the end of the first month there were between twenty and thirty music pupils.

At this period there was only one Catholic church in El Paso, namely, the present Holy Family Chapel. The following October, the Jesuit fathers opened a parochial school, in which five sisters were employed as teachers. The enrollment of pupils for the first month numbered over three hundred. The first commencement exercises of St. Joseph's Academy took place in June, 1894. Sub-graduating orders were conferred on Mrs. Laura Doyle and Gracie Lawrence.

In June, 1895, Sister Magdalen was appointed superior of Loretto Academy at Las Vegas, New Mexico, and Mother Laurentia of said community replaced her here. Her term of office lasted only one year, she having been called to Loretto, Kentucky, to fill a vacancy in the general, or governing, council of the society, a position which she still holds. Her office of local superior of the El Paso community was filled by Sister Barbara, formerly directress of the St. Kevin's School at St. Louis. It was during her term of office, which lasted eleven years, that the Saint Mary's Parochial School was opened. Its pupils at present number over three hundred, and compete with, if not surpass, those of any grammar grade school in the city. A little later St. Ignatius school was opened. This school, like that of the Sacred Heart, is for the Mexican children.

When Mother Barbara took charge of the work here it was conducted in the original two-story brick building on North El Paso street. She saw it grow, and its capacity more than doubled by the erection of the present handsome three-story brick structure directly adjoining the old school. On July 29, 1907, Mother Barbara received orders to go as local superior to Loretto Convent, Santa Fe, New Mexico, and Mother M. Victor, superior of St. Anthony's school, Flagstaff, Arizona, filled the vacancy. The good seed sown by her predecessors Mother M. Victor nurtured with loving care during her brief three years' sojourn in El Paso, at the expiration of which she was transferred to Loretta Academy, Las Cruces, New Mexico, and Mother Albertina, was appointed superior of the St. Joseph's Academy, which community she continues to govern.

Under the prudent management and executive abilities of Mother Albertina, the primitive adobe convent of the above place was converted into the magnificent edifice, Loretto Academy, the most beautiful and substantial structure in Las Cruces today. The same abilities which were employed in the upbuilding of the Loretto Academy has since been directed to the improvement and welfare of St. Joseph's Academy of El Paso. In September, 1912, under the direction of Mother Albertina, another parochial school was opened, namely, the Guardian Angels'. The enrollment of pupils the first year was ninety-five.

Thus the Loretines, like the oak silently growing in the forest, have surmounted every obstacle that beset the initiation of their work, and have solidly and permanently established their institution in the "Pass City." The number of sisters has now increased to twenty-seven, and there are yearly demands for more teachers made to the central council. From its birthplace among the verdant hills of Kentucky, where its mother house nestles, the star of Loretto has extended its influence and beneficence under the flag of the Lone Star state. Since its foundation here, twenty-one years ago, Loretto has been the beacon light to many young women and men of El Paso, and the surrounding countries; pointing out, where peace, happiness and a career of usefulness may be found. These religious schools with their beneficent influences, by their example and their teaching, instil virtue into the hearts of their young charges, thus forming them into be useful members of the Republic on whose soil the Loretines were the first to establish a community of American sisters. At the present writing these sisters conduct a select day school and four parochial schools in the city of El Paso. The enrollment of pupils for the year 1914, was over eleven hundred. Within a short time the inmates of St. Joseph's will see a unique structure reared on the corner of Arizona and St. Vrain streets. The conditions are such now that a commodious building and grounds have become a necessity.

Mother Albertina, the mother superior, at St. Joseph's Academy, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, of Irish parentage. She received her education in a convent in St. Louis, and her first mission was at St. Joseph's Academy in El Paso, where she devoted five and a half years as a teacher and sister. From here she was sent to Las Cruces, New Mexico, becoming superior of the Loretto Academy, and the eleven years of her life and work there have as their monument the splendid institution which has already been briefly mentioned. In 1910 she returned to El Paso to take charge of St. Joseph's Academy, as the local superior. Mother Albertina is a woman dearly beloved by all the community, and has friends in all classes and creeds.

RUFUS B. DANIEL. It is a distinctive branch of legal and fiscal business to which Mr. Daniel has devoted himself in El Paso during the past seven years. Mr. Daniel is thoroughly experienced in the complicated science of railway tariffs, and has spent a number of years, before engaging in the practice of law, in the railway statistical service. In his present offices in the Mills Building at El Paso, Mr. Daniel, in addition to his law practice, conducts a claim adjusting business, the nature of which is briefly stated as consisting in the comparing of freight bills with the published freight rates in effect at the time of shipment, with a view to securing the payment of the differences in favor of the shipper. In this work Mr. Daniel has recovered for his clients many thousands of dollars. The work has brought him in contact with the Inter-State Commerce Commission, and since 1908 his practice has been nearly exclusively before that Commission. He has a clientele all over Texas, and his business has become a very important service to the merchants and to all classes of business men who use the railway freight service.

Rufus B. Daniel was born in Chambers county, Alabama, December 8, 1883, a son, and the oldest of three children born to Rev. A. M. Daniel and Fannie E. (Golden) Daniel of Chambers county, Alabama. The mother died on December 8, 1894, on her son's eleventh birthday. The father, a native of Georgia, moved to Alabama when a youth, was educated for the ministry, and devoted his life to the profession. He came to Texas in 1893 and now makes his home at Alto, being a member of the Texas Conference in the Methodist church.

Rufus B. Daniel attained his education in the public schools of this state, was a student in the high school at Giddings up to the age of sixteen. He lived on a farm while a boy, his father being absent much of the time on his ministerial duties. Since the age of twelve he has been earning his own way, and the first position at which he earned a regular salary was in a grocery store at Giddings when he had a salary of $3.00 per week. When seventeen he went to Houston and became a clerk in the wholesale house of Kessler & Dixon. During that work he also attended night school in order to learn accounting methods. After a year he was given an office position with the firm with which he continued until 1903. Mr. Daniel has exceptional talent in the handling of complicated figures and statistical analyses, and after leaving the wholesale house of Kessler & Dixon he became statistician for the Sunset Route in Houston. In 1905 he was transferred in the same service to El Paso, and in July, 1906, became statistician for the El Paso & Southwestern Railway.

Mr. Daniel resigned his position in the railway service in July, 1907, and then took up the study of interstate commerce law, and his time since then has been devoted to transportation problems in the field of rates and particularly rate adjustment. The first notable case in which he was employed was in early 1909, when he secured a reduction in the interstate switching rate for El Paso from $5.00 to $3.00 per car. This has since saved to the merchants of El Paso many thousands of dollars. Mr. Daniel's first appearance in Washington before the Interstate Commerce Commission was in an oral argument before the Commission in May, 1911, and since that date he has appeared in so many oral arguments, that he feels at home in Washington. Since 1909 he has applied himself to general law, and passed the examinations and is now a member of the Texas bar.

In politics Mr. Daniel is a Democrat, and is a Past Grand of the El Paso Lodge No. 284, I. O. O. F. He also has membership in the Railway Clerks' Association and belongs to the Methodist church. He was married in Galveston, Texas, March 29, 1905, to Miss Edna M. Munger, daughter of D. K. Munger. Mrs. Daniel, in 1904, graduated in the art department from the Chapel Hill College of Texas. They are the parents of three children: Gladys M., D. K. and Anna Laurie. Their home is at 1320 Wright avenue. Mr. Daniel's chief diversion from the absorbing duties of his profession and business is his violin, and he is accomplished as a performer, and takes his finest pleasure in music.

RICHARD W. KNOBLANCH. One of the young and native sons of Texas who with undaunted courage has entered boldly upon the conquest for success in life is Richard W. Knoblanck, a druggist at El Paso, who, though he has been engaged in business barely a decade, has so employed his abilities and improved his opportunities that he has increased his beginning capital ten-fold and today is conducting two of the prospering pharmacies of this city. In his veins flows worthy German blood and in his brief business career he has given ample proof that he has inherited the energy, pluck and thrift universally held as characteristic of the nationality of his forebears.

Mr. Knoblanck was born in Waco, Texas, December 25, 1879, the youngest of four children that came to Charles F. and Minnie (Lehman) Knoblanck. Both his father and mother were natives of Germany. The former emigrated from the Fatherland along in the early '60s and on coming to this country settled at Galveston, Texas, where he followed the mercantile business for a number of years and was moderately successful. He died in 1886. Charles F. Knoblanck was one of thousands of his countrymen that fought under the Union flag during the Civil war. He wedded Minnie Lehman, who had come to America in 1860, when fourteen years of age. She survives her husband and now resides at El Paso.

Richard W. received a public school education and was graduated from the high school at Bryan, Texas, in 1896. At the age of sixteen he began to learn the drug trade, acquiring a practical knowledge of the profession at Bryan, where he was an employe in a drug store until 1902. He engaged in the drug business at San Antonio, Texas, on his own account in 1903 and in 1904 became a licensed pharmacist. After three years at San Antonio he removed to El Paso, his business identification in the latter city dating from 1906 to the present time. He began with a capital of less than $2,000, has increased it ten-fold and now is the proprietor of two of the leading drug stores of El Paso, one located at 300 Mesa avenue and the other at the corner of Hueco and Copia streets. This accomplishment bespeaks vim and exceptional business acumen on the part of Mr. Knoblanck and a large capacity for untiring and persevering effort. He holds his present high business standing by consequence of merit. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, of the fraternal order of Pretorians, and is a Democrat in politics.

The marriage of Mr. Knoblanck occurred at El Paso, Texas, July 15, 1910, when Miss Sudyne M. Davisson, a native of Texas and a daughter of W. S. Davisson, became his wife. Two children have blessed their union, Hugo Springer Knoblanck, born at El Paso September 15, 1911, and Lois, born January 9, 1914.

HENRY ROSENBERG. The late Henry Rosenberg, a well-known philanthropist of Galveston, was a man who was widely known throughout the state by reason of his identification with big business interests, as well as because of his private enterprises. No more successful merchant ever lived in Southern Texas, and as a financier he had a leading place in banking circles. He was one who lived worthily, and in all the relations of life conducted himself in a manner that entitled him to the esteem and high regard that was universally his.

Henry Rosenberg was born in Bilen, Glarus Canton, Switzerland, on June 22, 1824. He came of industrious and pious parents, who, though of limited circumstances, were of a family bearing authentic records stretching back over a period of seven hundred years, and proving the family to have been of noble Roman origin, known by the name of Ursini, or Orsini. An early ancestor, one Vithillus Ursini, emigrated from Rome to Corinthia, known as the Crown Land of the Austrian Empire, in the year 1150, and there founded the city of Rosenberg, Bohemia, where the family is still resident. So much for the ancestry of the man.

Henry Rosenberg's educational advantages were limited to the local schools of the period, and he was yet a very young man when he was apprenticed to learn the trade of fabric printing, at which he worked steadily, though perhaps impatiently, until his eighteenth year. His employers had not been slow to note his superior business qualifications, and as soon as they thought he was old enough they transferred him to their mercantile establishment at Glarus. There he made the acquaintance of his employer's son, John Hessley, then a resident of America, and at his invitation, the young man came to Galveston, Texas, and entered the employ of young Hessley. This was in the year 1843, and as he was in utter ignorance of the English language, he went to work of nights to study systematically the tongue of his new country. Constant application brought steady progress, and so well did he prosper in business that at the end of three years he bought out his employer's interest and for thirty years thereafter continued in active business. As a result of his economy, foresight and utter integrity, Mr. Rosenberg came to be the foremost merchant in the state. His house, which for a good many years controlled the dry goods trade of Southern Texas, grew constantly in popular confidence by reason of his faithful adherence to high principles and general business rectitude. He was a consistent Christian in business as well as in all the other relations of life, and he conferred material benefit of a lasting order on the city and state of his adoption.

In 1874 Mr. Rosenberg founded the Rosenberg Bank, which rapidly increased to such proportions as to claim a generous measure of his time. He was organizer, director and president for the years between 1875-8 of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railroad Company, and during the term of his presidency the first fifty miles of road were built. He was also connected with the Galveston Wharf Company, and was a director of the company for some time, also serving for three years as vice president of it.

Although steadily refusing nominations to public office he was in 1871-2 and again in 1885-87 an active member of the Board of Aldermen of Galveston, where he performed excellent work in the interests of the city. He was exact and positive in his opinions, giving to his expressions at all times the force of unquestionable authority and well-digested experience, so that when he offered an opinion, it was received gladly.

Notwithstanding the accumulation of vast sums, he never for a moment relaxed his business activity, nor the firm requirement of the strictest accountability of subordinates for the performance of required duties, and he performed his own allotted tasks with the same regularity and thoroughness that he demanded in others.

For more than thirty years a vestryman in Trinity and Grace Episcopal churches, his service was one that could not be adequately estimated in its value to his fellows.

Everywhere in the city of Galveston today are to be seen evidences of Mr. Rosenberg's munificent public spirit in the splendid monuments erected for the furthering of the highest ideals of thought and action. Perhaps it is not too much to say that no city in America has been the recipient of so much well-directed philanthropy as Galveston through the public gifts of this generous-minded man.

In 1888 he gave to Galveston the Rosenberg Free School at a cost of $80,000, and he also assisted in building Eaton Memorial Chapel of Trinity Episcopal Church. Nearly two-thirds of his vast fortune was bequeathed in his will to educational and charitable purposes, most of it to be expended in the city of Galveston. Among the bequests named were the following: To the Protestant Orphans' Home, $30,000; Grace Church, $30,000; Woman's Home, $50,000; Y. M. C. A., $65,000; Heroes' Monument $50,000, and seventeen public drinking fountains for man and beasts, $30,000. In his native town in Switzerland he paid for the modernizing of the church in which he was baptized, and gave $80,000 for public charities and improvements.

The city of Galveston was made residuary legatee of the estate, about $500,000 being devoted to the founding and maintenance of a free circulating library, with annual lecture courses.

In carrying out the provisions of his will, the widow of Mr. Rosenberg has shown untiring diligence, coupled with an artistic instinct which has greatly augmented the far-reaching value of his beneficence.

Probably the most imposing creation of Mr. Rosenberg's generosity in Galveston is the famous battle monument commemorating Texas' struggle for independence. It is the work of the late Louis Amaties of Washington, D. C., and consists of a lofty shaft of granite surmounted by a heroic figure of Victory, with extended arms bearing a laurel wreath. Grouped at the base of the shaft are figures representing the arts of peace, while the faces of the die contain bas-reliefs in bronze, commemorative of the four battles of the Texas revolution. On the base is the following inscription: "A Tribute from Henry Rosenberg To the Heroes of the Texas Revolution of 1836." The work is further adorned with medallions of Henry Rosenberg.

SEA WALL AND BOULEVARD,
GALVESTON, TEXAS

TEXAS HEROES' MONUMENT, GALVESTON, TEXAS
Gift of Henry Rosenberg

RESIDENCE OF MRS. MOLLIE R. MACGILL ROSENBERG Widow of Henry Rosenberg, Galveston, Texas

General Sam Houston and S. F. Austin, and busts of such other notable heroes of that time as Governor Henry Smith, Pres. David G. Burnet, Lamar, Sherman, Travis, Creeckett, Johnson, Bonham, Hockley, Neill, Rusk, Burleson, Bowie, Milan, "Deaf" Smith, Fannin, Karnes and DeZavella. This monument is undoubtedly the most beautiful in the southern states, and very properly occupies a conspicuous spot on the principal residence street of the city of Galveston.

Mr. Rosenberg was twice married. In 1851 he married Petitia Cooper, a native of the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia. She died in 1888. On November 13, 1889, he married Mollie Ragan Macgill of Hagerstown, Maryland, a descendant of early Scotch colonists of Maryland, and the daughter of a well-known surgeon of the Confederate army.

The death of Mr. Rosenberg took place on May 12, 1893, and his widow survives him. They had no children. It is estimated that his fortune reached the $1,200,000 mark, more than half of which went to charities and benevolences of various orders, something like $450,000 being the portion of his widow and surviving relatives. It is significant of the man that in naming his beneficiaries he did not omit the Ladies' Aid Society of the German Lutheran Church of Dallas, to which he bequeathed the tidy sum of $10,000.

In 1875 Mr. Rosenberg became Swiss Consul, and he held that office from then until the time of his death.

Few men in the state rose higher in the esteem and genuine regard of the public than did he. An old and prominent citizen of Galveston said of him: "Henry Rosenberg was one of the best men I ever knew. He was pure, truthful, upright and just. He was strict in business and demanded honesty in others. He was cordial and companionable, always full of good nature in his social life. In ordinary business relations he was exact and just, but impatient and aggressive when subjected to unfair, unjust or unreasonable treatment or demands from others." It was thus that he was regarded by those who knew him best, and there are none in Galveston today who do not regard him as a great public benefactor and a man entitled to the genuine respect and esteem of all.

JAMES I. McCULLOUGH. One of the men of enterprise who have in recent years been attracted to El Paso as the center of the great mining industry of the southwest, Mr. McCullough spent a number of years as a traveling salesman in the middle west, and about two years ago located in El Paso to become the leading spirit in the reorganization of an old mining property in the Organ Mountains of New Mexico. Due to his initiative and energy in promoting and developing this property he has made it one of the profitable producers of the southwest, and has himself taken leading rank among the mining men of El Paso and vicinity.

James I. McCullough was born in Jefferson county, Iowa, April 5, 1866. His father was John E. McCullough, a native of Ohio, and his mother was Ellen E. Turner, who was born in Iowa, in 1841. The father's parents moved out to Iowa in 1844. He was born in 1841 and in 1873 located in Kansas. Both parents are now living and enjoying the comforts of a well spent life at Belleville, Kansas. There were four children in the family, of whom James I. was the third.

He was reared from the age of seven in the state of Kansas, and up to his sixteenth year attended the common schools of that state. In 1882 he began life for himself, and his first occupation was as teacher, teaching in the state of Kansas for three terms. He found a better field for his enterprise in the merchandise business, and he worked as a clerk at Belleville and by 1887 was ready to go into business for himself. He had a store at Belleville, Kansas, until the fall of 1889, but then gave up that business to take a place as traveling salesman, representing a dry goods company of St.

Joseph, Missouri, and later of Kansas City, Missouri. As a traveling and general salesman he remained on the road for sixteen years, covering a great scope of territory throughout the Mississippi Valley, and during that time enjoyed a successful business and gained the acquaintance and the knowledge of conditions which led to his present career. On the first of January, 1911, he became a permanent resident of El Paso, and soon afterward entered actively into the mining business. He reorganized the Stephen-Bennett Mines in the Organ Mountains of Donana county, New Mexico. These mines were discovered as far back as 1849, and have been worked more or less irregularly during the succeeding years. Mr. McCullough incorporated the company which has now taken hold of the mines and is pushing the work on a very successful scale. He is also secretary of the Memphis Mining Company.

Politically Mr. McCullough is a Republican, and is affiliated with Masonry both in the York and Scottish Rite, having attained thirty-two degrees, and being a member of the Knights Templar Commandery and Shriner. He is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen, the El Paso Chamber of Commerce, and he and his family worship in the Methodist church.

Mr. McCullough is firmly convinced that El Paso, being at the heart of the great mining district, not only of New Mexico and adjacent states, but also of a large portion of Old Mexico, is destined to be one of the greatest cities of the entire west.

JOHN LOGAN CAMPBELL. For a quarter of a century Mr. Campbell has been one of the leading civil and railway engineers of El Paso. He was first of his profession to locate in the city permanently, and has had a long and progressive career with many responsibilities and promotions, and for a number of years has been one of the principles in the engineering department of the El Paso & Southwestern Railway.

John Logan Campbell was born in Perry county, Illinois, November 30, 1863, he and a twin brother being the youngest in a family of nine children. The parents of this family were Hugh and Jane (Brown) Campbell, both of whom were natives of South Carolina. The paternal ancestry was Scotch, having been established in this country several generations back. The father went to southern Illinois about 1833, when a child, and followed farming there during his active career and died in 1871 at the age of fifty-four. The mother died in 1897 at the age of seventy-four.

John Logan Campbell received his early education in the public schools of Southern Illinois, in the Ewing College of Franklin county, Illinois, and completed his studies in the Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio. His school days were ended when he was about twenty years of age, and his early life was spent on a farm. After leaving school he took up the study and practice of civil engineering, and when well equipped for his profession came to El Paso in 1888. In 1890 he was made city engineer of El Paso, and during the next four years planned and supervised practically all the important improvements made in the city. The first two years of his residence here were spent in mining and land surveying. He then took up private practice and railroad construction work, and in 1904 was made chief of the engineering department of the El Paso & Southwestern Railway. From 1900 to 1904 he was chief engineer for the Rock Island Lines between St. Louis and Kansas City. He also served a time as chief engineer of location and construction for the El Paso & Northeastern Railway, and from 1894 to 1898 was chief engineer of the Rio Grande Dam & Irrigation Company, predecessor of the government reclamation service in the Rio Grande Valley. He was chief engineer for the El Paso and Northeastern from 1906-1907, then spent four years in St. Louis, as representative of the Rock Island Lines, after which time he returned to El Paso and has since been with the engineering department of the El Paso & South-western.

Mr. Campbell is a member of the American Society of civil engineers, of the Engineers Club of St. Louis, and of the American Railway Engineering Association. He is a strong supporter of the principles of the prohibitionist party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has been honored with all the chairs of this lodge. He is an elder in the Presbyterian church.

In southern Illinois in May, 1888, Mr. Campbell married Miss Elizabeth Rule, daughter of Matthew Rule, and a native of Illinois. The Rule family originated in the north of Ireland and the first ancestors came to America about a century ago. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are: Marion, wife of H. H. Schutz of Las Lunas, New Mexico; Logan, a graduate of the Pennsylvania Military College, and Doyle, now in the Pennsylvania Military College, in his junior year. Mr. Campbell has his own home at 917 East Rio Grande street.

JAMES CLIFFORD. One of the reasons why the state of Texas has forged ahead in the sisterhood of states is because she possesses so many wide awake, public spirited business men, who are not only ambitious as to their personal affairs, but who also are anxious to see their great state prosperous. Among the men who have ever been generous of their time when the welfare of the state has been in the balance, is James Clifford of El Paso, Texas. Realizing that to an agricultural country or to any country where the population is scattered, good roads are of inestimable benefit, he has devoted much of his time to this cause and to urging upon the farmers the necessity of their co-operation in the movement.

James Clifford is a native of Ireland, where he was born on the 20th of April, 1861. Here he spent his youth and received a good education. He first attended private schools and then entered a high school in Dublin from which he was graduated. After leaving this school he was offered a position as monitor in the school and this position brought him the first money he ever earned. When he was nineteen years of age he determined to come to the United States and so giving up his position in the school he set sail. He landed in New York but came west and settled in Colorado where he remained until March, 1883. During this time he was employed in railroad work and after he came to El Paso, in 1883, he followed this same work for a time, but finally he branched out into the cattle business, although he still gave part of his time to railroading. In 1887 he gave up the latter business entirely to form a partnership with his brother, Timothy E. Clifford. The two brothers established the mercantile firm of Clifford Brothers at Fort Hancock, Texas, and were successful as merchants, so successful, indeed, that they felt justified in trying their fortune in a larger place and so removed to El Paso, in May, 1902. Here the present business was established and Mr. Clifford is known as one of the leading merchants of the city. His store has a fifty-foot front and he carries a general line of merchandise, such as is found in the department stores of larger cities, such as dry goods, groceries and so forth. As a merchant, his honesty and fairness have won him the esteem of his associates in the business world and the unflinching courtesy with which his customers are treated added to the excellent stock of goods which he carries have won him a large patronage. In addition to his store Mr. Clifford has many interests, such as investments in land, and his time is considerably occupied with these matters.

Mr. Clifford has always been active in a political way, being one of the fighting force of the Democratic party. He was a member of the city council for seven years, but it is as one of the county commissioners that he is best known to the general public. He is now serving his second term on this board and his battle-cry is for good roads. He has a group of progressive men on the board with him and led by his enthusiasm and good common sense these commissioners are accomplishing great things for the cause of better transportation in this section of the state. Mr. Clifford is eager to let others know of these advantages of the state of Texas and is always ready to answer any inquiries that anyone has to make as regards the resources of this great section of the Union. As a member of the chamber of commerce he has worked steadily for the industrial growth of the city.

Mr. Clifford is not married and is a member of the Roman Catholic church, being a faithful communicant and loyal worker in the same. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and has filled the office of first grand knight for two terms, now being a trustee of the order.

HON. WALTER E. HUNNICUTT, judge of the county court of Falls county, is a worthy representative of the dignity and greatness of the state in the domain of the law which he has honored for a quarter of a century. A man of comprehensive legal learning and broad experience, his services upon the bench have ever been characterized by high ideals of the duties and responsibilities of his judicial office, and his decisions, although always just, have been tempered by a sympathy which springs from a keen insight into human nature. Judge Hunnicutt is a native of the county which he so ably represents, having been born at Blue Ridge, June 11, 1865, a son of Winfield Scott and Lucinda (Smith) Hunnicutt.

Winfield S. Hunnicutt was born in Giles county, Tennessee, in 1829, and there as a young man was largely engaged in surveying. About the time he reached his majority he came to Falls county, Texas, and in this locality continued to devote his attention to farming and stock raising during the remainder of his life. He was a man of industry and integrity, accumulated a goodly share of this world's goods, and when he died, in 1908, his community lost a public-spirited citizen and one who had many friends. Mr. Hunnicutt was married to Miss Lucinda Smith, who was born in Lincoln county, Tennessee, in 1832, and she accompanied her parents to Falls county about the year 1849. She still survives her husband and resides on the old homestead place at Blue Ridge. Mr. and Mrs. Hunnicutt were the parents of seventeen children, as follows: Emma, who is now Mrs. Davis and makes her home at Brookhaven, Lincoln county, Mississippi; Martha, who is now Mrs. Barnes and makes her home at Blue Ridge, Texas; William W., a resident of Marlin; Robert S., also of this city; Hiram T., who is also deceased; Isaac M., who lives at Kosse, Limestone county, Texas; Edward and Joanna, who are both deceased; Winfield S., who lives at Blue Ridge; Bessie, who is now Mrs. Johnson and makes her home at Raroe, Oklahoma; Hon. Walter E., of this review; Alice, who is single and makes her home with her mother at Blue Ridge; Garnet, who is now Mrs. Massingale and lives in Oklahoma; Fannie, who is a teacher in the public schools and is single; Orcantha F., who lives at Blue Ridge, and Pearl, who is now Mrs. Agan and lives at Marlin.

Walter E. Hunnicutt was given excellent educational advantages in his youth, attending the public schools of Blue Ridge and Georgetown and then taking a course in Kosse College, from which he was graduated at the age of twenty years. From that time he was engaged in farming four years, when, having fully decided upon the profession which he was to follow as his life work, he entered the office of Goodrich & Clarkson, and later studied law under the preceptorship of W. A. Kincaid, of Groesbeck, Limestone county. In 1889 Mr. Hunnicutt was admitted to the bar at Marlin, and at once engaged in practice here, continuing in a private capacity until being elected district clerk in 1892, a position which he filled acceptably for two years. He then returned to his practice, in which he was engaged until 1898, in which year he was first honored with judicial office, being elected county judge of Falls county and serving in that position until 1904. He then returned to his practice for another four years, and in 1908 was again elected county judge and has continued to serve in that capacity to the present time. At the bar and as a trial lawyer, Judge Hunnicutt was forceful, logical and convincing, although always courteous, was never a quibbler over nonessential points, and prepared his cases with patience, faithfulness and ability, so that he was given as much practice as he cared to handle. His judicial record evidences that he has exhibited in his judicial office the same traits that marked his career at the bar, always thoroughly examining the pending matter and basing his clearly expressed opinions on the fundamental principles of the law. The high esteem in which he is held by his fellow-members of the bench in the state is shown by his election, in 1914, to the office of president of the County Judge Association of Texas. In politics he is a Democrat, but those who know him need not be informed that his decisions from the bench are quite devoid of political considerations. He has always been anxious to promote the welfare of his community, and as secretary of the board of education since 1908 has been able to do much for the public school system of Marlin. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of the Maccabees. He is fond of fishing and hunting, but finds his greatest pleasure in his home, and is the owner of a fine residence on Capps street. In addition he has 550 acres of improved farming land in Falls county, and makes a hobby of his agricultural operations. With his family he attends the Methodist church, in which he is serving as a member of the board of stewards.

C. F. Porto

On December 12, 1894, Judge Hunnicutt was united in marriage at Marlin with Miss Mattie Kyser, daughter of W. D. Kyser, of this place. Two children have been born to this union: Emmet K. and Horace T.

JUDGE EMILIO C. FORTO. A man of fine abilities and broad culture, Judge Emilio C. Forto, an educated Spanish gentleman, holds a place of prominence among the valued and useful citizens of Brownsville, where he is manager and representative of the Stillman interests, and is also widely known as an ex-judge of Cameron county. He was born, in 1856, in Gerona, the very northeastern province of Spain, and there acquired his rudimentary education. On coming to this country he lived first in New Orleans, from there coming to Brownsville, Texas, in 1868. His brother, the late Frederick Forto, came to Brownsville in the early seventies from New Orleans, and for a number of years was county commissioner of Cameron county.

A young man of great energy, intensity of purpose, and excellent judgment, Mr. Forto was appointed county judge of Cameron county in 1882, and served as such by successive elections for a period of ten years, after which he was sheriff of the county several terms, in each position performing the duties of his office with earnest zeal and faithfulness. Public-spirited and progressive, he always supported every movement calculated to advance the interests of the city, and never shirked the responsibilities of office, having served as mayor of Brownsville three years, and as a member of the City Board of Education for sixteen years.

It is as the representative of the Stillman interest of Brownsville, mayhap, that Judge Forto is best known. James Stillman, chairman of the Board of Directors of the National City Bank of New York, and one of the world's noted financiers, was born and reared in Brownsville, and for a long number of years has owned extensive interests in land and in improved property in Brownsville and in the Lower Rio Grande valley. Since 1900 Judge Forto has been Mr. Stillman's personal representative in Brownsville, and in the management of the lands and property has met with eminent success. The Judge has extensive interests of his own, also, to look after, and is now a vice president of the First National Bank of Brownsville.

During the early days of Brownsville's importance as a seaport, Judge Forto was agent for two of the more important lines of English steamships landing at Brazos Santiago.

CHARLES E. JOHNSON, M. D. For thirty years identified with his practice at Sherman, Dr. Johnson represents the homeopathic school of medicine in that city, and is regarded as one of the ablest men of his calling in Grayson county.

Dr. Johnson was born October 3, 1851, at Liberty, Indiana, a son of Anselm B. and Amelia B. Johnson. His father, who came from Virginia, was a first cousin of General Joseph E. Johnston, of the Confederate army. The father was in business as a wholesale tobacco and tea merchant at Cincinnati, Ohio, until his death in 1868. Dr. Johnson is of English family on his father's side, while his mother had both an English and Irish ancestry. He has one sister in Texas, Mrs. Emma Shultz, wife of Benton Shultz, a locomotive engineer with the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway, and their home is in Trinity county.

Dr. Johnson was the oldest in a family of three children, and his early education was acquired in the public schools, in the state of Indiana, after which he joined the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis. His medical studies were pursued in the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, and also in the Pulte Medical College of that city, graduating from the latter institution M. D. in the spring of 1881. With all the preparation that a thorough college and university course could afford, he started practice in Carroll county, Indiana, but in a short time, although he acquired a good business, his health was so impaired that it became necessary for him to seek a different climate and it was that which brought him to North Texas in 1884. Locating at Sherman he has now been in continuous residence in that city for practically thirty years. Dr. Johnson is a Republican of the old style, that of Abraham Lincoln and his school of politics. For two terms, under appointment from Governor Lanham, Dr. Johnson served as a member of the State Board of Medical Examiners, and he stands very high in the medical fraternity in North Texas. He affiliates with the Masonic Order, has taken the Royal Arch, Council, and other degrees. His church is the disciples of Christ.

In 1888 at Abington, Indiana, Dr. Johnson married Miss Lottie Woodyard, daughter of Cyrus and Mary Jane Woodyard. Her father was a miller by profession, and died several years ago in Indiana, followed by her mother at an interval of several years. Dr. Johnson and wife have two daughters, Mrs. Lora E. Harvey, whose husband, George E. Harvey, of Sherman, is book-keeper with the Robert, Sanford & Taylor Company; and Mrs. Emma McQuiston, wife of Dr. C. H. McQuiston, a practicing physician at Valley View, Texas.

Having come to Texas in search of employment in which he might be healthy and well, while pursuing his profession Dr. Johnson has found both a delightful home and business prosperity, and is therefore one of the enthusiastic boosters of north Texas for all its opportunities and resources. In his time he has witnessed a wonderful increase, not only in population, but in the material development in the city of Sherman and vicinity, and is one of the progressive men of that town. Dr. Johnson has his office in the Murphy Building.

ERHARD R. GUENTHER. An industry whose wheels have been turning and whose machinery has been making useful products for more than half a century is always an interesting institution in the life of a community. This interest is enhanced in the case of a mill which through all these years has been making a commodity for the daily vital sustenance of the people. This has been the successful work, through two generations, of San Antonio's Pioneer Flour Mills. It is easily one of the most distinctive manufacturing institutions of the Alamo city. For all the years since before the war the house of Guenther has been manufacturing flour and other grain products from which has been made the bread for many of the oldest as well as the youngest citizens of that section of Texas.

Many changes and improvements have been introduced since the pioneer, C. H. Guenther, established his first mill on the San Antonio river. In 1914 the new building erected by the firm of C. H. Guenther & Sons has increased the facilities of the company until it now ranks as one of the largest flour mills in the south. With this new addition the mill has a total capacity of eighteen hundred barrels of flour every working day, the increase by the installation of new machinery being six hundred barrels daily. The building is of reinforced concrete and fire-proof construction, and is equipped with machinery and storage bins of the latest pattern. The officers of the firm of C. H. Guenther & Sons are: E. R. Guenther, president and general manager; Adolph Wagner, vice president, and H. Schuchard, treasurer. These men have been officially identified with the firm since its incorporation. Arthur Storms has served as assistant manager since 1898.

San Antonio will always have reason to remember gratefully the career of the late Carl Hilmer Guenther, who founded what is now the Pioneer Flour Mills. He was born March 19, 1826, at Weissenfels on the Saale in Saxony, acquired his education and learned the trade of miller and millwright. At the age of twenty-two in 1848 he left his native land, and like thousands of the flower of German youth found refuge on the hospitable shores of the New World. The loss to Germany was the gain of America, and the late C. H. Guenther was a fine type of that German stock imported into this country during the '40s and '50s. With many of his compatriots he settled first in Wisconsin, but two years later moved to Texas, joining the Fredericksburg colony in Gillespie county. There he established a grist mill on Live Oak Creek, and his skill as a millwright enabled him to perform practically all the labors involved in constructing the mill, after which he operated it with water power. A freshet having damaged his mill, in 1859, he left Gillespie county and located in San Antonio. In that year was constructed the first flour mill in the city. Its location was on San Antonio river at what is now Guenther street near South Alamo street, the location which has ever since been the home of the great milling industry conducted under the name Pioneer. The foundation of the original mill still stands at the rear of the Guenther homestead on Guenther street, and adjoining it have been built in more recent years the large and substantial structures now comprising the Pioneer Flour Mills.

Before the building of railroads when San Antonio was isolated commercially from the rest of Texas, the Guenther mill was patronized by the settlers living in all the great tract of country now known as Southwest Texas. Grain was hauled in some cases for a hundred miles or more in wagons, and after being ground into flour the product was then taken back to the ranch or neighborhood store. The late C. H. Guenther had not only business but personal relations with his patrons and with the residents in and about San Antonio.

He was not only a pioneer miller but a man of consequence in San Antonio and was regarded as one of the foremost German-American citizens of that community. He had membership in the Casino Association, the Beethoven Maennerchor, the Arbeiter Verein, was one of the founders of the famous old German-English school, and gave much of his time and means to the support and upbuilding of educational institutions. His own fortune was honorably won, the business which he established has since been continued by his capable son, and has long been a source of pride to the city.

The late C. H. Guenther died in San Antonio October 18, 1902. He was married in 1855 at Fredericksburg to Miss Dorothea Pape, daughter of Fritz Pape, one of the pioneers of the Fredericksburg colony. She died in 1898, and their children were: Fritz Guenther, now deceased; Arthur W.; H. L.; Mrs. Amanda Wagner; Mrs. Marie D. Beckman; Mrs. Matilda Schuchard, and Erhard R.

Erhard R. Guenther, who has since the death of his father been the active head of the Flour Mills company, was born in San Antonio in 1868. The educational advantages offered him in his native city were supplemented by a residence abroad. His first ambition and his studies were directed toward the law, and he graduated in law at Washington & Lee University in Lexington, Virginia, in 1888. The death of his older brother caused him to give up those plans, and he took charge of the Pioneer Flour Mills, and to him perhaps more than to any other factor except his father has been due the success and continued upbuilding of that manufacturing industry. All over Texas the name Pioneer Mills represents the highest standard of products, and the output is well known by the long continued use of one design of label and advertising, being the familiar portrait of C. H. Guenther, the founder of the business.

Mr. Guenther lives on Guenther street, in the modest little home erected more than fifty years ago by his father. The grounds are large and beautifully kept, situated on the banks of the San Antonio river, and standing close to the shadow of the great flour mills.

Mr. Guenther was married in San Antonio to Miss Lottie Harnisch, daughter of Charles Harnisch, one of the prominent pioneers and business men of San Antonio. They have one daughter, Marie Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Guenther have traveled extensively abroad, and are among the prominent leaders of San Antonio society.

A. C. BOWER. A Floyd county pioneer, Mr. Bower has not been content to let his priority of residence remain an empty distinction. Since settling there when his neighbors were a wide-scattered handful in number, he has been pushing ahead not only his own but the general enterprise of the locality, and today is one of the oldest and best esteemed citizens.

Born in Weakly county, Tennessee, September 24, 1847, Mr. Bower was a son of Giles Bower, who came to Tennessee from North Carolina, was a successful farmer, and died in Tennessee at the age of sixty-one, in 1866. The maiden name of the mother was Becky Adams, who was born in the state of Missouri, and died at the advanced age of eighty-two years, having been the mother of seven sons and three daughters.

A. C. Bower, who was the sixth in the family, was educated in the country schools of his native county up to the time he was sixteen years old, and at the age of nineteen left the farm and struck out on his own account. His first work for himself was in running a mail hack, for which he received wages of twenty dollars a month. He then became identified with a mercantile house in Como, Tennessee, where he remained a year, and then was in the grocery business at Como for about five years. Having built up a first class establishment, he sold out his interests in that state, and with his wife immigrated to Texas in October, 1882. He first settled in Burnet county, where he took up a line of industry then very popular in that section of Texas, sheep husbandry. He leased a tract of land and ran about one thousand head of sheep. After eight months he sold his flock, and was very nearly bankrupted by the transaction. He next moved into Bell county, and with what capital he had left rented a farm and engaged in general farming. In that he was much more successful than as a sheep man, and continued farming from 1882 to 1890. At the close of that time he bought thirteen hundred acres of land in Jones county, but was soon dissatisfied with the location and returned to Bell county. For a short time he remained at Belton, and in June, 1890, moved to Floyd county.

At the time of his coming, there was only one other settler between Floydada and Childress. He attained a large tract of land and began ranching, also raising and selling horses and cattle, and continued in that general line for ten years. In May, 1890, Floyd county had been organized and the town site of Floydada was platted and the town organized in the same year. Mr. Bower from the first has been one of the large property holders in the city, and still owns, besides his residence, a large amount of local real estate. In 1895 he entered the general merchandise business, and has followed that line with much success down to the present time.

A Democrat in politics, he has never sought or filled any public office. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belongs to the Commercial Club and is a Methodist in religion. Mr. Bower was first married in 1866 in Henry county, Tennessee, to Miss Mattie Perry, daughter of Gideon Perry, a native of Tennessee. Mrs. Bower died September 4, 1895, at Floydada at the age of forty-five. Her four children, two sons and two daughters, were: James W., a resident of Gaines county; Davie, wife of Sam Hamblin of Bell county; Bonnie, wife of C. Williams, of Hall county; and Emerson E., a resident of Dickens county. The second marriage of Mr. Bower occurred in Floydada February 27, 1905, when Miss Maggie Courtwright became his wife. Mrs. Bower was born in Texas, a daughter of E. B. Courtwright, one of the old settlers of Jack county. They are the parents of three children, namely: Bartlett, Emerson Bolton, and Luneta.

WILLIAM ANDREW BARNES. In recent years probably no one in Tyler county has done more for the industrial and agricultural development of that section than William Andrew Barnes of Woodville, who is a young business man of great enterprise and originality, and by his work has opened up various avenues of development in the county, and has attracted much capital and many substantial settlers to this locality. Soon after he had engaged in the real estate and abstract business at Woodville, he conceived the idea of organizing the various industrial interests of the county for mutual co-operation, and accordingly in 1912 instituted the Tyler County Fair Association, of which he is president. He is also president of the Woodville Commercial Club, and an active leader in its work. Mr. Barnes is a member of the East Texas Development Association, which has for its object the general welfare and development and settlement of east Texas. Through his office he has carried on a general correspondence over the country for the purpose of interesting homeseekers in Texas lands, and during 1912 he brought more families into Tyler county than have come here during the previous decade. His operations are conducted in harmony with the advertising department of the Sunset Lines of Railroad, and much interest in south Texas lands has been created through this medium. Mr. Barnes handles large quantities of east Texas lands, and his plan is to open up for settlement many of the vast tracts of "cut-over" lands of the large lumber companies in Tyler county and adjacent sections. The business of Mr. Barnes and the interests of the town demanded that Woodville should have a live newspaper, and for twelve months Mr. Barnes edited the Tyler County Messenger. During that time and because of his interest in the subject, the Messenger has come to be a force in the affairs of Tyler county.

William Andrew Barnes is a native of Tyler county, born at Chester, January 1, 1880. The family has been identified with this section of Texas since before the war. His grandfather, Sam Barnes, who was born in Mississippi, and died in Tyler county, in 1873, at the age of fifty-eight, came to Texas, and established near Chester the Barnes Mill and Gin, and that was an important institution before and after the war. The plant has long since disappeared, but it performed its share of work and added much to the prosperity of the community during its existence. Sam Barnes was also a prominent farmer, and developed some of the agricultural lands in this locality. He was prominent in Methodism, and one of the officers of the church, and his politics were Democrat. Grandfather Sam Barnes married Lucinda McKee, who died in 1906. Her children were: Calvin, who died as a farmer near Chester and had seen service in the Confederate army; Jasper, also a Confederate soldier, is a farmer near Chester; Mrs. Laurissa King, deceased; Lizzie, who married Stephen Wilson and died near Chester; Mary, who married Sam Wilson of Chester; Sam Barnes, also of Chester; Andrew Madison, father of William A. Barnes; Fayette, now deceased.

Andrew Madison Barnes, who is a stock farmer at Chester, was born in Tyler county, on the old farm two miles from Chester, in 1853. He was brought up in the country and educated in the local schools. While a young man he identified himself with farming and stock raising, and has lived a quiet and uneventful career. He is a Democrat in politics and a Methodist. He was married to Maggie Platt, a daughter of Raz Platt, a farmer of Chester locality, who came to Texas from Mississippi. Mrs. Barnes died May 1, 1901, and her children were: Sam B., a stockman of Texas, who married Lucile Graham; William Andrew; Carl, a farmer of Chester; John R., a farmer at Chester; and Mattie, who also lives in Chester.

William Andrew Barnes has known Tyler county all his life, was educated in the public schools, and prepared for a business career at the Tyler Commercial College. Since leaving school he has been closely identified with the real estate and abstract business at Woodville. He abstracted the Tyler county records, and this has been an important feature of his office business. Mr. Barnes has never interested himself in practical politics, and his family have had little to do with politics as a profession, or as an avocation. He gives his support to church and religion.

On July 16, 1911, in Tyler county, he married Miss Willie Johnson, a daughter of William Andrew and May J. (Clark) Johnson. The Johnson children, nine in number, were: Clyde; Nannie; Grover; Ida, wife of Frank Griffin; Mrs. Barnes; Lena; Morris; Dan Leak, and Annie Laurie. Mrs. Barnes was born in September, 1882, and has one child, William Andrew, Jr.

MARTIN ADOLPHUS HAMILTON. When Mr. Hamilton came to Grimes county, Texas, in 1875, his cash capital amounted to just fifty-five cents. He had come by railroad across the country from Madison county, Alabama, and was at that time about twenty-four years of age. Grimes county people now know Mr. Hamilton as one of the largest farmers and planters in this section, and long years of industry and good management have been the factors in his success.

Martin Adolphus Hamilton was born near Huntsville, Alabama, October 18, 1850, and his early training was in the country and his school advantages exceedingly limited. Arriving in Grimes county with only his labor as his resources, his first work was on a farm, after which he had a position in a sawmill, and at the end of six months became a sergeant at Huntsville in the employ of a lessee of the prison convicts of the state. After two years of convict management he returned to Alabama, married and then came with his wife to Texas and established a home at the site of his present plantation and farm headquarters. He bought a small lot of unimproved land in the Obedience Hill survey, and the original fifty acres were quickly brought under cultivation and improvement. The raising of corn and cotton was his primary industry, and since then from time to time he has increased his acreage until he now controls under his proprietorship fourteen hundreds acres, and three hundred of this have been brought under the plow. Labor is afforded on his land to a dozen or more families, and while he has given chief attention to the staple crops he has also raised considerable stock, and has kept his cattle up to a high grade.

After farming for a few years Mr. Hamilton also branched out as a merchant at Dolph, establishing a small store which became a nucleus for a small country trading community, and the name was bestowed upon the place as an abbreviation of his own second surname. After the railroad came his store was burned, and he moved his business into Richards, put up a two-story business block, and sold goods under the name M. A. Hamilton. For a few years his enterprise also included the operation of a sawmill and a cotton gin, and much of the lumber cut in his mill was worked up into houses and other improvements in the vicinity. Mr. Hamilton was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Anderson, and subsequently assisted in the formation of the First State Bank of Richards, of which he is now vice president. Politically he has never been active, though coming of a family of Democrats, and has occasionally attended a convention as a delegate.

Mr. Hamilton is a son of Alexander Hamilton, who was born in Alabama and spent his life in Madison county, passing away at the age of sixty years. During his earlier life he had served as a soldier in the Florida Indian war. Though a southerner he never held slaves, was opposed to the secession movement, and had no part in the war. Alexander Hamilton married Elizabeth Lacey, who died in Mississippi about twenty years ago. Their children were: Virginia, who married Josiah Henderson and lives in Louisiana; Martin Adolphus; William, of Mississippi; Joseph, of Texas; John, who died in Alabama; Mahala Wood, who died in Grimes county; Henry, who died in Grimes county; and Felix, of Richards.

Mr. Hamilton was married in September, 1878, to Miss Mollie McHaffey, a daughter of Augustus McHaffey, a farmer. They have two children: Oscar, a merchant at Richards, who married Sallie Kelley; and Mrs. Eula Witt, also of Grimes county. Although Mr. Hamilton had limited educational opportunities himself, he took pains with his own children and afforded them the benefit of his prosperity, the son having been educated in the Southwestern University at Georgetown and in the Hill's Business College at Waco, while the daughter was a student in Austin College at Sherman.

HON. FRANK H. BURMEISTER. A member of the Texas state legislature, owner of a ranch in McMullen county, a successful lawyer with offices at Pleasanton, Frank H. Burmeister has a number of interesting distinctions apart from those implied in such important relationship to the business and public life of his state. He is an example of the scholar in politics, and among his closer associates is as much esteemed for the broad range of his intellectual interests as for his material and matter-of-fact prosperity. Popular as an orator, a close thinker and student of economic and political conditions, Mr. Burmeister is no ordinary figure in his home state.

His career has been one of large and broad attainments from inconspicuous beginnings. Born in Berlin, Germany, in 1856, he comes of a scholarly family. His parents were Alexander and Mary (Holtzhauser) Burmeister, and his father was a brother of Professor Herman Burmeister, a German naturalist who was accredited with a rank second to Humboldt, and who went to Rio de Janeiro to take charge of the National Museum for the Brazilian government, his selection for that post being all that is necessary to say to indicate his standing in the scientific world. The Texas statesman is himself a product of the best literary and scientific culture of Germany. From the age of five and a half until he was twenty-five his career was largely devoted to studious pursuits. He was a student in a Berlin Gymnasium, took special studies in the University of Berlin, and spent four years in the Polytechnic University at Zurich, Switzerland, specializing in natural science and agriculture.

Being free from military duties, he emigrated to the United States of America and though equipped with an exceptional education, and with more than ordinary native endowments, when Frank H. Burmeister arrived in New York in December, 1881, he possessed little capital beyond that necessary for current expenses, and had practically no training which would prepare him for the vigorous business competition of the New World. Though the master of several languages, he was as yet unable to speak a word of English. During his stay in New York he was fortunate in meeting Dr. J. B. Taylor, owner of the Taylor ranch in McMullen county, Texas. Dr. Taylor gave the young German scholar employment as a sheep herder, and in that humble capacity more than thirty years ago he set out upon his career in the Lone Star state. Mr. Burmeister arrived at the Taylor ranch, seven miles north of Tilden, on January 17, 1882, and since that date has been a steadfast and loyal citizen of Texas.

Mr. Burmeister for twenty-nine years has had a full partner in his career and no proper estimate of his success could be made without reference to this sharer in his fortunes. The partnership began with his marriage to Miss Sallie J. Russell, of Refugio county, a daughter of Judge Charles A. Russell, one of the well known pioneers of that county. When Mr. and Mrs. Burmeister began married life their capital consisted of twenty-five silver dollars and his position as County Surveyor of McMullen county. In the subsequent years, spent in McMullen county, they have acquired one of the fine ranches of that section, comprising twenty-five hundred acres and a beautiful home twelve miles north of Tilden. This property is valued at many thousands of dollars, and together with Mr. Burmeister's law practice and other interests his prosperity is assured. For practically twenty-five years Mr. Burmeister's law practice and public duties have kept him away from home the greater part of the time, and the operation and upbuilding of the ranch interests have been almost entirely under the supervision of Mrs. Burmeister, who in this respect and in many other ways has contributed greatly to her husband's success.

With a trained mind and an accurate knowledge of various departments of knowledge, Mr. Burmeister in a few years after coming to Texas determined to enter the legal profession, and had little difficulty in preparing himself for the bar. He was admitted in McMullen county in 1889, and at the same time took out his last naturalization papers. His law offices are at Pleasanton in Atascosa county, and his services have long been in demand as a capable and exceptionally skillful advocate.

Mr. Burmeister's public career covers about thirty years. In 1884 he was appointed Deputy County Surveyor and in 1886 he was first elected County Surveyor, which office he held until 1894, when he was first elected to the Legislature and served one term. Later his home county successively elected him county judge and district attorney. In 1912 he was again returned to the legislature, and is now a candidate for re-election. His third term is practically a certainty, as he has no opposition. Mr. Burmeister has long enjoyed a repu-tion as an orator, not only in the court room, but in political campaigns and on miscellaneous public occasions. He has the magnetic personality of a natural orator, combined with the incisive and substantial character of the business man, and the broad comprehension and views of the scholar, and his presence on the platform is sufficient to insure an interested audience. It is only natural that Mr. Burmeister has taken a positive position on all public questions. During the thirty-third session of the legislature he championed the illiteracy bill, is one of the ablest exponents of ballot reform and of equal suffrage, and never neglects an occasion to interest the people in behalf of education whether in the common schools or in the higher institutions. Mr. and Mrs. Burmeister are the parents of eight children, named as follows: Charles A., Frank H., Jr., Mary, Russell, Sallie, E. C., Gustav and Wilhelmina.

ROSSELL F. VAUGHAN. The phenomenal growth of the lumber industry in the Southwest during the past several decades has brought to the forefront a number of men whose abilities have peculiarly fitted them for active and successful participation in this great enterprise. Many of these are men of the younger generation, whose enthusiasm, energetic nature and progressive spirit have placed them in positions of responsibility almost before the blush of youth has left their cheeks, but it is doubtful if any have achieved in as short a period of time a greater success than that which has been attained by Roswell F. Vaughan, treasurer and general manager of the Eagle Pass Lumber Company. Mr. Vaughan became connected with this concern when but seventeen years of age, and, commencing in the humblest position, has mastered its many details and continued in the business until he has reached a commanding position, a position which he has been able to hold amid the strong competition which increasing capital and trade have brought about.

Roswell F. Vaughan was born August 1, 1880, at Leavenworth, Kansas, and is a son of George C. and Katharine (Fairbanks) Vaughan. His father, a native of Vermont, came to the West as a young man, and for some years was a prominent figure in the business world of Kansas. In 1882 he removed to Texas, and here his operations became of a more extensive nature, his connection with various great industries making him a power in commercial and financial circles. He is now a resident of San Antonio. Mr. Vaughan married Katharine Fairbanks, a native of Massachusetts and a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music. She was a devout Christian and active in the charitable work of the Congregational church, in the faith of which she died in 1888, when but thirty-four years of age.

Roswell F. Vaughan was the first of his parents' five children, and was two years of age when brought to Texas, the family locating in San Antonio, where he received his education in the public and high schools. Upon graduating from the latter, at the age of seventeen years, he at once embarked upon his career in the lumber business, accepting a minor position and faithfully working his way upward until by 1904 he was in charge of the great interests of the Eagle Pass Lumber Company, which has fourteen branches in Texas and Mexico, doing a general wholesale and retail business and carrying a full line of lumber, building materials, etc. The Eagle Pass Lumber Company and affiliated concerns represent a capital of more than one and one-half millions of dollars, and in this connection Mr. Vaughan holds directorships in the State Bank and Trust Company of Eagle Pass; the Walker County Lumber Company, Elmira, Texas; the Dascomb-Daniels Lumber Company, Kansas City, Missouri; the International Sash and Door Company, C. P. Diaz, Mexico; the Eagle Pass Lumber Company, Eagle Pass, Texas; the Eagle Pass Realty Company, of this city; the Rio Grande Valley Irrigation Company and the International Dry Goods Company, also of Eagle Pass; and the Colorado Canal Company, Bay City, Texas. Mr. Vaughan's opinion upon matters connected with the trade has been influential with the associated dealers, who have regarded him as thoroughly informed, and have had confidence in the soundness of his judgment.

Mr. Vaughan was married at Eagle Pass, February 20, 1902, to Miss Maydelle Drake, daughter of C. C. Drake, formerly collector of customs at Argyle Pass. Four children have been born to this union: George C., who is deceased; and Maydelle D., Katherine F. and Roswell F., Jr. With his wife, Mr. Vaughan is a member of the Episcopal church, where he acts as vestryman. He holds membership in the Eagle Pass Commercial Club, in which he is chairman of the railroad committee, and continues to do, as he has in the past, all that he can to forward the interests of his adopted city. A republican in his political views, his popularity is shown by the fact that for the past six years he has been his fellow-citizens' choice for the office of city commissioner.

HON. JOSEPH O. BOEHMER. There has never been a period in the history of the country in which the power of the press has been more keenly or impressively felt. It lies within the authority of the modern journalist to mold public opinion in matters of vital importance, and so ably have some of them taken advantage of this privilege that they have been sent to represent their communities in various positions of trust and responsibility. An example of this type of public-spirited citizen is found in the person of Hon. Joseph O. Boehmer, editor and publisher of the News-Guide, of Eagle Pass, and a fighting member of the Texas State Legislature, where he is the author and supporter of the Boehmer Illiteracy Bill. Mr. Boehmer is a Texan, having been born in the city of San Antonio, March 27, 1870, and is a son of Jay and Mary (Doss) Boehmer. His father, a native of Germany, came to the United States in young manhood, and was married in Tennessee, where for some years he was engaged in teaching music. He subsequently came to Texas, and here spent the closing years of his life, dying in 1886, at the age of sixty-four years. His wife, who was a loyal member of the Methodist church, passed away in that faith in 1912, being eighty-four years of age, and both she and her husband were buried in Texas.

The youngest of his parents' six children, Joseph O. Boehmer received his education in the graded and high schools of San Antonio and was but seventeen years of age when he commenced his struggles with the world as "devil" in the offices of the San Antonio Times, his salary of $1.25 per week being given regularly to his mother during the next two years. Like many others, Mr. Boehmer having been once connected with newspaper life has found it impossible to leave it, and his subsequent career has been one of steady advancement. In 1889 he made his first attempt in the business field on his own account, buying the Floresville Citizen, of Wilson county. This he sold two years later and returned to San Antonio for a short period, and then came to Eagle Pass, where for ten years he was connected with the Guide, and during two years of this time conducted it on his own account under lease. For a few months he was connected with Hull's large printing concern as manager at Mexico City, and then he went to Rockport, Texas, where he established a new paper The New Era. About three months later he consolidated this sheet with the newspaper that had been established there for years, changed the name to the Rockport Enterprise, and conducted it successfully for two years. On disposing of his interests therein, Mr. Boehmer went to Floresville, and two months later leased the Floresville Chronicle, which he conducted for about two years, and at the same time, and in the same county, established the Stockdale Advo- cate. On the expiration of his lease, Mr. Boehmer brought the plant of the Stockdale paper to Eagle Pass, and here established the Rio Grande News. This he conducted nearly three years, at the end of which period he purchased the Guide, and combined the two under the name of the News-Guide, which he has continued to conduct to the present time. He has a live, alert and progressive paper and is endeavoring to give his fellow-townsmen the news and all the news in the most interesting, authentic and instructive manner. That his efforts are appreciated by the people of Eagle Pass is shown in the hearty support he is receiving from both subscribers and advertisers. This newspaper occupies a modern, finely-equipped plant, having the necessary presses and machinery for all kinds of newspaper and job work, and also carries a stationery department. The News-Guide's circulation is not confined to Maverick county, but many readers are found also in the adjoining counties and Mexico.

Mr. Boehmer was married (first) at Brackettville, Kinney county, Texas, to Miss Kate James, who died in 1899, having been the mother of one son: Martin. Mr. Boehmer's second marriage occurred at San Antonio, Texas, February 12, 1907, when he was united with Miss Annie Murray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Murray, of Floresville, Texas.

A staunch democrat in his political views, Mr. Boehmer has been active in the ranks of his party for some years. He was at one time a member of the school board of Eagle Pass, as well as being United States Commissioner, and at this time is serving his second term in the Texas State Legislature. While he has always been known as one of the active members of this body, he has probably distinguished himself in the greatest manner as the author of the Boehmer Illiteracy Bill, in the interests of which he has worked untiringly. In regard to this measure, a Texas daily newspaper recently said:

"Surprise need not be entertained over the news from Austin that Governor Colquitt has decided to veto the Boehmer Illiteracy Bill. Regret, however, should be felt by every man who believes in the purity and honesty of elections. The provisions of the Boehmer bill were intended to produce an honest ballot, intelligently cast. It did not seek to disfranchise any man who ought not to be disfranchised. It was aimed, almost exclusively, at illiterate Mexicans and negroes, whose corrupt and ignorant votes have decided nearly every election in Texas during the last dozen of years or more. There is no justification for the assertion that it would disfranchise any large element of Germans; that class of voters, as a rule, know how to prepare their own ballots. That grand representative of the Germans in the lower house, Representative Burmeister, was the most earnest of all the advocates of the bill; and, speaking for the Texas Germans, in the session of the free conference committee, he said: 'I know my people. They are self-reliant. This bill will not disfranchise them. The average German, coming to this country without knowing one word of English, can qualify for voting under this bill within three months of time.' As the bill did not provide for going into effect until July 1, 1914, it is clear that any man worthy of the franchise in Texas could learn by that time how to mark his own ballot. It is to be regretted that Governor Colquitt's political obligations are such that he is biased against any ballot reform that embodies the provisions of the Boehmer bill. Could the bill become a law, Texas would have about the best election regulations of any State in the Union, so far as pure and intelligent suffrage safeguards are concerned. Under present conditions thousands of Mexicans, negroes and other illiterate elements are voted as if they were so many mules or monkeys. The 'heeler' in the voting booth who obtains the job of 'marking' ballots for illiterates often votes a hundred times in a day; whereas, an honest, intelligent citizen can vote but once. But the vetoing of the Boehmer bill will not end the contest for a pure and intelligent ballot; it simply postpones the day of triumph, for the friends of this election reform will not cease their efforts until it has been written in the statute books of Texas. Had Governor Colquitt decided in favor instead of against the Boehmer bill he would have risen to a loftier position of statesmanship than it has been his good fortune to rise in connection with any other enactment of the Thirty-third Legislature. But there is comfort in the reflection that 'reforms never go backward.' The principle of the Boehmer bill will yet prevail."

Mr. Boehmer affiliates with no particular church, but realizes the beneficial influences of religion and is at all times ready to contribute to worthy movements. Fraternally, he is connected with the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Elks and the Eagles. One of the best known newspaper men in the State, it is said of Mr. Boehmer that he is the only man in Texas who has the secret of publishing a weekly newspaper and making money out of it. His wide acquaintance includes warm friends of all parties, nationalities and stations in life.

JOHN W. CHICHESTER. The postoffice at Eagle Pass, on account of its border position and the attendant mass of Mexican mail handled, is one of the most important in the State of Texas. To efficiently handle the business of this station requires ability of no small degree, a sense of responsibility as to the duties of public service and a thorough knowledge of the routine work of this important position. These qualities are possessed by John W. Chichester, who was postmaster at Eagle Pass from 1908 to 1914, and who is known as one of the most popular officials in the mail service. He was born at Washington, D. C., February 28, 1875, and is a son of Elijah H. and Maria (Brown) Chichester.

Elijah H. Chichester was born in Pennsylvania, and as a young man went to Washington, D. C., where he spent a few years. He devoted his life to railroading and photography and came to Texas in the employ of the United States Government, and died at San Antonio in 1904, when about fifty-nine years of age. A devout Christian, he was a faithful member of the Episcopal church, and at the time of his death was a vestryman and superintendent of the Sunday school. Mr. Chichester was married at Washington, D. C., to Miss Maria Brown, who was born in Louisiana, and was a sister-in-law of the daughter of President Garfield. She also died in 1904, when about fifty-four years of age, and was buried beside her husband in San Antonio. Like him, she was a faithful member of the Episcopal church and was active in its religious movements. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Chichester: Henry D., who died in Alaska; John W.; and Joseph, a resident of New York City, connected with the publishing house of Doubleday, Page & Company.

John W. Chichester was but five years of age when brought to Texas by his parents, and with the exception of three years spent in Alaska in mercantile lines he has made his residence in the Lone Star state ever since. His early education was secured in the public schools, and when he was seventeen years of age began his struggles with the world as a clerk in a grocery store at Eagle Pass, his salary being $17.00 per month. He continued in this line for two years, and then entered upon a railroad career, which covered a period of fifteen years. At the end of this time he was appointed postmaster, in 1908, and continued to serve until April 15, 1914. He filled the position to the entire satisfaction of the public and the department and with credit to himself. Mr. Chichester is very fond of camp life, and to use his own expression "would rather fish than eat." As a citizen he has been more than ordinarily active, is a member of the Commercial Club, and in various ways has erved to advance the interests of his community, in regard to which he stands ready to give all desired information. His fraternal connection is with the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias, in which he has numerous friends, as he has, indeed, in all walks of life. He is an active member of the Episcopal church and for some time has served as a vestryman. Politically a Republican, his only public office has been that which he now holds.

In October, 1902, Mr. Chichester was married at Eagle Pass, to Miss Annie Mae Hartup, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Hartup, of Eagle Pass, and four children have been born to this union: Dorothy, William S., and a son and a daughter who died in infancy. Mrs. Chichester passed away April 30, 1911, aged thirty-five years, and was buried in the cemetery at Eagle Pass. She was widely known socially and among the members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Chichester, married (second) April 21, 1914, Miss Addie Williams of Eagle Pass, daughter of Joe Williams, sheriff of Maverick county.

F. W. HELDENFELS. As an architect and a graduate in his profession from the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, Mr. Heldenfels has become one of the leaders in his profession in southwest Texas, and has gained a reputation all over the state through his work as designer and Superintendent of Construction of the new Bee County Court House, one of the finest structures of its kind in any of the counties of the state. Its fine symmetry and lines, and its utility as a public office building are a tribute to the ability of the architect and for many years this building will remain a memorial of his professional skill and public-spirited interest in being the finest structure of its kind erected in his native county.

The county court house was completed in 1912 at a cost of $77,750, with an added cost for furniture and equipment of $13,800. The building is three stories, with a partial basement, the basement being used for heating purposes, and the heat being furnished by a vacuum steam-heating plant. The construction is what is known as semi-fireproof, having reinforced concrete foundations, framework of steel encased in concrete, outside walls and vault walls of brick, all floors six-inch concrete, and all halls and corridors covered with hexagon tile, while all interior partitions are solid plaster on metal lath and steel studding. The corridors are wainscoted with Georgia creole marble. The stairs are of cast iron. The exterior finish of the building and its dome is of shale tile. Around the dome is an open promenade balcony 70 feet above the ground, and from this balcony an excellent view of the surrounding country is obtained. The construction of the balcony is reinforced concrete. In the lantern of the dome is the only town clock to be found in Bee county. All of the walls of the building are tinted in gray, cream and green. The offices have a green wainscoting, with a cream wall, and gray ceiling, extending down to the picture moulding. All the wood-work is finished in Flemish green, and the floors in Flemish brown.

The courthouse is of the general type known as the classical design, and all its lines are kept as closely as possible to the old Grecian orders. The front entrance has a colonial porch with four reinforced concrete Corinthian columns, each of which is forty-two inches in diameter. Covered porches afford entrances to the building on the three remaining sides. The central feature of the building architecturally speaking is the dome built up with brick walls covered with tile, and surmounted by a lantern covered with copper, over all being a figure representing the Goddess of Justice.

Mr. F. W. Heldenfels, whose work in his professional capacity has just been described, was born at Beeville in Bee county in 1888, a son of Hugo and Isabella (Kueper) Heldenfels. His father, who was for a number of years in the contracting and building business and a well-known architect, was born in Berlin, Germany, and about 1860, when twelve years of age, came to America. In the early seventies he came into Texas, and for some time was a resident in Eastern Central part of the state. During the latter seventies he located in Southwest Texas, where he was a resident up to the time of his death. A carpenter by trade, he entered the general contracting business, and became one of the well-known architects and designers of construction in this part of the state. He was engaged in the building business at Corpus Christi, San Diego, and at other points in this section of the State. Among other buildings constructed by him should be mentioned the courthouse at San Diego. About 1880 he engaged in the lumber business at Saint Mary's, which was his home up to 1885, at which date he came to Beeville, where he also established a lumber business, and continued in active direction of his extensive affairs until his death, a few years since. Besides his lumber business he became well known as a successful horticulturist, and to no small degree contributed to the fame of this region as a most eligible place for the growing of fruit of all kinds. At his country home in Beeville, he was a successful grower of oranges, grapes, plums and other fruits, and he was among the very first in this part of the state to demonstrate as a commercial proposition, the adaptability of the climate and soil for the growing of citrus fruits. The wife of the late Hugo Heldenfels was a native of Travis county, this state. She belonged to one of the Swiss families, who early found settlement in Texas, and her parents were born in Switzerland, and the daughter was educated in that country. She still makes her residence at the Heldenfels estate near Beeville.

Mr. F. W. Heldenfels was reared and received his preliminary education in Beeville, and for his college career attended the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, where in addition to other studies he took courses in architecture, and it was with special credit in that department that he was graduated in the class of 1909. He began the practice of his profession in Beeville, and in addition to his great work in connection with the courthouse has had an active practice on other less important enterprises.

He is a young man of ability in his profession, and has already won an enviable place as an architect and builder. Mr. Heldenfels was married at Austin to Miss Alice Cullen, a daughter of William H. Cullen, who was one of the prominent citizens of the State Capital.

STEPHEN L. McDONALD holds prestige as one of the enterprising, up-to-date men of Canadian, Texas, where he is identified with various real estate and other interests. His record is that of the native born Texan who without outside financial aid has worked his way to substantial success, and as such it is of more than passing interest.

Stephen L. McDonald was born in Grayson county, Texas, April 11, 1870, and on both the paternal and maternal sides is of Irish origin, the former line of ancestry having also a strain of Scotch. William D. McDonald, his father, was born in North Carolina and reared in Georgia. He came to Texas in 1850 and pioneered in Grayson county. Previous to his coming to Texas he served five years in the United States army as a lieutenant. He assisted in the survey of the state of Kansas, and was in the company that captured John Brown, Indian fighter in Kansas and Texas. At the outbreak of the Civil war he helped organize a company, of which he was lieutenant under Captain Tolbert. In their first engagement Captain Tolbert was wounded, and Lieutenant McDonald became captain, which rank he held until the close of the war, his superior officer being General McCulloch, and the territory in which he served being Texas and Louisiana. Among the engagements in which he participated were Pleasant Hill and Bull Run. After the close of the war he settled down to farming and stock raising in Grayson county, where he maintained his home for over fifty years and was very successful. He is now living retired in Jones county. During his early residence in Texas he took an active interest in political affairs, and while he never sought public office he served several terms as a county commissioner. William D. McDonald and Elizabeth Cameron were married in Grayson county, Texas, in 1854. Fifty years later they celebrated their Golden wedding anniversary, at which were present children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren to the number of ninety-six, and happy in the companionship of their family and many friends the aged couple are enjoying the fruits of their early years of endeavor. Mrs. McDonald is a native of Tennessee. She came to Texas with her parents some time during the '40s, and her father, Henry Cameron, was one of the pioneer farmers and stockmen of the county. Mr. Cameron spent the remainder of his life in Grayson county and died there in 1901, at the age of eighty-five years. Of the family of ten children, five sons and five daughters, born to William D. and Elizabeth McDonald, Stephen L. was the fourth in order of birth.

Stephen L. McDonald made his home on his father's farm until he was twenty-six years of age. He received his education at Grayson College and in a business college at Sherman, Texas, from which latter institution he graduated in 1895. He taught school four years in Grayson and two years in Wheeler counties, and at the conclusion of his last term of school came to Canadian and engaged in the real estate business, which he has since successfully continued. He also has large oil interests at Electra, Texas, including several producing wells. In consideration of the fact that Mr. McDonald started out in life a poor young man and earned his first money as a school teacher and in this way paved his way to business ventures, the success he has achieved is remarkable. As indicating something of his method and dispatch in business transactions, it may be stated that he placed on the market an addition to Canadian, comprising forty acres, and every lot in this addition he sold within a limit of nine days. He also organized the town of Ochiltree, and he has interests in various enterprises in different parts of the country. Besides owning and representing real estate, improved and unimproved, in towns and cities, he has land interests in from fifteen to twenty counties in Texas. He is president of the Alfalfa Milling Company, of Cherokee, Oklahoma; the Canadian Oil & Gas Company, of Amarillo; the Cattlemen's Oil & Gas Company, of Canadian; and is secretary and treasurer of the Canadian Development Company.

His social and civic interests find expression in some of the foremost organizations of Canadian, including the fraternal order of the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of Pythias and the Free and Accepted Masons. In Masonry he has received the degrees of both lodge and chapter. He is also a member of the Country Club and the Commercial Club of Canadian, and in the organization of the latter he took an active part, the writing of its constitution being delegated to him. Religiously he is a Baptist.

On September 20, 1897, at Bethel, Grayson county, Mr. McDonald was married to Miss Katie Caylor, and they are the parents of two children: Olma, born in Grayson county, Texas, August 31, 1898, and Robert, born at the same place October 3, 1900. Mrs. McDonald is a native of Texas and a representative of one of the early pioneer families of the state. Her grandfather Caylor was the third settler of Morgan county, and her father, R. A. Caylor, a native of that county, pioneered in Grayson county.

MONROE STARNES, recognized as the leading spirit in the business activities of the Winona community in Smith county, Texas, is a self-made man in the true sense of that much-used and often misused term.

Mr. Starnes was born in Alexander county, North Carolina, November 9, 1857, and was left an orphan at the tender age of eight years. His parents, William and Matilda (White) Starnes, both died the same year, 1865, in the prime of life, her death occurring in March and his in August. Besides Monroe, who was the third born, there were four others: Wilson, the eldest, is now a resident of North Carolina; Calvin, who died, in 1897, in North Carolina; Martha, who died, unmarried; and Sarah, wife of Pink Healen, is a resident of North Carolina. The father was a farmer, in humble circumstances, and after his death the little children were scattered. Monroe found a home with his uncle, Jacob W. Poovey, a North Carolina farmer, whose ideas, as exemplified in the bringing up of the boy, were that work was more important than schooling. Accordingly, the youth's educational advantages were meagre and were limited to the lessons taught from Davies arithmetic and the "old blue-back speller." When his uncle refused to allow him to go to school any more, young Starnes decided to strike out for himself and come West; and he left North Carolina with the final words of his guardian ringing in his ears: "If you can do better away from home, you are at liberty to go." When he landed in Smith county, Texas, he had less than fifty dollars. Today his estate is estimated in six figures.

Mr. Starnes was influenced to come to Texas by a neighbor, through whom he had learned something of the country here. He came by rail to Big Sandy and stopped about five miles from Winona. The first year he made a crop on the shares with Firman Kay. The next year he was employed as Mr. Kay's overseer, and following this he took contracts for furnishing cord wood for the "Tyler Tap," now the Cotton Belt, and he was engaged in this work about one year, with the result that he cleared a nice little sum of money. His next venture was work at the carpenter's trade. About this time he built a gin for Mr. Kay in Collin county and ran it for a while. Returning to Smith county, he took charge of Mr. Kay's farm, his principal work being to look after the collection of rents. Next he opened a retail liquor shop in Winona, which, however, he conducted only a short time, there being too much "rough house" to suit him, and from this business he turned his attention to dealing in cattle, with which he has been more or less identified ever since. In his early career as a cattle trader he accumulated sufficient capital with which to engage in other enterprises. With J. A. Kay he became interested in merchandising at Winona, and they were associated in this business until 1890. That year Mr. Starnes withdrew from the firm and joined N. Y. Lolley and in the fall they bought out Mr. Kay. A year later Mr. Starnes bought Mr. Lolley's interest, and until 1896 conducted the business alone. Then Lolley came back into the business, and the next ten years the firm style was Starnes and Lolley. In 1906 Mr. Lolley withdrew from the business and Carl Shank became Mr. Starnes' partner. This association continued one year. Then in 1907 Mr. Starnes disposed of his merchandise interests, and has since devoted his time and attention to other matters.

During his mercantile career, Mr. Starnes and Mr. Lolley bought a ranch of 2,260 acres in Clay county, its location being at Charlie. That was in 1900. This was conducted as a stock farm for ten years, until Mr. Starnes sold his interest. He owns several hundred acres of timber land in Smith county, and from 1893 for several years he owned and operated a sawmill.

Politically, Mr. Starnes has always been a Democrat, and as a representative citizen he has been delegated to assist in the nomination of local and district officers. He has, however, had no inclination for office for himself. The only office he has ever filled has been that of school trustee, and he has always given his encouragement and support to the betterment of public schools.

January 19, 1887, Mr. Starnes and Miss Achsa McGuffy were united in marriage, and they now have a family as Richard W. Hix M.D.

Follows: Clay, Loss, Herman, John N., Cammie, Willie May and Mornoe, Jr. Mrs. Starnes was born in Smith county, Texas, in June, 1870, and is a daughter of Dr. McGuffy who came hither from Mississippi and was a frontier settler of the county.

GLENN A. HARBERT. Former county commissioner of Colorado county, for many years active in business affairs at Columbus, Mr. Harbert represents not only one of the old and honored families of Texas, but also an ancestry which goes far back into American history and the authentic records of which contain many distinguished names.

Glenn A. Harbert was born near Columbus, Texas, July 13, 1864, a son of John and Laura (Glenn) Harbert, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Texas. Grandfather William Harbert was a pioneer of Tennessee, and was a son of an Englishman, who spelled his name Herbert, but after moving to Tennessee had his name changed to its present form by act of the Tennessee legislature. Grandfather Harbert married into the Alston family, and through that family later generations are descendants of the famous Lady Cordova, Alfred the Great, and the first king of Saxony. Mr. Harbert's daughter is eligible to membership in the Society of the Colonial Dames, the Daughters of the Crown, and Daughters of the American Revolution, on account of her early ancestry. On the mother's side Mr. Harbert is descended from Sir Francis Drake.

John Harbert the father, came to Texas as a boy, and was one of the early American citizens of Colorado county, where he had large possessions of land and also many slaves for its operation. The grandfather had preceded in moving to Texas by several years, and all members of the family lived near each other in Colorado county. John Harbert spent several years as a farmer, and then established and conducted a general mercantile business and freighting enterprise between Texas and Mexico. His death occurred soon after the war between the states. An educated man he was a great reader and more than ordinarily influential in his community. His widow is still living in Houston, and is now the wife of Hon. Jesse Johnson, present United States consul to Matamoros and former minister to Brazil. Her father, E. M. Glenn, was distinguished as a justice of the supreme court of Texas. Glenn A. Harbert has one brother John Alvery Harbert, a farmer in Colorado county.

Until he was nineteen years old the youth of Glenn A. Harbert was spent largely in attending school and he enjoyed advantages at Galveston, at Seguin, and in the Agricultural and Mechanical College. He was given the appointment to West Point Military Academy, and won the honor of appointment by competitive examination twice, though he never entered the school. On completing his education his first work was in the banking house of R. E. Stafford and Company at Columbus. For seven years he was in the cattle business and then conducted a mercantile establishment and also a large farm for five years. From that he turned his energies to the oil mill business, but in recent years ill health caused him to retire, and he has since pursued lighter lines of work. At present he maintains an office at Columbus, and is engaged in the loan business, being a land inspector for a large land and loan company.

On May 4, 1873, Mr. Harbert married Miss Love Callison, a Texas girl, and daughter of Alec Callison, and granddaughter of a prominent early pioneer of Texas and a veteran of the Texas Revolution in 1835-6. Mr. and Mrs. Harbert have one daughter, named Glenn Errol. In his political activities, Mr. Harbert has always supported the Democratic policies, and through his intelligent co-operation in public affairs and his standing as a business man was honored with election as county commissioner. He is a member of the Catholic church and one of the best known citizens of Colorado county. Besides his attractive residence at Columbus, he owns a good farm in the county.

ALBERT BURTON DOUCETTE. Coming to the United States from his birthplace in Quebec as a boy of eighteen years, Albert Burton Doucette has seen much of life in various sections of the country, including the states of Michigan, and Minnesota, as well as Texas. In his business of civil engineer and timber estimator he is known to be wonderfully proficient, and he has gained a prominence in his work in this part of the state that is second to none. Mr. Doucette was born in 1848, at San Angele du Lavat, in the Province of Quebec, Canada, and there was reared. He had his early education in Three Rivers College in Canada, and in 1866 he came to the United States, locating first at Saginaw, Michigan. From there he migrated to Minnesota, and he there became engaged in timber activities, in which he has continued to be occupied all his life thus far. Mr. Doucette came to Texas in 1877, locating in Beaumont, and here he has since resided. In that early day Beaumont was only a small town or village, the only activity being a few small saw mills, and he has witnessed the growth of the city to its present immense proportions through many changes of scene.

An expert surveyor, Mr. Doucette was elected to the office of county surveyor, and he was retained in the office for a long period of years, his service embracing the Beaumont oil boom of 1901. It is estimated that he has done more surveying and made more maps of Beaumont, Jefferson county and the timbered counties of East Texas, than has any other one man. He has prepared most of the timber estimates for the great lumber companies of these parts, and he was for eighteen years timber estimator and engineer for the Land Department of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Under Col. C. C. Gibbs, of San Antonio, he surveyed and corrected the county line between Orange and Jasper counties. His engineering work in Beaumont and in Jefferson county has been most extensive, he having surveyed most of the additions to Beaumont, and Doucette street was named for him, as was also the town of Doucette, in Tyler county, where he and his brother, the late Alfred Doucette, operated a large lumber mill. The latter was killed in an explosion in the mill. Another brother, P. A. Doucette, is engaged in the lumber business at Sour Lake, Texas.

A man of the widest possible experience as an engineer, as well as a timber expert, with accurate knowledge of the great timber country of East Texas and of Louisiana, he is one whose work in those fields of activity is relied upon to the uttermost by land and lumber corporations of the state.

Mr. Doucette was married in Beaumont to Miss Louise Harding, who was born at Bloomington, Illinois, and she died at San Antonio in 1890. They became the parents of two children: Albert Harding Doucette, and Blanche, the wife of Carroll Keith, a lumberman at Voth, Texas.

RICHARD W. HIX, M. D. Twenty years of continuous and successful practice as a physician and surgeon at Vernon have made Dr. Hix one of the oldest members of his profession in Wilbarger county. He has well deserved his success in life, since he was left an orphan at an early age, during the progress of the Civil war, had to rely upon himself from boyhood, and after much hard work at manual labor, and other occupations finally succeeded in equipping himself for his profession, and with the experience gained by his earlier career has been all the better of a physician.

Richard W. Hix was born in Chattooga county, Georgia, January 19, 1859, the fourth of five children, born to Davis and Elizabeth (Hill) Hix. His father, a native of North Carolina, moved to Georgia in 1840, locating in Chattooga county, as one of the early settlers. In that vicinity he was known as a farmer and planter, and pursued a quiet and peaceful existence until the war. During the war he was conscripted as a Confederate soldier, was sent to Richmond, Virginia, where he died in 1863. The mother, a native of South Carolina, in which state she was educated, was married in Georgia, and died at the old home in that state in 1864 at the age of forty.

During his boyhood in Georgia, Dr. Hix attended public schools as opportunity offered, finally completing the high school course. He then attended the medical college at Atlanta, Georgia, and in 1885 moved to Parker county, Texas, where he passed the examining board and practiced on a certificate. Some years later, on the earnings of his own efforts, he entered the University of Louisville, where he was graduated in medicine, March 14, 1892. In 1886 he located at Vernon, which was then a small town in the midst of a very sparsely populated region of northwest Texas. Dr. Hix from the first enjoyed a good practice and stands high in the esteem of all citizens. At the present writing Dr. Hix is serving as city health officer of Vernon, and is also food and drug inspector. In politics he is a Democrat. His professional membership is in the Wilbarger County, the Pan Handle and the Southern Medical Societies, and also the State Medical Society. Fraternally the doctor is affiliated with York Rite Masonry, both in Chapter and Commandery, and is past master in his Blue Lodge and past high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter. He also belongs to the Shrine. His other lodges are the Woodmen of the World and the Maccabees. Dr. Hix and family are communicants of the Methodist church.

In Parker county, Texas, on April 21, 1886, Dr. Hix married Stella Elizabeth Van Eman, a daughter of Rev. George and Elizabeth (Poage) Van Eman, a well known family of early settlers, in Parker county, and both parents now deceased. Six children were born to Dr. Hix and wife: Richard Walter Hix was born in Wilbarger county in January, 1887, is married and is now following a mechanical trade at Dallas; Elizabeth Stella Hix was born in Wilbarger county, May 31, 1890; Ullis Hix was born in Wilbarger county, January 30, 1893, and now lives in Dallas; George Hix was born in Wilbarger county, June 17, 1895, and is attending school at Vernon; Elmer Hix, born in Wilbarger county, on January 5, 1897, is also in school; Mary Ellen Hix was born December 19, 1898, and is in the local schools.

WILLIAM B. GREEN. The tax assessorship of Liberty county has for eighteen consecutive years been filled by William B. Green. That is a record not only noteworthy for its length, but likewise for the artistic and faithful quality of service rendered. Mr. Green has spent his life in this section of the State, and his family became identified with Texas more than ten years before the winning of independence. They have been known for three generations as prosperous planters and stock raisers, at one time were slave holders, have been excellent citizens and people of high character and usefulness.

From an examination of old records it appears that this branch of the Green family originated in Holland, and came to this country some time in the seventeenth century, locating in Pennsylvania. Later on, Dr. Richard Green, great-grandfather of William B. Green, married a Scotch-Irish girl, and going west located at Natchez, Mississippi. Thus the family stock is a combination of the sturdy qualities of the Pennsylvania Dutch and of the Scotch-Irish people, and the family record is throughout one of more than average ability and usefulness.

It was grandfather Reason Green, who was born in 1800 during his father's residence at Natchez, Mississippi, who established the family in Texas, locating at Orange about 1822, and two years later moving to Bolivar Point, just across the bay from the city of Galveston. During the war for Texas independence both Reason Green and his brother Ben were in Houston's army, but just before the battle of San Jacinto Reason was detailed to take the women and children across the Sabine river into Louisiana, and thus did not participate in the great battle which culminated the war. When he came to Texas, Reason Green brought a negro named Tom and subsequently bought two girls, Eady and Silvi, and in time he had about thirty-five slaves on his plantation. From Bolivar he went up the Trinity river and located three miles north of Liberty on a league of land and established one of the very early sugar plantations in the Trinity valley. His farm there he conducted until after the war, and until his negroes were free, and thereafter lived at Dayton, Liberty county, until 1867, and then went to Tuxpan, Mexico, and purchased land with the intention of settling upon it, but his death occurred within three days after his return home. He passed away at the age of sixty-seven. Reason Green possessed a fair education, had splendid native business ability, had no church affiliations, and no striking peculiarities to distinguish him from the average man of success and ability. He was married in Mississippi to a Miss Rogers, of Scotch-Irish descent, and both are buried in Liberty county in the old French Cemetery on the Reason Green league of land. The children of their marriage were: Stephen; John J., of Del Rio, Texas; Free D. of Falfurias, Texas; Hannah Jane, who married Sanders A. Hardin and died in Liberty Reese, who was killed as a Confederate soldier.

Stephen Green, father of the county official first named, was born at Bolivar Point, Texas, in 1828, the oldest child of his father, and after a very meager education gave his attention chiefly to farming and owned a few slaves before the war. He was never active in politics, and in the early days the family were Whigs, but later Democrats. Stephen Green married Jerusha Hardin, daughter of Blackburn B. Hardin, who came to Texas about 1825, and lived with the Indians until his mother came to Texas in 1829. In 1830 located a grant of land which he had received in Liberty county, and the first two crops raised on that land were made without any fencing, although his negroes had to keep the deer from eating the grain. Blackburn B. Hardin married Miss Devers, and reared the following family of children: Sanders A.; Jerusha, who married Stephen Green; Cornelia, who first married Jeremiah Vandeventer and second C. W. D. McNeil, and died in Liberty county; Sarah, who married Abner McMurry and also died in Liberty county; Swan, who spent his life in Liberty county. The only child of Stephen Green and wife is William B. Green.

It was on the old Hardin league of land in Liberty county that William B. Green was born July 17, 1857. His father lived until 1904, but his mother passed away in June 1887, at the age of fifty-six. During his early life on the farm Mr. Green walked three miles to a log school in his neighborhood and grew up among the conditions which existed in the '60s and '70s. During his boyhood there were no free schools, and while his father paid the teacher for one term, a neighbor named Richard Barrett contributed the salary for the next. On leaving school Mr. Green engaged in the stock business, and remained at the old home near Liberty and still owns the place where he spent his childhood. He left it when he took office in Liberty, his parents remaining on the farm, and Mr. Green's own children were reared there. He always has been identified with the stock business, and has done a great deal to introduce new blood through this part of the state, having handled chiefly the Durham, the Hereford and the Burmah cattle, the last seeming the best adapted to this climate.

Mr. Green was elected county tax assessor in 1896, succeeding Henry Stenoff in the same year, and has been elected each succeeding two years since. Previous to taking that office he was for eight years county commissioner. During his administration the new courthouse of Liberty county was built in addition to the regular work and duties each commissioner was expected to perform. In 1914 Mr. Green declined to become a candidate for re-election. During the twenty-six years of his official

He had opposition for election only two times. His record stands out conspicuously for its efficiency and also for the artistic character of his books, and his reports on file at Austin are second to none in accuracy and artistic quality.

Mr. Green has membership in none of the fraternities, though every male member of his family, father and uncles and grandfather, were Masons. None of the family have taken part in church affairs. Mr. Green was married January 10, 1878, to Joanna Abshier, daughter of Isaac Abshier, who came from Louisiana and settled in Texas during the early days. Mr. Green and wife have two children: Adelia and W. Jeff. Adelia by her marriage to E. T. Scessna of Hardin Lake, in Liberty county, has the following children: Ruth, Mabel, Guy, Blackburn and Burnice. W. Jeff married Miss Hallie Conley and his two daughters are Agnes and Josie.

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN A. WHARTON. The following brief sketch, which was prepared by Captain B. F. Veems of Houston, Texas, who served in the Confederate army with General Wharton, affords some valuable data on a distinguished Texas name, and is a worthy memorial to a family which is now without descendant in the "Lone Star state."

Major General John A. Wharton, C. S. A., was born in 1829, the only son of Wm. H. Wharton, who came to Texas from Tennessee in 1826 and married Sarah A. Groce, only daughter of Colonel Jared E. Groce, of Hempstead, Texas. His brother, John A. Wharton, after several visits to Texas settled here in 1829. The two brothers at once became prominent in the infant colony, with the history of whose struggles and triumphs their names were thenceforth to be so intimately associated.

John A. Wharton, Jr., reared in the atmosphere of the Texas Revolution, early developed a rare combination of ability with ambition, and ascendancy over those with whom he came in contact. He was educated in the University of South Carolina, and married the daughter of Governor David Johnson of that state.

He adopted the profession of law, and when the war broke out in 1861 had already made his ability conspicuous, and was associated in his law practice with Clinton Terry at Brazoria and James Masterson in Houston.

When Frank Terry raised his famous Cavalry Regiment "Terry's Texas Rangers," Wharton joined it with a company and when Terry was killed in Kentucky, when his regiment for the first time came under fire, and Lieut. Col. Lubbock died of sickness at Nashville, Tenn., soon afterward, Wharton was elected Colonel of the regiment. After arduous service on the retreat of General Albert Sydney Johnston's army from Kentucky to Corinth, Mississippi, Wharton distinguished himself in the battle of Shiloh, and was severely wounded there. In Forrest's mashing raid through middle Tennessee, Wharton was again wounded (when Murfreesboro was captured in July, 1862), and had not fully recovered when he rejoined his regiment for the invasion of Kentucky under Bragg and Kirby Smith. Just before the battle of Perryville, Wharton's brilliant charge at Bardstown (where with greatly inferior force he defeated by impetuous attack a movement fraught with great peril to our forces) won him promotion to rank of Brigadier General.

His services before and during the battle of Murfreesboro (Stones River), and with Wheeler's raid through Tennessee while Rosencrans was at Chattanooga, and, later, in the campaign ending at Chickamanga, gained him a Major General's star. He was transferred west of the Mississippi in 1864, to command the Cavalry corps to be organized in that department, and arriving just after Dick Taylor had routed Banks' army, first at Mansfield and again at Pleasant Hill, Wharton handled the cavalry of the army with such skill and energy in the pursuit of Banks down Red River, as brought him high compliments from General Taylor in general orders to his army.

In an altercation with one of his subordinate officers, Colonel Baylor, Wharton was killed at Houston, Texas, April 6, 1865, and so, without descendants, passed this noble line from Texas history.

JOHN G. MCCONNELL. An interested principal in the McLean Drug Company, one of the leading retail concerns of the kind in the city of Crockett, Mr. McConnell has gained secure prestige as one of the alert, progressive and representative business men of the younger generation in his native city and county, and that he is a scion in the third generation of the family in Houston county indicates that the name has been identified with the history of this section of the Lone Star state since the pioneer days, even as it has been one exponent of high personal integrity and large and worthy achievement.

John Grady McConnell was born at Crockett, the judicial center of Houston county, Texas, on the 6th of June, 1891, and is a son of John A. and Luella (Nations) McConnell, well known and highly honored citizens of Crockett, where the father has long been prominent as a business man and as a loyal and public-spirited citizen. He whose name initiates this review still remains at the parental home and in his native city it may consistently be said that his circle of friends is coincident with that of his acquaintances.

John McConnell, grandfather of the enterprising young business man to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born and reared in Ireland and was a representative of one of the fine old families of the Emerald Isle. As a young man, ambitious and self-reliant, he finally severed the ties that bound him to his native land, and, in company with five of his brothers, immigrated to America, shortly after the close of the war of 1812. The sturdy brothers landed in the port of New York, and in the national metropolis John McConnell soon afterward became separated from his brothers, whom he never saw again and concerning whom he never thereafter gained any trace. From New York city he made his way to New Orleans and thence proceeded up the Mississippi river to St. Louis, from which city he soon afterward returned to New Orleans. From the Louisiana metropolis he went to Shreveport, in the northwestern part of that state, and thence crossed over the border into Texas, by way of Nacogdoches, the journey being made on foot and along an Indian trail through a wild and uninhabited country. Upon arriving at San Augustine, Texas, the adventurous young son of Erin's isle there engaged in the work of his trade, that of blacksmith, and several months later he retraced his steps to the north and found employment at his trade in the little frontier town of Nacogdoches. Finally, he determined to return to his native land, after a varied experience in the frontier wilds, and he set forth on another pedestrian tour, with Galveston as his destination and with the expectation of there embarking on some vessel and setting sail for Ireland. En route he stopped in the little town of Douglass, Nacogdoches county, where he worked for a time and replenished his limited exchequer. Upon again setting forth for Galveston he had proceeded only a few miles when he was overtaken by citizens of Douglass, who earnestly importuned him to return to that point and continue in the work of his trade, as an artisan of the kind was much needed in the town. He yielded to the request thus made and a year later he again became imbued with a desire to return to Ireland. For a third time he started for Galveston and while en route he passed one night as a guest in the home of Daniel McLean, and the second night in the home of Joseph Rice. In this connection it is pleasing to record that many years later one of his sons wedded a daughter of the McLean family and one of his daughters became the wife of a son of the Rice family. John McConnell made his way on foot from Douglass to Crockett, and in the embryonic capital of Houston county he found attractions and advantages that caused him to abandon his plan of returning to his native land. Here he established his permanent home; here was solemnized his marriage; and here he passed the residue of his long and useful life. Upon arriving at Crockett Mr. McConnell found that the only blacksmith in the town had recently died, and he accordingly decided to open a shop and engage permanently in the work of his trade, to which he here devoted his attention for many years, with a patronage that was drawn from a wide area of the pioneer country. He was a specially skillful workman and his reputation as such grew apace, with the result that patrons from far and near came to avail themselves of his services. During the Civil war he was the only blacksmith for miles around and while he had manifested a desire to enter the Confederate service as a soldier in the ranks, it was realized that his interposition would prove of equal if not greater value in remaining at home and doing the blacksmith work for the farmers, who could thus keep their implements in order and raise the crops insistently demanded in providing rations for the southern forces in the field. He was thus detailed at the instance of the Confederate authorities and he labored early and late to his part in furthering the cause. Many of the plows he made by hand, and he burned his charcoal at night to provide fuel for his forge work during the day of incessant labor. Industry, honesty and frugality enabled Mr. McConnell to gain success and independence, and he finally retired from the work of his trade to establish the first hardware store in Crockett. He built up a large and prosperous business, continued to be identified with the same until his death, and, without interruption, the enterprise has since perpetuated the family name, as it is now conducted by his sons R. E. and Daniel, sterling citizens of Crockett. Of impregnable integrity, this honored pioneer commanded inviolable place in popular confidence and esteem, and he was not only a man of brawn but also of brain, so that he was well fitted for the positions of public trust to which he was called. He served for a long period as treasurer of Houston county, and was one of the early and valued members of the village council of Crockett, as was he later of the city board of aldermen. He was most alert and progressive as a citizen and in the ante-bellum days he owned a number of slaves. Tenacious of his opinions and well fortified in his convictions, he was ever ready to defend the cause of right and also his personal independence, with the result that he gained no little reputation for his prowess in fistieuff altercations with those who roused his righteous ire. His ability in this direction is frequently referred to by the venerable pioneers of the present day who knew and admired him. He was the soul of generosity and kindness, he "remembered those who were forgotten," and his buoyant, optimistic disposition made him friends without number. He was an earnest member of the Baptist church and in the Masonic fraternity he attained to the degrees of the chivalric order, as a member of the commandery of Knights Templar in his home city. He first wedded Miss Mary Jane Dickerson, who proved a devoted wife and mother and who was survived by three children,—Elizabeth, who is now deceased; William B., who is a representative citizen of Crockett; and John A., who is the father of the subject of this review. For his second wife John McConnell married Miss Martha Lovelady, who survived him by several years, and they became the parents of five children,—Philip, who died in middle life; H. G., who is engaged in the practice of law at Haskell, Texas, as a representative member of the bar of the county of that name; R. E. and Daniel, who continue the hardware business established by their father; and Esther, who is the wife of A. W. Burton, a prominent merchant, cotton factor and landowner of Crockett and one of the wealthy men of Houston county.

John A. McConnell was born and reared at Crockett, and his early educational advantages were those afforded in the schools of the locality and period. As a youth he was associated with his father in the blacksmith business for a number of years and later he and his brother William B. were associated as auction salesmen, in which field of enterprise they gained high reputation, their services being in demand throughout their native state. William B. McConnell finally engaged in the dry-goods business at Crockett, where he has since continued operations in this line, and for several years John A. McConnell was buyer for this representative mercantile establishment. Since 1907 the latter has been engaged in the same line of enterprise in an independent way and has built up a large and prosperous business in Crockett, where he has ever had secure vantage-ground in popular confidence and esteem. He is one of the broad-minded, progressive and public-spirited citizens of his native county and state and has ever shown a loyal interest in all that concerns the general welfare of the community, especially the cause of popular education. It was largely through his zealous efforts and propaganda that the supervision of the public schools of Crockett was segregated from political influence and vested a board of trustees instead of the board of aldermen, as formerly. Under these conditions there has been made splendid advancement in the work of the schools, which are now of specially high standard. Mr. McConnell has given his influence and support in the furtherance of progressive civic measures and enterprises but has manifested no predilection for the honors or emoluments of public office. He is affiliated with Lothrop Lodge, No. 21, Ancient Free & Accepted Masons; Trinity Chapter, No. 4, Royal Arch Masons; and Palestine Commandery No. 4, Knights Templar. Both he and his wife are most zealous and devout members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, in their home city, as he served many years as a steward of the same, as well as superintendent of its Sunday school. Mrs. Crockett has long been one of the prominent and loved figures in the best social activities of Crockett and is known as a woman of most gracious personality and of high intellectual attainments. She was born at French Camp, Mississippi, a representative of an old and honored southern family, and she came to Crockett, Texas, when a young woman, where she became a teacher of telegraphy and stenography in a private school known as the Crockett Academy. Here she met and wedded John A. McConnell, and of their four children the eldest is John G., whose name introduces this article, and who remains at the parental home, as do also the other three,—William, Edward, and Eugene Hendricks.

To the public schools of his native city John G. McConnell is indebted for his early educational training, which was effectively supplemented by higher academic study in Alexandria Collegiate Institute, at Jacksonville, this state. He has shown marked interest in literary and educational affairs and at one time was editor and publisher of a most attractive little magazine, known as The Pioneer. He has found much satisfaction in studying Texas history and is a young man of broad mental ken as well as excellent business acumen. His progressiveness has been shown in divers ways, including zealous and effective service in the promotion and development of the Houston County Fair Association and the establishing in Crockett of the open-air theater known as the Aerodrome, of which he had personal supervision until he sold the same. He gained thorough training in the drug business as an employe in an establishment in his native city, and on the 1st of June, 1912, he made appreciable capitalistic investment in the McLean Drug Company, in which he has since been an interested principal and valued executive, the concern having a finely equipped and essentially metropolitan retail establishment, which is conceded to be one of the best in this section of the state and which receives a large and representative pat-onage. Mr. McConnell clings to the political and religious faiths in which he was reared, and thus is found arrayed as a staunch supporter of the cause of the Democratic party, while his religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He is one of the representative young business men of his native city and is one of the most popular young bachelors in the leading social life of the community.

DUPONT B. LYON. A veteran of the Spanish-American war, former United States army officer, a lumberman and Jersey cattle breeder, Mr. Lyon has a distinctive place in business and public affairs of Sherman and the state. His birth at Texarkana, Texas, March 7, 1876, was the first birth of a male child in what is now the city of Texarkana. His parents, Oliver T. and Lydia D. (Dupont) Lyon, located at Texarkana, in the very early days, and the father was the first mayor elected after the village had been made a city.

Mr. Lyon was educated in the common schools and at the Pennsylvania Military College, where he graduated in 1896. He subsequently took a course in architecture, but never practiced that profession. Upon his return to Texas in 1897 he became associated with his father in the lumber business as a member of the firm of O. T. Lyon & Son, with offices at Sherman. He was twenty-two years of age when the Spanish-American war broke out, and Mr. Lyon partly owing to a natural ardor for military affairs, and partly due to his military training was one of the Texas volunteers, taking the captaincy of company F of the Third Texas regiment. He served with the volunteer forces until February 28, 1899, at which date he returned to Sherman and then took an examination for the regular army. He passed with credit and was appointed lieutenant in the Sixteenth United States infantry, and in September, 1899, was ordered to the Philippine Islands. He served with the regiment in the far east until 1902, at which time he resigned his commission and returned to Sherman. He again resumed business relations with his father and has since been one of the prominent lumbermen of North Texas.

On June 6, 1910, Mr. Lyon was appointed United States Marshall for the eastern district of Texas, and served until November 30, 1912. Mr. Lyon is one of the best known Jersey cattlebreeders in the entire country. He is the owner of a ranch of more than one thousand acres, and this large estate is entirely devoted to the raising of the very finest stock of Jersey cattle. He has more than two hundred head on his farm, and they are all registered stock. The Lyon Creamery located in Sherman, utilizes the products from his large herd of cows, making butter, distributing the milk and cream, and is a profitable enterprise. The Lyon cattle ranch is known by reputation to every well informed stock man in the country. Mr. Lyon is a director of the Jersey Cattle Club of America, the headquarters of which are located on Twenty-Third Street in New York City. This club is incorporated, maintains a fine club house, and is said to be the most distinctive cattle club in the country.

Mr. Lyon at the present writing is candidate for mayor of Sherman, without opposition, and is looked upon as the most desirable citizen who could be induced to administer the affairs of the city. Mr. Lyon married Miss Lizzie L. Fletcher, daughter of Charles F. Fletcher of Detroit, Michigan, Mr. Fletcher having been a leading business man of Detroit.

JUDGE D. A. HOLMAN was born in Marion, Alabama, October 7, 1834. His father, Major David Holman, was from Davis county, North Carolina, who married Miss Elizabeth McKinney, daughter of Major Wilson McKinney, who served in the Florida wars. In 1836 the family moved to Carroll county, Mississippi, and settled on a farm. From that union eight brothers and two sisters were born; and five of the brothers graduated in medicine and achieved distinction in their profession.

In 1850, David A. entered Howard College, Marion, Alabama, and though married before graduating, held the highest certificate ever signed by the faculty prior to that time.

In June, 1853, he was married to Miss Sarah R. Smith, a relative of Senator R. M. T. Hunter, and the niece and ward of General E. D. King, a wealthy farmer, ex-member of the legislature, and president of the Board of Trustees of Howard College. In January, 1854, the new family settled on a farm in Carroll county, Mississippi.

In 1856 he was regularly ordained as a Baptist minister, and as such, as missionary under appointment of Yazoo Baptist Association, baptized a great many negroes, many of whom were owned by himself and wife, together with many whites within his charge.

In 1866, broken up by the incidents of the war, he was admitted to the bar as a practicing attorney, and at once arose to a large and lucrative practice in Mississippi.

In 1880 he removed to Decatur in Wise county, Texas, and in 1890 removed to Seymour, Texas, where he has since resided in the practice of his profession. In both places he arose to high distinction before the bench and bar as one of the leading lawyers of that section of the state.

As a religionist, he has always been a leading factor in his denomination, having been leading counsel for Dr. Hayden in the celebrated case of Hayden & Canfield, which after seven years contest, with four different trials, was finally successful.

Politically he has always been a Democrat, and took a prominent part in its various contests, but never himself held a political office, though often appointed special district and county judge by various governors of the state, and whose decisions were never reversed.

By his first marriage he had six children, four sons and two daughters, two of the sons being prominent attorneys in Texas, one in real estate business in California, and one other deceased. The daughters have married and are in comfortable circumstances. In 1884 he married Emma J. Freeman, a native of Mississippi, by whom he had four sons and one daughter. His eldest, a daughter, married Prof. C. O. Brannon, principal of the public school at Petrolia, Texas. David A., Jr., is chief clerk of the First National Bank at Munday, Texas. The others are at home and at school.

Judge Holman was noted for his constant and persistent attendance at his office and application to the study of authorities in the law, accumulating a vast fund of legal information, from which his opinions were accepted as law by the younger members of the bar, to whom he was always courteous in consultation and assistance, and was highly respected by the courts. In his long career as a practicing attorney he enjoys the satisfaction to know that no client has ever complained of his efficiency or fidelity in representing their interests.

JUDGE THOMAS C. BUFFINGTON, who has spent his entire life in Central Texas, and who is a native of Washington county, this state, was born December 29, 1840, and during his long, interesting and eventful career has been identified with the agricultural, commercial and political interests of his native community. His father, Rev. Anderson Buffington, a San Jacinto veteran and a pioneer to Texas of the year 1835, belonged to Houston's army and took part in the famous battle that made Texas a commonwealth, and helped to guard the aged Santa Anna after his capture. He was a native of South Carolina, where he was born January 26, 1806, and died at Anderson, Texas, December 20, 1891.

Rev. Anderson Buffington went to school but three weeks during his life, his education being secured in a newspaper office at Nashville. The presence of a stepmother in the home caused him and his little brother John (who subsequently went to the Indian territory) to run away in childhood, and from thenceforward he was responsible for himself. He learned the printer's trade, which he followed at Nashville, Tennessee, until the year 1835, when he brought out his young wife and infant son by boat to the landing on Red river and from there wended his way through the hostile country of the Texas plains to his destination at Old Washington. His means of transportation consisted of an ox-wagon and he went into camp at the Fuqua home in the fall of 1836, on the very night that the Indians murdered Mr. Tidwell and carried off his wife and child captive from Roan's Prairie. Soon after he settled at Old Washington, he erected a sawmill on the Brazos and floated logs down from the cedar brakes above and made them into lumber. The house in which he lived and which was made historic by the signing of the declaration was only a one-story box, with puncheon floor and pole studding, and covered with clapboards. Isabella Buffington, now Isabella Hobert, was born in this house. Converted young, Rev. Buffington became a Baptist preacher, and baptized the first person ever immersed in the Brazos river at Old Washington. He entered the field of pioneer journalism at this point, when he founded The Tarantula, at Old Washington, and became a writer for many of the old papers of Texas. He continued in the ministry while the vigor of life remained with him and was a contemporary of Revs. Morrill, Craft and Tryon, other pioneer Baptist ministers. He was an unassuming man, but was ready for a contest for the right with all comers and could ably maintain his ground. He was a decided man for the Union upon the issues of the Civil war and supported the policies of Gen. Sam Houston, being one of the very few men of Grimes county to cast a Union ballot. His sympathy was with the cause only because he had sons in the Confederate army, John and T. C. Buffington and his aid to the southern people was sincere and conspicuous. After the close of hostilities he voted a mixed ticket and refrained from following the prejudice engendered by the war. He was a merchant at Anderson, where he moved in 1847, and kept a hotel here. He was a strong Mason, and an old one, as was the father-in-law of Judge Buffington, Doctor Patrick. Rev. Anderson Buffington was married October 1, 1834, at Nashville, Tennessee, to Paralee C. Cabler, who was born March 11, 1816, daughter of a Tennessee farmer, and died October 7, 1900. They became the parents of these children: John, who was in Colonel Elmo's regiment and served on the coast of the Gulf during the Civil war, and died at Navasota, leaving a family; Mrs. Isabella Hubbard, who resides at Anderson; Judge Thomas C.; and Paralee and Emma, who are both deceased.

Judge Thomas C. Buffington received a country school education of the pioneer times at Anderson, and while growing up spent some time in a printing office. He was employed as a clerk in Navasota when the war between the states broke out, and in August, 1861, he entered the Confederate army as a member of Company G, Fourth Regiment, Texas, Hood's Brigade, under Captain Hutchinson, while his colonel was John B. Hood, the gallant general who later led the great Army of the Tennessee. The command marched across Louisiana, through the rain and water, a part of the time barefoot and even with trousers off when the water was deep, and went to New Orleans, from whence it proceeded by railroad to Richmond, Virginia. Subsequently the command took part in Second Manassas, where Judge Buffington was captured. He was taken to Washington City, but was exchanged after thirty days and returned to his company. He next participated in the battle of Elkins Landing, and was also in the engagements at Seven Pines, Frazier's Farm, Gaines Mill and Malvern Hill, on the Peninsula, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Chancellorsville, Cold Harbor, Petersburg also, Chickamauga, then Chattanooga, Knoxville, and back up into Virginia, and fought until the close of the war, being at Greensboro, North Carolina, at the time of the surrender of General Lee. Although in a number of the most sanguine battles of the great struggle, Judge Buffington was never wounded.

When his military service was completed, Judge Buffington returned to Texas and engaged in farming, as well as merchandising, the former having received the major part of his attention. He has been responsible for the clearing and breaking of fully 1,000 acres of land and making a farm of it. He has always traded in cattle and in this way has been a stockman, and at one time was also a feeder and shipper of stock. Judge Buffington has been more or less active in county politics as a Democrat, voted for U. S. Grant for president and served as justice of the peace several years ago, also was elected county judge, acting in that capacity for five consecutive terms. He was ex-officio county superintendent of schools and his work embraced the direction of the county's finances and its education. As a convention man, Judge Buffington has attended almost every state convention since the war. He helped nominate as a delegate every governor from Coke to Colquitt, and was one of the original Wilson men of Texas.

Judge Buffington was married January 8, 1866, to Miss Martha B. Patrick, a daughter of Doctor Patrick, once chief justice of the county of Grimes, a Kentucky settler, and a member of President Burnett's staff at the battle of San Jacinto. He was several times grand master of the Masonic lodge of the state, but with all his accomplishments and achievements was a modest man, and did not court public favor. Doctor Patrick married Miss Martha Scaif, and they became the parents of four daughters and a son. Two children have been born to Judge and Mrs. Buffington: Grace, who married John I. Bradley, and died here leaving two children,—Irvin and Lillian; and Thomas Patrick, a farmer and lawyer, who has been prominent in public affairs of the state.

Judge Thomas Patrick Buffington, son of Judge Thomas C. Buffington, was born at Anderson, Texas, November 23, 1870. After completing his preliminary training, he became a student in the State University of Texas, where he was graduated in law in 1892, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. At that time he engaged in practice in Houston, as a partner of F. L. Schwander, as Schwander & Buffington, and practiced so until 1896, when he came back to Anderson to become a member of the firm of Buffington & Buffington. His work has been both civil and criminal, and in 1904 he became county judge to succeed Judge J. G. McDonald. During his two terms the county business occupied the greater part of his time. He was chosen as a representative from Grimes county to the Thirty-second Legislature in 1910, and was on the judiciary, education and military affairs committees. In political work, Judge Buffington represented Judge Ramsey in his aspirations for governor of Texas, and his first state convention was in Houston, since which time he has attended practically all of them.

Judge Buffington was married at Anderson, December 23, 1902, to Miss Vivienne Taylor, a daughter of William and Hattie Taylor, the former a merchant of Anderson, and to this union there have been born four children: Vivienne, Thomas, Beverly and Lillian Claire. In Masonry Judge Buffington is a past master and has been eminent commander of Ivanhoe Commandery No. 8, high priest of Jerusalem Chapter No. 3, and a Shriner, all of Texas, belonging to Ben Hur Temple, at Austin. He is past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to Bryan Lodge No. 859, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Judge Buffington is not unknown in financial circles, being vice president of the First National Bank of Anderson. At the time of the outbreak of hostilities between the United States and Spain, Judge T. P. Buffington was a member of the Shaw Rifles, at Navasota, with which company he went to the rendezvous camp at Austin, as first lieutenant. The command was ordered from Austin to the front at Mobile, and subsequently was sent to Miami, Florida, where he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, and where the command remained until the close of the war.

LESLIE C. LAMASTER. Engaged in real estate and abstract of title business at Honey Grove, Leslie C. LaMaster has for many years been an important factor as citizen and business man, and his services in the establishment of law and order in the community are especially well remembered. When Mr. LaMaster came to the town of Honey Grove its business places were three dry goods stores, a drug store and a tinshop, and his personal relations with the village have been continuous since 1876.

Born in Garrard county, Kentucky, July 17, 1848, Leslie C. LaMaster is the son of James R. LaMaster, who was born in Henry county, Kentucky, in 1814. The grandfather was James LaMaster, Sr., of French ancestry, who was a Garrard county planter, and whose wife, Sallie Reid, was of Scotch-Irish stock and a native of Virginia, born in 1780 and dying near Honey Grove, Texas, in 1865. James R. LaMaster was liberally educated, spent a year or so as a school teacher, and then became a slaveholding planter. He was a Whig, opposed to secession, but after the war acted with the Democratic party. He was an Episcopalian in religion. In 1859 he settled in Fannin county, Texas, and bought seven hundred acres of land on the Titus Survey. In the development and cultivation of that land his remaining years were spent, and he died in December, 1871. His wife, Mary Ann Anderson, was the daughter of James Anderson, and their children were: Leslie C.; Mattie, deceased; High, of Oklahoma City; William, who died at Panola, Texas; Mary Alice, deceased, who married Thomas L. Clay; James G., of Honey Grove; Bettie, who died in 1884 unmarried; and Jennie, who married J. H. Lloyd of Paris.

Leslie G. LaMaster received a limited education in Honey Grove. As a young man taught school one term, went to work on a farm, and then became identified with the activities of Honey Grove. His election as chief of police in 1876 inaugurated a new era in the community, and his experience is interesting as a record of conditions that prevailed to a greater or less extent among many north Texas communities during the '70s and '80s. In the country districts around the town lived an element that periodically visited Honey Grove, resorted to the saloons, and when sufficiently elevated by liquor became a threatening and noisy factor to the peaceable inhabitants. For several years these "bad men" had conducted their incursions regularly and without effective resistance. Mr. LaMaster had been in office but a few months when the gang from the country offered its first insult to the town. They came, spent a few hours in noisy celebration, and went away unmolested. But the new chief sent the leader word to come to town and surrender, plead guilty and take his punishment. This method was a new one, and brought back the answer that instead of submitting he would ride into town at the head of his men and if molested the marshal would pay his life as forfeit. Some days later the chief of the gang with eight followers appeared on the scene. A pitched battle ensued, in which Mr. LaMaster fought the entire gang, and when the smoke cleared away it was found that the leader had been killed, several others were injured, and the rest got out of town as quickly as possible. Altogether there were seven of these conflicts, and Mr. LaMaster came off victor in all of them. The lawless characters of the district learned a lesson they were a long time in forgetting, and his work effectually broke up the disturbing element in the vicinity.

After leaving his office Mr. LaMaster engaged in the fire insurance business and later began selling real estate. He became an expert on abstracts of title, and has developed a large business in these different lines at Honey Grove. Until retiring in 1911 Mr. LaMaster was for eight years chairman of the school board. During this service a new building was erected, the eleventh grade was added to the regular course of study, title was acquired to the Wall school property, and the school tax was kept to seven-tenths of the allowance for school purposes, while no teacher's voucher was carried over for want of money to meet it. He has also been a factor in other business affairs. He aided in the organization of the Honey Grove Cotton Oil Company, of which he was secretary for a time, was president and manager of the Honey Grove Milling Company, and has other business relations that make him one of the leading men of the community.

Fraternally Mr. LaMaster affiliates with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is Past Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and for two years was captain of the Uniform Rank. He is a Presbyterian and has been a member of the session of the church.

On March 19, 1868, Mr. LaMaster married Miss Margaret E. Moss, daughter of William E. Moss and Mary Lattimore Moss. Mrs. LaMaster was one of three children, the others being Thomas S., deceased, and Mrs. Lucy Atkinson, a widow. Mr. and Mrs. LaMaster have no children, and have given their affection and their means to the care and rearing of relatives' children.

ANDREW J. MARTIN, a west Texas ranchman and associated with many of the financial enterprises of his county, is one of the big farming men of Red River county. He comes of an old family of the ante-bellum days, the head of which was a distinguished citizen of Arkansas, and was intimately connected with the legislative affairs of that commonwealth for many years. That gentleman was Hon. Allen Martin, the father of Andrew J. Martin, who was born in September, 1858.

Allen Martin was born in Georgia in 1801, and in his infant days was brought to Cape Girardeau, Missouri, by his parents, and there he lived until he had reached his majority, obtaining his education in the schools of that place. His father died there in about 1825, about which time the widow and children moved to Arkansas and settled upon the site of the capital of the state. This spot of ground was the property of the Martin family when Little Rock was founded, and the sons and daughters of the family mingled with the active forces in the development of that section of the state, assuming some of the burdens of citizenship themselves. Allen Martin, it may be said, was a son of John Martin of Irish birth and ancestry, who married in his native land, and Oglethorpe's colony had by no means been forgotten in the time when he settled in Georgia, nor was the Revolutionary war more than just concluded when he began the establishment of a new American family, adding a new strain to the mixture of blood and forming a distinct type in the New World. The children of John Martin were as follows: John, who took part in the War of 1812, and passed away in the evening of a long life in Arkansas; Hutchinson and Thomas both died in that state; Allen, the father of the subject, left his imprint upon Arkansas affairs and came to Texas when he was past middle life; Jared became a factor in Arkansas politics and died as treasurer of the state.

Allen Martin was fashioned with a strong and active brain and with a decided disposition to its development and culture. He was a student in school for less than one entire year, yet he accomplished feats of learning without the aid of outside help that were beyond the achievements of many who have shared in a complete collegiate training. He applied himself heroically and eagerly to the task of getting knowledge, and he found pleasure in the work. He did not enter a profession, but contented himself with the use of the compass and chain, in which work he made himself useful to the state as a representative of the professional forces of the commonwealth. Mr. Martin was a resident of the state long prior to its admission to the union in 1836. He was elected to the lower house of the legislature, and served several terms there, as well as in the state senate, in both of which bodies he gave honest and wholesome service.

In 1857 Allen Martin came to Texas, and here devoted himself to the business of stock raising and the development of a new home. He was successful in his work, and came to be one of the most prosperous stockmen in his district. He owned one of the finest libraries in the state, and the greatest joys of his existence he found among his books and papers. He gave his moral support to the Confederacy, as well as furnishing the cause with two sturdy sons, and he lived an open, clean and honorable life, fully demonstrating the faith he had as a Christian gentleman, and he was known by all as a conscientious, consistent representative of the Master. He died in 1872, after a life well spent in the service of his country. Allen Martin married Maria Rowland, and she survived him for one year. They were the parents of John and Thomas, who died in the service of the Confederate cause, the latter named being a Lieutenant who met death at the battle of Iuka; Mahala L., who died unmarried; Samuel C., a stockman of Rudd, Texas; Mary E., the widow of Dr. J. P. Kelley, of Greenville, Texas; Andrew J., of Clarksville; James A. and C. W., of Dallas, Texas; and Lulu, the wife of C. W. Stiles, of White Rock, Texas, where all the younger children were reared.

Andrew J. Martin was born in White Rock, in 1858, as has already been mentioned in an earlier paragraph, and has always given his chief attention to the business of farming. For several years after he left school he was employed as a merchant at Harris' Ferry on the Red River, and he was successful in his business activities to such an extent that he was able to accumulate a vast tract of fertile land in Red River county, where his twelve hundred acres under cultivation supports families enough to make necessary a school in that immediate vicinity. His interests in Hansford county include a ranch devoted to the breeding of Hereford cattle, the same comprising several sections, and being one of the fine ranches of this section of the state. Mr. Martin is devoted to ranch and rural life, and finds his greatest enjoyment in his free ranch life, though his has long been a most strenuous existence, and one that calls for all the qualities that make for success in his business. He has a financial interest in the First State Bank of Clarksville and the First State Bank of Annona, and occupies the important office of president of each of these institutions, which are reckoned among the solid financial concerns of the county. Mr. Martin has never given any evidence of cherishing political ambition of any sort, and his activity in politics has been only as a layman in the ranks of the Democratic faction, whose adherent he has long been.

On January 9, 1878, Mr. Martin was married in Red River county to Miss Mary A. Dowdy, whose father came to this state from Nashville, Tennessee, and was long occupied here as a farmer. Of the three children who were born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin two are deceased, Allen and John; Leila, the surviving daughter, finished her education in the College of Industrial Arts at Denton. The family is one that enjoys the highest regard of all who share in their acquaintance, and the name has long been one of the greatest influence in the state. Mr. Martin is a worthy successor of his honored father, Allen Martin, and has done much in his quiet and unostentatious way to merit the place he occupies in public confidence and esteem.

BEN J. JOHNSON, prosperous and well known farmer and stockman and member of the board of county commissioners of Jefferson county, is the representative of one of the oldest pioneer families in the county. He was born at Sabine Pass, Jefferson county, in 1849, and has been a resident of the place all his life. Training in the cattle business was his from his boyhood, and he has handled cattle all his life, so that it is small wonder that he should have evolved so decided a success from his independent activities in the enterprise.

Ben J. Johnson is the son of Ben and Rachel (Garner) Johnson, both natives of Louisiana. The father came to Texas in 1836 and joined the Texas army, although he failed to reach San Jacinto in time for the decisive battle at that place. A short time later he settled at Sabine Pass, at the mouth of the Sabine river, in Jefferson county, and was one of the first settlers there. He spent the remainder of his life in that place, dying in 1868. He was in the Texas militia during the Civil war, and two of his sons served in the regular Confederate army, serving through the long war in Whitfield's Legion, while still another son served in Speight's Battalion.

Ben J. Johnson was reared at Sabine Pass, and the place has always been his home. He is a farmer and stockman, as has been said, and he has a fine ranch one and a half miles from Sabine Pass. He was reared to the cattle business, his father having been a successful ranchman. Although cattle from this section of Texas have always been sent to New Orleans, Mr. Johnson made one trip with western cattle over the old Chisholm trail through Indian Territory to Kansas, making the trip successfully and with little mishap. Mr. Johnson remembers vividly and talks most interestingly of the early days about Sabine Pass, and he witnessed as a boy the capture of two gunboats and some three hundred Federal soldiers by Dick Dowling, in command of fifty-two men, at Sabine Pass.

Mr. Johnson, in addition to his place in Sabine Pass, also has a nice farm at Nome, also in Jefferson county, and he is very well situated in the matter of the goods of this world.

A citizen of the highest integrity, it is but fitting that the people of the county should have honored Mr. Johnson unusually in a public way. In 1882 he was elected county commissioner and he has been re-elected at every succeeding election since that time, being still a member of the board and serving with all his early efficiency, and to the entire satisfaction of the voters and taxpayers.

Mr. Johnson is a Mason, a member of the Woodmen of the World, and he has membership in the Baptist church. He has been twice married. His first wife was Caroline Townsend, and after her demise he married Joanna Griffith. Four children were born of the first union: Mrs. Mame Smith; Brad Johnson; George Johnson and Andrew Johnson. The children of the second union are seven in number, named as follows: Lee, Ben, Valerie, William, Neal, Katie and Pat Johnson.

CAPT. ALLEN CARTER JONES. A large and distinctive contribution to progress and local development in Bee county was made by the late Capt. Allen Carter Jones, who was a prominent cattleman, a pioneer merchant and actively identified with various organizations of the first enterprises in this section of the state. In every community death is always taking its toll from the living, however valuable their lives and services. It was a conspicuous member of the community whose life came to an end on March 2, 1905, and the people of Beeville and vicinity paid many tributes of respect to their former associate and friend.

The late Captain Jones was born in Nacogdoches county, Texas, in 1830. The fact of his birth at that place and at that time indicates that the Jones family was one of the first among the American settlers in eastern Texas. His parents were A. C. and Mary Jane Jones, and his grandfather, Jacob Jones, has served as captain in the Revolutionary war, so that few families in Texas are more sure of a creditable American record lineage than the late Captain Jones. The family came to Texas during the period when it was under Mexican dominion, and were among the first American settlers in old Nacogdoches county.

The late Captain Jones was reared in eastern Texas, and began his life as a farmer. At the age of twenty-one he engaged in the cattle business, having as capital $500. This was a small beginning, but the obstacles to success were less in the amount of his capital than in the many natural difficulties which endorsed the setbacks of those times. He experienced all the reverses familiar to the history of the cattle industry and again and again saw his accumulations of stock and capital swept away by the fluctuations of the market, or by the raids of Indians, or the numerous other mishaps and hardships which characterized the livestock interest during his career from the early fifties up to the close of the century. In spite of all these handicaps, Captain Jones was one of the fortunate men in Texas cattle industry who in time became a very wealthy stockman in the northwest part of the state. During his early life and before he had reached manhood the family removed to Goliad county. While his activity was largely devoted to cattle throughout the most of his career, he was also an early day prominent in public affairs and held many important official places and was often honored by his fellow citizens. During 1858-59-60 he served as sheriff of Goliad county. Having removed to Bee county in 1871, he became treasurer of that county, and held the office for six years. At the beginning of the civil war in 1861 he enlisted at Goliad in E. Waller's battalion, under General Dick Taylor's command, and was soon promoted to the rank of captain. He made record of soldierly efficiency and merited all his promotions and honor, during the years he spent in the army. Most of his service was along the Gulf coast and along the Mexican frontier.

From Goliad, Captain Jones removed his headquarters to residence at Beeville in 1871 and for the thirty odd years which remained of his life he was one of the most active men in the upbuilding of his town and the promotion of every enterprise which would increase the prosperity and well being of the community. By men who had some intimate knowledge of his generosity and worth in Beeville's behalf during its early days he is considered worthy of the title of "Father of the town." He was a liberal contributor towards securing the construction of the two railroads—the San Antonio and Kansas Pass and the Southern Pacific—which gave this town important connections with the outside world and placed it in the center of commercial transportation.

The late Captain Jones had the distinction of having built the first pasture fence in Bee county, all of the pastures preceding that time having been open land, and only an occasional field or garden patch was enclosed with fencing. He was also one of the pioneer merchants at Beeville and continued successfully in the mercantile business until 1884. Another enterprise of which he was one of the founders was the First National Bank of Beeville, and he continued as one of its officials up to the time of his death. All these interests, however, were secondary issues to his chief enterprise, which throughout his life was always the cattle business.

In his business character he won the distinction among his associates of always having his promises regarded as good as a bond and signature. The late Captain Jones was twice married. In 1854 he married Miss Margaret L. Whitby, who died a few years later. She left three children: Martha, who married as Mrs. James F. Scott, of Corpus Christi; William C., of Corpus Christi, and Mrs. Clara Berry, of Beeville. The marriage of Captain Jones to Miss Caroline Fields occurred in 1871 at Goliad, her former home. Mrs. Jones, who survives her husband, was born in Panola county, Mississippi, a daughter of Calvin J. and Caroline (Rupe) Fields, both of whom are natives of Tennessee, whence they removed to Mississippi. Calvin J. Field was a brother of the William Field, who acquired a large degree of fame in Texas as the author of "The Scrap Book." Mrs. Jones was a child when her family came to Texas, and, having lost her mother early in life, was reared in the home of her grandparents. The family lived in Gonzales county until she was sixteen years of age, at which time they removed to Goliad, where in 1871 her marriage occurred. She has been a witness of the most important developments of progress and industry of southwest Texas during the last sixty years, and was a valuable assistant to her late husband in his business affairs, which she has very successfully carried on since his death. Mrs. Jones is the director of the First National Bank and one of the most esteemed ladies of the social circles of Bee county.

GEORGE G. MARKLEY. A young Jasper county lawyer of exceptional enterprise, a hard worker, and of varied ability not only in his profession, but in business affairs, George G. Markley has been a resident of Texas for about ten years, and came to Jasper without a cent and more than that a stranger in a strange land.

He was born in Clermont county, Ohio, in 1882, but was reared and educated at Cincinnati. For three years he taught school, and then engaged in the insurance business in Chicago. After that he spent a couple of years in farming in New Mexico, and in 1903 arrived in Texas. Here he studied and finished the shorthand course in the Tyler Commercial College. Then in 1904 he moved to Jasper to take the position of official court reporter for the First Judicial District, under Judge Wm. B. Powell. This district comprises the counties of Jasper, Newton, Orange, Tyler, Sabine, and San Augustine. Since that date Mr. Markley has been a resident of Jasper, and filled the position of court reporter officially for eight years. His service ended in 1912. In the meantime he had pursued the study of law privately and since his admission to the bar in January, 1913, has found his services and abilities much in demand, since his previous experience as a reporter gave him unusual preparation for the practical work of his profession.

Besides his law practice as a diversion, Mr. Markley is very successfully engaged in the automobile business, being local representative for the Overland Car in the three counties of Jasper, Newton and Tyler. Although he was almost penniless when he reached Jasper, Mr. Markley now has a beautiful home in the town, and has laid the foundation for a substantial prosperity. He was one of the promoters of the Universal stenotype, a shorthand, writing machine. He organized the company which placed that machine on the market, and is now manufacturing it. This is the Universal Stenotype Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, with which organization Mr. Markley is secretary and treasurer.

In Chicago, Mr. Markley was united in marriage with Miss Ella Publow of that city. They are the parents of one son, George G. Jr. Fraternally Mr. Markley is a Mason.

JOHN ARTHUR PLATT. Since the founding of the town of Groveton, now the county seat of Trinity county, the name Platt has been closely and intimately identified with local citizenship, and affairs. In point of continuous years in business, the oldest merchant in Bryant Allen Platt, who has likewise been prominent in citizenship. John Arthur, his son, now ranks as one of the ablest attorneys and members of the bar of Trinity county. John Arthur Platt was born at New Iberia, Louisiana, in 1884, a son of Bryant Allen and Maggie (Jones) Platt. His father, who was born in Miller county, Georgia, in 1859, came to Texas in 1877, first locating at Crockett in Houston county. He was thoroughly experienced in the lumber industry and spent three years at Beaumont as a sawyer in the lumber mills. In October 1882 he moved to Trinity county, and became a sawyer in the first lumber mill established at Groveton. The establishment of that mill was the signal for laying out of the town site, and thus he became one of its first residents, and with the exception of a short period spent at New Iberia, Louisiana, has lived here continuously for more than thirty years. In 1889 he severed his connection with the lumber mill, and opened a stock of general merchandise. He has continued a merchant for twenty-four years, and his business has been one of large financial success. He is also vice president of the First National Bank of Groveton. Bryant Platt took a prominent part in the successful campaign and in many other civic movements he has shown great public spirit and energy. An interesting item concerning his early career in Groveton, in connection with the lumber mills is that he directed the sawing of all the lumber used for the flooring and much of the other timber which went into the construction of the State Capitol at Austin. Three children of Bryant A. and Maggie (Jones) Platt, are I. A. Platt, Mrs. Mary Chinn, and Miss Hazel Platt.

John Arthur Platt was reared and received his early education at Groveton, and through the liberality and generous assistance of his father was given exceptional educational advantages. In 1902 he graduated from Peacock Military Academy at San Antonio, and in 1904 from the law school of the State University at Austin, with the degree of LL. B. In the same year he began a successful practice of the law at Groveton, at first in partnership with the late Captain J. P. Stevenson, under the firm name of Stevenson & Platt. For four years Mr. Platt served as county attorney, and in that capacity rendered able service in the enforcement of law and order in Groveton and Trinity county. On January 1, 1913, was formed an especially important partnership with Hayne Nelms, under the firm name of Nelms & Platt. This firm composed of two lawyers who have no superior in Trinity county, probably has the most profitable and prosperous practice among all the firms and individuals of the Trinity county bar. They act as general attorneys for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway in Tyler, Polk and Trinity counties, are attorneys for the West Lumber company, the Cameron Lumber interests, and the First National Bank of Groveton besides controlling a large general practice. Mr. Platt is a director in the First National Bank. His church is the Methodist, he is affiliated with the Lodge and Chapter Masonry, also with the Woodmen.

HON. THOMAS B. RIDGELL, one of the prominent young lawyers of Rockwell, Texas, was born in Ellis county, this State in 1875, son of R. R. Ridgell.

R. R. Ridgell, a native of Alabama, removed to Texas just after the close of the Civil war, in which he had participated as a Confederate soldier, a member of Forrest's cavalry. He settled in Ellis county, in 1866, and for several years maintained his home there. Subsequently he removed to Kaufman county, and still later he took up his residence at Dallas, Texas, where he still lives.

It was in Kaufman county that Thomas B. Ridgell was reared. He was educated at the University of Texas, at Austin, and prepared himself for the practice of law. In 1896 he opened an office at Rockwall, the county seat of Rockwall county, and there he has won his way to the front in legal ranks and also has been accorded legislative honor. The first year of his residence at Rockwall, then only twenty-one years of age, he was elected County Attorney, in which and served two years. Subsequently he was elected and served as City Attorney. In 1912, he was elected flitorial representative for the flitorial district composed of Rockwall and Hunt counties, in the Texas State Legislature, and took an active and efficient part in the session of 1913.

Fraternally, Mr. Ridgell is identified with the B. P. O. E., the K. of P. and the M. W. A.

He married Miss Mollie Bailey, who was born and reared in Rockwall county, and they are the parents of a little daughter, Birdie Ridgell.

DR. WILLIAM WATTS DUNN. One of the most promising young medical men in Angelina county and one who bids fair to make a lasting name for himself in his profession is Dr. William Watts Dunn, now engaged in medical practice in Lufkin. He was born in Angelina county, Texas, in 1887, and is the son of John Wright and Melinda (Bynum) Dunn.

John Wright Dunn was also born in this county, the family being an old pioneer one of the district, and his birth occurred near the place where he still lives, in Jacks Creek, some four miles west of Lufkin. He is a son of the late Major William Watts Dunn, a widely known pioneer settler in East Texas. The Major was born in Tennessee and came to Texas in 1853, locating in what is now designated as Angelina county, settling first two miles west of where Lufkin now stands. Later he moved two miles further west, on Jacks Creek, and the Dunns have lived at this point ever since. Major Dunn, in early life, was a farmer, but later, and for many years, he devoted himself to school teaching, and several well known private schools of Texas were conducted by him, all of which enjoyed a degree of popularity commensurate with their general excellence. He served with distinction as a soldier of the Confederacy, and was a representative of a high type of gentleman, his memory being greatly revered throughout East Texas. His son, John Wright Dunn, and the father of the subject, devoted himself to farm life, and has enjoyed an appreciable measure of success in that enterprise.

William Watts Dunn, so named in honor of his paternal grandfather, was born on his father's farm on Jacks Creek and attended the rural schools of his community. He took up the study of medicine first in the Medical College of the University at Fort Worth, and later in the medical department of the University of Texas at Galveston. The year 1908 saw him fitted for practice, and he began his life work in Angelina county in that year. Later he spent one school year in the College of Physicians & Surgeons at Little Rock, Arkansas, from which he was graduated with the class of 1911, and he thereafter took up the practice of medicine at Lufkin, where he has enjoyed continuous success in his profession. He is a student in the highest sense of the word, keeping well abreast of the times in the matter of scientific research, and having membership in the various medical societies. He is secretary of the Angelina County Medical Society, and takes a lively interest in the work of that body.

Dr. Dunn was married to Miss Easter Mann, the daughter of Samuel E. Mann, and a native of Tyler county, Texas, the Mann family being one of old pioneer ones of that county.

FERDINAND HERFF, M. D. Among the pioneer German colonists in Southwest Texas there was no name entitled to and receiving greater distinction than that of the late Dr. Ferdinand Herff, whose long career of devoted service and remarkable attainments in the domain of his profession and as a public leader came to a close with his death at his home in San Antonio on May 18, 1912. He was not only a capable physician and surgeon, but a scientist of authoritative knowledge in different lines and was as notable for the fertility of his splendid intellect as for the remarkable disinterestedness of his professional service.

Ferdinand Herff was born at Darmstadt, the capital city of Hesse, Germany, in 1820, a son of Christian and Elizabeth (Meusebach) Herff. His father was a noted lawyer and held the highest judicial office in his home province, corresponding to that of chief justice of a state. The family was of noble stock, as were many of those that came during the thirties and forties to Texas. Dr. Herff was christened Ferdinand Charles von Herff. The middle name he never used, and the "von" he voluntarily dropped when he became a democratic citizen of the United States. A younger brother was Lieutenant General August von Herff, Court Marshal of Hesse-Darmstadt, and died in that country in 1913. The exact title of the official position held by the father was that of Privy Councillor or Judge of the Supreme Court of Hesse-Darmstadt. The Herff family were of Belgian origin, but being Protestants fled during the violent persecutions of the savage Duke of Alva, about 1568, and settled in Darmstadt.

Dr. Ferdinand Harff

Dr. Herff was educated in Darmstadt, took his classical and medical degrees in the Universities of Bonn and Berlin, and graduated in 1842 at Giessen. As was customary in German universities he was a member of a student "corps" and was credited with having fought twenty-three duels. The University of Bonn, where Dr. Herff spent two years as a student, had for its president his uncle, Dr. von Rehfuss, a diplomat and author of distinction. In his family young Herff enjoyed the rare privilege of meeting many nobles and notables of the day. It was in the family circle that he met the illustrious Alexander von Humboldt, who, though many years his senior, took a great fancy to the young man, showed him many kindnesses, and no doubt inspired some of Dr. Herff's scientific pursuits. While a young man in Germany he also met Prince Albert, Duke of Coburg and later the consort of Queen Victoria of England. Dr. Herff often related with amusement a conversation he overheard in which Albert's father, discussing the approaching marriage of his son to Victoria, expressed a fear that the Queen would not live long, as she was so fond of food highly flavored with Worcestershire sauce. Another fellow student of young Herff was Crown Prince Frederick of Prussia, later Emperor of Germany and father of the present Emperor Wilhelm.

With his noble heredity, his social environments and his sound university training, it was to be expected that Dr. Herff should fill a large and distinctive place in any station to which he might have aspired. His was one of the many notable careers transplanted from the fatherland to America as a result of political and social conditions, for the results of which America must always be grateful. At that time the social and intellectual atmosphere of Europe was palpitating with that spirit of good will to humanity which took the name of communism, the forerunner of our modern socialism. These theories were perhaps more potent in university circles and even among the nobility than among the lower classes. Dr. Herff was only one of many university men who became infected with the spirit of the times, and it was in response to those ideas that they organized a movement to establish a communistic colony in America. Dr. Herff was already a recognized leader among his associates, and upon him devolved the responsibility of accompanying the colony to America and providing for their location. Political and economic conditions in Germany had, for some years been increasingly burdensome, and an association of prominent Germans had undertaken the organization of systematic emigration of their fellow countrymen to Texas. But the colony of which Dr. Herff was one of the guiding spirits was a communistic society, with no provision for a regular scheme of government. The Prince Solms-Braunfels, who had sent out the Fredericksburg colony and who had fathered the New Braunfels colony, offered Dr. Herff lands for the communistic colony of Bettina provided settlement should be made during the year 1847. Dr. Herff secured a leave of absence from the army and came to America as agent for his company, travelling over a large part of the United States, and as a result of his investigations first advising that the location be made in Wisconsin. In 1847 he landed in Texas, and as a result of his negotiations it was determined that the colony should locate in the vicinity of Llano in what is now Llano county. After fulfilling his promise to the immigration society and locating his people on the Llano River near Castell, Dr. Herff decided to remain in the new country himself, notwithstanding the fact that it was a trackless wilderness. Instead of practicing his profession, he found it necessary to put his own hand to the plow and do the hardest kind of manual labor.

In 1848 Dr. Herff returned to Germany to marry his betrothed and bring her back to Texas. As he was still a member of the army, he was promptly impressed into service, and was assistant surgeon in the government forces which were engaged in the revolution of that year. Meanwhile he married Miss Matilda Klingelhoef, of a noble family in Giessen. She was a niece of the celebrated chemist and discoverer of the aniline dyes, Baron von Hoffman.

Finally came the happy day when Dr. Herff could sever the ties that bound him to his fatherland and with his charming young wife set off for the new world. In December, 1849, they arrived in Texas and for the first six months lived in the town of New Braunfels, Comal county. On coming to Texas the second time Dr. Herff at once took steps to become an American citizen. In April, 1850, he decided upon the larger field of San Antonio, and thereafter for more than sixty years his home was in that city. Dr. Herff became a resident of San Antonio when its population was only about 2,000. For a few years he and his little family experienced much hardship, and his splendid abilities came to recognition slowly. In 1854 he performed his first noteworthy operation, the successful termination of which at once brought him fame and patients. It was an operation on a Texas ranger, technically known as perineal lithotomy, and was performed in the old Veramendi House in full sight of a crowd of fellow rangers and others who were grouped around the doors and windows. For the first time in his experience Dr. Herff tried chloroform, but when the man began to snore he was frightened and finished the operation without that drug. Later Dr. Herff performed some of the most difficult operations of surgery, and some of them for the first time in America. An occasion is recalled when a husband walked into the room while an operation on his wife was being performed and threatened to shoot the doctor if his wife died; whereat the doctor calmly laid down his knife and said: "If you want your wife to die, shoot now."

During the Civil war Dr. Herff was surgeon of a brigade of Home Guards in the Confederate service. Both in length and achievement his was one of the most remarkable careers in the history of medicine. He continued to practice until the closing years of his life, and there were many patrons who refused to consider any other professional services than those which had been performed by him so faithfully and competently for years. Under the primitive conditions existing when Dr. Herff began practice he was called upon for service in the whole field of medicine and surgery. He was an adept in plastic work, and performed with skill the various eye operations. He early undertook with success abdominal and pelvic surgery. There were no hospitals, no nurses, no facilities of any kind. He was obliged to operate wherever patients could find a place of refuge. In a number of cases his operations were performed out of doors. Much of this work was done before the days of asepsis and antisepsis. From 1854 his fame as a surgeon went far and wide, and during the remaining years of his life it is safe to say that when Texas was mentioned in a medical way, the name of Herff was first to be spoken. His notable operations received attention not only throughout America but in Europe as well. At the age of eighty-four Dr. Herff performed a successful emergency operation, and his last service as a surgeon was done in 1908 at the age of eighty-seven.

His most highly prized honor was his jubilee degree from his Alma Mater, the University of Giessen, on the fiftieth anniversary of his graduation on March 25, 1893. Dr. Herff was a charter member of and attended the first meeting of the Texas State Medical Association, held in San Antonio, November 16, 1853. He was a member of numerous other societies, including the American Medical Association and the American Gynecological Society, and was a writer on many scientific topics and contributed much to the literature of his profession, particularly on topics of surgical and gynecological interest.

Dr. Herff had his office in his home at 308 Houston street, a residence built in 1856 and which was long a landmark in the city. When it was built no street had been cut through, and with subsequent years and the growth of the city about it the house finally stood in the midst of a commercial center with fine brick business blocks on every side, and a few years ago the old home itself disappeared, being torn down and its site now occupied by a modern business block.

Notwithstanding the burdens of a busy professional career, Dr. Herff followed as a recreation as well as a scientific pursuit extensive researches in botany and in other lines of natural history. He was a man of remarkable learning not only in a medical sense but in every branch of human knowledge. A charming conversationalist, it has been said that no subject of history or of any of the sciences could be brought up that he did not reveal a fund of exact information upon it. Through it all he possessed the humility of the true scholar, and his manner was as simple as a child's. It would have been impossible for him to affect the least superiority. It was a pleasure for him to talk on any interesting subject to persons of poor and humble degree as well as those of higher station. Personally he was the soul of kindness and gentleness. To his wife and children he was a scrupulous in showing all the little attentions and courtesies of home life as he was in performing the larger duties of his profession. He made many interesting trips, not only to California, Yellowstone Park and other parts of the United States, but to Europe, and always took his entire family with him. Among his children and his descendants his memory is revered with the greatest of affection.

Mrs. Herff, a woman of true nobility and greatness, died in July, 1910. She was finely educated, particularly in music. In San Antonio musical circles she was noted as a singer, and retained the beautiful quality of her voice almost to the time of her death. During her young womanhood she was noted for her beauty and this was also preserved under the burdens of age. Dr. Herff and wife had six children. Their oldest son, Dr. John B. Herff, who died many years ago, was a physician and is followed in the profession by a son. The five living children are: Ferdinand Herff, president of the San Antonio National Bank; Charles Herff, a ranchman near Boerne; August Herff, architect, of San Antonio; Dr. Adolph Herff, physician and surgeon at San Antonio, and William Herff, vice-president of the San Antonio Loan & Trust Company.

ADOLPH HERFF, M. D. Among the living children of the late Dr. Ferdinand Herff, whose career has been sketched in preceding pages, Dr. Adolph Herff for a number of years was associated on terms of especial intimacy with his father, and had prepared for the profession under the care and advice of his noted father.

Dr. Adolph Herff was born in San Antonio, and in 1880 graduated from the Jefferson Medical College. Since then, for nearly thirty-five years, he has practiced his profession in San Antonio, and has likewise achieved particular distinction in the field of surgery.

Dr. Adolph Herff was married in San Antonio to Miss

Wilhelmina Kalteyer, who is also a native of San Antonio, a daughter of the late Frederick Kalteyer, a noted chemist, who was born and educated in Germany and came to San Antonio during the pioneer period. The third generation of surgeons in the Herff family is represented by their son, Dr. Ferdinand P. Herff.

W. L. MAYO. The Lone Star commonwealth has reason to be proud of the adequacy and high standard maintained by its public school system and the institutions of higher learning maintained under direct state supervision and also through private enterprise. One of the important and flourishing institutions of the order last mentioned in the East Texas Normal College, which is situated in the attractive little city of Commerce, Hunt county, and of which the able and honored president is he whose name initiates this paragraph. Professor Mayo is known as one of the representative figures in educational circles in Texas, and is a man of high intellectual attainments as well as qualified for the responsible office of which he is the popular incumbent.

Professor Mayo was born at Prestonburg, Floyd county, Kentucky, on the 3d of November, 1861. His parents continued their residence in the old Bluegrass state until their death, each having a representative of a sterling pioneer family of that commonwealth.

In his native town Professor Mayo completed the curriculum of Prestonburg Seminary, in which he was graduated, as he was later in Cedar Bluff Academy, in Tazewell county, Virginia. In furtherance of his higher academic education he finally entered the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1883, and from which he received his well earned degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Soon after his graduation Professor Mayo returned to Cedar Bluff Academy, and he became the executive head of the institution, a position of which he continued in tenure until 1886, when he came to Texas. Here he taught three sessions in the public schools of Pecan Gap, Delta county. At Cooper, that county, he founded, in 1889, what is now known as the East Texas Normal College, and from a modest inception he developed at the place a thriving school. After years of successful work at Cooper the college building was destroyed by fire, and soon afterward in 1894, Professor Mayo re-established the college under its present title and at its present location, which latter is most eligible and attractive in every sense. He is not only the president but is also the sole owner of the East Texas Normal College, and under his earnest and able direction it has been developed into one of the strong, popular and representative institutions of the state. In initiating the work of the school at Commerce, Hunt county, Professor Mayo utilized a small and poorly equipped building, and the original enrollment of students was summed up in the names of but nineteen persons. The success that has attended his earnest and ambitious work in this connection is shown in concrete results of unequivocal character. The college now has fine large buildings of modern design and appointments, and these include the Administration building, Science Hall, Conservatory of Music, Industrial building, and three large dormitories. The campus of the institution comprises twenty-eight acres and the environment of the college is most attractive. The average enrollment of students is now in excess of one thousand, the curriculum is broad and comprehensive, with the best of facilities and instructors in each department, and special attention is given to encouraging students who are dependent upon their own resources in securing their education. President Mayo is an enthusiast in his chosen profession and has marked facility in imparting enthusiasm and earnestness to the students who come within the compass of his influence, the while his helpfulness is extended along sympathetic and generous lines. In fact the statement has been made to the writer by those familiar with conditions to the effect that Professor Mayo has frequently the personal sacrifice in a financial way for the purpose of aiding aspiring students of this class. That he is loved and revered by the student body in his admirable life thus becomes self-evident, and he is doing a noble work in connection with the educational activities of the state of his adoption. In politics Professor Mayo gives allegiance to the Democratic party.

On the 24th of June, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Professor Mayo to Miss Etta Booth, of Henderson, this state, and she is a woman of culture and gracious personality, with abiding interest in the work which her husband has accomplished and is still achieving, with ever widening angle of benignant influence. Professor and Mrs. Mayo have five children.

GEORGE HAYES MOSS, M. D. One of the physicians and surgeons of exceptional attainment and with a record of accomplished success is Dr. George H. Moss whose name will go down in local history as having been the first or one of the first physicians to locate in the village of Frankston after it was established. It has been his home ever since, and the family have been identified with this section of Texas since the close of the war.

Dr. Moss was born on a farm near the present village of Frankston, February 14, 1875, grew up in the country, and his early training came from the rural schools. His time was spent on the farm until he qualified and began teaching school, and soon afterwards he directed his studies toward a medical career, but was a student of medicine for several years before he began actual practice.

Dr. Moss took lectures at the Fort Worth Medical College and was graduated there M. D. in 1900. His first work was country practice near Frankston, and when the railroad was built and the townsite of Frankston established he moved his office and home to the present village and his professional practice has gone on increasing apace corresponding to the general development of this locality. For a number of years Dr. Moss has been local surgeon for the Texas and New Orleans Railroad. He is a member of the county Medical Society, is a Democrat in politics, and has taken the last three degrees in the Masonic Order. He and family are Baptists.

Dr. Moss is a grandson of Hogan Moss, a lawyer who came to Texas just after the war and located on a farm near Frankston. There he died in 1866, when about twenty years of age. He was brought up in the state of Arkansas, was educated in a Virginia college, and was identified with the practice of law all his active career. At the time of the war he was serving as judge of his district, and gave his sympathies and his support to the Confederate cause. Two of his sons went into the army of the south. Judge Moss was a Baptist, and that faith persisted through most of the subsequent generations. The second wife of Judge Moss was Eliza Foster, a daughter of Squire Foster, who came from Mississippi and lived for some years near Frankston. She died about 1886, and her children were as follows: William B., John B.; Frank P.; Matt, who died during the war as a Confederate prisoner at Springfield, Illinois; Arthur and Richard F., both of whom died in Oklahoma; Mrs. Carolina Tompkins, of Henderson county; Eliza, widow of Mr. Moore of Oklahoma; and Mrs. Harriet Stephens of Cherokee county, Texas.

The father of Dr. Moss was William F. Moss who lived on his farm near Frankston in 1907, having been born at Camden, Arkansas, in 1840. The years of manhood came to him at the beginning of the great Civil War, and in 1861 he went into the Confederate army in General Johnson's command, and served east of the Mississippi River. His first battle was Fort Henry in February, 1862, and he subsequently was at Shiloh, at Vicksburg, and subsequently suffered capture and spent six months in Federal prison at Camp Douglas in Chicago before being paroled. On returning to the service and rejoining his command, he continued fighting for the south until wounded at Port Hudson, and on account of his wounds received an honorable discharge and went home. Aside from his military experience, his life was calm and comparatively uneventful. It was as a farmer that he provided for his family, and laid away the substance for his declining years. For some time he acted as justice of the peace and held that office at the time of his death. He took some part in politics, but not beyond the county conventions. His relations with religion were through the Baptist church, and he was a Blue Lodge Mason.

William E. Moss married Mary E. Hayes, a daughter of George W. Hayes of Camden, Arkansas, a farmer in that locality. To their marriage were born the following group of children: Sallie, who died unmarried at the age of twenty-one; Eliza, widow of W. D. Williams of Henderson county; Minnie, the wife of T. D. Holland of Poyner, Texas; Dr. George H.; Maria, widow of J. W. Holland of Poyner, Texas; Dr. Matthew M., of Brownsboro, Texas; Mary, wife of C. R. Milner of Poyner, Texas; and Della, wife of M. W. Cook of Frankston.

Dr. George H. Moss was married in Anderson county in April, 1902, to Miss Mary Atkins, daughter of T. S. Atkins of Jacksonville, Texas. Mrs. Moss is one of a family of six children, and her own family number two: Homer Lincoln, aged ten, and Kate, aged nine.

JAMES WILLIAM SANDLIN, M. D. The medical profession of Harris county is ably and worthily represented at Humble by Dr. James William Sandlin, who has been identified with this locality of Texas since 1900. He was a practitioner in both Nacogdoches and Liberty counties before coming here, and is a native of Shelby county, where he was born September 14, 1876, a son of Rev. Jesse B. and Bettie (Latimer) Sandlin.

The Sandlin family originated in Ireland, where its members mingled with and were a part of the Scotch-Irish stock. The Latimers were of English origin, and the founder of the line to which Doctor Sandlin belongs was a refugee from England during the persecution of the Baptist converts in that country. William Sandlin, the paternal grandfather of Doctor Sandlin, went out of Tennessee to Webster Parish, Louisiana, where he became prominent as a planter and slaveholder of the old school. He passed away there and left a family of several sons and two daughters. Rev. Jesse B. Sandlin was born in Louisiana, and belonged with a family which was identified with the Civil war, in which he did some service himself, although since that time these memories have been permitted to die out. He received a college education, and entered actively into the work of the Baptist ministry, and came to Texas from Webster Parish, his subsequent career having been passed in Eastern Texas, where he still resides. He was married (first) to a Miss Aplewhite, who died in Louisiana, leaving two children: William, who was known in Shelby county many years ago, but is now lost, and left a daughter, Mrs. Armstrong; and Mrs. Lela Alford, of Bryan, Texas. Rev. Sandlin was married (second) in Shelby county, Texas, to Miss Bettie Latimer, and they had the following children: Dr. James W., of this review; Elijah H., of Paxton, Texas; Elton B., of Humble, Texas; Robert, of Humble; Thomas L., also of Humble; and Jack, Richard and Jesse, all of Tenaha.

Dr. James W. Sandlin passed his boyhood on the home farm in the vicinity of Tenaha, Shelby county, and his literary education was secured at Tenaha Academy. He became interested in medicine when a lad of but fifteen years, and began reading under the preceptorship of Dr. J. E. McWhorter, of Tenaha, now of South Houston. Subsequently he attended lectures at the Gate City Medical College, Texarkana, and finally entered the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, where he was graduated in 1905. He practiced as an undergraduate from July 10, 1899, when he passed the state board examination and secured a permanent license to practice, and identified himself with work of the regular school. Doctor Sandlin belongs to the Harris County Medical Society and bears a high reputation among his professional brethren. He has been assistant county health officer, served as city health officer of Humble until its incorporation was dissolved, is local surgeon for the Houston, East & West Texas Railway Company, and surgeon for the C. Bender & Sons Lumber Company. He is a member of the Harris County Insanity Board, and is examiner for the Kansas City Life Insurance Company, the Franklin Life Insurance Company, the Cherokee Life Insurance Company, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Woodmen of the World. Fraternally, he is a Master Mason, and also belongs to both branches of the Woodmen. With his family, he attends the Baptist church, and is now serving in the capacity of deacon.

On September 12, 1897, Doctor Sandlin was married at Center, Texas, to Miss Mabel Caldwell, a daughter of L. B. Caldwell, one of the pioneer teachers of Shelby county, and a settler from Georgia, who came of a family of educators. His wife was Miss Donie Lou Bagwell. To Doctor and Mrs. Sandlin there has come one daughter, Nannette.

JESSE W. CARIKER. In Nacogdoches county the town of Cushing is concrete expression of the business enterprise and constructive work of its chief merchants and foremost citizen, Jesse W. Cariker. Mr. Cariker is a man whose extensive business dealings have made him well known in several localities of eastern Texas, but for the past ten years he has concentrated his attention at Cushing, and has done more to make this a prosperous commercial community than any other individual.

Jesse W. Cariker was born on Christmas Day in 1849. His father was Jacob Simeon Cariker, who came to Texas with his family in 1850, one year after the birth of his son and settled ten miles west of Carthage in Panola county. As an early settler he opened up a farm there, and gave the rest of his years to the vocation of agriculturist. He brought with him to the state a number of slaves, and used that form of labor until after the war. He was a man of limited education, but had good practical sense and the common honesty, which gained him a fair degree of material prosperity and the esteem of his neighborhood. All his schooling had been received in Anson county, North Carolina, where he was born in 1812. His death occurred in 1877. In Pike county, Georgia, he married Miss Adeline Jordan, who died in 1878. The elder Cariker was a Missionary Baptist in religion, always voted the Democratic ticket, and at one time held the office of justice of the peace in Panola county. His children were: George W., who died at Pine Hill, Texas, was a Confederate soldier, and later a farmer and merchant; Julia first married William Whitfield, and later W. S. Tinkle, and is now living a widow in Kaufman county; Henry died unmarried while serving in the Confederate war; Joseph S. is a resident of Sadler, Texas; the next in line is Jesse W.; and Dora married M. T. Lawrence of Clayton, Texas.

The early youth of Jesse W. Cariker was spent at the old home eight miles east of Pine Hill. A country school near Clayton supplied him with the fundamentals of reading, writing and arithmetic, and when twenty years of age he started out as a merchant's clerk at Clayton. From there he moved to Pine Hill, and bought the general stock of T. E. Rhodes & Company. After two years of experience there he returned to Clayton, and opened a general stock of merchandise and steadily prospered in that locality until 1903. While at Clayton, Mr. Cariker first became identified in a prominent way with the lumber business as a producer. He operated a saw mill with capacity of forty thousand feet a day, and with a planing mill attached. In 1902 Mr. Cariker, in order to broaden the field of his operation, as a lumberman came to Cushing and bought a large timber tract. To work up that timber he installed a mill similar in capacity to his Clayton plant, and after operating for a time sold out to A. B. Martindale. In the same year in 1902, Mr. Cariker built a place for his stock of general merchandise at Cushing, and has since sold more goods in this locality than any other merchant. His extensive stocks are now housed in two brick stores of his own construction. Mr. Cariker has been a dealer in cotton for the past forty years. One important feature of his accumulations as a business man is several thousand acres of land at Cushing. A good deal of this is now being farmed by himself and his employes, and so far as possible he is endeavoring to exploit all his lands in the interest of agriculture. Mr. Cariker is a stock holder in the First National Bank of Carthage and in the Cushing State Bank, and helped to promote the latter institution, of which he is active vice president. As to politics he gives his allegiance to the Democracy, is a member of the Baptist church, and in Masonry has taken both the Blue Lodge and the Chapter degree.

Mr. Cariker was married in Panola county, January 29, 1869, to Miss Georgie A. Lawrence, a daughter of Thomas A. and Georgie A. Lawrence. Her father came from Alabama immediately after the war and was a farmer in this state. Mrs. Cariker is one of several children. To their union were born the following children: Dr. Fred W. Cariker a physician at Cushing, who married Maude Hancock; Bertha, who married C. C. Roland of Cushing; Thomas J., cashier of the Cushing State Bank, who married Zula Orton; Robbie, one of the first cashiers of the Cushing State Bank; Winnie, wife of E. E. Wallace, of San Antonio; and Miss Verna.

THOMAS WELDER. One of the oldest pioneer families of southwest Texas was represented by the prominent old cattleman of St. Marys, Thomas Welder, who died in Refugio county, in 1865. The Welder family were identified with this portion of Mexican territory from about 1830, some six years before Texas had won its independence.

The widow of that prominent old stockman and resident of Refugio and Bee counties, is still a resident of Beeville, and one of the most honored of the pioneer women of this section.

Thomas Welder was born in Bavaria, near the Rhine, in Germany in 1827, and was less than forty years of age at the time of his death on December 15, 1865. The parents and other members of the family came to America in 1830, first stopping a while in New York City and from there coming to Mexico, where the father, whose name was Francis Welder, was engaged in business. His home was at Matamoras, an old town which was the center of his activities for a number of years, and from which he was a witness of the many stirring events passing over this community. Thomas Welder and his brother John both received good education in the English and Spanish tongues, and also in their own native language. They were boys in Refugio county during the battle of San Jacinto, in April, 1836, by which victory Texas gained its independence from Mexico. A few years before this the family came up into the Republic of Texas, and located in Refugio county. The great industry of that county then, as for many years afterwards, was cattle raising, and it was with this business that the Welder family became early identified, and for many years were among the most prominent figures in connection therewith. John Welder, a brother of Thomas, subsequently moved his operations over into Victoria county, where he spent a few years and finally moved to Refugio county, where his death occurred. He was always recognized among the largest cattlemen of his section.

Thomas Welder always continued to be identified with Refugio county, and his death occurred in the old town

MRS. LOUISA WELDER

THOMAS WELDER

St. Marys in that county on the 15th of December, 1835. For about three years he had given service in the Confederacy, having been stationed at Corpus Christi and other places along the coast. Through his operations as a cattleman and in other lines he had been very successful. Surviving him are his widow, Mrs. Welder, and their two children, Tom Welder, who is county commissioner and one of the most prominent stockmen of the present generation in Bee county, and Mrs. J. H. Connor, of Beeville.

The venerable Mrs. Welder, who has the distinction of being one of the oldest women residents of southwest Texas, was before her marriage Miss Louisa Hennenberg, who was born in Hanover, Germany, and came with her parents to Texas in 1846, settling at Victoria. She was married at Victoria to Thomas Welder in 1848, and soon afterwards they went to Refugio county to live. Since 1892 her home has been in Beeville, but she still retains large interest in Bee county. During the early years following her marriage she saw much of the activities and experiences of pioneer life in Texas. The country was at that time without railroads, and its scanty population was divided among the proprietors of the isolated little ranches, and the small communities of Mexican settlers. Although in the matter of material prosperity the land was fruitful and there was always plenty to eat, the conditions of civilization were such that there were many hardships and privations connected with residence in this part of Texas at that time. Mrs. Welder was a hard working wife, devoted to the business interests of her husband, as well as to the welfare of her home and children, and after his death she struggled against adversities to retain her business interests and for a number of years almost single handed and with her own judgment carried on the cattle business which had been left her by the early death of Mr. Welder. Her children have much reason to be grateful to her for her self-sacrificing efforts during many years, and she is known and esteemed among her wide circle of friends and acquaintances throughout this part of the country. Very few of the residents of Beeville and Bee county are not acquainted with the name of Mrs. Louisa Welder, whose character and career they hold in high respect.

JAMES K. RUDOLPH. The editor and proprietor of the Valley View Sun properly deserves rank among the successful newspaper men of Texas. He is in every way that is called a practical printer and journalist, has known the ins and outs of a print shop and newspaper office since he was a boy, and can do everything in the business from sticking type to writing editorials. In Valley View where he has been a resident since 1910, and which he intends to make his permanent home, Mr. Rudolph conducts a high class country paper, and lives up to the best standards of his profession.

James K. Rudolph was born at Honey Grove, Texas, November 23, 1861, and belongs to one of the early families of northeast Texas. His parents were Robert T. and Elizabeth (Kirkpatrick) Rudolph, both of whom were from Tennessee. The father was a successful man, and did much to disprove the usual assertions that one can make a success only by concentrating his energies along one line. He was skilled in at least three occupations, was a millwright, an expert machinist, and a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. He brought his family to Texas in 1858, settling in Honey Grove, and there followed his three vocations. It is to his credit that he constructed practically all the saw-mills in east and north Texas during the years of his active life. At the same time he carried on his profession as a preacher, and did much work as a mechanic. There were five children in the family of whom James K. was the youngest, the others being: Samuel K., district clerk of Cooke county at Gainesville; Sudie, deceased; Robert M., deceased; Elijah K., city editor of the Hesperian at Gainesville.

When James K. Rudolph was three years old, the family moved to McKinney, Texas, where he grew up and had all the schooling which circumstances and his inclinations allowed him. Most of his education is of the practical sort, which is acquired by every follower of the printing and newspaper trade, and when he was fifteen years old, he entered a printing office at McKinney, and was soon versed in all the duties of that office. After learning composition work he followed his trade as a journeyman in several towns of Texas, and in 1892 came to Gainesville. He worked on all the papers in that city, and after ten years bought the plant of the Daily and Weekly Messenger. His experience with that paper continued for five years, at the end of which time he sold out and then leased the Signal for three years. For three years he conducted a job printing office at Gainesville, and at the same time was Gainesville manager of circulation for the Dallas News, holding the latter post for four and a half years. On September 1, 1910, he moved to Valley View in Cooke county, and bought the Valley View Sun. When he took charge of this plant, it was one of the least efficient of North Texas newspapers, had hardly two hundred subscribers, and the general equipment was very inferior. Under the management of Mr. Rudolph as a practical newspaper man, he has built up the circulation to eight hundred and seventy-five, and has made a profitable business, and at the same time has conducted a paper with a good influence, and with a large news value. Mr. Rudolph owns the office building in which the Valley View Sun is conducted. In politics he is a Democrat, and supports that party through his newspaper. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and fraternally belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

On November 2, 1894, Mr. Rudolph married Miss Gussie Modrall, a native of Texas, and a daughter of Dr. R. D. and Anna Modrall. Her father was one of the early settlers in Gainesville, where he practiced medicine for many years. The one child of Mr. Rudolph and wife is Anna Elizabeth, who was educated in the Gainesville grade and high school, and is now engaged in teaching at Valley View.

NEWTON A. BURTON. Among those leading and representative men of Northern Texas whose labors have contributed to the material advancement and general welfare of the community is found Newton A. Burton, of McKinney. His life has been a busy and a useful one, and furnishes an example of honorable dealing, steadfast purpose, fidelity to principle and invincible moral courage that is well worthy of emulation. For years a successful man of business, he has also been active in public life, is one of the leaders of the Democratic party in his section, and in the office of postmaster is giving his fellow-citizens able and businesslike service. Mr. Burton was born April 13, 1869, in Tallapoosa county, Alabama, and is a son of Samuel W. and Mary (Germany) Burton.

Samuel W. Burton was born in Georgia, of English ancestry, and as a young man moved to Alabama, where, prior to the outbreak of the Civil war was occupied as a planter and cultivated his land with slave labor. When the hostilities broke out between the South and the North, he enlisted for service in an Alabama regiment, in Tyler's command, and served through the period of warfare, although during the latter part of the struggle he was employed in the Confederate arsenal, engaged in repairing guns. When his military experience was completed, he returned to the simple occupations of farm life, and was so engaged in Alabama until 1881, in which year he came to Texas and located in Grayson county. Securing a tract of land he was engaged in farming for one year, and then turned his attention to agricultural pursuits at Van Alstyne, that being his field of operations until 1888, when he moved to Collin county and again resumed the tilling of the soil, having a farm eight miles east of McKinney, near Princeton. There he continued to successfully follow farming and the raising of stock until his death, which occurred May 31, 1901, the mother having passed away about the year 1879. They were the parents of eight children, of whom the following are living: W. J., a resident of Collin county, who is engaged in planting; Mrs. G. D. Lowe, wife of G. D. Lowe, a prominent real estate dealer of Princeton, Texas; Miss Lula, who makes her home at Princeton; Mrs. G. D. Johnson, the wife of G. D. Johnson, a prosperous livestock dealer of Princeton; Mrs. B. M. Bullard, the wife of B. M. Bullard, tax collector of Wichita county, Texas; and Newton A.

Newton A. Burton received his education in the public schools of Tallapoosa county, Alabama, but this has since been supplemented by travel, reading and observation, so that he is accounted a very well informed man on numerous important subjects. He was twelve years of age when he accompanied his father to Texas, and here he grew up to farming pursuits, and also had some experience in mercantile lines as clerk in his father's store. In 1888 he embarked upon a career of his own, when he started farming and stockraising operations in Collin county, a venture in which he was engaged successfully until 1902. That year saw his advent into active political life, when he was elected from district No. 1 as a member of the board of county commissioners. He served four years in that capacity, serving his fellow-citizens faithfully, ably and conscientiously, and at the end of his term entered into business life as the proprietor of a grain and feed business in McKinney. Through good management he built up a business of large proportions, which claimed and was given its full share of the patronage of the city. Mr. Burton continued in the employment of a prosperous business until his appointment, in May, 1913, to the office of postmaster of McKinney, a position in which he has continued to serve efficiently ever since. His appointment came through President Wilson, in whose interests he had worked faithfully and unceasingly during the presidential campaign of 1912. Mr. Burton has always been an uncompromising Democrat, and his party and its candidates have ever had his earnest support. In 1912 he was secretary of the county committee, and collected and sent all campaign funds to the national committeeman, the Hon. Cato Sells, of Cleburne, Texas, for the national campaign. Personally, Mr. Burton is popular, and in his official capacity he has shown himself obliging and courteous, thus adding to his already large circle of friends. Each movement for the welfare of McKinney and its people has found him a hearty co-worker, always willing to assume his share of the responsibility. He has been interested in fraternal work to some extent, and is widely known in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. With his family, he attends the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and for a number of years he has served as steward.

On June 18, 1905, Mr. Burton was married to Miss Laura Wallace, a daughter of John P. A. Wallace, of McKinney, a Tennessee planter who served as a soldier in the Confederate army during the Civil war, and came to Texas at an early day, and still a resident of Collin county. Mr. and Mrs. Burton are the parents of one child, a daughter, now aged five years.

JAMES H. EDGAR, M. D. The Texas medical profession is ably represented at Richland by Dr. James H. Edgar, who has been a resident of Navarro county for thirty years. He is widely and favorably known as a capable and conscientious devotee of his calling, has contributed materially to the upbuilding of his community, is successful as the proprietor of a prosperous drug business, and since 1905 has served Richland in the capacity of postmaster. He was born March 24, 1874, in Titus county, Texas, and is a son of Charles W. and Elizabeth (Brown) Edgar.

Doctor Edgar comes from a modest farming family, his grandfather, Ephriam Edgar, being a native of Alabama, who followed farming and was a slaveholder in a small way, and died at his home at Navarro, Texas. He married Miss Elliott, of Alabama, and they reared a family of six sons and three daughters, five of the children coming to Texas. Charles W. Edgar was born in Mississippi, in 1840, and secured but few educational advantages. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army as a private and was assigned to Longstreet's corps, was wounded seriously during his service, but returned to his command and continued in the service until the close of hostilities. After the war Mr. Edgar married Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, whose husband had been killed at the siege of Vicksburg, in 1863, and they became the parents of the following children: Nellie, who is the wife of J. B. Bush, of Mildred, Texas; Lee, who is the wife of Lewis England, of Alto, New Mexico; Florence, who died as Mrs. G. A. Bush, at Navarro; Dr. C. L., a practicing physician of Cleburne, Texas; Dr. James H., of this review; Lillie, the wife of Lee Jones, of Eureka, Texas; and Willie, the wife of W. H. Evans, of Alto, New Mexico. Mrs. Edgar died in 1884, and Mr. Edgar married (second) Mrs. Ann Bush, they having one daughter, Jessie, who is the wife of Will Humphries, of Mildred, Texas. Mr. Edgar lost his second wife in 1898 and is now passing his years in retirement with his children. Coming here in 1884 from Titus county, Texas, for a time he resided in the Angus community, and then moved to Navarro, which has since been his home.

Dr. James H. Edgar was a lad of ten years when he came to Navarro, and in that vicinity secured his education in the public schools. His boyhood and youth were passed on his father's farm, but when he attained his majority became a clerk at Richland for two years for the firm of Pursley & McLean. Prior to this time, however, he had commenced the study of medicine, and clerked off and on before he graduated in 1900 at the Fort Worth Medical College. Subsequently, he took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic, in 1906, and began his practice at Richland. Energy, adaptability, gentleness and sympathy have blazed the way for a gratifying realization of professional ambitions, and by the same token it may be said of Doctor Edgar that much is promised to a man who has, in addition, the maturity, practical experience and broad outlook upon life of forty years. Doctor Edgar engaged in the drug business at Richland in 1905, as the successor of W. T. Grogan, and has conducted this enterprise since with a full measure of success. In that same year he was appointed postmaster of Richland, and has continued to act in that capacity, meeting with much commendation for the manner in which he discharges his official duties. Although a Democrat, he has not affiliated actively in local politics. Doctor Edgar's part in the building of Richland has extended to the erection of his brick business house, to assistance in the promotion of the hotel, and to the Masonic lodge over his pharmacy. He is a farmer in a modest way, having contributed toward the cultivation of a valuable property near Richland. He is a Master Mason, is past master of Richland Lodge No. 809, and has represented this lodge in the Grand Lodge of the state at Waco.

On August 19, 1901, Doctor Edgar was married to Miss Ruth Milligan, daughter of T. F. Milligan, of Wise county, Texas, and she died during the next year without issue. Doctor Edgar married again, January 21, 1907, to Miss Sallie M. Hill, the second child in order of birth of the nine daughters and one son born to J. J. and Martha (Newman) Hill, native Texans and farming people of the vicinity of Richland. Two children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Edgar, namely: June and James, Jr.

James Mc-Lymont

G. H. ALBERS is the founder and vice president and secretary of the Alamo Trust Company and has had experience for ten years as a Texas banker.

He was born at Hamilton, Allegan county, Michigan, 1868. He graduated from the University of Michigan 1893, receiving the degrees of A. B. and LL.B.

He says that the best thing he ever did was when he married Miss Mary Clay at Paris, Kentucky, in 1895. They have one son, James Mitchell Albers.

Mr. Albers belongs to the Knights Templar, Scottish Rites Masons, is a member of the Travis Club and the Chamber of Commerce, and his aim in life is to pay his debts.

JAMES McLYMONT. The life of James McLymont, of Del Rio, is truly an example of what courage and determination to succeed can accomplish for a man. A young man from a foreign country, James McLymont landed in this great United States practically friendless and today he is a man of wealth and one of the most successful men in this section of Texas. He learned early in life that the best way to overcome a difficulty was to face it and grasp it bravely in both hands and this is the method he has followed through life; circumstances have been shaped by his will to suit him. His popularity in Del Rio and the surrounding country is proof enough that he has gained his success fairly and not by taking advantage of other people. He is a very public spirited man and has done much toward the betterment of conditions in Del Rio and the county of Valverde.

James McLymont was born in Scotland in 1851 and his education was obtained in the public and private schools of his native country. He had only a few years in the school room, however, and at the age of thirteen he was earning his own living. He found a place on a sheep farm and for five years he worked and saved to get enough money to come to America. At the end of this time he sailed on a ship bound for the United States and upon arriving here he came to Mississippi. Imagine how the young Scotchman, fresh from the coolness of the Scotch mists, felt when he went to work in the hot, sweaty fields of the cotton plantation. He spent nearly six years in Mississippi, working most of the time on plantations, but spent part of the time in other occupations.

It was in 1875 that he came to Texas and he has lived in this state since that time. He first worked on sheep ranches and instead of taking his pay in money which he might squander in the nearest town, he took it in sheep and thus formed the nucleus of what was later to be a great flock. After a time he had a flock large enough to justify his going into business for himself and he became a ranchman, continuing in this business until 1907. He still retains an interest in the business indirectly. He owned large flocks of sheep and herds of cattle and was one of the most successful men in the stock raising business in this section. He now has immense realty holdings, of great value and destined to increase in value with the passing years.

In 1899 Mr. McLymont entered into partnership with Henry Roach and formed the firm of Roach, McLymont and Company, dealers in merchandise. In the beginning the firm started as a modest mercantile establishment and it has grown under the careful management of the two men until it is the largest institution of its kind in this part of the state. The main store is a two-storied building of about seventy-five by one hundred and fifty feet. Everything that is usually carried in a large department store is to be found here, and the citizens of Del Rio do not have to go to the nearest city to make their purchases. The company does a general retail and wholesale business and employs about thirty salesmen, having fourteen warehouses in addition to the main store.

In the financial world Mr. McLymont is an influential figure. He was one of the organizers of the Del Rio National Bank and has been its president ever since it was founded. With this important institution, his large store, his flock of sheep and his extensive realty interests, one would say that his time was too fully occupied to give any heed to the affairs of the town. It seems that as is usually the case the busiest men have the most time, for Mr. McLymont has ever played an important part in the civic life of the city.

Mr. McLymont was the first mayor of Del Rio and at one time was county commissioner of Kinney county, and he has also been a member of the school board of Del Rio. In politics he is a member of the Republican party, but reserves the right to vote for whatever candidate he thinks the right one regardless of party. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church and is an active worker in church circles. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and was at one time one of the officers of this order.

On the 1st of February, 1882, Mr. McLymont was married in Uvalde, Texas, to Miss Wilhelmina Rudolph, who is a native of Texas. Mr. and Mrs. McLymont have become the parents of two children, one of whom died in infancy. Fred McLymont now lives in Del Rio with his parents and assists his father in his business.

Mr. McLymont is an enthusiastic supporter of the Del Rio Development League and a firm believer in the future of Del Rio. He has seen the growth of the city from practically nothing and he says that in his opinion Texas is the greatest state in the Union and that some day it will be the largest in population, owing to its resources, opportunities, and the class of people which it will attract. Mr. McLymont has surely proved in his own life that money and pull are not necessary to success in this country and there are plenty of opportunities today, just as there were when he settled here. He will be glad to answer any inquiries any one wishes to make concerning this corner of the world.

JUDGE M. J. HICKEY. Representing a family which became identified with southern Texas in the early years of the Republic, Judge Hickey of Richmond has a record as a lawyer and of public service which is exceptional both in interest and as an illustrative lesson, so that the following sketch is not merely a personal biography but an important chapter from the history of one of the oldest and most notable feats of civilization in the state.

Judge M. J. Hickey is a son of Daniel and Elizabeth Hickey. In the maternal line his lineage extends back to Rollin, who married the daughter of Charles V of France, and subsequently became the Duke of Normandy. Daniel Hickey was descended from several of the greatest clans that were famous in Irish history and in his genealogy appear many illustrious names, among them the Duke of Magenta, a distinguished soldier, statesman and marshal of the French Empire. Another ancestor was Count Dillon, who led the famous charge that won the battle of Fontenoy after Count Saxe, chief in command, had advised Louis the XIV that retreat was inevitable. This charge is immortalized in the poetry of Thomas Osborne Davis and Bartholomew Dowling.

The late Daniel Hickey was a man of varied and extensive learning, and a civil engineer who was distinguished in his profession. He was a man of deep religious convictions and so careful of the moral training of his children that up to the time of his death they were taught in his home by private preceptors under his supervision. Judge Hickey is the youngest of seven sons. His oldest brother, Thomas Hickey, was one of the most universally respected citizens of Nueces county, where he lived for over thirty years. He was for many years engaged in the wholesale mercantile business and organized the Corpus Christi National Bank of which he was cashier and manager for twenty years. Another brother, Captain James Hickey, was for many years engaged in business in Galveston, first as manager of the wholesale business of his uncle, and later in business as a partner of Congressman R. B. Hawley, under the firm name of Hickey & Hawley. Judge P. D. Hickey, another brother, was the first county judge of LaSalle county, in the extreme southern end of Texas, and served the people as a county official continuously for sixteen years. Philip J. Hickey was engaged in the mercantile business in Duval county for more than twenty years. Still another brother was Rev. Daniel Hickey, who, after completing his education in Paris, France, and at the American College in Rome, was by reason of his piety, great learning and courtly manners, assigned as spiritual adviser to the King of Portugal, and later as chaplain to Christiana, Queen Regent of Spain, a position he occupied for many years and up to the date of his death. He died at Madrid, where he was buried with honors rarely extended by the Royal family to a private citizen. Thomas A. Hickey, the oldest son already mentioned with three uncles, served in the Confederate army from the commencement of the war until the surrender of Lee. Two uncles had served in the war against Mexico.

Judge Hickey's people had settled in Texas in 1838. His uncle, Philip Dargan, was one of the pioneers of Brazoria county, served as sheriff of the county, and for a number of years was engaged in the mercantile business there, and later in the wholesale business for more than twenty years at the corner of Strand and Tremont streets in Galveston.

After careful instruction by his brother, Thomas A. Hickey, who was a thorough and accurate scholar, Judge M. J. Hickey attended St. Mary's University in Galveston, when that institution was in its palmiest days. In University he was president of the Calhoun Literary and Debating Society, and was awarded the society medal for oratory. At the commencement of his graduations he was awarded eight different prizes, including those for oratory, debate, declamation and rhetoric. After leaving college he studied law in the office of Ballinger, Jack & Mott, under the special direction of Judge William P. Ballinger, who was a warm, personal friend. Almost immediately upon his admission to the bar he became engaged in the trial of several important murder cases that brought him prominently before the public and afforded an opportunity for the display of those oratorical gifts that won him distinction during his college days.

One of the first important criminal cases with which he was connected put his self-reliance to a severe test. He was appointed by the court to defend a negro charged with the murder of a white man. The state was represented by an able array of experienced lawyers. He was associated with a very old lawyer in the defense. On the morning of the second day of the trial his associate became too ill to attend court, and on the call of the case, the trial judge realizing the gravity of the case offered him the option to proceed alone with the defense or to agree for the jury to be discharged and the case stand continued until next term. Young Hickey promptly announced that he would conduct the defense without assistance, and for two days, single-handed, he combatted the regular attorneys for the state and the private prosecution. After several days' deliberation the case resulted in a mistrial. The simple fact that the party killed was a white man aroused the most intense feeling against the accused, so much so, that notwithstanding that he had been granted bond he was allowed to remain in jail to prevent a lynching. Judge Hickey's defense of this case resulted in almost breaking the friendships of a lifetime, but he had fully investigated the case and was convinced that the defendant was innocent, and he determined to remain in the case at all hazards. This case furnished one of the most striking evidences of the power of popular clamor. At the trial mentioned, eight of the jurors were in favor of the death penalty. The case was continued twice, finally dismissed, and the defendant remained for years unmolested around the old town of Brazoria where he was tried.

About two years after the trial of this case, immediately following the general election, a vacancy occurred in the office of county attorney of Brazoria county, and, a majority of the commissioners' court being Democrats, he was appointed to fill the vacancy. He discharged the duties of the office with such signal zeal and ability that at the next election he was chosen without opposition, notwithstanding he and all his people were pronounced Democrats and the county overwhelmingly Republican. During his four years' service there was only one indictment or information quashed that was drawn by him. When he accepted the office, it was regarded as a very undesirable position, as his predecessors found it almost impossible to secure convictions, but his zealous energy and ability infused new life and dignity into the position. He discharged the duties of the place with a degree of fairness, impartiality, and fearless independence which won him at once the respect and confidence of the jurors and there was no difficulty in securing convictions, wherever the evidence warranted the prosecution.

About this time the white taxpayers of Brazoria county, organized the Taxpayers Association, which was the initial step in the movement that wrested the government of the county from those unfit to control public affairs, and forever broke the power of a corrupt ring that had dominated the county since the close of the war between the states. On the nomination of the president of this association, Col. Mordella S. Munson, Judge Hickey was elected attorney of the association. This position carried a salary, but in accepting the office he declined the salary, since he deemed it improper to accept compensation for any services rendered in the political regeneration of the county. About the same time he was elected chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of Brazoria county, which position he held for two years, and was unanimously reelected, but declined the office.

In the year 1889, Fort Bend county having emerged from intolerable political conditions that had afflicted it for years, it became necessary to reorganize the government of the county. Judge Hickey was placed at the head of the county government as county judge, a position he held for five and a half years, having been elected without opposition in 1890 and 1892. At the time of his appointment the affairs of the county were in a deplorable condition, worse than ever existed in any county in Texas, but with remarkable energy and fidelity to the public welfare, he set to work, determined to bring order out of chaos. At the time of his appointment school warrants were selling at a discount of forty per cent, and warrants against all other funds were being discounted at the same rate. Within less than two months after he took the oath of office he paid off all outstanding claims against the available school funds, put the fund on a cash basis, and so maintained it during his entire term of office. This fund was under his exclusive control as county judge. One of the greatest services he rendered was in the expulsion of ignorant teachers from the school room. He declined to renew any certificates which resulted in all teachers being compelled to take the examination before a very able board of examiners. This method sent to the plow handle many teachers who had taught in the public schools for years on first and second grade certificates. He was a staunch advocate of good public roads and laid the foundation of the road system of the county. He adopted a plan of bridge building which resulted in a action of over one hundred per cent in cost. He was prompt and energetic in the discharge of his official duties, and during five and a half years' service on the bench there was not a case postponed or continued on account of his absence. As a trial judge he was prompt in dispatching business, quick to perceive and rule on all propositions, rigidly impartial and uniformly courteous to all who had official relations with his court. Judge Hickey is the author of many notable addresses that have attracted widespread attention. Among them an oration on the life and character of Jefferson Davis, an oration which received eulogistic mention in the Jefferson Davis Memorial Volume edited by the Rev. Will Jones, formerly chaplain to President Davis. Judge Hickey's argument before the court of criminal appeals for the defense in Furlow versus the State, charged with murder, was the subject of the highest eulogium in the opinion delivered by the court. While he lost the case, he had the satisfaction of seeing the court do within less than a year what he told them in his argument they would do—reverse the holding and declare the law to be as he announced it to be in his argument.

Judge Hickey was married in Brazoria county to Miss Annie Olivia McGrew, granddaughter of John Sweeney, one of Austin's three hundred colonists, and niece of Thomas J. and William B. Sweeney, who participated as soldiers in the battle of San Jacinto. The judge has one son, Thomas McGrew Hickey, twenty-five years old, who was elected Clerk of the District Court of Fort Bend county, Texas, by a majority vote over two popular opponents at the Jaybird Democratic primary in 1914.

HENRY W. PERKINS. There are a number of professions in which personal honesty is at a premium, that where it is exceedingly difficult to be honest and obtain success. One of these is the police service in all its branches, for the temptations are many and in many cases it is impossible to remain honest and be a member of the police. In Texas matters are different and one of the men who have proved that this is so is Henry W. Perkins, who is at present house detective in the Gunter Hotel at San Antonio, but who has served in the past as a member of the police force of Houston, and has also been a secret service man for the Wells-Fargo Express Company. Mr. Perkins is quiet, alert and highly efficient, and his high moral character makes him an exceedingly valuable man for his kind of work.

The father of Henry W. Perkins, George D. Perkins, was born in East Feliciana parish, Louisiana. He came with his parents to Texas when he was a mere youth, settling in LaGrange, in Fayette county. Here he met and married Miss Rosie Eagle Lewis, a daughter of the late Dr. Henry L. Lewis. The latter was one of the early settlers of Texas, coming here in the days when it was a republic. He was a slave owner and a staunch believer in the Confederacy. He served throughout the civil war as a surgeon in the Confederate army, being a member of Hood's Texas Brigade, and his two older sons were also of the South's fighting men. George D. Perkins is now deceased but his widow is still living.

George D. Perkins was born at LaGrange in Fayette county, Texas, in 1877, and here he grew up. After his father's death his mother removed to Yoakum and here in 1897, Mr. Perkins began the study of law. Before completing his law course, however, the Spanish-American war broke out and he enlisted for service. The date of his enlistment was 1898 and he became a member of Troop "H," First Texas Cavalry, who were known as the "Lane Rangers." The regiment was organized at LaGrange and was under the command of Colonel Jonathan Lane. The men first went to Camp Mabry at Austin, thence to Fort Sam Houston at San Antonio and then into active service, patrolling the Mexican border from Laredo to Brownsville. Later they formed the garrison at Fort Brown and here they were stationed when peace was declared. The regiment sailed from Point Isabel to Galveston and thence to San Antonio where they were discharged. Although he had seen little real fighting during his term of enlistment Henry Perkins had determined that the life of a soldier suited him better than that of a lawyer. He consequently re-entered the service, joining the Thirty-third United States Volunteers, under Colonel Luther Hare, a regiment which was bound for the Philippines. Mr. Perkins was not destined to reach those troublesome islands, however, for upon reaching San Francisco he found a message telling him of his brother's illness. After obtaining an honorable discharge on a special order of the Secretary of War, Mr. Perkins hastened home, giving up the idea of a military life.

Again resuming the study of law at Yoakum in the office of Price and Green, he spent some time thus. He never received admission to the bar, however, and has never practiced law, preferring to enter a different field of work. He took up secret service work in 1899 for the Wells-Fargo Express Company, and after being in this work for a time he entered the regular police service of the city of Houston. He was a member of this force for six years, receiving steady promotion, and during the last six months of his service he was captain of the mounted police. He resigned from this position in 1913 to take the position of house detective at the Gunter Hotel in San Antonio and here he has been ever since. Mr. Perkins has attained a high reputation both as a police officer and as a detective, and is widely known throughout the state for his successful work.

Mr. Perkins was married in San Antonio to Miss Florence Johnson, who was born in Carthage in Panola county, Texas. Five children have been born to this marriage, namely, Newton, Wright, Dallas, Lenore and Luther Hare.

J. W. HEARD. Since the time of early settlement many of the names associated with the greatest amount of practical accomplishment and success as business men and farmers and ranchers, and best known in citizenship in Williamson county and vicinity has been those possessed by the Swedish colonists in this part of Texas. It is of this national spot in Texas that J. W. Heard of Round Rock is a representative, though himself a native of Texas and for many years prosperously identified with farming interests in Williamson county.

J. W. Heard was born in Austin county, Texas, in 1851, a son of Daniel and Hedvig (Lundquist) Heard, both of whom were natives of Sweden. The parents came from Sweden to Austin county in 1848, having crossed the ocean on the same vessel with the Palm family, which furnished probably the most conspicuous Swedish pioneers of Texas. The parents in 1852 moved to the city of Austin, and the father died in 1901 and the mother in 1895, J. W. Heard being her only child. In 1858, the parents left Texas and returned to their native land, where they lived for about ten years, and in 1867 again settled in Texas, this time at Manor, and a year later moving to Williamson county. When the father made his second voyage from Sweden he had charge of a colony of seventy-four people of his countrymen who also located in Texas.

J. W. Heard was sixteen years old when the family returned to Texas, having in the meantime obtained his education in Sweden, and for more than forty years has been identified with farming in Williamson county, and at the present time he is the proprietor of two hundred acres of land in that vicinity.

In 1878 he married Miss Augusta Lindell, daughter of Jonas Lindell of Williamson county. Mrs. Heard was born in Sweden and was ten years of age when her family came to this country. They are the parents of two children: S. A. Heard, a leading merchant at Georgetown, engaged in the grocery business; and Hedvig, wife of Carl Blad, a native of Sweden and a Williamson county farmer.

MR. AND MRS. DWIGHT EDWARD POTTER. The subjects of this brief sketch, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Edward Potter, have one of the finest and most interesting of the old San Antonio homes. While Mr. and Mrs. Potter have adapted the house to their own distinctive tastes and have introduced many rare and quaint furnishings, Norwood, their home, is known as one of the oldest private residences of San Antonio, and has many interesting associations of by-gone generations. It is built on Colonial and Spanish lines, with a decidedly Colonial interior, furnishing a most appropriate setting for the art and treasure collections gathered during extensive travels, and by the discriminating taste of Mr. and Mrs. Potter.

Situated in King William street, Norwood, the oldest mansion in San Antonio, has been the home of prominent people since the time of the Spanish regime, when its original owner was Donna Juna de Montoya. Since it was originally built in the 18th century the house has been added to and remodeled at various times. It is now regarded as the finest residence in the city. It is situated in a large park lying along the beautiful San Antonio River, its windows overlooking this beautiful stream. The settings and environments of Norwood have a perfect harmony with the family and ancestral associations of Mr. and Mrs. Potter.

Mr. Dwight E. Potter, who came to make his home in San Antonio in 1910 from Colorado Springs, was born in Decatur, Ill., the son of Dwight Burlingame and Mary (Nealon) Potter. When he was three months old his parents moved from Decatur to Ohio, and from there to Colorado, where he spent nearly all his life until moving to San Antonio. He was educated in the public schools of Colorado, prepared for college in Pennsylvania, but owing to ill health finished his education under private tutors. He was connected for a number of years with General Palmer, who gave to the city of Colorado Springs what is said to be one of the finest park systems in the country. Mr. Potter helped with this work and had charge of this system for some time after its completion. Since coming to San Antonio he has become identified with many of the large enterprises of the city. He is a member of the San Antonio Country Club, San Antonio Auto Club, the Travis Club, and The Casino.

His father, who was born in the old Potter Homestead still standing near Scranton, Pennsylvania, was a pioneer of Colorado, going out before the railroads, when the mode of travel was the old stage coach. In every generation, not only in America, but elsewhere, the Potters have been pioneers and assisted in development of successive sections of the country as it was settled, and built up toward the West.

Mr. Dwight B. Potter fought with the Union Army during the Civil war, having been in the battle of Bull Run, and with Sherman in his march to the sea. His grandfather, D. H. Potter, was the pioneer settler of Scranton, Pennsylvania, plowed the ground and owned the land where the city of Scranton was built, and emigrated to that section in 1811 from New England.

The Potters are one of the most distinguished families in New England Annals. The first of the name in America was John Potter, who came from England in 1634, lived for a time at Salem, Massachusetts, later going to what is now Rhode Island with Roger Williams and John Greene, where, with ten others, they established the City of Providence. Several members of the Potter family went from Rhode Island and served as officers with the Colonial troops in the Revolutionary War. The Potters have been prominent in the army, the church, the state and the nation. One of the close branches of the family are the Arnolds, who are said to have the purest pedigree of any of the New England historic families.

The original name of the Potters was Beaumont.

The name was transplanted from Normandy to England about the time of William the Conqueror in the person of Robert Beaumont, whose descendants became the Earls of Leicester. John Potter, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, was a descendant of this family and the Potters who were Bishops of Pennsylvania and New York were relatives of Mr. D. E. Potter.

Mr. Potter's mother, who is still living, was born in Canada, of Irish descent. Her father, Peter Nealon, was descended from the old O'Niallain family of Ireland, who were in turn descendants of Milesius of Spain, from whom the royal family of England from the time of John the Second are descended. He came to New York in the early days, was a soldier in the Union Army, and was killed in 1865, together with her only brother. Her mother, Elizabeth Hickey, is a descendant of a brother of Milesius of Spain.

Mr. Potter's paternal grandmother was a Burlingame, a direct descendant of Capt. Peter Burlingame. She was also directly descended from John Greene, the ancestor of General Nathaniel Greene, the successful leader of the Southern Army during the Revolutionary war, and whose body is buried in Savannah, Georgia, in which city his old home, Mulberry Grove, still stands. John Greene came from England to America in a very early Colonial period and was a friend and contemporary of Roger Williams, who was likewise the ancestor in a collateral line of the Potter family. The Witch House at Salem, Massachusetts, which is the oldest house in America, was built for John Greene and Roger Williams. John Greene was the tenth great-grandfather of Dwight E. Potter.

Mrs. Potter belongs to lineage of equal distinction in the South. Her maiden name was Miss Evelyn Tullis. She was born in Lafayette, Louisiana, where she received her early education. Her father, James Tullis, comes from a distinguished Irish family, closely allied to the Nealon family. Her ancestors on her mother's side, who was Sarah Brown, is in turn descended from the Norwoods of Georgia. From that family the home of Mr. and Mrs. Potter in San Antonio derives its name. Closely related to the Tullis family are the Powells of Georgia. The Tullis family was very prominent in the early history of Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, and furnished many soldiers of distinction in all the wars of our country. Many of her ancestors were officers of note during the Revolutionary War. Her father fought for the Confederacy. Her mother is still living. Like all true Southern women of that period, she wove, spun and labored for the Cause.

Mrs. Potter's family early moved to East Texas and helped in a very material way to develop the vast resources of that part of the state. Like most girls of the old Southern aristocracy, Mrs. Potter has all the accomplishments and charm that is so characteristic of Southern women.

Mrs. Potter's first husband was William Brough, Jr., a Canadian by birth and a lumberman in Eastern Texas during the early days of the industry. To that marriage four children were born, as follows: Vega, Bruce, Bessie and Willie.

Besides the maintenance of their home, their interest in travel and study, Mr. and Mrs. Potter have given much of their time and energies to civic, philanthropic and social welfare work. Both of them are especially interested in children and animal protection, being members of the Bexar County Humane Society, which does a great work in Texas. Mrs. Potter is also an earnest worker in the cause of Equal Rights for Women, being Second Vice President of the State of Texas, while Mr. Potter is Secretary of the only Men's League in the South.

Possessing the honors of such a lineage with the discriminating taste which belongs to people of fine breeding and culture, and with ample means to gratify their artistic desires, Mr. and Mrs. Potter have made their San Antonio home a place of beauty and rare charm.

D. C. Potter

Among the more familiar and intimate articles of their collection are a number of old family portraits, two old spinning wheels, one of which has been in the Potter family over two hundred years, a melodeon, and a spinet, the two latter having belonged to the Burlingame and Potter families. Mr. and Mrs. Potter have a wonderful collection of antique furniture, much of it being old family pieces, and one of the finest private collections of paintings of old masters in America. Mr. Potter had an artist execute two beautiful drawings of the Old Witch House in Salem, previously referred to, and Bouten House in England, and other places associated with his early ancestors. Besides the wealth of furnishings which have associations with the family history, Mrs. Potter has collected in the course of their travels, costly and beautiful wares from the Orient, including many priceless rugs and a number of sets and individual articles of Japanese ware, including what is said to be the finest set of Royal Satsuma Tea Service in existence. The furnishings and treasures of Norwood have been described at length, but a long story might be told concerning this old home and a description of its many phases of interest. Few Americans of wealth have so well succeeded in collecting so many real treasures and in arranging and blending them so harmoniously as Mr. and Mrs. Potter.

ROBERT C. KIMBROUGH. The manager of the McKinney Cotton Oil Mill Company has lived in north Texas for thirty-five years, has spent most of his career in some department of the cotton industry, and is one of the most alert and enterprising business men of Collin county. The Oil Mill is one of the most important industries of that vicinity, and is an important factor in the productive wealth and general prosperity of McKinney and Collin county.

Robert C. Kimbrough, who is of Scotch-Irish descent and of an old Tennessee family, was born in the state of Tennessee in Monroe county, August 13, 1860. His parents were I. B. and Mary J. (Henderson) Kimbrough. His father, a Baptist minister by profession spent fifty-two years in the active work of his church, moved to Texas in 1879, lived in Collin county until his death in 1904. The mother passed away in 1886 and both were buried at Plano, Collin county, Texas. There were nine children in the family, and Robert C. was sixth in order of birth.

His boyhood was spent in his native state, the public schools afforded him the groundwork of his literary and business equipment and he subsequently was a student in the old Carson and Newman College at Jefferson, Tennessee, an institution which has sent many successful young men into the world since it was established. His first work was in assisting his father in the latter's business affairs, and as a boy he helped support the family. After moving to Texas in 1879, when he was nineteen years of age, he began a career as farmer and stock raiser, but subsequently left the farm and got into the cotton business and for fourteen years was traveling agent and salesman for the National Cotton Oil Company.

In 1906 Mr. Kimbrough left the National Cotton Company to accept the general management of the McKinney Cotton Oil Mill Company, and has given all his attention to the continued success and growth of this important local concern. The McKinney Cotton Oil Mill Company was established in 1893, and has been developed from a very modest establishment. It is now known as a "four press mill," and its daily capacity is about eighty tons. Most of the cotton seed stock is bought directly from local cotton raisers, but in case of shortage of crop some supplies are shipped in from outside territory. The company manufactures crude oils, having no refinery, and the products of the mill go to a market which might be called world wide, being shipped to jobbers over the United States and to foreign countries. The cotton meal is sold to local trade and to outside dealers. The officers of the company are as follows: J. S. Heard, president; J. L. Lovejoy, vice president; F. B. Pope, secretary and treasurer; W. C. Wilson, cashier; and R. C. Kimbrough, general manager. The company is incorporated under the laws of Texas, and its capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars is practically all owned by local men. The company also has surplus stock.

Mr. Kimbrough since casting his first vote has been an active supporter of the Democratic party, fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Honor, and is a member of the Baptist church. In 1890 at McKinney he married Miss Nannie S. Barnes, daughter of Henry C. Barnes, who was a Confederate soldier from Texas, in which state he located at an early day, was a farmer during his active career, and is now living at Sulphur, Oklahoma. Mr. Kimbrough and wife have two living children, Mary Kimbrough and Robert C. Kimbrough, Jr. The son is twenty years of age, has recently finished school, and is now in charge of some of the machinery in the Cotton Oil Mill at McKinney. The mill is located just outside the limits of McKinney on the east side of the city, while Mr. Kimbrough's home is at 100 Barnes street.

ST. DOMINIC'S VILLA. Among the various Catholic institutions in Texas for education and benevolence, the St. Dominic's Villa at Lampasas has had an important place for the past fourteen years. It is an academy conducted by the Dominican Sisters, and with all the rights and privileges of a collegiate institution. The course of study embraces primary, junior and senior departments. The branches of a thorough English education are taught in each department by competent teachers. The school has become a popular center for the education of young women belonging to many of the best families in Texas.

In the summer of 1900 some of the Dominican sisters, having contracted malaria at the missions school, were advised by the physicians to spend their vacations in the town of Lampasas. The pastor then in charge at Lampasas was Rev. P. A. Heckman. Some years before the Methodists had erected there an educational institution called the Centenary College which proved a failure and was sold. The owner of the building allowed the Dominican Sisters to occupy it, and offered it for sale, but at the end of the vacation the sisters returned in good health to Galveston. On account of the destructive storm of September, 1900, the Sisters were obliged to seek a new place for their boarding school. At once the old Centenary College at Lampasas suggested itself as eminently suitable, and available for that purpose and they immediately secured it.

In addition to the building there are one hundred and forty acres of land belonging to the institution, and the equipment and grounds are remarkably beautiful and healthful site for the institution. The building is situated on a high elevation, overlooking the entire country, at an altitude of fifteen hundred feet. Nearby are the famous Sulphur Springs, and these advantages, combined with the well-known reputation of the sisters, has brought a steadily increasing patronage to the school. The school is situated one mile from the village of Lampasas, and all visitors and pupils are provided conveyance to and from the railroad station.

The present Mother General of the Dominican Sisters in Texas is Mother Mary Pauline Gannon, O. S. D. She was appointed prioress of the Sacred Heart Convent, Galveston, Texas, succeeding after the death of Mother Mary Agnes in 1891. She has since been continued in office now for more than twenty years, and by education and character has proved eminently qualified to fill her important position. Mother Pauline was born in Newark, New Jersey, and entered upon her novitiate at the Sacred Heart Convent, October 18, 1885. All the missionary work of the Dominican Sisters in this diocese, outside the city of Galveston, has been undertaken during her administration.

CHAUNCEY B. SHEPARD. The large and distinctive place of the Shepard family in Texas is too well known to require extended introduction, and the above named citizen and retired business man of Brenham is a son of the late Judge James E. Shepard, who was a cousin of Judge Seth Shepard, one of the most eminent jurists of Texas.

The late Judge James E. Shepard was born in Mathews county, Virginia, April 24, 1817, and died July 16, 1894, in his seventy-seventh year. For more than half a century he was identified with the Texas bar and bench and made his name conspicuous both in his profession and in public and military life. When he was a child his family moved to Kentucky, where he was educated for the law, and about 1840 he came to Texas and settled in Washington county, where he became prominent at a bar then comprising many of the ablest lawyers of the state. For many years he was judge of the District court, served in the state legislature, and was a member of the first convention which formulated the constitution for the state. During the war between the states he served as a colonel of Texas troops. Incidentally it may be mentioned that he and his cousin Seth Shepard, married cousins. Judge James Shepard married Martha A. Andrews, who was born in Flemingsburg, Kentucky, in 1819, was married in that state, and died May 3, 1892, in her seventy-third year. Besides their son Chauncey there are three other children: Sallie F., who married George L. Robertson of Austin; Julia, who died in 1910, and was the wife of H. K. Harrison, president of the Washington County State Bank at Brenham; and James W. Shepard, who is credit man for the Walker-Smith Grocery Company of Brownwood, Texas.

Chauncey B. Shepard, who spent nearly forty years on the road as a traveling salesman, and is now living retired at his home in Brenham, was born in that city in 1857. His education was acquired at the Texas Military Institute in Austin, and in 1875, at the age of eighteen, he went on the road as a traveling man, selling groceries. It is hardly necessary to recall the fact that in those years Texas had hardly a tittle of the railroad facilities found at present, and the work of the traveling man was one of the most arduous callings and required travel by every sort of conveyance, and the accommodations that are now provided by the poorest equipped village in the state would have been considered luxurious forty years ago. After ten years on the road as a grocery salesman, Mr. Shepard transferred to the clothing line, and sold clothing all over the Southwest for twenty-eight years. In 1913, after thirty-eight years of continuous work on the road, Mr. Shepard retired from active business, and now maintains an office in the Washington County State Bank at Brenham, devoting most of his time to his private interests.

Mr. Shepard has a large acquaintance all over Texas, and fraternally is a popular member of the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias. In 1889 he married Miss Anna Forbes of Mississippi, a niece of Senator H. H. Money, and a great-granddaughter of Gen. William Clark of Jackson, who, for twenty years was Treasurer of the State of Mississippi.

JUDGE NOAH ALLEN. One of the distinguished lawyers of Texas for the past twenty years has been Judge Noah Allen, formerly of Galveston, Houston and Brownsville, but since March, 1913, handling a large practice as a lawyer and varied commercial interests from his offices at San Antonio. Judge Allen for a number of years during his residence at Brownsville was assistant United States attorney.

Noah Allen was born at Savannah in Andrew county, Missouri, February 20, 1855, a son of Noah and Abigail (De Witt) Allen. His father, who was a native of Ohio, moved to Missouri about 1845, and followed business as a saddle and harness maker until his death in 1893. The mother, who was a native of Kentucky, died in 1855, the same year in which Judge Allen was born.

The early career of Judge Allen was not particularly notable except that he attended public and private schools in his native village, which was one of the county seat towns of northwest Missouri, and at the age of ten years was sent to his uncle's home on a farm in Kentucky. At the age of fifteen he started to learn the trade of saddle and harness maker, but while serving as deputy constable at Clinton, Missouri, he took up the study of law and in the meantime earned his way by official service and employment in various lines of work. He lived at Sedalia, Missouri, for some time and continued his law studies with the firm of Smith & Harrison until admitted to the bar on May 17, 1876. After a brief practice at Sedalia, Mr. Allen in the spring of 1878 moved to Wichita, Kansas, was one of the successful members of the bar of that city until 1882, and then spent five years at Denver, Colorado. Returning to Wichita, he practiced with success in that section of Kansas until January, 1893.

The political career of Judge Allen is so closely associated with his main vocation that its main points might be mentioned at the same time with his professional progress. One of the early leaders in the Kansas populist movement, in 1892 he was a presidential elector and in the same year a delegate to the Industrial Conference at St. Louis, and subsequently a member of the committee which formulated the Omaha platform of the populist party. His prominence in the law and in affairs brought about his appointment as assistant attorney general of Kansas, and to perform the duties of that office he moved from Wichita to Topeka in 1893. In 1894, Judge Allen, having resigned his office in Kansas, moved to Galveston, Texas, to take up his duties as general attorney for the Gulf & Interstate Railway Company, of which he was one of the organizers, and which in the following year or two completed the railway from Galveston to Beaumont. About 1901 Judge Allen located at Houston, and following his appointment as assistant United States district attorney for the southern district of Texas moved to Brownsville in February, 1907. During his residence in Galveston Judge Allen served as judge of the corporation court.

Since resigning his office as assistant district attorney and moving to San Antonio, Judge Allen has continued his success as a lawyer and has many large interests. He specializes in irrigation law, involving all the general departments of irrigation and water litigation, and also in corporation law, land law, and a practice in all the United States courts. He has had special success in land litigation and has successfully handled many suits involving large interests before the Federal courts. During the spring of 1914 Judge Allen has taken a prominent part in promoting a large irrigation enterprise, known as the Cotulla Reservoir and Irrigation Company, which when its plans are perfected will bring under irrigation one hundred thousand acres of rich land in La Salle county, lying in the Nueces Valley. This is one of the largest irrigation projects ever inaugurated in Texas. Judge Allen has for a number of years been prominent in the waterways movement in the southwest and in 1909 was chosen a member of the executive committee of the Interstate Inland Waterways League, organized to promote the interests especially of Louisiana and Texas in the development of commercial waterways. While a resident of Brownsville Judge Allen was identified with several large commercial and industrial concerns.

After his prominence as a leader in Kansas politics during the early nineties, Judge Allen consistently upheld the principles of the Republican party until 1912. Following out his long established policy of advocating modern reform and progressive movements, he then joined the Roosevelt Progressive party and was one of the very prominent leaders in the campaign of 1912, not in Texas but throughout the nation. Judge Allen was permanent chairman of the Republican state convention at Fort Worth which sent Roosevelt delegates to the national Republican convention at Chicago, and after, following the split in the party at Chicago, he took the lead in the organization of the Progressive party in Texas. The Progressive campaign committee elected him as one of its regular speakers, and he delivered many addresses in the Dakotas and Iowa. Judge Allen belongs to the Masonic order and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and while reared in the Methodist faith is now a member of the Christian Science church. Judge Allen in 1879 married Miss Bettie Ingals, a daughter of Thomas Ingals of Pleasant Hill, Missouri, and a niece of Colonel Hiram Bledsoe, who commanded the noted Bledsoe battery in the Confederate army. Mrs. Allen died in 1902 and in 1905 he married Mrs. Sophronia S. (Sherwood) Gladstone of Houston. Her father, James P. Sherwood, of Baltimore, Maryland, is credited with having erected the first house on Galveston Island.

HON. LEWIS BUCKNER HIGHTOWER. A gentleman who, coming to Texas during the days when it was still a Republic and mingling in its busy life for seventy-two years, is still among its most active citizens, giving daily attention to the duties devolving upon an important judicial trust, is an anomaly. Most men who have passed the three-quarter-century mark, especially if fortune has crowned their life's labor, are disposed to retire from the struggle and enjoy the ease and dignity which they have earned. Not so, however, Judge Lewis Buckner Hightower, of Cleveland. With intellect unclouded, and manly strength but slightly abated, with an erect form, firm step and clear vision, he goes about his daily round of affairs as in the days when struggle seemed to be a necessity. He has presided over the Ninth Judicial District since July 13, 1888, being appointed by Governor L. S. Ross of Texas, and was a resident of Cleveland at that time, having located in this locality in 1873, although he had found it first in 1866 while on a bear hunt in the "Big Thicket."

Judge Hightower was born at Florence, Alabama, October 20, 1838, a son of John O. and Apphia L. (Allen) Hightower. The family is of English origin, and Hardy Hightower, the grandfather of Judge Hightower, was a North Carolinian and the son of a Revolutionary soldier. The grandfather married Harriet Margaret O'Neal, a Scotch-Irish lady, and they reared a family as follows: John O., the father of Judge Hightower; Jane, who married Almon H. Mason; Catherine, who became the wife of Samuel Probasco, of Ohio; Alfred, who died in Texas in 1867 and left a son, Clarence, now a resident of Huntsville; Richard, who died at Walnut Springs, Arkansas, and left a family; Caroline, who married James A. Baker, the father of the senior partner of Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, lawyers of Houston, Texas, and died at Florence, Alabama, without issue, she being Judge Baker's first wife; James B., who died in Walker county, Texas, and left a son, John O., now a resident of Huntsville, and a daughter Ida (now dead), who married E. L. Angier; Martha, who married Andrew J. McGown and resides at Huntsville; and Dorthula, who married Ned Branch and died in Walker county.

John O. Hightower was born in Lauderdale county, Alabama, early chose the legal profession for his calling, and completed his studies at Nashville University. He came to Texas in 1842 and located at Huntsville, where he had just commenced to enjoy a liberal legal clientele when he passed away in 1847, aged but thirty-two years. Mr. Hightower married Apphia L. Allen, a daughter of Lewis Buckner and Maria (Jones) Allen, and she died at Huntsville in August, 1902, aged eighty-three years. They were the parents of the following children: Judge Lewis Buckner, of this review; Mary, who married J. O. Wiley, of Huntsville, and died there, leaving a family; Hardy, who died at Huntsville in 1863; and John O., who passed away in 1862 of disease contracted while a Confederate soldier of Wigfall's brigade.

The Hightower family came out to the Lone Star commonwealth in the usual way and in Huntsville Judge Hightower of this review grew to manhood. After some preparation he entered Austin College, from which institution he was graduated, and his teaching experience comprised a session in the primary department of Austin College. He studied law prior to the Civil war, and graduated at Baylor Law School, then at old Independence, Texas, and among his teachers were Judge Wheeler, John Sayles of Independence, Judge Baylor, and other men who made a high reputation in Texas. Gen. Sam Houston delivered the diplomas of this class in 1859. Judge Hightower began the practice of law at Huntsville, but his practice was interrupted by the outbreak of hostilities between the South and the North in 1861, and he was soon drawn into the Confederate service. He believed in Secession and supported it, and enlisted in Huntsville, in 1861, becoming first lieutenant of Captain Rountree's Company I, Colonel Bates' regiment of cavalry. The regiment went first to Velasco, Texas, and did service along the coast and later on became a part of General Walker's division of the Trans-Mississippi Department. The division captured Brashear (now Morgan City), Louisiana, taking 1500 men of the convalescent camp of the Federals, and captured $3,000,000 worth of stores. About this time Captain Rountree's company was divided and Judge Hightower became captain of the old company, Captain Hamilton succeeding to the command of the other half of it. This battalion was afterward combined with Waller's Battalion and formed Colonel Brown's regiment, and took part in the battles of Fordoche, Mansfield, Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou, and then came back to Texas and disbanded at old Booneville, near the present site of Franklin. Judge Hightower passed through all this campaign without a scratch or capture.

When his military career was finished, Judge Hightower resumed practice alone, and has never had a partner in his life. The general practice was his forte, and he fought the intrusion of the Northerners from the start. His county was declared under martial law and he was finally put under arrest during the Davis regime, but was discharged as it was impossible to prove an offense against him. He made it a point to speak against the tyranny that was being practiced and was elected county attorney, but could not take the ironclad oath required and had to give up thought of holding the office at that time. After moving into Montgomery county in 1873, on the advice of physicians who declared that he had tuberculosis and that his health in the "Big Thicket" would improve, he was elected to the legislature from that county in 1876. This was the Fifteenth legislature, Coke was governor, and Judge Hightower did much to assist in the elevation of Coke to the United States Senate. The Judge served but one term in the house, when he decided he had enough of this office, and never held another public position until elected district judge. Judge Hightower was in the democratic state convention of 1868, but none since then, and he has never since participated in politics save as a campaigner for his friends. He was a stalwart supporter of Governor Hogg and of Judge Ramsay's candidacy for the office of governor in 1912. In 1888 he was elected district judge, and again in 1892, 1896, 1900, 1904 and 1910, and without opposition in the election, save once in his own party.

Throughout this section Judge Hightower is known affectionately as the "Bear-Hunting Judge," and he himself says he is a bear-hunter by profession and practices law for recreation. His farm furnishes him with recreation since the bears of the "Big Thicket" have all disappeared, but when he first entered this country he frequently killed as many as four bears a day, this often being necessary in order that his stock and poultry be protected.

He never belonged to any lodge save the Odd Fellows and has failed to keep up his connection with that order for many years. Judge Hightower's mother was a devout Christian woman of the Presbyterian faith, but the Judge's inclinations are toward the Methodist church, as his present wife is an ultra Methodist and the Judge claims "he is a brother-in-law to the Methodist church."

Judge Hightower was married (first) at Huntsville, in January, 1860, to Miss Sallie Riggins, of Macon, Georgia, who died in 1863, leaving one child, a girl, thirteen months old, now deceased. The second marriage of the Judge occurred in 1868, when he was united with Miss Cora Polk, daughter of John A. Polk, a first cousin of President James K. Polk. She died in 1871 and has no issue now alive. The third marriage of Judge Hightower was in 1875 to Miss Jacqueline Moore, a granddaughter of John A. Polk. The issue of this union now living are: Lewis Buckner, Jr., ex-judge of the sixty-first district (the Beaumont District), and now a member of the firm of Hightower, Orgain & Butler, of Beaumont; and Mrs. Bettie A. Bowden, of Tyler, Texas. Mrs. Hightower passed away in 1884, and in 1886 (September 5), the Judge was married (fourth) to Jane Lockhart, a daughter of Sam W. Lockhart, of Polk county, Texas. Nine children have been born to this union, as follows: Lockhart Valentine, who is a member of the Houston Baseball Club; Graham Carter; Allen Ross; Cameron Middlebrook, a student of the Lebanon Law School; Samuel W.; Mattie Virginia; Thomas Jefferson; Apphia L., and Hardy, a daughter.

PRESTON OWEN. No name has represented more sterling character and has been more closely identified with the best material, social and religious affairs of Navarro county than that of Owen. From the beginning of the Texas Republic the family has been in Texas, and two generations gave their work to Navarro county, while children and grandchildren are still enjoying the heritage of a good name and the prosperity which descended with it.

The late Preston Owen of Kerens, who died there September 22, 1910, was a native of this state, his birth occurring in Montgomery county August 28, 1844. His father was Nelson Owen, a Texas pioneer. Nelson Owen was a son of Samuel and Hettie (Prather) Owen, natives of Kentucky, and the parents of the following children: Nelson, Jefferson, Frank, Austin, John, Valentine, Tyler and a daughter, Harriet. Of these the first four spent their lives in Navarro county and all left families there and all were forceful men in their community.

Nelson Owen was born in Louisiana, probably in Caddo parish, August 8, 1812, and acquired a very limited education but was a man of splendid intellect and of fine judgment and business acumen. Coming to Texas in 1837, the year following the establishment of the Republic, he first settled in Harris county, farmed there until his removal to Montgomery county, and in 1852 came north to Navarro county, where his death occurred in 1879. He settled near where Kerens now is, and became the moneyed man of the county as a stock raiser and man of affairs industrially. He lived his life for the other man, absolutely unselfish and liberal to his last cent. He made money rapidly and easily and his old leather trunk, kept under his bed and which served as his bank, was hauled out and its contents divided liberally with the needy as occasion required. He spent his years in Christian service, was a steward in the Methodist church and a most devout man. He seemed to enjoy life and did enjoy it supremely in the service of his God and humanity, and died with resignation that all was well with his soul. Never in politics, he had no taste for public affairs, and was loath to become conspicuous and shunned publicity. Nelson Owen was a man of medium height, weighed one hundred and ninety pounds, and was impulsive in his acts but always reliable. His happiness seemed permanent and his was a smile that represented a serene and genial nature. Extremely modest, he never attempted a talk in public or even in his church, and whenever called upon for remarks always laughed at the idea of his making a speech. Nelson Owen had no war record, was a Union man on principle, meaning to fight in the Union for Southern rights, and when Texas went out of the Union he furnished his only son for the Confederate army and a great amount of supplies and other means in support of the cause. In 1835 Nelson Owen married Jerusha White, of Louisiana, a daughter of Solomon and Mary White. Mrs. Owen died August 19, 1899. Their children were: Jesse, who died unmarried; Eliza, who died as Mrs. William Noble; Preston, and Martha, who married J. L. Gage and died in Navarro county.

Preston Owen spent his early life in running stock and in acquiring an education. From 1862 until 1864 he was engaged in furnishing beef to the Confederate army and afterwards enlisted in Captain Warren's company of Johnson's Battalion, and saw considerable detached service up in the Indian territory. After the war Preston Owen and five other young men decided to attend school at old Wadeville. They boarded up a cabin for a school house, hired a teacher, but soon found that they were unable to carry out their plan to full accomplishment, and Mr. Owen went to work. He became the active man of the Nelson Owen cattle interests and spent many years of his early life in the saddle, riding night and day to supervise the large quantities of stock and frequently slept out of doors when frost formed upon his blankets. That was his mode of life for years. He continued the cattle business as long as Navarro county possessed cheap lands, and then converted his cattle into lands and took up farming as a business. Preston Owen possessed a genius as an overseer and administrator, and while always busy and active did very little actual labor himself, and succeeded by giving close personal supervision to his varied enterprises. Everything he touched prospered. His business plans seemed destined by some superior fate to succeed and ventures which brought other men failure worked out properly for him. His was a character to be admired. It was utterly unselfish, and though a man of few words, his words, like his acts, meant something. In the course of time he accumulated forty-eight hundred acres of land, and twenty-five hundred acres of this were brought under growing crops, and at his death its management fell to his widow. Preston Owen was also a banker. He was one of the organizers of the First State Bank of Kerens and its president at the time of his death. He owned stock in many enterprises. His interest in politics was only as a voter, but he adhered to the Democratic faith, and fraternally was a Mason and an Odd Fellow. His membership in the Methodist church began after his marriage. He entered so heartily into all phases of church work as to convince everyone of his sincerity and continued one of the main supports of his society all his life. It was a part of his nature to despise deception and hypocrisy, and set himself obstinately against all fraud in his community. Such was his concern for the welfare of his fellow men that he appeared to stand a silent guard for their best interests.

Preston Owen was married October 22, 1872, to Miss Anna Fortson. She was born at Aberdeen in Monroe county, Mississippi, a daughter of Benjamin Fortson, a native of the same county. Benjamin Fortson married Miss Titus Holliday, a native of North Carolina and a daughter of Titus Holliday, who married a Miss Edwards, a descendant of the Edwards family of New York where a large estate was left by a bachelor brother of Edwards who settled there in pioneer time. Benjamin Fortson moved to Texas in 1852, brought with him a number of negroes and fine horses, and settled on old Chatfield, where he became owner of sixteen hundred acres of farm land and died there in 1855. His father was John Fortson, a princely land owner and slave holder at Aberdeen, Mississippi, and he died at that state. Benjamin Fortson had the following family: James T., who died at Rice, Texas, leaving a family; William A., who died unmarried at Kerens; John, who died March 28, 1872, unmarried; Benjamin, who died at Corsicana, leaving a son and a daughter; Mary, who married James Smart and died in Stephens County, Texas, leaving a family; while the youngest and only living child is Mrs. Owen. Her mother died in Arkansas, in 1867.

The children of the late Preston Owen are as follows: Alice Lee, wife of Frank Matthews of Corsicana, and the mother of the following children: Preston Owen, Alice, Anna Lee, Frank Donnan and Lloyd Nelson; John, who married Charles French of Kerens, and has three children—Minnie May, Geraldine, Anna Earl and Charles Earl; Earl Fortson Owen, who is a young man just reached at maturity and now managing his mother's estate.

THOMAS FOSTER HURN, of Higgins, Texas, is one of the enterprising young business men of his town, and has a great interest attaches to his biographical record.

Mr. Hurn is a native of the neighboring State of Arkansas, and dates his birth in Randolph county in the year 1875. Simon P. Hurn, his father, was born in Georgia, and previous to the war of the Rebellion moved to that State to Arkansas. By trade he was a stone mason, but he also followed farming and stock raising, and in his various operations was successful. He served throughout the war as a member of an artillery regiment. Politically he was a Democrat. He continued his residence in Randolph county up to the time of his death, November 17, 1890, at the age of sixty-two years. Hurn's mother, Sarah J. (Alexander) Hurn, was born in North Carolina and when a child removed with her parents to Arkansas. At this writing she is still living in Randolph county, that State, enjoying good health, at the age of eighty-three years. Of her eleven children, Thomas Foster Hurn is the youngest.

Mr. Hurn attended the country schools of his native State until he reached the age of sixteen years, and he remained on the home farm until after his father's death. Then he started out to earn his own way in the world as a farm hand, at a wage of $11.00 per month. In 1897, he came to Texas, Hood county being his first location. His identity with Higgins dates from 1899. In 1907, having saved his earnings, he engaged in a mercantile business, beginning as a furniture dealer and continuing in this line for three years. On coming to Higgins he opened up a stock of hardware and implements, and has since been doing a prosperous business. From the above it is seen that Mr. Hurn has made his way in the world; hard work, perseverance and good management have been the factors with which he has achieved his success.

Politically, he affiliates with the Democratic party, but only as a voter, for he has never sought or been given official preferment.

Mr. Hurn was married in 1899, in Hood county, Texas, to Miss Biddie Drake, a native of Tennessee, and a daughter of John W. Drake. They have two children: Clarence, born February 19, 1900, and Herbert, June 1902, both in Higgins.

Mr. and Mrs. Hurn are identified with the Methodist church, in which he is an active worker, holding the offices of trustee and steward.

J. L. BATES, one of the foremost factors in the legal circles of San Antonio, Texas, was born in Choctaw county, Mississippi, in 1849.

Mr. Bates prepared himself for the profession of law in the law school of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, from which he graduated in the class of 1877, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He began the practice of law at Grenada, Mississippi, soon after his graduation. In 1891, he came to San Antonio, Texas, and this city has been his home ever since. Mr. Bates is widely known and recognized as one of the leading constitutional lawyers of Texas and the South, and has figured in some of the most notable cases wherein constitutional questions are involved. His practice is almost entirely in the Federal courts, and his principal work is equity jurisprudence and constitutional law. As an indication of the general nature of his practice, we mention one recent notable case (1912) of which he had charge for the appellees, namely: the case of Thomas H. Hubbard, the Crocker estate, Frank Storrs and William P. Hillhouse, appellants, vs. the G. H. & S. Railway and the Southern Pacific Railway, appellees; a suit involving ten million dollars, and carried to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Mr. Bates wrote the brief in this case, a document that has received note as a model of its kind. Indeed, his most effective work is as a brief writer.

Mr. Bates is also the author of two notable works on subjects of which he makes a specialty, viz.: "Bates on Federal Equity Procedure," and "Bates on Federal Procedure at Law." These are standard reference and text books on the legal matters of which they treat, and have brought the author a well-merited reputation.

Mr. Bates' wife comes of a distinguished Mississippi family. She was before her marriage Miss Belle Strickland of Holly Springs in that state.

PETER J. GREEN. One of the leading merchants and business men of Canyon City, Mr. Green is associated with his younger brother, Wilfred P. Green, who was born in 1891, in conducting the P. J. Green Hardware Company. This business was originally established by the Canyon Mercantile Company, and was purchased by the brothers in December, 1912. It is the largest hardware and implement store in Canyon City or Randall county, and its floor space of eleven thousand square feet is filled with a varied assortment of goods comprised in their line, and they carry a stock of from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars worth of hardware and implements.

Peter J. Green is a native of Texas, born in Denton county, Texas, April 29, 1887, and is of old Virginia ancestry. His father was Philip H. Green, a native of Missouri, who came to Texas in 1877, locating in Denton county. He was engaged in farming and stock raising in Missouri, and for fifteen years served Jackson county, Missouri, in the office of sheriff, spending a great deal of his official time in running down cattle and horse thieves. After moving to Texas he followed ranching, but suffered many losses from Indians and outlaws in this state. His death occurred in Denton county at the age of seventy-one in 1896. The maiden name of the mother was Martha E. Martin, who was born in Frankfort county, Missouri, and who died in Floyd county, Texas, in 1906, at the age of sixty. They were the parents of fifteen children, six of whom are living.

Prior to engaging in the hardware business at Canyon City, Mr. P. J. Green was connected with the Floyddale First National Bank as assistant cashier. Though a well informed man and with all the essentials of a good education for practical purposes, Mr. Green never attended any public school a single day in his life, being educated under his mother's instructions and by his own efforts in that direction. On reaching the age of nineteen, after leaving the farm, he attained employment in the Plainview Bank & Trust Company at Plainview, and continued work in connection with banks and banking, until he bought the hardware store at Canyon City.

He is a Democrat in politics, although he has never aspired to any public distinction.

At Lockney, Texas, in Floyd county, on June 20, 1909, Mr. Green married Miss Laura A. Young, a native of Texas, and a daughter of T. E. Young, an old Texas settler. The two children born of their union are Nita J. and Lilly A. Green. Mr. Green began his career on his own resources, never received any financial help from any source and has won a degree of prosperity which would be creditable to any man who still has the greater part of his life before him.

ROBERT HUGHES COOK has, in the years of his residence here witnessed the growth of Electra from a village of two hundred souls to a city of 4,500, its present population, and it is worthy of mention that his own fortunes have advanced in comparison with the development and growth of the city. From a small mercantile business which he established here he has gone from one stage of advancement to another until he is today one of the best known operators in oil, and his income from royalty properties alone is something like $1500 a month. He has in addition thereto other holdings, which he is operating independently, from which his income is appreciably large, and he is claiming his just share of the prosperity and position that comes from his interest in a community that produces oil to the amount of seven millions annually. Born in Daingerfield, Texas, on November 15, 1867, Mr. Cook is the son of Jesse M. and Fannie S. (Hughes) Cook, natives of Georgia and Texas, respectively.

Jesse M. Cook came to Texas when he was barely twenty years old, fresh from his service in the Mexican war, and it is worthy of mention at this point that he also served in the Civil war, as the captain of a Texas company. He saw much of the hardest fighting of the war, and was wounded at Corinth, Mississippi. He came to Texas in 1849 and settled in Titus county, where he continued until 1872, and then removed to Denison, Texas. He became well known in his section of the state as a municipal judge, and was a land holder to some extent. He served in his capacity as judge until two years prior to his death, which took place in 1894 in Denison, when he was sixty-nine years of age. Prior to the Civil war, he served as a member of the state legislature from his district, and gave a praiseworthy service to his constituency in that office. The mother, who was born, reared and educated in Texas, still lives in Denison, aged seventy-two years.

Of the ten children born to Jesse M. and Fannie (Hughes) Cook, Robert Hughes Cook of this very brief review, was the sixth born. He attended the schools of Denison, finishing the high school course there at the early age of fourteen years, when he went into the Government mail service in the railway department at Denison, spending ten years in that work in Denison and Taylor. Upon quitting the mail service, Mr. Cook came to West Texas, settling in Electra and identifying himself with the colonization business with a Mr. Wagner, and continuing thus for fourteen months. He then went into the mercantile business on his own resources remaining thus occupied for three years. In that time he had been familiarizing himself with the conditions then existing in and about Electra, and he began to acquire properties in the oil district, a little at a time, until he had a goodly list of land titles in his possession. He began prospecting independently and struck a rich well, which is yet producing abundantly, and he is drilling four or five other wells, each one equally promising. His holdings lie in different parts of the county, in the vicinity of Electra, chiefly. He also owns a considerable farm land in the county, with some Electra real estate to his credit.

Mr. Cook is chairman of the Wichita County Democratic Central Committee, and takes an active part in the work of the party in the county. He is now serving as Justice of the Peace, and in this and other ways has demonstrated his willingness to serve his community, despite the press of private business that is his. He has membership in the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of the Maccabees, in all of which he is prominent and popular.

Mr. Cook was married on October 2, 1894, to Miss Elsie Haxie, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emory Haxie, well known people of Electra. They have no children.

GEORGE W. BOWMAN. The history of George W. Bowman is largely identified with that of Collin county, and no record of either man or community would be complete without extended mention of both. A resident here since the "free grass" days of 1857, he has seen the county grow and develop from a wide, open range to magnitude and power which his fondest hopes never, until recent years, conceived, and is now one of the few men living who can truthfully say: "This is a part of my life labor; my faith in it was true from the beginning, and I take pride in its welfare and prosperity, even as a parent is proud of his child." Mr. Bowman is one of the well known financiers of Plano, with large moneyed interests as president of the Plano National Bank. He is a man of seventy years, yet strong and alert in body and mind, and intensely acute and active in all the cares of business and of the demands of domestic life. The success which he has achieved should be a spur to the ambition of every boy, no matter how poor or lowly.

Mr. Bowman was born April 19, 1844, at Sweetwater, Monroe county, Tennessee, and is a son of John D. and Susan (Jackson) Bowman. He is of German descent, his great-grandfather having emigrated to this country from the Fatherland and located in Tennessee, where for many years members of the family were prominent in business, the professions and military and civic life. John D. Bowman was born in Tennessee, and in 1857 came to Texas, locating in the vicinity of Plano, where he was engaged successfully in farming and stock raising until the outbreak of the Civil War. At that time, casting his fortunes with the Confederacy, he entered the army of the South, and during the next several years saw active service principally in the guarding of prisoners. His was not a constitution, however, to withstand the rigors of army life, and his health soon broke down and he was discharged on account of disability. He returned to his home and again took up agricultural work, but never recovered from his army experience, and finally died, in 1873, of consumption. The mother, also a native of Tennessee, followed him to the grave in 1886. Of the five children born to John D. and Susan Bowman, but two survive, J. H., who is engaged in farming in Collin county, and George W.

The early education of Mr. Bowman was secured in the public schools of Tennessee, and he was thirteen years of age when he accompanied his parents to Texas. His advantages were limited, but he made the most of his opportunities, and while his father was away to war assisted in the support of the family by working on the farm. He adopted the vocation of farmer and stock raiser when he embarked upon his own career, and in this line became successful through energetic, industrious labor. He was quick to recognize and grasp opportunities, and through his honorable and straightforward manner of carrying on his transactions of a business nature established a reputation for integrity that preceded him to Plano. The Plano National Bank was established in 1887 and Mr. Bowman was chosen its first president, a position he has continued to hold to the present time. Through his able direction of its policy he has made this one of the strongest institutions of Collin county, with a capital of $100,000 and a surplus of $75,000. He has augmented its usefulness, popular-its coffers and directed the investments of its revenues, and his management of its affairs has been on a whole so full of good judgment that it has been the greatest advantage to the institution. In his political views, Mr. Bowman is a Democrat, but he has never cared for public office, although he has always shown a commendable willingness to bear his full share of the responsibilities of citizenship. With his family he attends the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is at present a member of the board of trustees.

On February 25, 1875, Mr. Bowman was married at Marshall, Texas, to Miss Eliza McFarland, the daughter of a prominent Methodist preacher who came to Texas in 1870 from Louisiana, and died in 1888. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, of whom one survives, Hon. J. R. Bowman, who served as state secretary to Governor Campbell, was a member of the state legislature for one term, and is now connected with the Interurban Traction Company of Dallas. During the fifty-seven years in which Mr. Bowman has resided in Collin county he has been a witness of the marvelous changes which have taken place in this part of the country. Upon his arrival there were few settlements, grass was free, land which now brings from $125 to $150 an acre could be purchased from $2.50 to $5.00 an acre, and cattle that now demands from $30 to $60 a head, then sold from $5 to $20. His contribution to the marvelous development of his section has been no small one, for while he has labored steadfastly to increase his own interests, he has always done his utmost to forward the interests of his adopted community, in which he has met with such a marked degree of success, and for which, among his numerous friends, he intends to leave the remainder of his days.

JOHN DOWNEY SPEAR, M. D. The twenty years in which Dr. Spear has practiced medicine in Libert county in the vicinity of Dayton have been a time of fruitful service on the part of a young man who early in life determined how he could best fulfill his own destiny and do most for mankind, and left no stone unturned to reach his goal.

Dr. John Downey Spear was born at Texarkana, Texas, on February 4, 1871, a son of J. Marion Spear and a grandson of Augustus Spear. Augustus Spear, who was born in Mississippi, came to Texas as a slave-holder, planter, and died in Miller county, Arkansas, near Texarkana about 1876, married Melissa A. Cunningham, and their children were as follows: James Marion, J. Montgomery, Frank and Gus, the four sons; and Tebia, who first married a Mr. Orr and second a Mr. Jones who resides near Texarkana; Melissa, who married John Edwin of Nash, Texas; Georgie, who married Harvey Mendenhall and died in Grimes county, Texas; and Emma, who became the wife of Walter Jones and died in Texarkana.

J. Marion Spear, who was born in Montgomery county, Mississippi, had a common school education, and left Mississippi with his father when he was a boy, spent his career as a farmer and stock raiser, and for a number of years lived in Bowie county, Texas. In 1907 he moved out to California and died at Los Angeles April 22, 1912, at the age of seventy-eight. James Marion Spear married Martha A. Downey, daughter of a Louisiana settler in Bowie county, Texas. She died in 1880, her children being: Eudora, wife of Thomas Watson of Texarkana; Dr. Spear; Ada, who married Thomas Ferris of Connorville, Oklahoma; Scott, also of Connorville; and Ida, who married Robert L. Bagley, Birmingham, Alabama.

Dr. Spear grew up in the vicinity of Texarkana, obtained his education in the high school of that city, and at the age of seventeen left home and began working as a farm hand for wages in Cass county, Texas. From the proceeds of this arduous industry he began the study of medicine and entered the medical department of the Arkansas Industrial University at Little Rock. After one year of study he went back to the farm to get more resources, and subsequently spent two years at Louisville Medical College in Kentucky, where he was graduated M. D. in 1891. A surgical experience came as assistant in the hospital and dispensary clinics at Louisville, and his first practice after returning to Texas was in Cass county. Subsequently he moved to Houston, and from there in 1894 to Dayton. He has membership in the Jefferson County Medical Society and in the Texas State Medical Society. While active in practice and in that way serving a large community of people in the vicinity of Dayton, he has also manifested a helpful part in public affairs, chiefly along the line of public education. For many years he has been a member of the school board of Dayton and is now its president.

Dr. Spear was married in Cass county, Texas, on March 30, 1891, to Miss Nora M. Boggs, daughter of David W. and Rachel (Morgan) Boggs. Her father came from Illinois to Texas many years after the war and was a farmer. Mrs. Spear was one of two children, her brother being Leslie Boggs of Los Angeles. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Spear are Floyd, Audrey, Clyde, Ray, Claudine and J. D. Jr.

JOSEPH LEE MANRY. The people of Polk county need no introduction to the district attorney for the Ninth Judicial District, Joseph Lee Manry, whose career as a lawyer and public official has been one of consecutive and well-merited advancement. A native of Polk county, he was born in the country, near Moscow, September 15, 1870, and is a son of David T. and Mary (Hardin) Manry.

The Manry family originated in Scotland, and was founded in the United States by B. W. Manry, the grandfather of Joseph I. Manry. He subsequently moved to Mississippi, and finally came to Texas, where he spent his life as a farmer and merchant at Moscow, and died there at the age of eighty-eight years. A Democrat in politics, he served as postmaster of Moscow all through the war between the South and the North, and had three sons fighting in the uniform of the Confederacy. His religious belief was that of the Baptist church. Mr. Manry's wife came to the United States from Germany, and she bore him three sons and three daughters, as follows: David T., the father of Joseph Lee; W. D., now a resident of Galveston, Texas; John L., of Trinity, Texas; Margaret, who married James Turner, of Trinity, and died there; Ella, who married Ed Parks and died in Texas; and Sallie, who married J. T. Goodwin and died at Moscow.

David T. Manry was born in Mississippi, in July, 1836, and there received a limited education in the public schools. He was a lad of fourteen years when he accompanied his parents to Texas, the family settling near Moscow, where he has since been a resident, having followed the occupations to which he was reared, farming and stockraising. He was so engaged when he enlisted in a regiment of Texas Infantry, as a private soldier in the Confederate service, and for four years worthily wore the Gray. He served in General Walker's Brigade, in the Trans-Mississippi Department, and, among others, participated in the engagements at Mansfield, Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou, passing through the entire war without wounds or capture. He has since followed up the interests of the Confederate veterans' meetings, and delights in meeting his old army comrades at Ike Turner Camp of Polk county, of which he is a valued member. In politics he is a Democrat of the prohibition sort and is not gifted as a speaker nor of a literary turn of mind. Mr. Manry was married in Polk county, Texas, to Mary Hardin, a daughter of an old settler and substantial farmer of Polk county. Mrs. Manry died in 1884, having been the mother of these children: W. David, a resident of Moscow; John T., of Moscow; Elbert J., of Livingston; Joseph Lee, of this review; D. B., of the old homestead in Polk county; Frank M., a farmer of Polk county; Edgar A., of the same locality; Miss Martha, residing at the old home; Lizzie, who married Harvey Samuel, of Polk county, and one who married Edgar Thomas, of Polk county.

Joseph Lee Manry received fair educational advantages in his youth, attending the public graded and high schools of Moscow. Following this, he took up the study of law alone, and while so engaged taught school in Polk county and served on the board of school examiners, being also president of the County Institute during the last two years that he taught. After reading law with his brother, and with C. L. Carter, of Livingston, Texas, he was admitted to the bar in July, 1897, before Judge L. B. Hightower, having been examined by a board named by the court and composed of J. C. Fagan, Joseph Holtzhausen and Judge James E. Hill. Mr. Manry immediately took up the practice of his profession at Livingston, and his first case was one held before Judge Taylor, at Leggett, Texas. It was a criminal case, in which Mr. Manry defended a man who was charged with dogging stock, and he won an acquittal for his client. During this case he was fined ten dollars for contempt of court, but at the conclusion of the case the fine was remitted by the court who explained that he thought Mr. Manry "didn't know any better".

Mr. Manry has practiced alone and has followed a general line of business. He entered politics as a Democrat in 1902, when he became a candidate for county attorney of Polk county, and was elected as the assessor of P. R. Rowe, and served four years. During his term he put into vigorous force the local option law of the county and tried the first prohibition cases tried in the county of Polk, securing the first convictions. He was elected district attorney in 1906 and was reelected in 1908, 1910 and 1912, having originally succeeded S. A. McCall, of Willis. In the district attorney's offices he has contended with the ordinary criminal cases of this section, and has secured the conviction of seven for death sentences and five of these have paid the penalty. He has been interested in politics since before the time he attained his majority, and has taken an active part in state politics since his admission to the bar. He was in the Wilson convention at Houston, in 1912, and in the Hogg-Clark campaign of 1892 was a supporter of the Governor. In the next big political controversy in Texas he was a supporter of Senator Bailey as against his political enemies. A vigorous, virile man, in the prime of life, large of stature and strong, forcible speech, he is readily recognizable as a natural leader of men, and one to whom others look for advice and counsel in the important affairs of life.

Mr. Manry was married in Polk county, Texas, October 10, 1897, to Miss Alma Leggett, a daughter of Thaddeus W. Leggett and Emma (Smith) Leggett, of Lavaca county, Texas. Mr. Leggett, who came from Mississippi to Texas, is a prosperous farmer, and the father of nine children, of whom Mrs. Manry is the third in order of birth. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Manry, namely: Leon, Elma Lee, Joseph and Alice. Mr. Manry is a Master Mason, belonging to Trinity Lodge at Livingston, and is also a member of the fraternal Mystic Circle. He is engaged by proxy in clearing up farming lands in Polk county, and has improved much property for the habitation of tenantry in this section.

SAM A. BRYANT. Now serving his second term as county attorney of Hall county, Mr. Bryant has been a member of the Texas bar since 1901, and previous to his removal to Memphis was active in public affairs and in his profession in Eastland county.

Sam. A. Bryant is a Kentuckian by birth, born in LaRue county, December 18, 1862. His father, Judge P. Bryant, was born in Kentucky, and was a grandson of the founder of the Bryant family in Virginia, the first ancestor having come from England. On the maternal side Mr. Bryant is descended from Irish ancestors, who settled in Kentucky many years ago. Judge P. Bryant moved to Texas in 1872, settling in Grayson county, where his death occurred in 1886 at the age of sixty-six. All his life was devoted to the ministry of the Baptist church. His wife Louisa P. Simpson was born in Kentucky, and died in LaRue county, in 1866, at the age of thirty-nine she was the mother of four sons, among whom the Memphis attorney was the third.

The latter was given and acquired through his own energy and ambition a very liberal education, attending a preparatory school in Sherman, Texas, and later the Baylor University at Waco. At the age of nineteen he was given a certificate and found a place as teacher, a vocation which he followed with much success for twelve years, principally in Grayson and Eastland counties. He finally became principal of a school, and was regarded as one of the most successful teachers and school executives in Eastland county. During the latter period of his teaching, however, he began the study of law at home, and by utilizing all his leisure time he was qualified for the bar in 1901, in which year he was granted his license. He began practice in Eastland county, where he remained for three years, after which he moved to Memphis, and has since had a liberal share of the local business in the courts and office practice. In the fall of 1910 he was first elected to the office of county attorney, and in the last election of November, 1912, was chosen for a second term. During his residence in Eastland county he served one term as tax collector and one term as county judge. He is now a Democrat, but during his earlier years was an ardent supporter of populist doctrine and an active factor in the party of that name. He served as a delegate to the national convention in 1896.

Fraternally Mr. Bryant is a Royal Arch Mason, and is also affiliated with the Cryptic Branch of the Order in the Council. He is consul commander in the Woodmen of the World, and has held that office since coming to Memphis. The Commercial Club has his name enrolled on its membership, and he belongs to the Baptist church. In Brown county, Texas, in 1887, Mr. Bryant married Miss Leonora Bond, who was born in Mississippi, a daughter of S. C. Bond. Their three children are Jessie B., Leota, and Elizabeth. Mr. Bryant besides his law practice is also a farmer, having a very fine place of eight hundred acres near Memphis, and by his management has made it very profitable and productive.

THOMAS D. FRIZZELL, M. D. Northwest Texas is the home of quite a number of men who are thrown upon their own resources at an early age, and whose natural aptness and energy were strengthened by contact with the world, resulting in making their lives more than ordinarily successful, and useful. Among this number is Dr. Thomas. D. Frizzell, who has won prestige as a physician and surgeon at Quanah, and vicinity, and who in point of continuous service is the oldest doctor of the city.

Dr. Thomas D. Frizzell was born in Fannin county, Texas, December 26, 1870, the oldest of five children, three of whom are yet living, born to P. F. and Nettie (Thompson) Frizzell. The founder of the family in America came from England, and was John W. Frazier, who fled from England during Cromwell's protectorate and who settled in Baltimore, obtaining a grant of land, and at one time being owner of the site of the present city of Baltimore. After coming to America, he changed his name to Frizzell, that change having been made largely owing to the original cause which him from England. He had two sons, Nathan and Ed, and the family of which Dr. Frizzell is a member is descended from Nathan, who afterwards settled in Kentucky. Dr. Frizzell's paternal grandmother was Eliza Morgan, a sister of General Morgan of Confederate fame. His mother's family, the Thompsons, are Scotch-Irish, and early settlers of Tennessee. P. Frizzell, the father, was born in Kentucky, and in 1840 moved to Texas, locating in Henderson county, where he was a farmer and stock raiser, and where he remained until his death on the old home place on March 27, 1913, at the age of seventy-nine. He was a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Missionary Baptist church. During the Civil war he went to a Kentucky Regiment, in a company commanded by Captain D. M. Morgan, and served under General Sherman in the Cavalry branch. He went through the war for four years, and was a private. The mother was born in Tennessee, a daughter of Evan Thompson, one of the old settlers of Tennessee, she moved to Texas in 1865, with her father and they located in Henderson county, where the Thompsons were known as successful farmers and stock raisers. The mother died April 5, 1912, at the old home place in Henderson county, Texas, at the age of sixty-six.

Dr. Frizzell gained most of his education as a result of his own labors. He attained schooling in the public institutions of Henderson county, and after leaving high school studied under private instruction up to the time he was twenty years old. His first regular professional activities were as a teacher, and for three years he taught in his home county at Henderson. After that he entered the Kentucky school of medicine at Louisville, where he was graduated M. D. in 1892. For a year he was interne in the Louisville City Hospital, and then began practice in Henderson county. He remained there until 1907, in which year he located in Navarro county, and in the latter part of the same year moved to Quanah in Hardeman county, and has since been in continuous practice of medicine in that city ever since. He has a large private practice and various important connections as a railway surgeon. Dr. Frizzell is chief surgeon for the Frisco Railway at Quanah, local surgeon for the Fort Worth & Denver Railway, and also local surgeon for the Q. A. & P. Railway. He is a member and president of the Hardman County Medical Society, a member of the State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, and of the American Railway Surgeons Association. In politics he is a Democrat.

Dr. Frizzell affiliates with the Masonic Order, having won all the degrees in the York Rite, including the Master and Commandery, and is a member of the Elks Shrine. He is also affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Woodmen of the World. His church is the Missionary Baptist. In Henderson county, Texas, July 22, 1894, Dr. Frizzell married Miss Annie Cotten, who was born in Henderson county, a daughter of R. M. Cotten, a Confederate soldier and old-time resident of Henderson county. Their children born to the marriage of Dr. Frizzell and his wife are: Hayden C., Ethel, Helen and Marion.

OSCAR LAERTIUS NORSWORTHY, M. D. The theory of looking upon the modern hospital as merely a convenience or a luxury of the well-to-do is both unfounded and erroneous. The modern institution for the care of the sick is not only the highest development of science for the alleviation and cure of the swarming bodily ills of mankind, a wonderful organization into which the best thought and experience of experts at work the world over have entered, it is also a great philanthropic enterprise. For one of its leading institutions of this kind, the city of Houston is indebted to Dr. Oscar Laertius Norsworthy, founder of the Norsworthy Hospital and a leading medical practitioner of the city since 1895. Dr.

Norsworthy is a native of Texas, having been born in Jasper county, February 26, 1872, a son of Laertius and Sallie (Bunch) Norsworthy. His grandparents on the paternal side were natives of Louisiana and on the maternal side of Georgia, while his parents were both born in the Lone Star State, his father being a Jasper county planter.

Doctor Norsworthy received his early education in the public and high schools of Jasper county, following which he took a course in the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas. He entered upon his medical studies in Tulane University, where he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1895, and since that time has engaged in post-graduate work in many cities in this country, including New York, Chicago and Baltimore, and in 1906 spent a long period in study in the hospitals and colleges of Vienna, Berlin and London. He first entered practice at Houston in 1895 and almost at once won recognition in his chosen calling, bringing to his work that greatly desired quality of the ideal physician, the power of irradiating the sick chamber with the light of his cheerful presence, thus lifting the patient out of the slough of despondency. Doctor Norsworthy did not give up his studies as his practice grew; rather, he applied himself to them the more assiduously, taking advantage of every opportunity to keep fully abreast of the various changes and discoveries of the profession which are changing the vocation from one of the function of prescribing drugs to the science of sanitation, dietetics, education and hygiene. In this connection he identified himself with the American Medical Association, the Texas State Medical Association, the South Texas Medical Association (of which he was president in 1912), the Harris County Medical Society, the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America, and the Surgeons' Club of Rochester, Minnesota, of which last-named he is a life member. He was the first to develop in Houston the use of the X-ray and its many uses in diagnosis.

Doctor Norsworthy had long been confident that Houston was in need of a modern hospital, and in June, 1909, after long preparation, he opened the Norsworthy Hospital, on San Jacinto street, between Rosalie and Anita avenues, of which he is the sole owner. This is a four-story structure, covering a ground space of 50x80 feet, containing thirty-five beds, with all modern equipment, including electric lighting, elevator service and other conveniences. It is specially equipped for surgical cases and acute curable diseases, but does not accept tubercular or infectious diseases. The hospital carries a complete staff of physicians, surgeons and nurses, and is acknowledged by authorities to be one of the finest, in point of equipment and service, for skillful treatment and advantages, in the Southwest, if not in the whole United States. Early in January, 1914, Doctor Norsworthy journeyed to Europe to be gone two years, a goodly portion of this time to be passed in post-graduate work and in attending clinics in the principal medical and surgical centers. Doctor Norsworthy maintains offices at Nos. 701-703 Chronicle Building. He is a member of the Houston Country Club, and as a member of the Chamber of Commerce has assisted materially in developing and advancing the interests of his adopted city. In the field of business he has taken a more or less prominent part, and at this time holds directorships in the Southern Drug Company, the Beaconfield Apartments Company, the Waverly Apartments Company, the Houston Land and Enterprise Company and the Westover Land Company.

In 1910 Doctor Norsworthy was married to Miss Sanford Gibbs, daughter of Sanford Gibbs of Huntsville, Texas, and a sister of Dr. James P. Gibbs of Houston. Dr. and Mrs. Norsworthy have no children. They reside in their modern home at No. 3015 Main street, Houston.

CLAUDE V. HALL. Having been a member of the Floyd county bar, Mr. Hall was one of the live citizens of that county for a number of years. As a lawyer he is still young, but as a newspaper man, a worker and organizer in education, and man of varied knowledge and interests has been appreciated in that part of the state for a long while.

Claude V. Hall was born near the town of Cooper in Delta county, Texas, January 4, 1874. An only child, his parents were Valentine J. and Mahala B. (Vaden) Hall, the former a native of Tennessee, and the latter of Texas. The father came to Texas in 1869, settling in Delta county, later moving to Hopkins county about 1882, and by occupation was a farmer. He now lives in Mora county, New Mexico, and, a substantial man of business, he has also taken part in the public affairs wherever he has lived. The mother was born in Hopkins county, a daughter of William Vaden, who was a settler in that vicinity about 1842, was a farmer and planter, owned a number of slaves to work his large estate, and was one of the very prosperous men until the results of the Civil war impoverished him. The mother spent her early life in Hopkins county, and is now living in New Mexico.

Claude V. Hall attained a country school education in Hopkins county, and also attended the schools of Floyd county. A number of years after his first educational advantages, he attended the Sam Houston Normal Institute where he graduated in 1904, and the next four years were spent in the University of Texas, where he graduated LL. B. in 1910. His early life to the age of twenty was spent on the farm, and at twenty-one he established at Floydada The Hesperian, a weekly newspaper, and continued to publish that enterprising local sheet for seven years and three months. Prior to his career as a newspaper man, he was engaged in teaching school in Floyd county. Between 1904 and 1910 he taught during the sessions in Hunt county, and during 1910-11 was again teaching in Floyd county. He has always taken a deep interest in educational matters and has done much in his locality to develop the facilities and to raise the standards in the rural schools. He is one of the thoroughly informed men on the development and history of the Panhandle country of Texas, and has done much to preserve the annals of that interesting portion of the state. Through his newspapers he published a long series of statistical, historical, miscellaneous, descriptive, and biographical sketches and articles pertaining to the northwest part of the state. The publication received many favorable press comments over the state and also was commended by the state Historical Association Quarterly.

In April, 1911, Mr. Hall began the general practice of law and since then has attained a place among the successful lawyers of Floyd county. He is a director and stockholder in The Hesperian Publishing Company. Politically Mr. Hall is a Democrat of the Progressive Bryan and Wilson type. He has also been quite an admirer of the political career of James Stephen Hogg, and through his paper and privately he has done much to encourage and support progressive politics and government in locality and state. During his career he has cultivated the acquaintance of hundreds of the best known men in Texas business and politics. However, he has never filled any public office. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and belongs to the Christian church. In San Antonio, September 5, 1907, he married Miss Ethel Alston, who was born in Wilson county, Texas, a daughter of J. W. Alston, of one of the old families of that section. Mrs. Hall was in the Sam Houston Normal Institute and graduated in the same year with Mr. Hall. They have one child, Claude Vaden Jr., born May 29, 1912, at Floydada.

Mr. Hall had a law practice of which he might justly feel proud, but teaching was a work he loved best.

That he might get the most pleasure possible out of a busy life he has since September, 1913, taught as principal of the Matador Public School. At the close of the session of 1913-1914 Mr. Hall was given the superintendency of this school. He says he was never better pleased with life's possibilities than he is just now. The world needs many more men devoted to school work, and it is his ambition to be one of the number.

Mr. Hall's ancestry is of Welsh origin, and the first Americans of the name settled in Virginia, and then in Tennessee, the family having located in the colonies prior to the Revolution. On the mother's side the stock is of mingled French and English origin. Isham Beasley, his mother's grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier, and subsequently lived in Smith county, Tennessee.

Mr. Hall paid his way through University by teaching school, and other work, and by depending upon his own enterprise and ability has prospered, and at the same time enjoyed the best things of life. He owns his own home, and has a large law and general library. His chief diversion is his reading and study, and he is said to possess the largest general library in Motley county. Mrs. Hall possesses the same taste as her husband, and they enjoy a large field of interest beyond those of most people whose minds are concentrated solely upon the commonplaces of existence.

WILLIAM B. (BUCK) BENJAMIN MARTIN, was born in Sumner county, Tennessee, on the 4th of March, 1849. He is a son of Benjamin S. Martin, who was also born in Sumner County, Tennessee, in 1818, being a farmer the greater part of his life and spent most of his years in Texas. Of little education he was a practical business man and a competent man of affairs. A warm champion of the cause of the confederacy, he was captured by the Federals and confined in a prison at Louisville, Kentucky, for a few months near the end of the war, but at last was pardoned by President Andrew Jackson, who was his personal friend. Benjamin S. Martin was the first Democratic Postmaster of Terrell and held this position until his death. He married Miss Jane E. Bennett, a daughter of Dr. J. A. and Mrs. Bennett, who was a Miss Anthony before her marriage. Mrs. Martin died in 1912 at the age of eighty-five years. She was a lovable old lady and a true type of Southern stock. They were the parents of eight children, viz.: William Benjamin, (Buck) Martin of Terrell, Dora, now Mrs. Jno. R. Clay of Terrell, Rev. George F. Martin of Dempsey, Okla., Jo A. Martin of Dallas, Jennie, now Mrs. M. Mace who lives in Lebanon, Tenn., Nellie B., now Mrs. M. W. Raley of Terrell, Samuel Martin of Mineral Wells, Texas, and Elizabeth, who died in infancy.

Since the boyhood of William Benjamin (Buck) Martin was spent during the troublous times just preceding and during the Civil war, he had little opportunity to secure an education. He came to Texas in 1869 with his brother Jo. They traveled in a one-horse wagon, crossing the Mississippi river at Helene, Arkansas, and journeyed for five weeks before they reached their destination, Kaufman, on October 10th, 1869. Mr. Buck Martin learned the trade of a saddler, and after about three years he gave it up and clerked for Bennett Brothers at Kaufman. After two years he came to Terrell and worked as a clerk for Mr. Jack Webb in the mercantile business. He then engaged in business with his father-in-law, Jesse H. Muckleroy and subsequently organized the W. B. Martin-Jarvis Co., which in time came to be one of the important mercantile houses of Terrell, and is today one of the leading firms of the city.

In 1898, Mr. Martin retired from business and has since been engaged in looking after his farming interests and with his good wife are enjoying in health the rest of their days in the shadow of their children and grand-children. He is an extensive land-owner and has brought under cultivation and improved thirty-three farms. In accomplishing this he has had cut down many feet of valuable walnut and ash, which would mean a fortune today. Mr. Martin sold the first piece of blackland at $50.00 per acre. He was a pioneer in farming methods and brought the first Jersey cattle into the country, contrary to the wishes of the stock-raisers, introduced the first Jersey Red hogs and built the first house south of the Texas & Pacific railway, in Terrell. He also improved the grade of horses by bringing in blooded stock.

Mr. Martin is of a congenial disposition and is well known and thought of for his successful business career and good traits of character.

On the 10th of October, 1877, he married in Kaufman, Texas, Miss Sallie Muckleroy, a woman of extraordinary management of home affairs who has toiled by the side of her husband in attaining their successes, is the daughter of Jesse H. Muckleroy (deceased), who came to Texas in 1835 and settled in Nacogdoches County. He later came to Terrell when it was a little hamlet and spent the remainder of his days there, as a very successful business man.

Mr. and Mrs. Buck Martin are the parents of the following children: Lillian is the wife of B. E. Overton of Terrell, and they have three children, Genevieve, Ben and Lillian. Fannie Bennett is the wife of Frank L. Irwin, of Terrell, and they have two children, Mary Katharine and William (Buck) Alfred. Katharine is the wife of S. E. Noble, of Terrell, and they have two children, Margaret and Emerson. There is also a son, Henry Martin, of Oklahoma City. All their children and grand-children are living.

FRANK LESLIE IRWIN. The Postmaster of the progressive little city of Terrell needs must be a man of detail, coupled with business ability and integrity. That Frank L. Irwin had been successful in this office and had won the approbation of his superiors and the liking of the citizens of Terrell for his good service and congeniality, was proof of his fitness for this responsible position. It is said it sometimes takes influence to land, but ability to hold; the latter, Mr. Irwin fully demonstrated. Although yet a young man, he has had several years of tedious business training, and his experience and congeniality should foretell for him a successful future.

Frank L. Irwin was born in Hillsboro, Loudoun county, Virginia, on the 10th of May, 1877, receiving his elementary education in the common schools of Lincoln, Nebraska, Santa Rosa, California, and Oakland, California, completing his education at Bethel Military Academy, Warrenton, Virginia. He is the son of Alfred Irwin, who was born in Rensselaer, Indiana, in the year, 1840, the latter being the son of Alfred Irwin, Sr., who was one of the pioneers of that state. The father of Frank L. Irwin received his education in the common school of Rensselaer, Indiana, and enlisted in the Federal Army with the breaking out of the Civil war and was honorably discharged from the service toward the close of the war on account of losing an eye while confined in a military hospital. In 1876 he married Mary Leslie, daughter of Benjamin Leslie of Hillsboro, Loudoun county, Virginia, and seven children were born to them, viz.; the eldest, Frank L. Irwin of Terrell, Texas, Mrs. Alexander Martin of Kansas City, Missouri (now deceased), Mrs. George Hunter of Kansas City, Missouri, Mrs. Elbert Wingo of Springfield, Missouri, and two children who died in infancy during the family's residence in Hutchinson, Kansas. The mother of Frank L. Irwin died in Oakland, California, in the year 1891, where the family lived for eight years, after residing in Santa Rosa, California, for five years, and buried near the old homestead in Hillsboro, Virginia. His father was married again in 1895 to his first wife's sister, Laura Lee Leslie who cared for and raised the infant sister of Frank L. Irwin, now Mrs. Elbert Wingo of Kansas City, Missouri. A son was born to his father and step-mother, Alfred Irwin, Jr., who with his parents resides in Springfield, Missouri. The father of Frank L. Irwin is a very successful business man and has accumulated considerable property in several states and is still unusually active for a man of his advanced age. After his son (Frank L. Irwin) had completed his education at the Academy in Virginia, he was sent from his home in Oakland, California, to Terrell, Texas, (where Mr. Irwin, Sr., lived for a while) to look after some property deeded to him by his father and shortly afterwards returned home to enter the employ of a retail hardware firm. In 1898 he returned to Terrell, Texas, on the same mission and, while there, surrendered to his feelings for the military profession, assisting in organizing an infantry company, which was afterwards enlisted in the volunteer service during the Spanish-American War, as Co. E. Fourth Texas Volunteers. This organization being turned down on the first call for volunteers, due to the state's quota being filled, Mr. Irwin returned to his home in Oakland, California, and entered the employ of Baker & Hamilton, wholesale hardware, in San Francisco. From their employ he left for Hillsboro, Virginia, where his people were then visiting, and shortly afterwards to Washington, D. C., to seek a commission in the regular Army, under the call providing for additional Infantry officers by examination. Mr. Irwin proceeded to Baltimore, Maryland, on being informed it was too late to file an application for examination, and entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. After about one year's service in the local freight office he was transferred to Clarksburg, West Virginia to assume charge of the freight transfers for intersecting lines at that point. In 1901 he resigned that position and accepted a position with the Texas Midland R. R., at Terrell, Texas. In January, 1902, he served as bookkeeper and secretary of the W. B. Martin-Jarvis Company's branch-house at Grand Saline, Texas, and in 1903 returned to Terrell in the employ of Muckleroy & Dew, retail hardware, remaining with this firm until the summer of 1906, and resigned to accept a position as assistant bookkeeper of Fife & Miller, vehicle dealers of Dallas, Texas, returning to Terrell in the Spring of 1907 with Muckleroy & Dew, with which firm he remained until accepting the appointment as Assistant Postmaster on April 1st, 1907, under the Postmaster, Francis M. Barton, now deceased.

On the death of the Postmaster in January, 1908, he was appointed as Acting Postmaster by his predecessors' Bondsman, and appointed Postmaster on June 12, 1909, serving until shortly after the close of the Republican Administration, July 26, 1913. Mr. Irwin took a keen interest in Postal affairs and conducted one of the most systematic Post Offices in the state. His knowledge of the office was general and, as a result, the service was commended; not only by the patrons, but from Departmental sources. His method of exacting good work through encouraging cooperation for proper service and impartiality in dealings with the patrons; keeping in mind and impressing the office of its being the people's service, resulted that his administration is conceded as very successful. He also took a great deal of interest in the state Postmasters' Association, being elected Assistant Secretary of the Association in 1911, Secretary the following term and then elected to the Presidency. The Federal Building was finished near the close of his tenure in office. He manifested much interest in its construction and is responsible to considerable extent for its commodious arrangements.

In politics, Mr. Irwin is a member of the Republican party, carrying out the teachings of his father who has been a life-long Republican, is well known among the leaders of his party in the state, has been active in convention work, and a personal friend of the State Chairman, Colonel Cecil A. Lyon. Mr. Irwin was married to the popular Miss Fannie Bennett Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William B. (Buck) Martin, one of the prominent families of Terrell, Texas, in 1900. To this union was born two children, Mary Katharine and William (Buck) Alfred.

Mr. and Mrs. Irwin have a large circle of friends. He is a member of the Texas National Guard, organizing Co. C, Third Infantry in 1903 and resigned in 1905 to accept appointment on the personal staff of the regimental Commander, Colonel P. C. Townsend, in the capacity of regimental Commissary with rank of Captain, which position he still retains. His service in the militia has been commendable and he has many substantial friends over the state. He is a staunch advocate for Civic improvement and has served on the Commercial Club Directory and as a member of the School Board. He also takes quite an interest in the B. P. O. Elks society and is the present Exalted Ruler.

JOHN F. ROBINSON, JR., occupies an important place in the life of Del Rio, for he is sheriff of the county, and consequently is a man of importance, for the sheriff in this section of the world has many and varied duties and is invariably a man of not only physical courage but moral courage as well. Mr. Robinson is a native of Texas and has lived all of his life in this state where most of his time has been given in behalf of the people in various public offices.

John F. Robinson, Jr., was born in Uvalde, Texas, on the 29th of July, 1869. His father is John F. Robinson, Sr., who has been active in public affairs in Texas for many years. During the Civil war he served in a Texas regiment, enlisting as a private and being promoted until at the close of the war he had attained the rank of captain. He saw much active service and took part in many of the fiercest battles of the war. He is a very progressive and able official and has held many important public offices, at present being county judge of Uvalde county. He is keenly interested in civic affairs and has done much for the advancement of the town of Uvalde where he lives with his wife. He married Miss Mary P. Griner, who was born in Tennessee. Both she and her husband are members of the Methodist church and both of them are devout Christians, Mrs. Robinson being especially active in church work. Mr. Robinson is an active Mason and has been prominent in that order. Eight children were born to John F. Robinson, Sr., and his wife, and of these John F. Robinson, Jr., is the eldest son and second child.

Growing up in Uvalde county, and in the town of Uvalde, John F. Robinson, Jr., received a very fair education in the public schools. He was graduated from the high school and then entered Sam Houston Normal School at Huntsville, Texas. After leaving the normal school at the age of eighteen he became a teacher and followed this profession for three years. He was then appointed deputy county and district clerk of Uvalde county and served in this office for about a year, his duties being in the abstract department. After this he filled various clerical positions until 1896 when he was elected chief of police of Uvalde. He only held this office a short time, however, when he resigned to accept the office of chief deputy to the sheriff of Kinney county. He spent a year and a half in the sheriff's office and then he went into partnership with the sheriff and they engaged in the sheep business which they followed for about a year and a half.

In 1900 Mr. Robinson came to Del Rio and accepted a position with Roach McLymont and Company, in the clerical department, remaining with this firm nearly a year when he resigned to accept the chief deputyship in the sheriff's office in Del Rio, for his work in that office in Kinney county was well known and he duplicated his success there in Valverde county, for after a term as deputy he was elected sheriff. He served as sheriff for six years and then voluntarily relinquished the office, and for one term was out of office. About a year of this time he spent in Mexico and then returning to Del Rio he accepted a position in the customs service under R. W. Dowe. When the elections of November, 1910, were in sight, Mr. Robinson's friends began to urge that he run for office again and so strong was the pressure brought to bear on him that he consented to run for sheriff again and was elected to the office which he is now filling.

In politics Mr. Robinson is a member of the Democratic party and he has always taken a keen and active interest in political questions, and in the battles of his party. He is a member of the Elks and has held offices in this order, and he is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. In religious matters he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 4th of October, 1910, Mr. Robinson was married to Miss Alice Watson Strong, at Alpine, Texas. Mrs. Robinson is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Strong, of Meridian, Mississippi.

CHARLES C. HUFF. As a lawyer Mr. Huff possesses and has exercised many of the qualities which give success and distinction in that profession, and for the past fifteen years has been regarded as one of the strongest attorneys at Wichita Falls. He is comparatively young in his profession, and his accomplishments as a lawyer are but the confident promise of still larger and more important achievement in the future.

Charles C. Huff is a Tennessean by birth, born in Bedford county, July 29, 1875, and the youngest of the family of William and Martha (Johnson) Huff. His father, a native of Virginia, and for many years an active minister of the Baptist faith, came to Tennessee in 1865. He lived in Tennessee the rest of his life, and died there in 1898 at the age of seventy-four years. His wife, a native of Tennessee, Carter county, is now living at the age of seventy-four in Wichita Falls. These children, all of whom have gained creditable positions in life, are: Robert E., president of the First National Bank of Wichita Falls, and one of the leading lawyers of the city; T. A. Huff, who is manager of the Wichita Falls Abstract Company; J. N. Huff, principal of schools at Garfield, Oklahoma; William Huff of Duvall, Oklahoma; Mrs. R. S. Skelton, of Scottsboro, Alabama.

Charles C. Huff as a boy grew up in his native state of Tennessee, and attended the Webb school at Bell Buckle, and other preparatory schools. On leaving college he entered the law office of his brother, Robert E. Huff, at Wichita Falls, read law, and in the fall of 1896 was admitted to the bar. In June, 1898, he began his active practice and was elected county attorney in the same year and served for three successive terms. Since that time he had devoted all his attention to civil practice, and has built up a large clientage, being especially well known as a corporation attorney. He is general attorney for the Wichita Falls and Northwestern Railway, and represents as local counsel all the railroad lines in Wichita county. He is an active member of the Wichita County Bar Association, and while serving as county attorney was also acting city attorney of Wichita Falls.

Mr. Huff is a Democrat, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and has taken the first degrees in Masonry. His church is the Christian. At Taylor, Texas, November 21, 1900, Mr. Huff married Miss Mary E. Mendel, a daughter of C. and Mary (McClure) Mendel. Her parents came from Wheeling, West Virginia, where the family has been known for many years in business and social affairs, and her father is still living at Taylor, Texas, where he is cashier of the Taylor National Bank.

Charles C. Huff

Her mother is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Huff have one daughter, Pinta Huff, born at Wichita Falls, May 18, 1903, and now attending the public schools of her home town.

WILLIAM H. LEMONS. The first and the only county and district clerk of Terrell county has been William H. Lemons, who was a popular citizen of the county when it was organized, and since his first election to the responsibilities of the office his efficiency has been such that he has been retained regularly ever since, and the standard which he has set in official performance is one that few of his successors will be likely to equal.

William H. Lemons was born in Edwards county, Texas, January 15, 1878, and has spent practically all his life in west Texas. His father was the late John H. Lemons, who was born in Texas in December, 1853, followed the stock business nearly all his career, and died in Brewster county in 1898 at the age of forty-five. The name of his wife was Winnie M. Satathite, also a native of Texas, and now a resident at Marathon in Brewster county. Of the ten children in the family, William H. was the oldest. He had a fair amount of schooling, chiefly in the country district, and when nineteen years of age took up the duties and responsibilities of life, on his own account. He went on a ranch, and having been reared to ranch life he had little difficulty in making his way in that line of work. In 1904 he left ranching to take a place with the railroad company at Sanderson, and continued in that work for one year. In the meantime the county of Terrell was organized and at the first election he was chosen to the office of county and district clerk.

On September 8, 1897, at Marathon, Mr. Lemons married Miss Luella Leora Dickson, of Marathon. Their marriage has been blessed with six children, five daughters and one son, named as follows: Addie Lee, Lewis Henry, Ora Ethel, Nora Elouise, Leona Lolette and Grace Elizabeth. Mr. Lemons has no home church, but gives his support to religious work of all denominations. He is a lifetime member of the Order of Elks and is a member of the Woodmen of the World, while both he and his wife are associated with the Woodman's Circle. He is also an active member of the Sanderson Commercial Club and one of the Directors of the Sanderson State Bank and is one of the local leaders of the Democratic party. Among the amusements and diversions of life Mr. Lemons is particularly fond of baseball. As a lifelong resident of Texas he is unable to believe that any other state offers quite the opportunities which Texas does, and it is belief based upon considerable observation that any man with honest purpose and with energy can find and improve his opportunities in this country, particularly in west Texas.

JOSEPH KERR. As a business builder and man of affairs, Terrell county's leading citizen is Joseph Kerr, merchant, banker, and former county judge. The prominent feature of his career has been self-attainment. He began as a boy to struggle against the difficulties of life, worked on a ranch, clerked in a store, was in one position and in another for several years, finally made his start in merchandising and has steadily built up a trading establishment which is now second to none in Sanderson and vicinity.

Joseph Kerr is a native of Ireland, where he was born February 19, 1873. When he was eight years old his parents came to Texas, and since then he has been a resident of this state. His father was the late James Kerr, one of the prosperous and highly respected citizens of Atachosa county, where his death occurred at the age of seventy-six in January, 1913, his body now being at rest near the old homestead in Atachosa county. James Kerr, also a native of Ireland, came to Texas in 1881, and engaged in farming and stock raising south of San Antonio. He was always a devout member of the Catholic church, as was his wife, whose maiden name was Rosa Campbell, who is now living with her son in Sanderson. Of the nine children in the family, Joseph Kerr was the fifth, and with the exception of one son now in New Mexico all the other children live in Texas.

Joseph Kerr had only a limited amount of education in the Texas public schools, this being supplemented with a course in a commercial college. Leaving school when fifteen years old he earned his first money as a regular employe on a stock ranch, then served a clerkship in a store and was connected with several mercantile establishments until he reached the little town of Tilden. There he made his first business venture independently, by opening a stock of groceries. At the end of two years he sold out and for the next two years followed the live stock business. He then came to Sanderson and bought a stock of general merchandise and began energetically to build up a substantial trade. His business has ever since been known popularly in the town and over a wide stretch of surrounding country as the Joe Kerr store. He carries a full line of everything in general merchandise, and his patrons can rely upon his goods, and he in turn can rely upon a steady flow of patronage to this store. Mr. Kerr was the organizer of the Sanderson State Bank, and has been its president and active head since it first opened its doors for business.

He was reared and is a member of the Catholic church, but is broad minded and liberal in supporting all benevolent and religious movements. He is affiliated with the Order of Elks and belongs to the Sanderson Commercial Club. As a Democrat he takes much interest in politics, especially in local affairs, and as one of the influential citizens who assisted in organizing Terrell county he was among the first who were accorded official honors, being elected county judge and serving in that office for three terms. Judge Kerr is fond of all outdoor amusements, and takes an active part in the social life of his city. He is the owner of large amounts of real estate both in town and country, and has much to show for his career of steady industry and honorable integrity.

CHRISTOPHER C. GATES. As postmaster at Sanderson since 1906, Mr. Gates has had the management of an office which is closely related to the welfare and convenience of all the citizens of this community. Mr. Gates has done much to improve the quality of service since he took hold, and among other important changes which have been made since he took charge of the office might be mentioned the parcel post and a general extension of postal facilities in the town and surrounding country.

Christopher C. Gates was born in Montrose, Missouri, December 31, 1879. The first twelve years of his life were spent in his native state and then after a year in Colorado, he came to Texas, where he lived for about two years at Henrietta. He had attended school in Missouri and also went to the schools in Henrietta, and from the latter place accompanied the family to San Marcos, where for about three years he was employed in his father's grocery store, and also attended high school. He took a commercial course in the Lone Star business college, and on completing his education and his early business training he left San Marcos and came to Sanderson. For a time he was connected with the newspaper business in this city, and gave up that work when he accepted the office of postmaster in 1906.

At Sanderson on December 24, 1905, Mr. Gates married Miss Minnie Schupbach, daughter of William Schupbach of Sanderson. He and his family worship in the Presbyterian church and Mr. Gates was at one time licensed as a minister of this church. He is affiliated with the Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Order of Pretorians. As a Republican he has always taken a keen interest in political affairs, but is not a very active party man. He is fond of baseball, likes good books, and enjoys all the wholesome features of social life. He is the owner of a good ranch in Terrell county, and has identified himself permanently and substantially with this part of Texas.

THOMAS B. BALLEW. Member of the firm of Ballew & Moore of Marfa, Mr. Ballew is one of the most progressive and enterprising real estate men of western Texas, whose firm is a liberal advertiser, and they not only do a large volume of business, but also a business whose character results in the permanent improvement and benefit of the locality about Marfa. The reputation of the firm in all lines in its business is based on the large dealings and high class methods, and Marfa has no more enterprising or vigorous advocate of the advantages or resources of this section of Texas than Thomas B. Ballew.

Mr. Ballew was born in Gordon county, Georgia, August 19, 1873, a son of William J. and Icie (Jones) Ballew. The parents still occupy the old Georgia homestead in Gordon county, where the father is engaged in the quiet pursuits of agriculture. The parents were reared and married in that state, and represent one of the oldest families of Georgia. There were five children in all, and besides Thomas B, a son and daughter also live in Texas at Cleburne. Samuel Ballew is married and is in the railroad service, while Mrs. Florence Grant is the wife of a prosperous farmer in that section.

Thomas B. Ballew received his early education in the Georgia schools, and then employed the remaining years of his youth in various light occupations until he left home at the age of twenty-one and came to Texas, where his career has been made. His first home was in Waco, where during the following two years he was engaged in ranching. He next moved to Stephenville, and lived in that vicinity for about nine years. There he bought a farm and besides conducting it was also the proprietor of a cotton gin. Finally selling out his interests there he went to San Angelo, and in that neighborhood became engaged in ranching, owning a large amount of land in partnership with W. H. Funk, his brother-in-law. In 1907 he came to Marfa and formed a partnership with Mr. William L. Moore, which is now conducted under the title of Ballew & Moore. This firm does general real estate, land, cattle brokerage, abstracting and other branches of a general real estate business.

At Stephenville on September 20, 1894, Mr. Ballew married Miss Amanda Arendell, daughter of Thomas Arendell, who was a native of Kentucky, but who lived in Texas from boyhood. The four children, one son and three daughters, of Mr. and Mrs. Ballew are named Edna Earl, Icie Lucile, Mattie May, and Thomas Elmo. The church of Mr. and Mrs. Ballew is the Missionary Baptist. His fraternal affiliations are with the Woodmen of the World and he is an influential member of the Marfa Commercial club. In politics he is a Democratic voter, but has always declined any participation in party affairs or to run for office. Mr. Ballew to an exceptional degree possesses what is called the vigor of life, and what time he is not engaged in pressing his business affairs to a profitable conclusion, he likes to spend in his favorite pursuits of hunting and fishing.

HON. CHARLES PINCKNEY WOODRUFF. One of the ablest leaders in the west Texas bar, Judge Woodruff of Nolan county has been a practicing lawyer and active in public affairs in this state for more than thirty years.

Of South Carolina ancestry, his paternal grandfather, Amos Woodruff, and his father, Thomas P. Woodruff, were both natives of that state. The father was born in Spartansburg district of South Carolina, and in 1867 came to Texas and located in Lamar county. For a number of years he was considered one of the leading representatives of citizenship and business farming in that section. During the Civil war he lived in Mississippi and went from that state for service in the Confederate army, continuing from the beginning until the close of the war. He afterwards moved to Benton county, Arkansas, from Texas, about 1898, and lived there until his death in March, 1904, when he was seventy years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Leatherwood, was a native of Mississippi and died in 1902. Her children numbered nine, five sons and four daughters, who reached adult age, and of this number three sons and four daughters are now living.

Charles Pinckney Woodruff was born in Winston county, Mississippi, January 19, 1858, and was nine years old when the family moved to Texas and located in Lamar county. In December, 1868, they transferred their residence to Travis county. While in Travis county a great flood occurred, destroying much property and many lives, and in August, 1869, the family returned to Lamar county, where the father rented land near the little village of Roxton. On the home farm until nineteen years of age, Charles P. Woodruff worked for his father, and owing to the unorganized system of public schools and the demand upon his labors at home, his early education was considerably neglected. In those days, not unlike many other boys, he found hunting with a dog and gun to be a more diverting occupation than attending school. He was also a lover of the chase with hounds, and in the early days often followed the hounds afield in north Texas. In the fall of 1877 he entered Aiken Institute at Paris, Texas, and was a student there for three years, having in the meantime determined to equip himself thoroughly for a learned profession. In 1880-81 he taught school in Delta county, and devoted his evening hours to the study of law. In 1881 he was admitted to the bar in Delta county, and from that time forward his place in the bar and in public affairs has been secure.

In the year following his admission to the bar, Judge Woodruff was elected county attorney of Delta county, serving one term. In 1884 he moved out to Jones county, and was in practice at Anson, the county seat, until 1895. In 1888 he was elected county judge, and in 1893 was appointed district judge of the thirty-ninth judicial district. Governor Hogg appointed him to the office to fill out the unexpired term of Judge J. V. Cockrell, who had been elected to Congress. During the remaining two years of the term, Judge Woodruff gave a very efficient administration of his official duties, and in 1895, on leaving the bench, located in Nolan county. He has been regarded as one of the strongest lawyers of the Nolan county bar, and from early in his career has possessed a thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the principles of law, his forte being in the criminal law, in which department he is regarded as one of the strongest attorneys in western Texas. In court before a jury he has the faculty of quick thinking and an ability at debate, and presentation of the strong points in his client's favor, which cause him to be regarded with respectful admiration by all his opponents.

Judge Woodruff was married July 5, 1886, to Miss Lula Cockrell, a daughter of Judge J. V. Cockrell. Mrs. Woodruff was educated in the college at Sherman, and possessed not only the culture of the schools, but also the highest qualities of mind and heart. Her death occurred on June 28, 1903, and she left two children, Thomas Vardeman and Jane Woodruff. As a boy Judge Woodruff lived in an environment which no doubt contributed to his subsequent success. It was in surroundings which stimulated every faculty of the mind and body, and there was just sufficient poverty to give a stimulus to all his desires and activities. When a boy he worked at picking cotton and splitting rails in order to earn enough money to pay his way through school. He found his chief source of joy in nature, and made frequent and extended expeditions after wolves and other wild game, greatly enjoying the chase. Such a training cannot fail to influence for good any mind, and his later years bear the impress of this early experience.

Judge Woodruff is today noted for his fearlessness in defense of his honest convictions, his outspoken attitude when any measure or movement is concerned affecting the public welfare, and while he is deferential and respects the views of others, he is strong in conviction and never fails to express his opinions in such a way that they can be understood. Judge Woodruff is honored and respected in every class of society, and most of all where he is best known.

WILLIAM K. SHIPMAN. A well known citizen of Del Rio, Mr. Shipman's business might be described as everything in real estate, and he is one of the most progressive and enterprising real estate men in west Texas. He represents an old family of Central Texas, and has himself been identified with business affairs in different parts of the state, but particularly in west Texas, for fully thirty years.

William K. Shipman was born in Coryell county on September 15, 1864. He was the second in a family of three children whose parents were John K. and Louisa (Cox) Shipman. His father a native of Texas, and of a pioneer family of the state, during the Civil war was Captain of a company of scouts under Major Totten. Farming and live stock raising were his regular business, and he was considered one of the most prosperous and substantial citizens of Coryell county. He had the honor of being elected and serving as the first county assessor of Coryell county, and held this office until he finally refused to accept its responsibilities any longer. He was a good churchman and an adherent of the Christian denomination. He was also affiliated with the Masonic order. His death occurred in 1901 when he was seventy-one years of age, and his body now rests beside that of his wife in Coryell county. His wife was a native of Coryell county, belonging to one of the first families that settled in that vicinity. She was also a member of the Christian church and she died in 1866 when about twenty-five years of age. William K. Shipman at the age of seventeen began fighting his own battles in the world. His first experience was in railroad work for one year, after which he took a position with a cattle company, having charge of the company's herds on the old cattle trails for four seasons, after which he returned to Coryell county and in partnership with his brother John D., established a marble and tombstone business. After about a year he sold out to his brother and once more took up the cattle business which he followed more or less closely until 1887. During this time his business led him into many sections of the southwest, throughout New Mexico, Colorado, west Texas, Kansas and other localities. In October 1887 Mr. Shipman found work in a marble yard at McKinney, Texas, where he remained for about two years, and then moved to Brownwood, where he established a marble yard on his own account. Under his energetic management this was a successful venture for about ten years, at the end of which time he sold out and established a similar enterprise in San Angelo, where he remained about two years, selling out to his brother, John. He had particular success in building up a business in this line, and after leaving San Angelo, he moved to Sweetwater, where in addition to a marble yard he also engaged in the undertaking and embalming business, a line which he followed until March 1910, at which date he sold out. Del Rio was his next point of attack, and he there opened a real estate business which he still continues. He also maintains an office at Alpine and does a large business through the medium of these two offices. He is engaged in handling all lines of real estate, in insurance and in the live stock commission trade.

Mr. Shipman and family have their home at Del Rio. Mrs. Shipman, before her marriage, which occurred in July, 1903, at San Angelo, was Kate Murray, a native of Texas and a daughter of Mr. M. Murray of Tom Greene county. Mr. Shipman was first married in 1889. There are two children, a son and a daughter, Roy and Daisy. In religion Mr. Shipman and wife incline to the Christian church, but favor and support all religious causes. He is an active member of the Masons and Odd Fellows, also affiliated with the Elks, while his wife is a member of the Eastern Star and Rebekahs and the Woodmen Circle. In politics he is a Democrat and formerly took much interest in political affairs. During his residence at Sweetwater he served as a member of the city council and was a member of the school board during his residence in Brownwood county. His favorite recreations are hunting and fishing. Mr. Shipman is a stockholder in the Del Rio Bank & Trust Company and has large real estate possessions located in different sections of south and west sections.

THOMAS E. MATHIS. This well known San Antonio business man, cashier of the State Bank & Trust Company of that city, was born in Rockport, Texas, October 2, 1880, and is a member of one of the old and prominent families of southern Texas. He is a son of the late Thomas Henry Mathis, who made the early history of the interesting old Gulf town of Rockport and who in his time was one of the most striking personalities and able business men of the state.

Thomas Henry Mathis, who died at his home in Rockport March 19, 1899, was born in Stewart county, Tennessee, July 14, 1834, a son of James and Isabella Mathis, the former of whom died in 1864 and the latter in 1876. With a country training and education acquired during a boyhood spent on a farm in Tennessee and Kentucky, Thomas H. Mathis lived with ordinary eventfulness until he was about nineteen years old, and then left home to begin a course of instruction at the school conducted by Dr. J. T. Mathis in southern Arkansas. At the end of the second term he negotiated a loan of one thousand dollars from his father, and with the proceeds of that loan continued his studies and finally found a place as teacher of a school in Arkansas. He finished his education at Bethel College in 1857, and was again a teacher in 1858.

Thomas H. Mathis in 1859 moved to southwest Texas, and thereafter for a number of years his career was one of hazard and vicissitudes, of stimulating adventure and gradually growing success. Soon after arriving in Texas, in February, 1859, he and a party left Gonzales to make a trading tour into Mexico. Not only the country lying south of the Rio Grande was in a state of turmoil perhaps even worse than it is at the present writing, but the entire district for a hundred miles or more north of the Rio Grande and in Texas, was almost completely overrun by the Indians and outlaw Mexicans and renegade Americans, so that an honest business man was in constant jeopardy at almost any point in that country. The party reached the Rio Grande in safety, but received such account of the robbers and the brigands infesting the country to the south that only T. H. Mathis and his cousin J. M. Mathis had the courage to cross the river. They were joined by two other American traders, and by determined opposition to all the intimidating and threatening attitudes of the Mexican officials and by keeping constant guard against robbers, they succeeded in carrying out their plans and made their trip quite profitable, although they did not care to repeat the experiment. Mr. Mathis in 1861 began a term of school in Gonzales county, and during the same year engaged in business at Victoria, but soon closed out his interests on account of the blockade of the Gulf ports after the beginning of the war. Subsequently he did considerable business as an importer of tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky into Texas, succeeded in eluding the blockade established by the Union forces and his success as an individual was subsequently employed to the advantage of the Confederate government when he engaged in forwarding supplies from Texas to the soldiers of the Trans-Mississippi Department. In the fall of 1862 Mr. Mathis joined Duff's Regiment, Company E, and fought under the Stars and Bars until the close of the war. For a year after the end of hostilities he resumed his tobacco trade between Tennessee and Texas.

His career beginning with 1867 is literally a history of the old town of Rockport and the important developments in that vicinity. In February, 1867, J. M. and T. H. Mathis located on Aransas Bay, and selected the site on which the thriving city of Rockport was built. The firm of J. M. & T. H. Mathis built the first wharf which was established there and chartered the first steamship, the Prince Albert, that ever entered Aransas Bay for commercial purposes. The firm subsequently induced the Morgan Line to run their ships to Rockport, and became agents for that steamship company. It is as one of the founders of Rockport that T. H. Mathis deserves special emphasis in this history. In 1869 he and his partner expended more than five thousand dollars for the improvement of Aransas bar, thus opening up the possibilities of the large business which in subsequent years was transferred from the land to the ocean going vessels at that point. The firm also erected the Orleans Hotel and constructed a number of other buildings in Rockport. Built bridges, made county roads, and were ever foremost in securing public improvements. T. H. Mathis was a liberal contributor in bringing the Western Union Telegraph to Rockport and in the building of the first telephone line to that part of the state. The establishment of the first cold storage meat refrigerating plant in Texas, an institution which has received much attention in the history of the Texas cattle and meat industry, was due to the liberal contributions of Mr. Mathis. He was also one of the leaders in introducing blooded cattle and horses into southwest Texas, and his own ranch having the finest stock known in the state. T. H. Mathis likewise gave liberally and took an important part in the construction of the Aransas Pass Railroad to Rockport in 1888. Apart from his large commercial interests at Rockport and vicinity, T. H. Mathis invested heavily in farm and ranch land in Wharton county, owned about forty-three thousand acres along the Nueces river in San Patricio county, and in that vicinity the town of Mathis was named for him and was built on a portion of his original ranch. He owned one of the best homes in Rockport, and had important realty interests in that city. He became the principal stockholder and was president until about the time of his death of the First National Bank of Rockport.

It was well said of him that he had not achieved financial success at the expense of character. He was well equipped for his career, both by nature and acquirements, and never had occasion to resort to dishonest methods. He was a man of large comprehension, liberal in his policies as a business man, and not only had many admirers for his business success but also close and intimate friends bound him by no ordinary ties of attachments. He was a leading Democrat in his section, and an active member of the Presbyterian church.

Thomas H. Mathis was married in 1869 to Mrs. Cora C. Caldwell of Gonzales county, Texas. She died two months after their marriage. In 1875 he married Mary J. Nold in Murray, Kentucky, who was born in Goliad, Texas, July 15, 1856, a daughter of Henry and E. M. Nold, her father being a prominent educator who died in Kentucky November 2, 1886. Mrs. Mathis, who was educated in Kentucky, is still living. Of their eight children a brief individual record is as follows: Walter N. Mathis, the oldest son, died in 1897; Henry of Beaumont; May is the wife of Joseph F. Green, manager of the Taft Ranch at Gregory, Texas; Thomas E. is mentioned individually in the following paragraphs; Edgar, a graduate of the medical department of the University of Texas at Galveston, is a physician and surgeon at Austin; Arthur, a graduate of the University of Texas, is vice president and cashier of the First National Bank of Rockport; Lizzie Belle is unmarried; and Allie died in 1895, in infancy.

Thomas E. Mathis, son of this remarkable pioneer, was born at the old family home at Rockport. Reared in that city, he began business life early by assuming the management of his father's estate while in his nineteenth year. On September 11, 1907, he married Miss Augusta Shropshire, daughter of Dr. L. L. Shropshire of San Antonio. His career was developed in connection with the First National Bank of Rockport, and from his beginning as an inexperienced man in 1902 he rose to the position of first vice-president and cashier, an office which he resigned in the summer of 1913 in order to find a larger field for his business abilities and enterprise. In July he removed to San Antonio, and became cashier of the State Bank & Trust Company on January 1, 1914, of which he is also a stockholder and director. The State Bank & Trust Company is one of the most successful and most rapidly growing banks of southwest Texas. On June 1, 1914, its banking rooms were established in the new building remodeled and enlarged for that purpose, the former St. James Hotel building on Houston street. Among the officers, directors and stockholders of the bank are included some of the citizens of strongest financial integrity in the state. The capital stock of the bank is half a million dollars, and in 1914 the deposits amounted to more than three and a half million dollars.

Mr. Mathis has identified himself with the leading social and civic organizations of San Antonio, and is a member of the Travis Club, the Country Club, the Automobile Club, and other bodies.

EMIEL E. KOGLMEIER. One of the large establishments of El Paso engaged in supplying the trade with harness, carriage trimmings and similar goods is that founded many years ago and conducted with ever increasing prosperity by Mr. Emiel E. Koglmeier at his establishment in South Santa Fe Street. Mr. Koglmeier is a business man from the ground up, began his enterprise in this city with a very small shop and a small stock, and relied upon his skill in the trade and his business push to extend and maintain a continually increasing trade. He has succeeded better than most of the contemporaries with whom he started, and now enjoys a position at the top of his particular line of business in north Texas.

Emiel E. Koglmeier was born in Germany February 4, 1860, a son of Antone and Clara Koglmeier. His early education was attained in the German public schools, and after his school days were finished he worked on a farm for his uncle for one year. He then chose and began to learn his present trade, that of harnessmaker. He followed the usual German custom, serving a three-year apprenticeship, and throughout that time not only received no salary for his work, but actually paid a fee to his employer for the privilege of learning the trade and working for nothing. When the three-year apprenticeship was ended he was a master workman, and then traveled throughout the different countries of Europe working at his trade. When he was twenty years of age he was required for service in the German army, and gave three years of service to his fatherland. At the end of that time he came to the United States, and first located in Dubuque, Iowa, where during the six months of his residence he worked in carriage trimming and in the general harness trade. His next home was at Hastings, Nebraska, where he lived for a year and a half, engaged in the same line of work, and then went out to the Pacific Coast. For about two years he was a resident of San Francisco, where he engaged in his regular trade, and then spent thirteen years in southern California. The following two years were passed in old Mexico. Throughout this time he was engaged in the occupation to which he had been reared, and he is one of the most expert and skillful workers at his trade in all the southwest. After his experience in old Mexico he came to El Paso, in 1899 and this city has been his home ever since. On his arrival here, he bought a small shop, and established himself in business. With careful management and on the reputation of reliable workmanship in every piece of manufacture and by handling only the best goods for the general trade, he has built up a splendid enterprise. He now carries a full line of harness, carriage trimming goods, and does a general retail and manufacturing business.

Mr. Koglmeier has been twice married. His first wife, whom he married in California, was Miss Alice Loreny. Her death occurred in 1897, and she is buried in California. The second marriage was celebrated in El Paso, when Minerva Miller became his wife. Her death occurred in 1912, and she is buried in El Paso. Mr. Koglmeier has one child, Harold. He is a communicant of the Catholic church, is affiliated with the Fraternal Union and the Sons of Hermann. A Democrat in politics, he takes a very active part in local political matters, and especially in all movements promoting good government and the local welfare. In his wide and varied experience he has acquired the fluent use of German, English and the Spanish languages, and has employed them all three in the contraction of his business affairs. Like a true German, Mr. Koglmeier is very fond of the arts of music, and he also finds occasional diversion in the sport of hunting. He owns valuable property interests in El Paso, and is one of the most effective and energetic advocates of El Paso's prosperity and upbuilding. At the cornerstone of civilization he believes are the church and school, and he maintains a very strong opinion as to the usefulness of these great institutions in the welfare of civilization generally and that the development of these institutions affects the local prosperity of his home city.

ALFRED LEWIS SCOTT, civil engineer and surveyor, San Antonio, Texas, dates his birth in Spottsylvania county, Virginia, February 12, 1838. He comes of Scotch-Irish ancestry, which was planted in this country in 1772, in Virginia. Mr. Scott's great grandfather on his father's side was Waddy Thompson, and his great grandfather on his mother's side was Col. Zachary Lewis: both were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, in the Continental line. Colonel Lewis was also an officer in the war of 1812. Waddy Thompson's home was Albemarle county.

Alfred Lewis Scott was reared and received his early education in his native county. Later he attended Hampden-Sidney College and the University of Virginia, and in the war between the States he made a conspicuous record. Previous to the war he had moved to Alabama, and he enlisted at Greenville, that State, in the Alabama State troops, in February, 1861, and was made lieutenant of the company. This company was sent to Pensacola to assist the Florida State troops in resisting the expected capture of Pensacola and Fort Pickens. Upon the formal declaration of war in April, 1861, he became a member of Company G, Ninth Alabama Infantry, Confederate States Army, and, going to Richmond, served in the Army of Northern Virginia, under General Lee during the entire war. During a part of the time he was adjutant general of his brigade. With the exception of two engagements Mr. Scott engaged in all the great historic battles fought by the Army of Northern Virginia, including Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House (all of the foregoing within hearing distance of the place where he was born and reared), North Anna, Second Battle of Cold Harbor, and the entire Petersburg campaign, including the frustrated attempt to blow up Petersburg by Grant's army. On the 6th of February, 1865, after the battle of Hatch's Run, Mr. Scott, with a number of others in his regiment, was captured and taken prisoner to Point Lookout; from which he escaped, however, and returned to Petersburg just a short time before the surrender at Appomatox.

After the close of the war, Mr. Scott remained a while at the old home in Virginia. Then he returned to Greenville, Alabama; and in 1879 he came from Alabama to Texas, which latter State has been his home ever since. Several years ago he took up his residence at San Antonio, and he has done a large amount of engineering and surveying in Southwest Texas.

Mr. Scott's married life dates from 1862, and last year he and his good wife celebrated the anniversary day which rounded out their fifty years of wedded life. They have had eleven children, nine of whom are still living, as follows: Alfred Lewis Scott, Jr., Mrs. Bessie Scott Chaney (a well known writer), Edward Perry Scott, Miss Frances Scott, James M. Scott, Dunklin B. Scott, Mrs. Sarah T. Dullnig, Richmond L. Scott, and Hillary Hubbard Scott. Dunklin B. Scott also is a civil engineer of note, prominent among his work being much of the engineering on the Moffet road in Colorado.

J. WILLIS JOHNSON. The life of J. Willis Johnson, of San Angelo, Texas, affords a good example of the way in which many men of the South, born of good families, whose fortunes had been wiped out by the Civil war, deprived of the education and advantages which would naturally have been theirs, set out to retrieve their lost fortunes and have attained success. Mr. Johnson is today one of the most prosperous and influential business men in San Angelo and this achievement he has accomplished entirely alone, through his ability as a business man and through hard and concentrated work. He has held more than one public office in this community and has the friendship and confidence of the entire section.

J. Willis Johnson is the son of J. William Johnson and S. W. Haynes Johnson. J. William Johnson was a civil engineer and a merchant of Cottage Grove, Tennessee, before the Civil war. When hostilities commenced he enlisted in the Confederate army and was made a lieutenant colonel. He served throughout the war and his death occurred not long after the close, in August, 1866. His widow is still living at Paris, Tennessee, and is eighty-nine years of age. Four children were born to J. William Johnson and his wife, two sons and two daughters. Of these children, J. Willis Johnson was the eldest.

The birth of J. Willis Johnson took place in February, 1859, in Cottage Grove, Henry county, Texas. Growing up in the lean years following the war, when even had there been any money to pay for his education, he could not have gone to school, for there were no schools in that section of the country. He therefore has acquired his education through reading and close observation and is essentially a self-made man. Coming from Scotch-Irish stock on his father's side and a long line of English ancestors on his mother's, he possesses one of the strongest racial combinations that can be found.

Mr. Johnson was only a young boy when he came to Texas in 1874, but early experience with life and its responsibilities had made a man of him. His first occupation was hunting the buffalo and during this time he made his headquarters on the Colorado river. After this he settled in San Angelo and for a time clerked in the general department store of Frary Brothers. He only remained with them a short time and then went into the cattle business, this being in 1878. Although he was only nineteen at the time he made a success of the business and became a recognized authority on cattle raising, so much so, in fact, that in 1882 he was elected to fill the office of hide and animal inspector in Tom Green county. He held this post for two years and then he was elected sheriff and tax collector. This was in 1884, when he was but twenty-five, and since at that time the sheriff was the most important officer in the county, requiring a man who not only possessed a large amount of physical courage, but moral courage as well, the office was a high compliment. For ten years Mr. Johnson held this office and during this time he also continued in the cattle business.

It was in 1884 that Mr. Johnson helped in the organization of the first bank of the town. This was known as the Concho and San Angelo National Bank and afterwards the Concho part of it was reorganized as the First National Bank. Mr. Johnson was a director of the San Angelo National Bank and these two were the only banks until 1893 when the Western National Bank was organized. In 1896 Mr. Johnson was elected president of this latter institution and he has continued to hold this position since that time. The bank is one of the most reliable financial institutions in the county and its success has been due in no small measure to the wisdom and care with which Mr. Johnson has directed its policies.

In political affairs Mr. Johnson has always been a member of the Democratic party. He was married in September, 1887, to Miss Lou Hornsley, a daughter of Thomas J. Hornsley and Elizabeth Hornsley, of Comanche, Texas. Thomas J. Hornsley was a cattleman and banker of Comanche and was a veteran of the Confederate army. He died in 1898. Mrs. Hornsley is living and makes her home at the old homestead in Comanche. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have three children, one boy and two girls: J. W. Jr., Ruth H., who married J. M. Gordon, a business man of Bryan, Texas, and Miss Mary B. Johnson, at home.

RAFAEL MEDINA. Among the farming and stock men of San Antonio who have gained distinctive success in their calling, Rafael Medina is one who is especially worthy of mention in this biographical work. He was born in the state of Coahuila, Mexico, in 1856, and came to San Antonio with his father in 1872 as a lad of sixteen years. The state of Texas has represented his home since that time. In early youth Rafael Medina began to earn his own livelihood, and his principal occupation during these years was that of freighting. Prior to the advent of the railroads, the business of freighting was a most common and prolific one, and young Medina drove four, six and eight mule freight teams throughout West and Southwest Texas, extending from San Antonio to Fort Concho, Fort Stockton, Fort Davis and other points. In the late seventies he moved into Wilson county, adjoining Bexar, near old Graytown, and, beginning in a small way with cattle, he became within the space of a few years a prosperous and substantial stockman and farmer, owning a thousand acres of good land in Wilson county.

In 1913 Mr. Medina sold a large part of his land, retaining something like eight hundred acres, and in April of that year removed to San Antonio, where he established a home and here resides at this time. In addition to his San Antonio and farming property, he is also the owner of some valuable holdings in Floresville, and is, on the whole, one of the substantial men of the county.

Although widely known in the county and this part of the state, Mr. Medina has never engaged in politics, although he has held the office of school trustee in Wilson county, and performed an excellent service for his town in so doing.

Mr. Medina has four sons: E. L.; R. L.; Jesus and Manuel Medina.

JOHN WESLEY CARHART, M. D. Among those men who have added renown to the fame of the city of San Antonio, Texas, may be mentioned the name of Dr. John Wesley Carhart, well known not only as a member of the medical profession but also as a writer of note. Dr. Carhart previous to entering the medical profession was a minister of the Gospel, and his knowledge of human nature and his sympathetic insight into the frailties of man have made him a peculiarly able healer of the sick, for he understands the sick minds as well as the sick bodies.

John Wesley Carhart was born in Coeymans, Albany county, New York, on the 26th of June, 1834. He received his advanced education in the Union Seminary of Charlottesville, New York, and as soon as his education was completed he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was only twenty years of age when, in 1854, he joined the annual conference of Troy, New York, and for seventeen and a half years he was a preacher in this conference. He was a brilliant scholar and a successful preacher, winning a wide reputation throughout this section of the state of New York. He had continued his studies during these years and had the unique honor of having the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him in his twenty-seventh year. In 1871 Dr. Carhart was transferred to the Wisconsin conference, and for five years was engaged in preaching in various cities of that state. In 1876 he was appointed presiding elder of the Appleton district in Wisconsin. He served in this office for four years, but for some time he had felt that he could do better work in the Presbyterian church than in that of which he was at that time a member. He therefore united with the Presbyterian church in Wisconsin, and served as a Ruling Elder in that church for some time.

Retiring from the ministerial profession, Dr. Carhart began the study of medicine, having decided that he could accomplish more good in that line. He first studied medicine under Dr. Timothy Childs, of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, and also attended lecture courses at the Berkshire Medical College in the same city. He later went to Chicago and matriculated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1883.

After his graduation he came to the state of Texas to begin the practice of medicine. He had been in the state before this time as a minister of the Methodist church, first coming here in 1878, and he liked it so much that when he was free to locate where he would he returned. He settled at Lampasas, and lived there until 1894, with the exception of the year 1884, in which he went to New York city and took a post graduate course in the New York Polyclinic. In May, 1894, he removed from Lampasas to LaGrange, and later moved again to Austin, Texas, where he continued to practice his profession for some time. In 1908 he came to San Antonio, and this city has been his home since that time. He devotes himself exclusively to office practice, and while this is of a general nature he is best known through his success in handling tubercular, skin and nervous diseases.

During past years and until quite recently Dr. Carhart has made frequent contributions to medical literature, many of which have been valuable. Most of these have been printed in the medical journals, and all of them may be found in the collections of the library of the State Medical Association. One of the latest of Dr. Carhart's contributions to scientific writing is an article on a preparation of lime salts which he prepared. Lime salts is a serious need of the human system, which, unfortunately, is not supplied by our daily food, and Dr. Carhart has discovered a way in which to circumvent this. His article on "The Lime Salts in Our National Dietary," which was published in the Dallas Medical News, attracted the favorable attention of the leading scientists both in the United States and in Europe. The Doctor is a member of the Texas State Medical Association, of the Bexar County Medical Society and of the American Medical Association.

In addition to his medical writings the Doctor has written considerably in the purely literary field. For a number of years he has been an author of note, and the Authors Club of San Antonio has conferred upon him the office of president in recognition of his high standing as a writer. His first published work was a volume of poems, entitled "Sunny Hours," which was issued in 1859. After this he wrote and published several volumes, among which were "The White Captive and other Poems," "Four Years on Wheels," "Poets and Poetry of the Hebrews," "Charles Bostwick," which is a story of Texas pioneer life, "The Unknown Quality," a novel, "Nina Harding," a novel, and "Norma Trist," a novel. He has also contributed numerous articles to various magazines.

Dr. Carhart married first Theresa Mumford. She died, leaving seven children as follows: Minnie, who married R. A. Etty, of Eau Claire, Wisconsin; Mattie, who married Rev. Dr. W. A. Hall, of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; Edward E., of Pan Handle, Texas; Charles W., of Duluth, Minnesota; Nina, who married William Turnuth, of Oshkosh, Wisconsin; Halle D., widow of Frank Cross, and now residing in San Antonio, Texas; and Ethel, of Oshkosh, Wisconsin. Miss Mollie Cole, of LaGrange, is now deceased. The Doctor is one of the oldest living Masons in San Antonio, having taken the degrees in St. Patrick's Lodge, No. 4, Johnstown, New York, the fourth lodge instituted in the U. S., the charter coming from England and issued to Sir John Johnson, first master of the lodge.

KAISAR YAMIN. Born in the ancient city of Sidon (Hebrew, Zidon), located on the east coast of the Mediterranean, halfway between Tyre and Beyrout, in 1869, Kaiser Yamin, of San Antonio, is looked upon as the leader of the Syrian race in Southwestern Texas. A man of great learning and undoubted talents, he has brought to the new world much of the ability which made his forefathers so successful in the old Phoenician city, the extensive commerce of which, principally devoted to the manufacture of glass and linen, purple dye and perfumes, is well known from ancient authorities.

Kaiser Yamin was given excellent educational advantages in his native city and subsequently attended the Syrian Protestant College at Beyrout, where he graduated in 1884 after having been a student under the preceptorship of the noted educator, Dr. Bliss. At this time he is an expert linguist, speaking fluently a number of languages, including his native Syrian, French, Spanish and English, and is a widely-traveled man, having made numerous trips to Europe since coming to America, both on pleasure and business bent. After leaving college, he spent a few months in Cairo, Egypt, and in 1885 came to America, locating first in New York, where he was the first of his people equal in education to come to our shores. His advent in San Antonio occurred in 1899, when he settled down in this city to make his permanent home, and here he has continued to be recognized as the leader of his race. At this time he is successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits at No. 721 West Commerce street, where his establishment is stocked with the finest goods, attractively displayed and moderately priced. These include dry goods, notions and religious articles and have been selected with an idea of thoroughly satisfying his extensive trade, the needs of which Mr. Yamin has made an earnest study. Possessed of the old-world courtesy, ever endeavoring to please those with whom he is carrying on transactions, he has won the esteem and respect of those with whom he has come into contact, and has made numerous friends among those with whom he has had dealings. His house, known under the firm style of Yamin & Company, possesses an enviable reputation in trade circles because of the honorable and reliable manner in which Mr. Yamin has kept every engagement.

Mr. Yamin was most happily married at Eagle Pass, Texas, in 1908, to an accomplished young lady of his own nationality, Miss Asma K. Korge, a native of the city of Damascus, where she was born in 1890. Four children have been born to this union: Afifa, Fuad, Anis and Salin.

Mr. Yamin is a member of Crystal Wave Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Brooklyn, New York.

WILLIAM STEPHEN ANTHONY. Assistant county attorney of Bexar county, Mr. Anthony has been a member of the San Antonio bar since 1908, and has a long and successful career in his profession, having begun the practice of law in Missouri in 1887.

William Stephen Anthony was born at Potosi, Missouri, in 1865, a son of John Milton Anthony. His family were among the pioneer settlers at Potosi, a town which has much historic interest to Texans, from the fact that it was the home of Moses Austin and his son Stephen F. Austin, the founders of the first permanent American colony in this state and the latter deserving well his appellation as the father of Texas. Moses Austin died at Potosi, and his body now rests in that town. Mr. Anthony's grandfather was Jonas Mark Anthony, who was born in North Carolina, and located at Potosi in the early part of the last century, establishing the first flour mill there.

William Stephen Anthony obtained his collegiate education in Washington University at St. Louis, from which he was graduated in the class of 1885. He studied law in the law school of the University and took his degree of Bachelor of Laws in the class of 1887. In the same year he began the practice of his profession at Potosi, and continued there until his appointment as assistant United States district attorney for the eastern district of Missouri, the duties of this position requiring residence in St. Louis. He received this appointment during President Cleveland's second administration. After four years in that office he pursued the practice of law at St. Louis, and subsequently moved to Farmington, Missouri, where he was attorney representing the Missouri Southern Railway. Early in 1908, Mr. Anthony brought his family to San Antonio, and has since had his home in this city. Governor Colquitt appointed him special assistant in the preparation of briefs in criminal cases pending in the court of criminal appeals and he relinquished these duties early in 1913 to accept his present position as assistant county attorney of Bexar county.

Mr. Anthony served as a delegate from Missouri to the National Democratic Convention which nominated Mr. Cleveland for president in 1892. Mr. Anthony married Miss Fannie Casey, a daughter of Dr. Casey of Potosi, the Caseys being another old time family of that town. They are the parents of one daughter, Miss Lucile Anthony.

GEORGE MIDDLETON WESTBROOK. Since the early settlement of Navarro county the name of Westbrook has stood for the hardy qualities of the pioneer, for good citizenship, kindly neighborliness and the best attributes of manhood and womanhood. George M. Westbrook has for many years conducted farming and stock raising on a large scale in this and other sections of Texas, and is now one of the leading citizens and the banker at Kerens. His home in Navarro county has been almost continuous since 1852, when as a boy of eight years he came with his parents from Monroe county, Mississippi, the journey being made in wagons across country.

George Middleton Westbrook was born in Monroe county, Mississippi, August 17, 1844, a son of Zachariah Westbrook, who on coming to Texas first located ten miles northwest of the present site of Kerens and bought land in the Henry Brown survey. His pioneer homestead was improved under his management and labor and continued to be his place of residence until his death in February, 1878, at the age of sixty-eight.

The Westbrook family came originally from Scotland, and during the early generations all held slaves in Virginia and South Carolina. Great-grandfather Westbrook, who moved from Virginia to South Carolina, while a resident of the former colony had served in the Revolutionary War. While on picket duty during the Revolution he shot and killed what was supposed to be the "old white sow" which was in the habit of going the rounds of the patriot camps daily. The post he was placed on to guard was an unlucky one, three men having been shot and killed there while on picket. He was instructed to hail any object approaching him three times, and then shoot if no answer came. When the old "sow" approached him, grunting along, he hailed it three times and then fired, and the "sow" jumped up and ran off, leaving its blanket behind. It ran only a short way before falling over a log, and the next morning when the officer of the guard went to inspect the spot he found a dead Englishman and his gun lying there. The gun was taken home by Mr. Westbrook, and handed down to his posterity and finally came into the possession of John Westbrook, an uncle of the Kerens banker, who brought it to Texas, and during the Civil war the gun was remodeled as a muzzle loader and carried to the front by a Confederate soldier. Jarrett Westbrook married Polly Blake, and their children were John, William, Samuel, Middleton, Zachariah and James. There were no daughters. Zachariah, William and John all came to Texas and reared their families in this state.

Zachariah Westbrook, who was born in the Chester District of South Carolina December 25, 1809, and acquired a country school education there, left on attaining manhood and moved to Monroe county, Mississippi, where he bought land of the Indians. Returning to South Carolina, he married Mary Agnew. The Agnews were a family of farmers in the same district of South Carolina, and Mrs. Westbrook was the youngest of four daughters. Her three brothers were: George, William and John, the oldest of whom moved to Georgia and died there, while the two latter spent their lives in South Carolina. The other three Agnew sisters were: Betsy, who married John Anderson and spent her life in South Carolina; Jennie, who also married and lived in South Carolina; and Margaret, who married William Westbrook and became a resident of Navarro county, Texas.

Zachariah Westbrook was a pioneer who employed exceptional business enterprise, coupled with great industry, and while never a politician, he was one of the influential men in his section of Navarro county. He acquired a large amount of land, was one of the early cotton raisers of the county, and was the owner of the first reaper operated in the county. He held the post of steward in the Methodist church, and built the first church building in what is now called the Westbrook neighborhood. At his death his body was laid to rest in Prairie Point cemetery, where the pioneer church was erected and where its successor is still in use. His wife lies beside him and she died May 25, 1896. Their children were: John W., of the Westbrook neighborhood of Navarro county, who married Drusilla Sanders and has three daughters: Lucy J., who married J. B. Sessions and died leaving one son; James Nelson, who died in Virginia while serving with Hood's Texas Infantry in Captain Winkler's Company from Corsicana; Mary, who married Jephtha Sessions and died leaving four children: George Middleton; Margaret, who married P. A. Peck and died at the old home leaving one daughter; Christina, who married J. H. Holland and lives in Arlington, Texas; Penina, who married C. Carpenter, of Arlington; Zachariah, who died unmarried; and Robert P., who died leaving a family in Kerens.

George M. Westbrook got his education within the walls of the old log school house his father and neighbors had erected before the war. After coming out of the army he attended a school in Chatfield nine months, and that was the best part of his education so far as school attendance was concerned. In the Fall of 1861 at Corsicana he enlisted for the Confederate army in Dr.

Mackey's company, an independent company which was afterwards annexed to Morgan's Battalion, Parson's Brigade of Cavalry. The company went to Missouri, participated in several skirmishes and concluded its first campaign at the great battle of Elkhorn, and continued to serve through Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. Mr. Westbrook fought against General Banks in his Red River campaign, and was in all the battles of the Mansfield campaign, including Mansfield, Prairie Ridge, Alexandria, Marksville, Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou. After Yellow Bayou the command returned to Texas and his company was disbanded on the Little Brazos in Grimes county. At Mansfield Mr. Westbrook was slightly wounded, but was never captured.

Following his nine months' school attendance at Chatfield, Mr. Westbrook lived a more or less unsettled life for a year and a half, in his endeavor to keep out of the hands of the Federal authorities, who endeavored to implicate him in the responsibility for the slaying of a negro at Chatfield. After that matter had been satisfactorily settled he married Miss Emma Hunt and located in the old home neighborhood and engaged in farming. His first house was a log structure of his own construction. He cut the logs, hewed them and helped with its raising, and started agriculture on one hundred acres of land given him by his father. At the end of two years his wife died, and the following five years were spent as a widower. Then, on January 19, 1871, Mr. Westbrook married Miss Lizzie Morgan. Her father, Andrew Jackson Morgan, who was born in Missouri and came to Texas in 1844, was directly related to the fighting Morgan of the Revolution, and was of Scotch origin. Andrew J. Morgan married Mahala Posey, a relative of the old General Posey family of Kentucky and of Virginia Revolutionary stock.

After his second marriage Mr. Westbrook began the improvement of a new place in the same neighborhood and that home he still owns. It was with half a section of land that he began and subsequently increased it by the purchase of an adjacent section, and his land proprietorship now extends to seven hundred acres at that place. As a result of his efforts at least five hundred acres of the land was brought under cultivation, and he became distinguished in the neighborhood as a stockman, raising and feeding mules, cattle, and shipping many carloads to St. Louis and Chicago markets. Subsequently he was one of the first shippers of live stock to the Fort Worth yards. For several years Mr. Westbrook has been interested in the live stock business in the Panhandle country, he and his oldest daughter owning a ranch in Ochiltree county of seven sections, and that ranch is conducted by a son. The pasture is a fenced and is stocked with an improved grade of Hereford and Durham cattle.

In January, 1912, Mr. Westbrook removed from the neighborhood which had been his home practically since boyhood into the village of Kerens, and here assisted in the organization of the First State Bank and is now its president. His has been a helpful part both in political affairs and in the upbuilding and maintenance of religious institutions. For four years, under the administration of Governor Culberson, he was member of the board of directors of the State Orphans' Home at Corsicana, and was also a member of the board of county commissioners. In the days of the old party county conventions there was never one called which he did not attend as a delegate. In the Methodist church he is steward and has contributed to the building of Methodist and other churches in the community.

Mr. Westbrook's children are all by his second wife who died in March, 1896. The children are: Miss Maude who lives with her father; Hallie, wife of W. C. McClure, of Kerens, and their children are Hallie Catherine and Mary Elizabeth; Geddes, wife of W. A. Askew, of Amarillo, and they have a daughter, Mary Louise; Zachariah, who lives in Ochiltree county and by his marriage to Anna Grant has a son, Middleton Grant; E. Middleton, who is a teacher in the city schools of Gilmer, Texas, and Nita Inez, an art student in Corsicana.

JOHN MARSHALL ESKRIDGE. Ten years membership in the Texas bar have brought this San Antonio attorney the rewards of solid accomplishment and reputation. A forceful personality, a splendid education and a fine mind, with a natural bent for his calling, are the qualities most conspicuous in his career. He is a member of the prominent San Antonio law firm of Cobbs, Eskridge & Cobbs.

John M. Eskridge was born at Dresden, Tennessee, in 1877. His parents were Benjamin Johnston and Katharine (Francis) Eskridge, his father a Confederate soldier who went through the war, and whose brother, Burdette Eskridge, was killed in one of the battles of the great Civil conflict. The family were pioneers in Weakley county, Tennessee, of which the county seat is Dresden.

The Eskridge family goes back in its American history to the early colonial days. The San Antonio lawyer is in the sixth generation from Major George Eskridge, and his relationship to the Washington and Lee families of Virginia is shown in the fact that General George Washington's middle name was Eskridge, his full name being George Eskridge Washington, although it has seldom been seen printed in that form, and the presence of a middle name or initial is almost unknown.

After completing his education, John M. Eskridge entered Fulton College in Fulton, Kentucky, was awarded his diploma there, and in 1903 came to Texas and entered the law department of the State University. In the following year, 1904, he was graduated LL.B. He began the practice of his profession at Waxahachie, the county seat of Ellis county, and continued there with much success until his removal to San Antonio in 1908. Mr. Eskridge was in individual practice until January, 1912, when he became a member of the firm of Cobbs, Eskridge & Cobbs, which is one of the strongest law firms of Texas. Mr. Eskridge since coming to San Antonio has served as city attorney, and has won many important successes in his private practice. He is a well-read and scholarly young lawyer, and in his arguments before court or jury he relies upon a forceful and logical presentation of facts, rather than upon the many superficial artifices so well known to the profession. Mr. Eskridge at San Antonio has membership in the Travis Club, the San Antonio Country Club, the Gulf Shore Hunting & Fishing Club, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon College fraternity, and other social organizations.

SAMUEL BASCOM BELL. For the past twenty-three years engaged in the practice of law at San Antonio, Samuel Bascom Bell may properly be considered one of the fortunate men of the city. He was fortunate in having good parentage, a good endowment of intellect, a liberal education, in attaching himself to one of the learned professions, and in the success which has attended his work. He has borne a large share of the labors of professional life, has done something for the public welfare, and at the same time has preserved his love of letters, and his indulgence in the amenities of a refined and gentle home life.

Samuel Bascom Bell was born at Dresden, in Navarro county, Texas, in 1863, a son of James Hamilton and Louise (Robbins) Bell. His father, a native of North Carolina, moved to the state of Texas in 1859, locating at Dresden. In 1869 he established his family home at Tehuacana in Limestone county, and lived there many years. Special interest attaches to the career of James H. Bell as one of the founders of and one of ten citizens who supplied the land and the money for building Trinity University at Tehuacana, an institution which soon became and has ever since remained one of the schools of higher learning in the state. It was founded as a denominational school by the Cumberland Presbyterian church, of which the senior Bell was an active member. Some of the ablest and most distinguished citizens of Texas credit Trinity University with their early training, and it has always maintained a high standard of excellence. Some years ago the university was removed to Waxahachie, where its growth and prosperity has continued. James H. Bell was a Confederate soldier for four years, serving with the Trans-Mississippi Department. Louise (Robbins) Bell was also a native of North Carolina, and belonged to one of the prominent families of that state, several of its members having had a conspicuous share in its political and civil life.

The early youth of Samuel Bascom Bell was spent at Tehuacana, and practically all his education was acquired in Trinity University. His professional studies were pursued in the law department of the University of Texas at Austin, where he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1888. After a few years of practice in association with two older brothers at Fairfield, he moved to San Antonio in 1891, and in a few years attained a ranking position among the leaders of the local bar. His services have been retained in a large amount of the important litigation contested in the various courts of the state, and throughout his career he has concentrated his energies within the strict lines of the profession, giving little or no time to politics or other outside matters.

While a member of the Travis Club and of several other local organizations, Mr. Bell's chief source of pleasure is his home and family. In the spring of 1914 at 621 E. Macon street was completed the beautiful colonial residence of Mr. and Mrs. Bell, one of the most notable homes of San Antonio. It was largely planned and furnished by Mrs. Bell, who possesses exquisite taste and almost the judgment of a connoisseur on colonial furnishings and architecture. Mrs. Bell, who before her marriage was Mrs. Stella (Mitchell) Van Dyke, was born in Kentucky and belongs to the famous Clay family of that state. The highly prized colonial furniture which now adorns the Bell home is entirely collected from heirlooms descended through the various lines of her family relationship from the colonial days. Many of the treasures to be found in the Bell home came through the Clay family, but most of them from the Carter progenitors of Virginia. This is one of the most complete colonial collections in San Antonio, and comprises not only the furniture for most of the rooms, but also decorations and pictures and much family silver and china and old books. A fine old sideboard of mahogany was brought in the early days on the backs of mules across the mountains from Virginia to Kentucky. There is also an old-fashioned secretary, chests of drawers, a work table, and several other articles, representing the art and skill of furniture makers of the colonial period, Chippendale, Sheraton, and other styles. Among the silver and china is a real Henry Clay decanter, once the property of the famous Southern statesman. Anything like a complete list or description of these colonial heirlooms could not be attempted in the limits of this brief sketch. It is noteworthy that Mrs. Bell has planned her home on colonial lines so that it harmonizes completely with the colonial furnishings.

Mr. Bell's first wife was Nellie Roach, daughter of Rev. Dr. Roach of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. She was educated in Trinity University, and her death occurred in 1894. By the first marriage there is a daughter, who graduates a Bachelor of Arts at the University of Texas in the class of 1914. Miss Bell made an exceptionally brilliant record as a student at the university, being one of the leaders of her class in the College of Arts, and her name appearing on the honor list as a recipient of the Phi Beta Kappa degree. The rule of the university is that not more than eight per cent of the candidates for the Bachelor of Arts degree may be admitted to the Phi Beta Kappa, and the average grade of each student so admitted must be above B.

ROBERT PAILEY COON. The career of Mr. Coon has been almost equally notable as lawyer and in the political and military affairs of his home state. As a lawyer he has practiced with growing success and influence at San Antonio for ten years, and has made many connections with the bar and with affairs and has a large acquaintance throughout the state.

Robert Pailey Coon was born at Monroe, Union county, North Carolina, in 1877, a son of B. G. and Lydia (Houston) Coon, both of whom are now living at Elmo in Kaufman county, Texas. His father, who was born in Davie county, North Carolina, served throughout the war between the states in the Fifteenth North Carolina regiment and for many years has been a prosperous and substantial citizen of North Texas. Mr. Coon's mother, Lydia Houston, who was born in Union county, North Carolina, is descended from the same family which produced General Sam Houston, her grandfather and Sam Houston being cousins. She is also an aunt of David F. Houston, the distinguished educator, former president of Texas State University, former president of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, ex-president of Washington University of St. Louis, and now a member of President Wilson's cabinet as secretary of agriculture.

Robert P. Coon was brought when an infant to Texas by his parents, and was reared in Rockwall and Kaufman counties. Before reaching manhood he had definitely determined on a career in the law, and pursued his studies at Terrell in Kaufman county, and in July, 1902, at the age of twenty-five, was admitted to the bar at Waxahachie, Ellis county. During the same year his practice began at Terrell, and within two months he was appointed assistant county attorney of Kaufman county. In March, 1904, resigning his official relations with Kaufman county, Mr. Coon moved to San Antonio, and has since been successful in building up a large general practice of the law and has attained rank as a leading member of the San Antonio bar.

Several distinctions have come to him outside the usual routine of private and professional life. At the breaking out of the Spanish-American war in 1898, when he was twenty-one years of age, Mr. Coon enlisted at Terrell in Company E of the Fourth Texas Volunteer Infantry and was mustered into service at Houston and after the close of the war received his honorable discharge at San Antonio. He has taken much part in the affairs of the Spanish-American war veterans, is an ex-judge advocate general of the organization for the department of Texas, and is now commander of John L. Bullis Camp No. 1 at San Antonio. In the fall of 1911 Mr. Coon was elected a member of the state Democratic executive committee, was re-elected in 1912, and is still on the committee representing the twenty-fourth senatorial district. For twelve months Mr. Coon was a member of the board of managers of the Southwestern Insane Asylum, during the early part of Governor Colquitt's first administration.

Mr. Coon was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Lankford, a native of Texas. They are the parents of two children: Carlos W. and Mary Elizabeth.

CHARLES ZOLLER. President and General Manager of the Merchants Transfer Company of San Antonio, Charles Zoller has concentrated his attention on one line of business for more than thirty years, and besides his success in business affairs he has long enjoyed an influential position as a citizen of the Alamo city. Mr. Zoller represents one of the old families of southwest Texas, coming from the thrifty stock of Europe that helped to settle and develop the country around San Antonio during the forties and fifties.

Charles Zoller himself is a native Texan, and was born at Castroville in Medina county, March 12, 1859. His parents were Michael and Mary Salome (Bippert) Zoller, both of whom were born at Reichenweier in Alsace, when that province was a part of the French possessions, and both the Zollers and Bipperts, though of German origin, were zealous adherents of France. Michael Zoller served seven years in the French army, and participated in the second revolution. He was born February 5, 1825, and was married in July, 1852, and in September of the following year the young couple embarked on a sailing vessel bound for Texas, their destination being the Castro colony in Medina county. On account of storms their vessel was delayed and they spent about three months on the ocean, arriving at Castroville the last week of December in 1853. In the Spring of 1859 Michael Zoller and wife and three children left Castroville and located permanently in San Antonio, which city remained their home the rest of their lives. Michael Zoller during the Civil War was a strong Union man in his sympathies, but served a brief time as a member of Captain Newton's company in the Confederate army. Before the war he had been employed in the store of H. Meyer, and after the war was a packer for about thirteen years in the store of A. B. Frank, and in similar capacity for about twenty years in the house of D. & A. Oppenheimer. His death occurred at his home in San Antonio August 22, 1901.

The Bippert family, on Mr. Zoller's mother's side, was still earlier established in Texas. His maternal grandfather, Jacob Bippert, who was born at Reichenweier in Alsace-Lorraine March 10, 1800, came to Texas with the original Castro colony in 1846, settling at Castroville, and spending the rest of his life in that vicinity. His death occurred February 10, 1894, at the advanced age of ninety-four. He was a fine type of the sturdy pioneer of Europe who settled in southwest Texas, and after assisting to conquer the wilderness under the stress of great hardship and danger lived long enough to enjoy the fruits of his early toil, and his old age was marked by peace and plenty.

When Charles Zoller was a few weeks old his parents moved to San Antonio, and that has been his home ever since with the exception of a couple of years when his parents lived at Piedras Nigras, Mexico, opposite Eagle Pass, during 1864-65. Although a very small child, Mr. Zoller remembers the battle at Piedras Nigras between Maximilian's forces and the Mexican army. His education was acquired in the parish school of St. John's Lutheran church, San Antonio, and also in the old German-English school at that city. The practical beginning of his long and successful business career was on January 2, 1882, when he entered the employ of the old firm of Froebse & Santleben, and has followed the transfer business continuously for a little more than thirty-two years. It has never been a routine occupation with him, and instead has received careful study and it may almost be said that he has made it his hobby, and there is no man in the state better posted on all its details.

Mr. Zoller is fond of social life, and has taken an active part in San Antonio social and civic affairs. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and no man in the city is more interested in its progress and contributes more freely to civic enterprise. He has been especially helpful in the annual spring carnival, and much of the success of the yearly battle of flowers has been due to his co-operation and work. In politics a Republican, he has never sought nor held any public office. Mr. Zoller is a member of the Sons of Hermann, of the Beethoven Association, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. On December 27, 1881, he married Johanna Ohlenbarger, and their one son, Eugene G. Zoller, is now thirty years of age. After the death of his first wife Mr. Zoller married Miss Sophia E. Wagenführ on January 1, 1901. The one child of that marriage is Marie, now eleven years of age.

Mr. Zoller took his first communion at and has been a member of St. John's Lutheran church since early boy-hood. His father was among the founders of this church, becoming a member of the congregation soon after moving to San Antonio in 1859 and before a church building had been erected. Mr. Zoller for seventeen years held a position as trustee in this church.

HARVEY LEE MATTHEWS, M. D. Widely and favorably known throughout Navarro county as a skilled physician, Dr. Harvey Lee Matthews has been engaged in practice at Dawson since 1912, having come to this community from Spring Hill. Through his activities in professional, business and social life he has contributed materially to the welfare and upbuilding of the localities in which his labors have been prosecuted, and his public-spirited citizenship has proved a desirable asset in the promotion of movements for the public welfare. Doctor Matthews is a native of Maury county, Tennessee, and was born November 19, 1865, his parents being Joseph Calvin and Maggie (Sims) Matthews.

The first Matthews of this family to come to Texas was a great-uncle of Doctor Matthews, Robert Harvey Matthews, who made his advent here during the days of the Republic, settled in Navarro county and fought Indians over the townsite of Dawson. Subsequently he became engaged in farming and stockraising, and became one of his community's successful men. He left no issue. Samuel Stewart Matthews, the grandfather of Doctor Matthews, was born in Tennessee and there spent the greater part of his life, although he came to Texas in 1872 and died at Spring Hill in 1884, when eighty-six years of age. He proved himself an especially successful man prior to the Civil War and had large holdings as a farmer and planter, but like so many others, lost his fortunes during the struggle between the South and the North, and was never able to recuperate. He married Miss Mary Reese and they became the parents of these children: Ann, who married Jesse E. Coffey and spent her life at Spring Hill; Robert H., who was a Confederate soldier, passed his life at the same place, and died leaving a family; Jane, who married Mr. Turnbo and died in Tennessee; Mary, who married John D. Morgan, and died at Spring Hill; and Joseph Calvin.

Joseph Calvin Matthews was born near Columbia, Tennessee, in 1842 and there was reared on the farm, his father being a slaveholder. He received a limited education in the public schools, and during the Civil War enlisted as a Confederate soldier in Company D, 3rd Tennessee Regiment, Longstreet's Corps, Walker's Brigade, his command being attached to the Army of the Tennessee. Among other engagements he participated in the one at Chickamauga, subsequently was in the Atlanta campaign, and was wounded at Chickamauga and taken home, where he was captured while on a furlough, but on account of his weakened condition he was allowed his freedom, as a prisoner of war and remained at home, during which time the war ended.

In 1869 Mr. Matthews brought his family to Texas, settling at Spring Hill, where he engaged in the mercantile business, and has continued to be so engaged to the present time. Mr. Matthews has passed his life in a private way, save as a notary public, has voted the Democratic ticket all his life and is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. He married Maggie Sims, a daughter of Augustus H. Sims, a farmer and slaveholder of Tennessee, and of the children of this union there are: John Walter, of Spring Hill; Dr. Harvey L., of this review; Charles Stewart, of Spring Hill; Lucy Anna, who married G. W. Cates, of that place; Theo Calvin, of Purdon, Texas; and Maud, who died in childhood. Joseph Calvin Matthews died May 14th, 1914, in his seventy-second year and was buried in the Spring Hill cemetery.

Dr. H. L. Matthews was four years of age when he came with his parents to Spring Hill, Texas, and there was reared to manhood, receiving his primary educational training in the public schools. With his father he learned the merchandise business, and worked in drug stores at Spring Hill and Hubbard, thus becoming attracted to medicine, the study of which he commenced under Dr. A. M. Clinkscales. After further preparation at Dawson, he entered Vanderbilt Medical College, Nashville, Tennessee, receiving his degree in 1887, when twenty-two years of age. Following this Doctor Matthews entered upon the practice of his calling at Spring Hill and came from that place to Dawson in 1912. Here he has already built up a large and representative practice, his reputation having preceded him to this place, and today he is accounted one of the leading members of the Navarro County Fraternity. Doctor Matthews is a member of the Navarro County Medical Society, the Central Texas Medical Association and the Texas State Medical Association, and is health officer of Dawson. He is not in politics, and has held no elective offices. Fraternally, he is a Master Mason, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. With his family, he attends the Cumberland Presbyterian church. Doctor Matthews engaged in the drug and general merchandise business at Spring Hill from 1901 until 1911, and since the latter year the Doctor's sons have conducted the drug business, the old firm of H. L. Matthews & Sons having been dissolved.

Doctor Matthews was married at Spring Hill, Texas, in 1889, to Miss Mattie Dempsey, daughter of the widow Dempsey, who came to Texas from Maury county, Tennessee, and had a large family. Mrs. Matthews died April 27, 1901, leaving the following children: Harvey Virgil, a druggist at Spring Hill, who married Rosa Slater and has two children,—Lois and Cleo; Willie, who is the wife of Fred Davidson, of Spring Hill, and has two children,—Raymond and Barbara; Fred B., a stockman of Spring Hill, who married Miss Ennis Davidson, and has two children,—Vesta Lee and Willroy; Carl Wayman and Kittie Vera. Doctor Matthews was married to Miss Ida Fields, January 29, 1906, she being a daughter of David F. and Martha (Agnew) Fields. Mr. Fields was from Alabama and became a successful farmer of Navarro county, dying near Raleigh, Texas, in 1911. He had a large family. To Doctor and Mrs. Matthews three children have been born: Leo, Aileene Cristobel and Wendall Winifred.

BEN J. VARGA. This prominent San Antonio business man and manufacturer, who is president of the Southwestern Retail Saddle and Harness Manufacturers Association, is a native of Bexar county, and represents one of the Austria-Hungary families which participated in the pioneer colonization and development of northwest Texas, and from which country has come one of the most substantial and useful national stocks in this state.

Ben J. Varga was born in Bexar county and has lived all his life in San Antonio, and is a son of Joseph and Josephine (Scheke) Varga. The mother is a native of Aldenberg, Germany. For more than half a century the Varga name has been associated with the saddle and harness trade in San Antonio, and there are few establishments which have had a longer continuous history in the Alamo city than that of which Ben J. Varga is now the head. It was his grandfather Benjamin Varga who established the business in this city. Benjamin Varga had been a prominent and wealthy man in Hungary, and possessed of the free-thinking independent tendencies of the time, was among those who revolted and were involved in the revolutionary troubles of 1848-49. As a result his property was confiscated, and he left his native land to begin life anew in America. On arriving in this country in 1851, he first located in Iowa, and from that state set out with a party of friends and walked the entire distance to San Antonio, arriving in that city in 1853. Already an expert saddle and harness maker, he was one of the first in that line of business in the entire state, and opened a shop soon after arriving at San Antonio. What he started in a small way and to supply the demands of a local trade has since been developed and continued with unvarying success and increase, and after the grandfather it was taken over by his son and is now conducted on a larger scale than ever before by Mr. Ben J. Varga. Grandfather Varga furnished four of his sons as soldiers to the Confederacy in the war between the states, and they all saw active service in that conflict.

Joseph Varga, the father, who died in San Antonio in 1899, had lived there since 1859. He and his three brothers were born in the township of Boesh, Hungary, and some years after their father's self-imposed exile left that country and settled in the then small village of San Antonio. During the war Joseph Varga was on duty at Galveston most of the time, and participated in that spirited conflict in 1863 by which the federal gunboats in the bay were captured and the enemy expelled from their position in the city. While a soldier he fell a victim to yellow fever, and in the absence of hospitals was taken to a private home for nursing and treatment. That marked the beginning of his romance, since it was in the home of Miss Josephine Scheke that he was tenderly cared for, and the young lady who helped nurse him back to health subsequently became his wife. In 1866 Joseph Varga joined one of his brothers and succeeded their father in the harness and saddlery business at San Antonio. He continued actively until about the time of his death.

The young Galveston woman who became the wife of Joseph Varga belonged to a family whose history was also filled with the hardships of pioneer life in a strange land. They were a German family who came to America in the early fifties to join the German colonists of Texas. On account of the meagre accommodations in the sailing vessels, on leaving Germany the family had to separate and embark on different vessels. Her parents and their youngest daughter, Annie, aged nine years, were on a vessel that was lost in a storm at sea, and all went down and were lost except Annie, who clung to a piece of spar and when almost at the point of death was picked up by another vessel. She regained her health, and subsequently married Captain Best, a pilot of Galveston, where she spent the rest of her life and died only recently. Josephine and three other daughters of the family had a safe journey, located at Galveston, and since her marriage to Joseph Varga her home has been in San Antonio, where she is still living an old and highly respected woman.

Ben J. Varga grew up in San Antonio, was well educated in the local schools, attended the noted old German-English school and also St. Mary's College. His studies in the latter institution were abandoned in order to enter the business of his father, and he acquired besides a general commercial knowledge of its details an expert skill as a saddle and harness maker. In 1899, at his father's death, he succeeded to the management of the factory. His high standing in business and commercial circles in San Antonio and the state is well indicated by the honor paid him in April, 1914, at the annual convention in San Antonio of the Southwestern Retail Saddle and Harness Manufacturers' Association, when he was elected president of the body. He is also president of the local organization of the same association in San Antonio.

Mr. Varga is a director and chairman of the Finance Committee of the Retail Merchants Association of San Antonio, which has over seven hundred members and is one of the strongest trade bodies in the state. He is also a member of the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Sons of Hermann. When a very young man he was one of the charter members of the famous Belknap Rifles, the crack military organization of San Antonio, and he was recipient of the first individual medal for being the best drilled member of the company.

Mr. Varga by his marriage became identified with another old San Antonio family. He was married to Miss Josephine Villemain, daughter of Celestin Villemain. Her father, who was born in France in 1843, was of a family which emigrated to Texas in 1853, settling on a ranch in Bexar county on the Medina river. Celestin Villemain during his early career was engaged in freighting out of San Antonio, during the war hauled cotton for the Confederate government, and in 1867 established a business as a general merchant at San Antonio, and that in connection with the operation of a large cattle ranch occupied him for many years. For nearly ten years Mr. Villemain has held the office of city collector of San Antonio. Mr. Varga and wife are the parents of two sons: Milton and Edwin Varga.

JOHN F. ATKINS. A stockman whose extensive operations and interests in Southwest Texas have given him a position hardly second to any in that great business, John F. Atkins has a remarkably clean financial record, and there is perhaps no other stockman in Texas who has a better standing with bankers than he. This splendid credit has been due not only to a judicious handling of all his resources, but such a fidelity to his creditors that there has never been a single obligation which he has not discharged, and while at times he has drawn heavily upon men of capital these relations have always proved mutually profitable, and his success has brought corresponding gain to his business associates.

Of one of the older families of Southwest Texas, John F. Atkins was born at Beeville in Bee county in 1869. His parents, Thomas R. and Julia (Gillette) Atkins are still living in Beeville. His father, a native of Winchester county, Tennessee, came to Texas a number of years before the war, and settled in what is now Bee county. Some time later that county was organized in 1857 out of portions of Refugio, Goliad and San Patricio counties. Thomas R. Atkins was prominent both as a business man and in public affairs, and has the distinction of having served as the first county clerk of Bee county, and continued for a long time prominent in the public activities of that locality. His chief business relations were in merchandising at Beeville, although from the beginning of his settlement he and his brothers owned cattle distributed over different sections of the state. He is now living retired. Thomas R. Atkins is of Scotch descent, and possesses the rugged honesty and firmness of purpose characteristic of that race of people. From him and his wife John F. Atkins acquired not only the heritage of the blood, but also the training in the principles of honor which he has so rigidly maintained in his business transactions.

Reared in the cattle industry, John F. Atkins has a practical experience that began with early boyhood, and he has never stepped outside that general branch of industry for his success. Not only by training and experience but almost by instinct, Mr. Atkins knows the cattle business in its every detail. His operations have always been carried on in the district known as Southwest Texas, that is, in the region south, southwest and southeast of San Antonio. For ten years he was located at Eagle Pass. Four years were spent in the Hebronville country, engaged in handling stock in Starr, Jim Hogg, Duval and Brooks counties. While in that vicinity some very high-grade Hereford and Durham calves which were raised by Mr. Atkins commanded fancy prices at the markets. For several years Mr. Atkins was associated in the business from time to time with friends, and together they have operated extensively with both cows and steers. In the spring of 1914 their interests were divided, and Mr. Atkins took the stock of steers, and it is his intention to handle that line exclusively hereafter. The scope and extent of his operations may be better understood when is stated that Mr. Atkins occupies under lease about fifty thousand acres of land in the northern part of Webb county, sixteen miles west of Encinal, and also about twenty-six thousand acres in Dimmit county, and fourteen thousand acres in Frio county.

When Mr. Atkins was married he journeyed to Mississippi to get his bride, and continued to live in that state for about a year after the marriage. Mrs. Atkins was Miss Lonie M. McKinney of Holly Springs, Mississippi. Since the latter part of 1911 Mr. Atkins and wife have had their home in San Antonio. It is a beautiful modern residence at 1415 McCullough avenue, overlooking the Army Post and the greater portion of San Antonio.

HAMILTON NEAL LUSK, M. D. Among the prominent men in Reeves county, Texas, is Dr. Hamilton Neal Lusk. The doctor in a country of widely scattered homes like his section of Texas must be a man of energy with love for his work, for although the life of a surgeon in the emergency ward of a city hospital is a strenuous one, it is not more so than that of the doctor who must travel such distances as the physicians in the cattle country of western Texas.

Dr. Hamilton Neal Lusk was born in Warren county, Tennessee, on the 22nd of April, 1877, the son of Elijah Marten and Nancy (Neal) Lusk, both of whom were born in Tennessee. Elijah Lusk was a farmer and came to Texas in 1889, locating in Bell county. Here he continued as a farmer and was also a successful stock-raiser. Mrs. Lusk died in Warren county, Tennessee, in 1876. Seven children, all of whom save one are living, were born to Elijah Lusk and his wife.

The public schools of Bell county, Texas, furnished Dr. Lusk with his elementary education, and after this was completed he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at St. Louis, Missouri, where he spent some time in medical studies. He later matriculated at Baylor University in Dallas, Texas, and was graduated from this institution with the class of 1905. He began the practice of his profession in Pecos, Reeves county, Texas, shortly after his graduation, but he only remained there six months before removing to Toyah, Texas. He devotes his entire time to his professional duties, except for the time he is absent attending clinics and taking post-graduate work in the hospitals of New Orleans, Louisiana. His chief diversion is in his books and he is the owner of one of the best libraries in Toyah. He is a member of the American Medical Association, of the Texas State Medical Society and of the Reeves County Medical Society.

Dr. Lusk was married in June, 1902, to Miss Flora Cummings, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of Joseph Cummings.

SOL. I. BERG. As a business builder few El Paso citizens have a record that compares favorably with that of Sol. I. Berg. Mr. Berg came to El Paso fourteen years ago as a clerk. Four years later he established a small shop for clothing and men's furnishing goods. From that beginning, in the course of five or seven years he has built up what is everywhere regarded as the largest and best clothing house in this city. His occupation is on the largest business thoroughfare of this city, the extent of the store may be estimated from the fact that eighteen salespeople are employed, and it is a large and handsomely equipped store with a stock of goods second to none in the entire state. All this has been accomplished in less than ten years, and the business is a splendid tribute to Mr. Berg's ability.

Sol. I. Berg was born in Westphalia, Germany, March 6, 1869, a son of Herz and Carrie (Lowenstein) Berg. His father, Herz Berg, was a prominent cattle dealer in Germany, and engaged actively in that occupation. The mother passed away in 1881. Sol. I. Berg attended the schools of his native locality until he was fourteen years of age, and then until reaching his majority was assistant to his father in the cattle business. A young man, aspiring to the larger opportunities of the Western world, he came to New York city, where he remained only for six hours, and then traveled on to St. Louis. There for eight years he was employed as a clerk in one of the leading dry-goods and clothing stores in the southern part of that city, in what was known as Frenchtown. From there he went to Hopkinsville, Kentucky, but after a short time in 1903 came on to El Paso, where he began as clerk to B. Blumenthal Brothers in their large clothing store which then was the leading store of the kind in El Paso. Four years of this experience enabled him to establish his own modest shop, in 1907, for clothing and men's furnishing goods. Every business has its beginning, but in few instances does a modest beginning presage a larger ultimate success than that of Mr. Berg. The present establishment is Sol. I. Berg Clothing & Furnishing Store, located on 206-10 San Antonio Street, the chief artery of commerce in the city of El Paso. It is unquestionably the largest establishment of the kind in the city and carries on a trade confined entirely to clothing and furnishings for men and boys. Eighteen persons are employed and the business would be creditable to a city twice the size of El Paso. Mr. Berg is also one of the directors in the Texas Bank & Trust Company.

Fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason and Shriner, and is also affiliated with the Order of Elks. His church is the Jewish synagogue. Mr. Berg built and resides in one of the finest homes in El Paso at 1016 Rio Grande Street. He was married in 1904 to Miss Jennie Weiller, who was born in Switzerland. Their two children are named Julius and Florence Caroline. In 1911 Mr. and Mrs. Berg, with their son Julius, made an extensive tour of Europe, and on their way visited the homes of their parents in Germany and Switzerland. Mr. Berg is among the class of men whose actions and careers stand for progress. He owes his success entirely to his own labors and ambitions, and it is a creditable achievement that he now stands among the leading business men of the city of El Paso. His practical and substantial success began in this city, and it is his opinion that the progress of the city and the county has only just begun.

ELWOOD N. JENKINS, proprietor of the Jenkins Piano Company at El Paso, with three other branch establishments in different cities of the southwest, is one of the energetic and successful business men of west Texas, where he has been a resident since 1907.

Elwood N. Jenkins was born near Marysville, in Union county, Ohio, on a farm, on the twentieth day of December, 1862. His parents were Levy and Elizabeth (Michels) Jenkins. His father, who was of Scotch descent, and a native of Ohio, the family having been established in America by the paternal grandfather Levi Jenkins, spent a long and active career in farming and church work. His death occurred in 1909 at Oklahoma City when eighty-six years of age. He spent many years of ministry in the Christian Union church, and never received any regular salary for his services, supporting himself and providing for his family by farming and other lines of business. During his residence in Bellfontaine, Indiana, he served as a justice of the peace for a number of years. His wife, who was born in Baltimore, died in Ohio at the age of eighty-eight. Of their ten children, the El Paso business man was third.

His early life was spent on a farm, and he attained his education partly in the public schools and partly in the Liber College, near Portland, Indiana. Leaving school at the age of nineteen, he spent one term as a teacher, and then took up what has proved his permanent business, beginning on a salary and commission as a piano salesman with headquarters at Springfield, he represented some of the best known piano houses throughout the state of Ohio. From there he moved to El Paso in 1907, and established in this city a branch for the Wiley B. Allen Piano Company of San Francisco. Leaving that house in 1909 he set up in business for himself under the firm of the Jenkins Piano Company. At the present time his is regarded as the largest piano and music store in El Paso. He represents the leading manufacturers, carrying ten different makes of pianos. He has branch stores in Clifton, Douglas and Globe, Arizona.

In politics Mr. Jenkins is a Republican. At Phoenix, Arizona, on June 6, 1906, he married Miss Eva Bowyer, daughter of Joseph Bowyer, who was a native of the state of Utah. They are the parents of one daughter, Eva, born August 23, 1909, in El Paso. Their family residence is 1701 N. Campbell Street, and the store is at 211-13 Texas Street.

MAJ. WILLIAM M. WALTON. In considering the career and character of this eminent member of the legal profession, the impartial observer will be disposed to rank him not only among the most distinguished members of his calling, but also among the most remarkable characters of his times. Whether one considers the obstacles which poverty and obscurity opposed to his entrance upon a learned profession, his patience and persistence in overcoming them, the worthy motives which impelled him through a long and busy career, the talent which he brought to a difficult profession, the profundity of his knowledge, or the bravery he displayed on the battlefield during the war between the states, he will be impressed that all these qualities, and others no less marked, rank him among men of genius and entitle him to be classed with the men who have contributed to the greatness of the Lone Star state. Although he has retired from the active practice of his calling and is now eighty-two years of age, he retains his alert mind and active step, and as a type of the old-time Southern gentleman, which unfortunately is passing away all too rapidly, is a connecting link between the glorious past and the progressive present.

Major William M. ("Buck") Walton was born at Canton, Madison county, Mississippi, January 17, 1832, a son of Samuel W. and Mary (Loe) Walton, the latter a daughter of George A. Loe. His parents removed from Canton to Carroll county, Mississippi in 1834, and there the son was reared to manhood. Educational advantages were very meagre in that day, Carroll county being on the frontier, and the old field pay schools were the only resort of the children. Major Walton's father died when he was seven years of age, leaving him to struggle along with his widowed mother and the other children until 1842, when Mrs. Walton was married to B. A. Strange and removed to Texas with her husband. The children, George, William M., Philip and Newton, were left under the guardianship of James Wellons, who well, faithfully and honestly administered their property, consisting of slaves and a plantation. At an early age William M. Walton relinquished his interest in his yearly income to the support of his two younger brothers, Philip and Newton, George having gone to the California gold fields with other adventurous spirits in 1849. Newton died in that same year, and Philip followed him to the grave in 1852. Before their death William M. had started out to make his own living, letting his share of the common income go to the support of the younger brothers, it not being sufficient to support them all. He was studious, and at the age of sixteen years was able to instruct the lower classes in the school, and as assistant teacher was able, by economy and frugality, to support himself and to lay by money enough to carry him through the University of Virginia, whither he went when he was nineteen years old.

Returning to Carroll county in 1851, Major Walton commenced the study of law under Judge Cothran and James Z. George, who was afterwards chief justice of the state and United States senator and died while serving in the latter office. Before he was twenty-one years of age Major Walton secured his license to practice his profession by special act of the legislature of Mississippi. Prior to this time, however, before he had commenced the study of law, he had taken a trip through Texas, Indian Territory and Arkansas, looking for a field in which to locate, and had fixed upon the city of Austin. Holding fast to that determination, in the fall of 1852 he removed to that city as soon as he obtained his license, which was granted by Vice-Chancellor Dickerson. Arriving at Austin on the 19th of January, 1853, he at once commenced business as deputy district court clerk, in order to familiarize himself with the forms of procedure of the courts of Texas and to obtain other advantages that such a position would give to a "raw man" in a new country. In August of that year he formed a partnership with Gen. A. J. Hamilton, one of the greatest lawyers and most eloquent advocates in the history of Texas. He continued this partnership until 1857, when his constant and untiring devotion to business cares caused the failure of his health and he retired to the country to recuperate. In the fall of 1858 he formed a partnership with Judge S. G. Sneed, a great natural lawyer and an orator by instinct, Gen. Hamilton in the meantime having been elected to Congress. This association continued until the outbreak of the trouble between the South and the North, when Major Walton entered the army and remained in the field until the Confederacy fell. He entered the army as a private in Company B, Twenty-first Regiment, Texas Cavalry, Colonel Carter, Parson's Brigade, was elected first lieutenant, and was subsequently promoted captain, major and lieutenant-colonel, and his promotion to brigadier-general was under consideration on the recommendation of Lieutenant-General Holmes, when the struggle collapsed by the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox. Major Walton saw active service in Louisiana, Arkansas and Missouri, and would have seen service in Texas if the Federals had secured a foothold on her soil, and his entire military experience was characterized by the utmost bravery and gallantry.

Prior to going to the war, Major Walton had been married, in 1854, to Letitia A. Watkins, daughter of Dr. Thomas A. and Sarah (Epp) Watkins, of Alabama, and four children were born to this union, the three sons all passing away after arriving at manhood and being thoroughly educated and entering into the serious business of life. The mother died June 23d, 1914, and the daughter still survives.

When he returned from the army, Major Walton, like the greater number of his comrades, was absolutely without funds, and in addition had a wife and four children to support and a home still to be paid for. To add to his embarrassments, he was disfranchised and was not allowed to practice his profession. His native ingenuity came to his assistance, however, and he at once began practice under another man's name, that of W. P. de Normandie, and continued so to do until the ban was raised and he resumed his own name. He at once began to raise his voice and his arm against "carpet-bag" rule, which for years throttled Texas and trampled the rights of the people in the ground until 1873, and at last the people, led by such men as Major Walton, Judge George Clark, of Waco, and the late Maj. George B. Zimpleman, of Austin, rose in their might and elected Richard Coke governor of Texas, thus establishing an era which led to the peace, happiness and prosperity of the state. Major Walton first formed a partnership with John A. Green, a very thorough lawyer, and this relation continued until Jerome R. Hill was taken in as a third partner under the firm name of Walton, Green and Hill. This continued until 1882, when Major Green withdrew and removed to San Antonio, and the firm name was then Walton & Hill until a son of Major Walton entered the partnership, the name then being Walton, Hill & Walton. After the death of this son the concern gain became Walton & Hill and so continued until Mr. Hill's death in 1899, when the firm name resolved back to W. M. Walton, which it had been thirty years before. During Major Walton's most prominent days as a lawyer he was the contemporary of such eminent legal lights as Wash Jones, Tom Sneed, Jones Rivers, John Hancock, Charles S. West, Col. Percy Brewster, A. S. Walker, Sr., Jack Hamilton, Judge Oldham, O. S. Roberts, A. W. Terrell and J. W. Smith, giants in their day, who gave both glory and honor to the legal profession in Texas. All have passed away—Major Walton is the ancestor of the Austin bar, and not a man now lives in this city who was here when he arrived. On one occasion Chief Justice Gaines of the State Supreme Court was asked whom he considered the best "all-round" lawyer in Texas. Without a moment's hesitation he replied: "Major 'Buck' Walton." "But isn't he the greatest as a criminal lawyer?" the questioner interposed. "Major Walton's presentation of any kind of a case," resumed Judge Gaines, "is clearer than that of anyone I can recall." It was the late Judge David A. Culberson, himself one of the greatest legists the state has produced, who said: "As a trial lawyer I had rather go against any lawyer in the state than 'Buck' Walton." Major Walton's specialties in the law were land and murder cases, and without specifying cases of either sort it is enough to say that at the time of his retirement from the bar he was credited with more cases of the kind than any lawyer in Texas. He retired finally from practice, and has since confined himself to writing wills and giving confidential advice to such of his old clients as are still alive. Although eighty-two years of age he is in vigorous health, his mind seems as brilliant as it ever was, and he apparently has many years of usefulness still before him.

In 1866 Major Walton was elected attorney general of the state of Texas, but was removed by the military of the United States as an obstruction to reconstruction. This was by reason of his action as chairman of the Democratic executive committee from 1866 until 1872, when he tried to keep the military on military ground and from interference with civil rights. His correspondence with General Reynolds, the Federal commander, in this connection is very interesting.

In a recent article pertaining to Major Walton's career, which appeared in "State Topics," the writer said in part: "Major Walton has always, until the past few years, taken a great interest in politics and he was as great a speaker on the stump as he was in the courthouse pleading the cause of a client. He is a man of great courage and his friends used to say of him that he did not know what fear was. While Major Walton has a good home and enough of this world's goods to spend his declining years in ease and comfort, yet had he been an avaricious man he would now be a millionaire, for no Texas lawyer had ever been a greater money-maker. But he always looked on money as something not to hoard, but to do good with, and his charity has been so boundless that it has often been said of him that he never owned a dollar that was too good for someone that he thought needed it worse than he did. No man ever had a higher conception of honor than Major Walton and little things have ever been foreign to his nature. A knightly Southern gentleman, he is chivalrous and as gallant in his old age as he was in the days of his young manhood, when he went forth to battle for his beloved Southland beneath the Bonnie Blue Flag."

HERBERT NUNN. Although young in years, Herbert Nunn, city engineer of the city of El Paso, has had years of experience and is an expert in his profession. He is one of the progressive men of the city and during his term as city engineer has greatly improved the facilities of the city in his department. Mr. Nunn is active in any forward movements that are begun in the city, be they political or economic, and belonging as he does to that group of young, vigorous, clean minded men, who are the hope of the nation today, his activity in public affairs is a thing much to be desired.

Herbert Nunn was born in Harrisonville, Missouri, on the 18th of July, 1877. His father, Albert Nunn, is a native of Kentucky and now lives in Vancouver, Washington, where he is a prominent civil engineer. Albert Nunn married Evelyn Warner, who was born in Indiana, and who is also living.

The schools of Harrisonville, Missouri, furnished young Herbert Nunn with his first education, but after two years here he went with his parents to Chehalis, Washington, and attended the public schools there for five years. He later attended the high school of Vancouver, Washington, and then received a rigid military training at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where he remained for two years.

On the 7th of March, 1897, Mr. Nunn enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, and sailed for the Philippine Islands. Here he served through the Spanish-American War, taking part in more than forty skirmishes and a number of battles. He participated in the capture of Manila and Guam, and in the skirmishes at Laporta River, Santa Cruz and Emos. In one of the fights he was wounded in the forearm, but it proved to be not very serious. He returned home in 1900, landing on the 7th of March, and shortly after his return he was made lieutenant of the National Guards of the state of Washington, a volunteer organization. He served for four years in this position. In 1904 President Roosevelt appointed him to the Infantry and Cavalry School at Fort Leavenworth.

In the meantime he had taken up civil engineering under the direction of his father and now determined to enter the profession. His first commission was to construct a dam across the Moya river in the state of Chihuahua, Mexico, for the Chihuahua Gold and Silver Mining Company, a corporation that is now defunct. He was engaged in this work from the spring of 1907 until June, 1908, and upon its completion he came to Texas and located in El Paso county.

He was appointed county engineer in El Paso county and served two years, until he received his appointment in April, 1910, as city engineer of El Paso. He has held this office ever since and is regarded as one of the most capable engineers in the city as well as one of the best of the city officials. He has brought about many improvements during his administration and his plans for the future embrace yet more extensive improvements.

In the fraternal world Mr. Nunn is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and also belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Democratic party and is one of the best workers for his party in the city. Mr. Nunn is a firm believer in the future of both El Paso and the surrounding country, and owns a fine home in the city and a valuable piece of farming land on the island near El Paso.

On the 17th of December, 1906, Mr. Nunn was married to Miss May Estella Bond, a daughter of Judge William H. Bond, of Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Nunn are both keenly interested in Indian and Mexican relics and in the study of various Indian languages. Both of them speak Spanish fluently and they have collected a great number of Indian and Mexican relics, some of which are of great rarity and therefore very valuable.

GEORGE H. MATTICE. The Mattice Heating & Plumbing Company, located at 109 N. Campbell Street, and established in July, 1910, under the present name is the largest concern of the kind in El Paso, and employs a force of from twelve to fifteen skilled workmen, while during the height of the busy season as many as thirty men are in the employ of this company. It is a business which represents the long experience and successful business career of George H. Mattice, who learned his trade in Iowa when a boy, and has held responsible places as manager or been in independent business for a number of years in different sections of the west.

George H. Mattice was born in Kane county, Illinois, December 5, 1862, being a son of D. V. and Margaret M. (Frydendall) Mattice. The father, a native of New York State, was born in the city of Albany, and settled in Kane County, Illinois, in the early sixties, and in 1865 went out with his family to Buchanan county, Iowa, where he was a substantial farmer up to the time of his death on March 17, 1911, at the age of seventy-six. During his residence in Iowa, he took a prominent part in local politics, and was an influential and helpful citizen, although he never sought or accepted public office. The mother was born in Illinois, and is now living at Independence, Iowa, at the ripe age of seventy-three. Seven children were born to the union, George H. being the second.

As a boy he spent his years on the farm and in attendance at the district schools of Buchanan county. At the age of seventeen he started out independently, and his first venture was as an employe in a hardware and plumbing establishment at Independence, the firm being Bonnewall, Cobb & Stewart. While with that house, Mr. Mattice learned the plumbers trade and continued four years in their service as a skilled workman. The partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Mattice joined Mr. Cobb, his former employer, and spent the next two years in the Dakotas, and from there moving to San Bernardino, California. There for seven years he was manager and foreman for the Whitecomb & Stoughton Plumbing, Heating & Hardware Company. Resigning that place, he was proprietor for seven years of the George H. Mattice Plumbing & Sheet Metal Works in San Bernardino. After a successful career as an independent business man he sold out and on June 1, 1900, arrived in the city of El Paso. For four years he was employed by Hugh A. McLean, and then established the present business as already mentioned.

In politics Mr. Mattice is a Democrat, voting as a good citizen, but otherwise taking no active part. He is married and has one daughter, Fantella, now the wife of F. M. Crowder, of Big Springs, Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Crowder have two daughters, Lulene and Winifred Crowder. Mr. Mattice being especially proud of these granddaughters. The Mattice home in El Paso is at 151 North Virginia Street.

DANIEL W. BURKHALTER. Among the legists of the Lone Star State whose own efforts have gained them a full measure of success in their chosen vocation, Daniel W. Burkhalter, of El Paso, holds prominent position. A representative of the highest type of legal mind, during the ten years in which he has been engaged in practice in this city, he has gained an enviable reputation on account of his success in a number of notable cases, and has become a familiar figure in the courts of El Paso county. His career has been one of steady advance and is illustrative of the opportunities lying open to the young professional man of ambition and determined energy in the Southwest.

Mr. Burkhalter was born at Montgomery, Alabama, July 25, 1875, and is a son of W. G. and Missouri Alice (Stringer) Burkhalter. His parents, natives of Georgia, located in Alabama some years prior to the Civil War, in which W. G. Burkhalter participated actively as a soldier in the Confederate forces under Forrest. In 1875 the family left Alabama, where they had owned a plantation, and settled in Fort Worth, Texas, the father becoming a well-known farmer and stockman and continuing as such until his death, at the age of fifty-five years. Mrs. Burkhalter, a native of Salem, Georgia, passed away at Dallas, Texas, in 1901, when fifty-five years of age.

Of their family of four children, all are deceased with the exception of Daniel W.

The early education of Daniel W. Burkhalter was secured in the public schools of Springtown, Parker county, Texas, and at Weatherford. Subsequently, he became a student in the literary department of A. and M. College at Bryan, Tex., from which he was graduated in 1897, and at that time began to read law in the offices of J. B. Stevens, at Weatherford, Texas. In 1901 he was admitted to the bar of the State, and at once entered upon the practice of his profession at Mineral Wells, there serving for a short time as city attorney. Subsequently, in 1902, he removed to Lubbock county, where he acted in the capacity of county attorney until 1904, and in that year came to El Paso and opened offices. He has since built up a large and representative practice, having upon his books some of the largest corporations of the city. He is known as a learned, capable, far-sighted legist, thoroughly versed in law and jurisprudence, and conscientious in handling the interests of his clients. He belongs to the bar associations of the county and State, in which he is regarded as a valued member, and where his abilities have gained for him the respect and esteem of his confreres. He is a Democrat in his political affiliations, but has not aspired to public life, although he has never been indifferent to the duties of citizenship, having never withheld his support from any movements which have promised to advance the interests of his community. His fraternal connection is with the Modern Woodmen of America, in which he numbers many friends, as he does also in professional and business circles of the city. Like other virile Western men, he is fond of out-of-door life, and takes frequent trips into the ranch country of El Paso county, which he believes will be one of the greatest sections of the Southwest.

Mr. Burkhalter has never married. He maintains well-appointed offices at No. 406 Caples Building.

FRANK ALEXANDER HUGHES, M. D. As a physician and surgeon Dr. Hughes ranks among the leaders in the younger generation of the profession at El Paso, where he has resided since 1909, and came here after an experience in the mining district as physician to the mines in South America. He is a product of the best eastern professional schools, and is a specialist in the skillful treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

Dr. Frank Alexander Hughes was born at Denver, Colorado, April 2, 1883, a son of John N. and Nannie L. Hughes, his father being of Welsh and his mother of English descent. The family lived in Colorado for a number of years, whence they moved to Kansas City, Missouri, and in 1889 located at El Paso, where the parents now have their home. Dr. Hughes is a graduate of the El Paso high school in the class of 1901, and began his practical career in the wholesale produce business in this city. He went east to secure his preparation for his profession and studied in the medical college of Virginia at Richmond, where he was graduated M. D. in 1906. In July, 1907, Dr. Hughes accepted an appointment as physician to the Braden Copper Company, and discharged the duties of that position in the mines of Chile, South America, for two years. He then returned to his old home at El Paso and has been actively engaged in practice here with the exception of some months during 1911, when he pursued a post-graduate course at the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, there specializing in the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

Dr. Hughes has always maintained an independent attitude in political matters, but is a good friend of every enterprise and undertaking for the improvement and advancement of his home and community. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the college fraternities of the Alpha Tau Omega and the Phi Chi. His church is the Episcopal. Dr. Hughes has spent most of the years of his life in El Paso, has known this city from its early days to the present, and there is probably no better informed citizen with regard to the natural resources of this locality, and it is his pleasure to give anyone interested any information desired concerning the locality.

JUDGE ALBERT M. TURNEY. As a lawyer and public official Judge Turney has exercised his many talents for the progress and betterment of Brewster county in many ways that are reflected in the present prosperity of this section of west Texas. He has represented his district in the state legislature, where he worked effectively for various measures of immediate concern to the people of this county and vicinity, and for several terms has been a particularly capable county judge.

Judge Albert M. Turney has spent all his life in Texas and belongs to a family which became identified with the Texas Republic from the time of its liberation from Mexican dominion. He was born in Harrison county, January 13, 1865, and is a son of the late Albert G. Turney. The father, a native of Tennessee, came to Texas in 1836, the year of the establishment of the Republic, and was engaged in farming and merchandising in this state for a number of years. During the Civil war he enlisted as a Confederate soldier and through the entire period of hostilities bearing arms for his southland. He was in many of the notable campaigns of the war and saw much arduous service. He was a Christian gentleman and an active worker in the Methodist church, and gave much thought and attention to political affairs. His death occurred in 1896 at the age of seventy-seven and he is buried in Marshall, this state. The maiden name of his wife was Selina Ward, who was born in Texas and she now makes her home in Marshall. Though an old lady she takes much interest in her Methodist church. There were nine children, and Judge Turney was the fifth in order of birth.

Judge Turney as a boy attended the public schools of Harris county, as opportunity permitted, and this portion of his education was supplemented by private instruction. When a boy he earned his first money by working on a farm and among these early experiences he recalls one year which he spent in cutting out and hewing cross-ties for the railroad. For a year and a half he worked as apprentice at the painter's trade, but failing health obstructed his course in this direction and fortunately turned him to a field of enterprise where his abilities have been of great benefit to the community. When about twenty-two years of age he entered the office of T. P. Young at Marshall, and continued his law studies there for about a year and was subsequently admitted to the bar. He passed his examination with high honors, and during the three hours spent before his inquisitors he missed only one question. His practice as a lawyer began at Marshall, but after three years he came out to West Texas and located at Alpine. Establishing his office here he soon gained distinction as an able trial lawyer and counselor, and his services have since been retained in the management of many important cases in the Brewster county courts.

Judge Turney was married at Palestine, Texas, December 16, 1908, to Miss Annie K. Etheridge, daughter of John H. Etheridge, of Palestine. The two daughters who comprise the home circle are Adrian and Katherine. The judge adheres to the Methodist church, while his wife is a Presbyterian. He is a Mason and member of the Woodmen of the World, and has served as an officer in both lodges. Judge Turney is one of the active Democrats and leading men of influence in the party in Brewster county. His public career began with the office of county attorney and he subsequently served a term as county commissioner. In 1903 he was appointed county judge and received election for two terms. His next political honor was election as a member of the house of representatives, where he served two terms, but resigned during the last session and was appointed county judge, and in 1912 was elected to this office. While in the legislature he advocated and worked for the passage of the wild animal bounty bill and for the bill to eradicate diseases of sheep and other live stock. Judge Turney finds much pleasure and recreation in spending his leisure time on a ranch and enjoying outdoor life in general. His place includes all the better amusements and entertainments of a wholesome life and he is a man of broad principles, thoroughly informed about his state and its resources, and several years ago wrote the first history of Brewster County for publication in the Dallas News. At the present time Judge Turney is engaged in the development of the mine of galena ore near Alpine, and also extensively engaged in real estate and cattle brokerage business.

JOHN E. ANDERSON. As secretary and manager of the Elks Club in El Paso, Mr. Anderson is one of the best known members of that Order in the western section of the state, and he is one of the young men of enterprise and executive ability who are doing much to improve El Paso and this section of Texas, not only in a business way, but in the direction of making it a better place to live and enjoy life. Mr. Anderson is a hustling real estate man, a business which he has followed in this city for the past eight years.

John E. Anderson was born in Rockingham county, North Carolina, August 25, 1879, a son of Edward N. and Sallie J. Anderson. His early education was attained in the public schools of North Carolina, finishing in the high school and then taking a commercial and literary course in Oak Ridge Institute of North Carolina. He remained in his native state until 1902 and then came out to New Mexico, where he spent three years, most of the time being passed in travel and in hunting. He was accompanied by a sick brother, and gave most of his time to diverting and the entertainment of this brother. In 1905 he came to El Paso and opened a real estate office and since then has transacted a large real estate business in general lines, operating all over this section of the state and in old Mexico.

Mr. Anderson was married in El Paso December 17, 1910, to Miss Tinnie B. Harris, daughter of J. L. Harris, who formerly was a resident of Orange, Texas. Mr. Anderson is a member of no particular church but supports all denominations and all charitable and benevolent works. He has been a member of the Elks order for a number of years, and was given special distinction by his choice as secretary and manager of the El Paso Lodge No. 187. He is also prominent in Masonry, being affiliated with the Scottish Rite from the Blue Lodge to the thirty-second degree, including the Mystic Shrine. He has membership in the El Paso Country Club and takes an active interest in local and state politics as a Democrat. In his diversions he is especially fond of baseball and horses, enjoys theatres and music, and is always ready to take part in any public spirited movement for the betterment of his city. As to the advantages of Texas, Mr. Anderson says that the state has opportunity and resources to support many thousand more people in almost every occupation and the state really offers homes to the whole nation. All that is needed for success, according to Mr. Anderson is energy and a will to do, and it is preeminently the place for the poor man.

DAVID G. HEINEMAN. From Chicago as a real estate field to El Paso, Texas, in the same business, may be considered a far cry, but David G. Heineman stepped from the one point to the other, and has since carried on a thriving business in real estate in El Paso. Seven years having elapsed since he concluded that the west offered him greater inducements than did the congested business districts of the Illinois and Middle West metropolis. His success has been of so marked a nature that it has become the ambition of Mr. Heineman to open the eyes of the "cliff-dwellers" of the cities to the great fact that there are places in the broad west that are waiting for them to come and claim, where independence is theirs for the claiming, and where the free and open life of the plains may be theirs in the fullest abundance. Since Mr. Heineman came to El Paso seven years ago, he has placed hundreds of men in the way to financial independence on small tracts of Texas land, and in that field of activity alone he has done more for the growth of this section of the state and for the unalloyed benefit of his fellow man than perhaps any other man who might be mentioned in the city of El Paso. It may be a new idea to regard a real estate dealer in the light of a benefactor, but there will be found many an honest rancher of small places who might never have reached his present state of prosperity and independence but for the activities of Mr. Heineman in the real estate business.

Born in Princeton, North Carolina, on February 4, 1871, the son of parents of that state, his father died when he was a young boy. He received his education of early years in the public schools, and after the death of his father when he was five years old, remained in his native community until he was eleven years old. It was then he went to Ohio to make his home with relatives. His uncle, with whom he lived, was in the horse business, and he worked with him until he was twenty-two years old, when he gave up the work and made his way to Chicago, there engaging in the real estate business as an employee. From then until now Mr. Heineman has been continuously identified with that enterprise, and his accomplishments in the work have been of a large and worthy nature. He remained in Chicago for about twelve years, and in 1906 came direct to El Paso, where he opened up a real estate office and has since continued in that line, as has already been set forth in an opening paragraph. Mr. Heineman is an enthusiast with regard to Texas land, and with the prices of farm lands and all real estate advancing at its present rates throughout the state, he sees no reason why men of average talent and enterprise should not come to this great state and share in the prosperity that is being held out to all who are looking for the benefits the soil can bestow.

On December 24, 1898, Mr. Heineman was married in Chicago to Telazeal Curtis, one time of Plano, Illinois, and to them have been born one son, David H. Heineman.

Mr. Heineman, while he heartily supports and favors all the Christian churches, is a member of none of them. He is independent in his political belief, and takes no active part in the political movements of the various parties in the city. He is fond of outdoor life, and finds much of his pleasure in the indulgence of his love for the open, baseball contributing not a little to his enjoyment, and the pleasures of the angler following a close second. He and his family are popular and prominent in El Paso, and participate in the best social activities of the city.

ERNEST KRAUSE. The fine old traits that have made the German race so eagerly welcomed to the shores of America, and which have placed the German nation in the high place that she holds today among the powers of the world, have no better example than is to be found in the character of Ernest Krause, of El Paso, Texas. Before coming to this country he did not know a word of English, and he mastered the language through his own efforts alone. This is the method in which he has gained success, hard work, perseverance, an independent spirit that asks favors of no one, and high courage that does not know how to acknowledge defeat. He is one of the leading architects and contractors in the city of El Paso, and has erected some of the finest and most substantial buildings in the city.

Ernest Krause was born in Germany on the 2nd of March, 1847. He received a good education in the public schools of his native land, and later took a course in the high school and gymnasium. This made him a well educated man and his parents determined to apprentice him to a pharmacist. He entered the services of a druggist and served his full apprenticeship, but upon its completion the call of the sea which had always had a fascination for the lad, proved too strong and he became a sailor. He simply drifted away from the profession for which he had been prepared and during his life as a sailor determined to come to the United States and try his fortune. He was only seventeen when he became a sailor and he spent three years aboard ship. During this period he began the study of English and before he finally set foot on American shores he had practically mastered the language without the aid of anyone, as has been mentioned above.

Upon his arrival in America he set forth for the west and locating in Arkansas he took up the carpenters and builders trade, in which he made himself thoroughly competent. He remained in Arkansas for about three years and in 1874 came to Texas. The state at this time was just in the process of making and the need for men of strong character and a sense of law and order was a vital one. Mr. Krause settled in Gonzales, in Gonzales county, and here for six years followed his trade. After some time spent in the employ of others he determined to go into the contracting business for himself and was decidedly successful, putting up many buildings in this section. He then determined to become an architect as well as a contractor, and bent all his energies to the task of becoming as proficient in this branch as in practical building. That he succeeded is due to his own efforts, and that he did succeed is clearly evidenced by some of the structures that he has designed and built since coming to El Paso. He came to the latter city about 1880 and has since made it his home. He has thus been in business here for many years and there is probably no better known man in the city than Ernest Krause. He now draws all his own plans and has many of the fine buildings in the city to his credit. Among these may be mentioned the handsome Hotel Dieu. In addition to the work he has accomplished in El Paso he has erected many structures in other parts of the state.

Mr. Krause is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and has always been an active and loyal member of the order. He has passed through all the orders from the blue lodge to the commandery and has held various offices in the blue lodge. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party but takes no active part further than to fulfill the duty which he believes every American citizen owes to the country and that is to cast his vote at the polls. Mr. Krause came to this state in the pioneer days and the fellowship that bound those early settlers together he still feels, as is evidenced by his active membership in the Texas Pioneer Association, of which he was at one time the president.

Mr. Krause was married at Gonzales, Texas, in December, 1880, shortly after Christmas, to Miss Flora H. Beach, a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. David Beach, who came to Texas from Illinois. Three daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Krause. Leona is the wife of Earl Sidebottom and lives in Los Angeles, California; Mabel married Charles Montford and lives in El Paso, and Kate, who is at home with her parents.

Mr. Krause is a firm believer in the necessity and practicality of the church and ready to assist any of them, though he is himself not affiliated with any denomination. In his earlier days he was very fond of hunting and still finds his chief recreation in an outdoors life. He can indulge this taste to the fullest extent for he is the owner of two good ranches in the mountains, where he is often to be found.

That Mr. Krause is a firm believer in the future of this section of the state of Texas may be seen by the opinion that he expresses to the effect that in his opinion El Paso is still in its infancy and will some day be the second city in the state, and probably the first, for with the exception of oranges and citrus fruits there is nothing that can not be grown in this belt. He says that no man would make a mistake to come here and settle for it could surely be made the garden spot of the world. Mr. Krause can speak from experience of the advantages that Texas has to offer for no one in El Paso has had much more experience. He is one of the most respected men in the city both for his integrity of character and his practical business ability, and his social position is very high.

FREDERICK G. BILLINGS. The musical instrument field is one of the largest in modern merchandising, and its successful operation is as difficult as any other department of business. Mr. Frederick G. Billings who has a large and unusually well equipped establishment in El Paso for the retailing of musical instruments has perhaps a natural as well as an acquired adaptability to the musical merchandise trade, and in consequence of this unusual combination he has been remarkably successful. About a year ago he succeeded the older firm of Billings Brothers Piano Company, located at 102 N. Stanton St. Mr. Billings never resorts to any of the common subterfuges and tricks of the instrument trade, he maintains a one price system, and never extends any inducements in the way of puzzle schemes, certificates and other methods which really deceive the purchaser into the belief that he is getting something for nothing, or else getting first class goods at a lower price than he could secure the same from other and more honest dealers. Mr. Billings is himself a musician of considerable ability and for this reason his customers have special confidence in his judgment and advice.

Frederick G. Billings was born at Kirksville, Missouri, September 19, 1883, a son of Frederick C. and Rose Billings. His father now a resident of Milwaukee, is engaged in the manufacturing of piano actions and supplies. Thus the Billings family has been identified for many years with piano and the musical instrument business, and it was into no unknown field that Mr. Billings came when he entered the trade at El Paso.

Mr. Billings was a resident in Missouri until 1903, in which year the family moved to Milwaukee, where he remained until 1909. During that time he was associated with his father in the manufacture of piano actions and supplies. He then went out west to Los Angeles, being identified with the George J. Birkel Piano Company as manager of their branch store in San Diego for three years. The following year he spent in wholesaling pianos on the road for the Seybold Piano Company of Elgin, Illinois, and traveled over fourteen of the central states. In March, 1912, Mr. Billings located in El Paso and succeeded to the Billings Brothers Piano Company. He has a trade which extends all over western Texas, Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. Billings received his early education in the public schools of Sedalia, Missouri, then took three years in the Military Academy at Macon, Missouri, and when about twenty years of age left college and began his practical career as a piano tuner with the Edmund Graham piano house at Milwaukee. He left piano tuning to become associated with his father and since then his career has been followed down to the present time. He was reared in the Baptist church. Mr. Billings possesses a voice and considerable talent as a singer, and for a number of years has been connected with various church choirs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Elks and Masons and is an independent in politics. His chief diversion is automobiling and he is the owner of two fine cars. He is an enthusiast in musical matters and gives frequent musical recitals in his own recital hall, and also in the different churches. He does an enormous business, and is really one of the leaders in his line in all west Texas. He is very enthusiastic about the future and the present possibilities of El Paso and has shown his confidence in the city by investing liberally in real estate.

HON. CHARLES R. BUCHANAN. Belonging to a family which for generations has contributed of its members to the ranks of distinguished American jurists and legislators, Hon. Charles R. Buchanan is worthily representing the family in the capacity of county judge of Scurry county. Judge Buchanan's career has been one of earnest endeavor since early youth, when by following the occupation of educator he was able to earn the means wherewith to prosecute his advanced studies, and his high position in his community is but the just reward for sustained effort and inherent talent. He was born on a farm in Smyth county, Virginia, October 3, 1869, and is a son of George C. and Sarah C. Buchanan.

Judge Buchanan comes of Irish, Scotch and French stock, many of the family name settling in Virginia during Colonial times. Many of the members of this family represented their districts at various times in Congress and the Legislature, Judge Buchanan's grand-uncle being a member of the Virginia Assembly for a number of years. The family came to Texas in October, 1881, when George C. Buchanan brought his wife and children to Bosque county, and there he engaged in farming and stock raising until 1893, when he came to Scurry county. He continued his agricultural operations until 1905, when he sold his interests and settled in Snyder, the county seat of Scurry county, which has since been his home. During the war between the states, Mr. Buchanan enlisted in a Virginia company of volunteers in the Confederate army, his father, P. C. Buchanan, being captain thereof. At the engagement at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, he was seriously wounded, and returned to his home. His wound was of such a serious nature that his health was broken, and he did not return to the front, but continued in the service as a member of the Home Guards until the close of the war. He and his wife are now living quiet, retired lives in their comfortable home at Snyder. They were the parents of nine daughters and two sons, Judge Buchanan being the elder boy.

The early education of Judge Buchanan was secured in the public schools of Virginia, and after coming to Texas went to school during the summer sessions. During that time he assisted his father on the home farm and worked faithfully at whatever honorable employment presented itself. He entered the University of Texas during the summer session of 1898, and paid for his tuition by teaching school, a profession which he followed successfully for upwards of twelve years. In 1902 he entered public life when he became the successful candidate of the Democratic party for the office of county clerk. In that capacity he served until 1906, when he was elected county judge of Scurry county, and continued to serve as such two terms, when he retired. In 1912 he was again elected to the county bench, and there has continued to maintain the best traditions of the judicial office. He is known as a fair, conscientious and impartial official, who is possessed of a deep knowledge of human nature and an appreciation of the rights of his fellowmen. He has ever been a staunch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and by word and pen has done much to forward its interests in Scurry county. As president of the Snyder Commercial Club he has worked with other earnest and public-spirited citizens in securing advancements and improvements for the city, and as elder in the Presbyterian church has withheld his support from no movement calculated to make for morality or good citizenship.

On May 31, 1901, Judge Buchanan was married to Miss Alma Wright, a daughter of Mrs. Lavina Wright, of Walnut Springs, Texas. Mrs. Wright still survives, and is making her home with her only child. Judge and Mrs. Buchanan have two interesting children: Miss Ruth, who is ten years old and a bright scholar of the Snyder public schools; and Doris, aged three years.

OSCAR THOMPSON. In that section of Texas wherein lies Jim Hogg county a man is judged strictly on his merits, and the question of blood or of wealth does not enter in. In saying therefore that Oscar Thompson is one of the most popular men in this county some idea may be gained of the strength of his personality. Starting from little or nothing he has become one of the most prominent cattlemen in this section, and during the years in which he has been winning wealth he has also been winning friends.

Oscar Thompson was born in Wilson county, Texas, near Floresville, in 1868. His father was John C. Thompson and his mother was Mary (Coke) Thompson. Mrs. Thompson is living but his father is dead. The latter was born in Mississippi, but removed to Texas before the Civil war, settling in Wilson county. From this county he enlisted in the Confederate service and remained in the army throughout the Civil war. In 1870 he removed with his family to Bee county, Texas, and there he spent the remainder of his life, being engaged in farming and in the stock raising business. He married Miss Mary Coke in 1860, she being a native of the state of Alabama.

Oscar Thompson owes his success entirely to his own efforts for he started in life with little education and very little capital but his own energy. He was reared to the cattle business, helping his father when he was but a boy. It was in 1896 that he came to Hebronville, Texas, in what is now Jim Hogg county. Here he went to work as a cow boy at $30 a month, his employer being W. W. Jones. For eight years he was in Mr. Jones' employ, becoming one of his most valuable and trusted men. Then he engaged in the cattle business for himself, and although at first it was only in a small way he soon began to add to his herd and to acquire more grazing land. He became in time one of the most prominent and successful cattlemen in southwest Texas, and he now controls, either as owner or lessee, large tracts of land in Jim Hogg, Zapata and McMullen counties. He raises and ships cattle on a large scale from his various ranches, giving the main portion of his time to this business.

When the formation of a new county from Duval and Brooks counties first began to be spoken of, Mr. Thompson was strongly in favor of the move and he later became one of the leading spirits in the organization of the new county which was so formed and which was named Jim Hogg. At the first election to be held in the new county, in August, 1913, Mr. Thompson was elected sheriff and tax collector, both of them being important positions in this section of the country. Mr. Thompson is also first vice-president of the Hebronville State Bank and is the owner of a beautiful home in Hebronville. In politics he is a member of the Progressive party and is vice-president of the Progressive League of Southwest Texas.

Mr. Thompson was married at Beeville, Texas, to Miss Alice Webster. Mrs. Thompson was born in the state of Maine, and is a woman of charm and culture, having been a teacher in Bee and other counties prior to her marriage. Two boys, Oscar and Webster Thompson have been born of this marriage.

JOHN C. ERWIN, M. D. The thirty years of his medical practice in north Texas have brought to Dr. Erwin some of the more important honors of his profession, and his work has been one of extended usefulness and service and his practice large and profitable.

Of Scotch-Irish descent, Dr. John C. Erwin was born September 26, 1857, in the state of North Carolina. His parents were Rev. T. W. and Elizabeth P. (Douglas) Erwin. His father was a native of North Carolina and his mother of South Carolina. The Rev. Mr. Erwin, who was a minister of the Presbyterian church, became prominently known in different localities for his able services both in church and education. He first came to Texas about 1852, and during the year of his residence in southern Texas established a school. He then returned to South Carolina, but in 1880 once more took up his home in this state. At Sherman he was made financial agent for the raising of a permanent endowment for the Austin College, and during his ten years in that capacity did a great and lasting work for the school and also for the church in general. His death occurred February 27, 1911, at McKinney, and his wife passed away January 5, 1912.

The oldest of six children still living, Dr. Erwin was reared in North Carolina, and attended the celebrated Bingham Military School in that state. Soon after attaining his majority he came to Texas in 1879, and for several years lived in Dallas. His study of medicine began in 1882, and his regular course was taken in the Louisville Medical College and the Kentucky School of Medicine, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine from the latter institution in 1884. Few of his associates have been more eager or energetic in keeping up with the great advances made in his science than Dr. Erwin. In 1893 he was a post-graduate student in the Tulane University at New Orleans, and in 1903 was in the New York Post-Graduate School of Medicine. His practice began soon after his graduation in 1884 at McKinney, and his long service has made him one of the best known physicians of Collin county. His professional membership is with the Collin County Medical Society, with the North Texas Medical Society, both of which organizations he has served as president, and the Texas Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Erwin affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and has been an elder in the Presbyterian church for twenty-five years. On February 17, 1886, at Collinsville in Grayson county, Dr. Erwin married Miss Evelyn Wilson. Her father, W. H. Wilson, was a large slave holder and planter in Mississippi before the war, fought as a soldier of the Confederacy throughout the strife and subsequently moved to North Texas and became a farmer in Grayson county, where his death occurred about 1888. W. H. Wilson married Miss Elizabeth C. Pickens, a native of Mississippi. To the marriage of Dr. Erwin and wife have been born four children, two daughters and two sons, as follows: Evelyn Elizabeth, born January 31, 1887, and the wife of Boude Storey, who is general manager for the Atlas Metal Works in Dallas; Margaret Rachel, born November 4, 1890, and a graduate of the Texas Presbyterian College of Milford, Texas; J. C. Jr., aged sixteen and still in school; and Thomas Wilson Erwin, aged thirteen and a schoolboy.

Dr. Erwin has always been a busy man, and the demands made upon his professional skill has been such as to justify his place as one of the most popular physicians of north Texas. His office is in the Foote House and his residence on North Kentucky street.

GEORGE A. STOWERS. A position as the largest furniture dealer in Texas and one of the largest in the entire South is the distinction of George A. Stowers of San Antonio, the owner of great furniture houses in half a dozen cities, each of which is not only pre-eminent in its line, but an important contribution to the commercial prestige of its locality. The consolidated management of a chain of stores is one of the big ideas in modern trade, and Mr. Stowers might be considered one of the pioneers in such merchandising. In San Antonio, in Houston, and in various other cities, large and handsome buildings, some of them the skyscrapers of their respective cities, are the homes of the Stowers business, and his is one of the most familiar trade names in such localities.

This splendid business is a monument to and the product of an especial mercantile genius which has made

Mr. Stowers distinguished among the merchant princes of the South.

Back in his boyhood home of Atlanta, Georgia, there are men who can recall the time when George A. Stowers as a small boy sold newspapers. Later he began on a small scale, with one store, in Birmingham, Alabama, and that was the training ground for his larger and complex enterprise. His present place in the business world is the logical result of years of concentrated effort and of wise attention to the demands of his trade.

George A. Stowers was born at Brazalia, Georgia, February 3, 1867, and is now only at the meridian of his life and of his powers. His parents, Thomas J. and Mary L. (Warren) Stowers, were also natives of Georgia. During his infancy his parents moved to the city of Atlanta, where he attended the grammar school, but the fortune of the family did not allow him to complete a high school course. From the age of nine years until thirteen he helped pay his own way by selling newspapers. At the age of thirteen he found his first position in a mercantile house at Atlanta, working for two dollars a week as stockboy in the retail department of a candy factory. Thrift and industry have been equal factors in his success. With his modest savings, at the age of nineteen, Mr. Stowers opened a small stock of furniture goods at Birmingham, Alabama. His capital was five hundred dollars, and a large part of his stock was bought on credit. The capital contained in his individual character amounted to many times his commercial rating. Four years later, at the age of twenty-three, George A. Stowers was at the head of a chain of ten stores in different cities, and the capital resources of his business amounted to one hundred thousand dollars. Two of these stores were in Birmingham, one at Pratt City and one at Anniston, Alabama, another at Chattanooga and one at Memphis, Tennessee, and his enterprise was already felt in Texas, since stores were being operated under his name at San Antonio, Dallas, Fort Worth and Waco.

While the directing genius of this extensive ramification of merchandising, Mr. Stowers naturally was unable to give close supervision to his more remote stores, and the results of the panic of 1893 caused him to remove to San Antonio to look after his business in Texas. His personal presence proved a panacea for the panic so far as it affected his individual business, and so pleased was he with his relations with San Antonio that he determined to make it his permanent home, and it is in San Antonio that Mr. Stowers has had his residence for the past twenty years.

The first Stowers store in San Antonio was at 229 West Commerce street, and in December, 1889, was removed to a location on 203 West Commerce street. In 1898 Mr. Stowers built the first Stowers building at 205 West Commerce street, the structure and land costing one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and then one of the largest in the city. One of the tallest business blocks in San Antonio, completed in March, 1913, was constructed by Mr. Stowers as a home for his San Antonio business. It is located at Main avenue and Houston street, and the building cost nearly half a million dollars, and the furniture department occupies approximately one hundred and ten thousand square feet of floor space, besides a modern theater with a seating capacity of over two thousand, and two store quarters which are rented.

About three years ago Mr. Stowers disposed of his furniture establishment at Birmingham, after having been identified with it for a quarter of a century. This move was taken in order that he might concentrate his capital and energies more completely in the Southwest. Besides his store at San Antonio, Mr. Stowers has at Houston a ten-story building, valued at three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, built at the corner of Fannin and Walker streets, and said to be the largest furniture house in the entire South. Besides these stores he has branches at Laredo, Victoria, Cuero, all in Texas, and one at Fairfield, in Alabama. The store in Laredo was built five years ago.

Though the successful upbuilding of such giant mercantile enterprise seems sufficient to tax the entire energies and ability of even such a successful merchant as Mr. Stowers, he has formed a plan for the diversion of his resources in other channels. Mr. Stowers a number of years ago engaged in the cattle business in Texas, and is the owner and operator of a ranch of nineteen thousand acres near Kerrville at the head of the Guadalupe river. It is one of the best equipped stock ranches in that section of the state, with a number of windmills which supply abundance of water for all purposes. Besides the land devoted to stock farming, nearly eight thousand acres are enclosed by a wire fence nine feet high, and used as a splendid game preserve, well stocked with deer, wild turkeys, some elk and other game. The Guadalupe river affords abundance of pleasure in boating and fishing for his family and friends. Mr. Stowers is also part owner of a ranch of eight thousand nine hundred acres eleven miles from San Antonio, where a specialty is made of the raising of registered cattle, mules, horses and sheep.

In 1895 Mr. Stowers married Miss Mary A. Perry, who was a Pennsylvania girl at that time visiting in Texas. They are the parents of two daughters: Bonniel, sixteen years of age; and Hazel, aged nine.

JUDGE JOHN ROBERT MONROE. In no field of endeavor is there demanded a more careful preparation, a more thorough appreciation of the absolute ethics of life, or of the underlying principles which form the basis of all human rights and privileges, than in that of the law, and in no profession is there a career more open to talent. Unflinching application, intuitive wisdom and a determination to fully utilize the means at hand, are the concomitants which insure personal success and prestige in this great profession, which stands as the stern conservator of justice. Among those who have a place among the representative and honored members of the Starr county bar, none is held in higher esteem than Judge Robert Monroe, whose residence in Rio Grande City covers a period of more than thirty years, and who has served in the capacity of county judge continuously since November, 1900.

Judge Monroe was born in Calhoun county, Alabama, in 1851, and is a son of Jefferson L. and Elizabeth (Turner) Monroe. His father served throughout the Civil War in Capt. Carrington's company, in the Confederate army, and died in 1894, at Jewett, Leon county, Texas, where he was a merchant and farmer and the proprietor of the first store opened at that place. John Robert Monroe lost his mother in infancy, and accompanied his father to Texas in 1858, locating first in Grimes county, eight miles west of Anderson. In 1859 they removed to Brazos county, and in the fall of 1860 to Leon county, where Mr. Monroe resided until 1883, the year when he came to Rio Grande City. He received his preliminary education in the schools of Leon county, and subsequently entered Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tennessee, where he was a student in both the academic and law departments. After his graduation in law, in the class of 1876, he began the practice of law at Jewett, but in 1883, as before mentioned, changed his field of endeavor to Rio Grande City, where he has since continued. In November, 1900, he was first honored by election to the office of county judge of Starr county, and every two years since that time he has continued to receive the reelection to that high position, where he has ably maintained the dignity of the Starr county bench. His comprehensive understanding of the principles of law, his careful preparation of cases and his fidelity to his clients' interests gained him an enviable position as a lawyer, while since assuming his place on the bench he has gained no less a reputation as a wise, fair and impartial jurist.

J. S. Monroe, son of Judge Monroe, is a civil engineer and a graduate of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, and at this time is associated with his father in the land and abstract business under the firm style of J. R. Monroe & Son. They have a complete set of abstract books of lands in Starr county and the part of Brooks taken from Starr county to the date of its organization, October 11, 1911. In addition they have gathered together a set of family histories by which they are able to trace title to each grant back to the original grantees, to complete which they possess complete records of births, marriages and deaths, from church records of Camargo and Mier, the homes of the original grantees of these grants. Their reputation to business circles is that of men of honorable dealing, whose transactions have never been other than of a legitimate nature, and as a result they possess the confidence of the community as well as of their associates.

WILLIS M. FRENCH. Now filling the office of postmaster and also a prosperous and enterprising merchant at Marathon, Mr. French has spent upwards of thirty years in Texas, and is one of the men who have contributed most to the prosperity of this country. In his section of Brewster county he enjoys a position of special esteem, and during his residence in the state has built up a very generous fortune.

Willis M. French is a native of the state of Michigan and when a child accompanied his parents on their removal to the state of Minnesota, which remained his home until 1885. His early education had been obtained in the schools of Minnesota, and when he was eighteen years old he started out for himself and earned his first regular salary as clerk in a clothing store at Austin, Minnesota. He remained in that position for about five years and then, in 1885, came to Texas. McCulloch county was his first location, and during the five years he spent there he was engaged in ranch work. He then moved into Edwards county where he was in the sheep business for some time and while there assisted in moving the county seat from its former location at Leaky to Rock Springs, its present location, which is much nearer the center of the county. Mr. French was in Edwards county for about twelve years and during that time established a store at Rock Springs and carried on a very successful trade with that locality. Finally, in 1900, having sold out his business to Charles Schreiner and Company, of Kerrville, he established stores at Juno and at Comstock, and was located at Comstock until 1902. In that year he moved to Marathon, where he established a business in general merchandise and including hay, grain and other farm supplies, and during the past ten years has built up a very large business over part of Brewster county.

While at Rock Springs in 1896 Mr. French married Miss Daisy Ella Newton, a daughter of J. W. Newton, of Rock Springs. They are the parents of two daughters and one son, named Lucile, Palmer, and Willie May. Mr. French shows his preference to the Christian church, and fraternally is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. He is independent in politics and takes a great interest in political affairs, although not as a party man. At the present time he is giving efficient service in the office of postmaster at Marathon, and is very popular as an official as well as a business man. He enjoys occasional hunting and fishing trips, and is a broadminded man who finds many diversions and helpful activities in life.

JUDGE CHARLES E. DAVIDSON. The pioneer lawyer of Crockett county, the first county judge after its organization, Judge Davidson has stood in those prominent relations to his county and community which are properly expected of a leading lawyer. He has led the way in many public enterprises, and is equally prominent in business and social life.

Judge Charles E. Davidson was born in Nicholas county, Kentucky, July 10, 1856, and when he was five years of age his parents moved to Iowa. There on a farm he resided until 1878, when he went out to California, and during the four years there taught school and attended the state University of California. He was graduated from the law department in June, 1882. His earlier education had been obtained in the public schools of Iowa, and three years in the University of Iowa at Iowa City. Soon after graduating in law in California, Mr. Davidson came to Texas, and was admitted to the bar and engaged in practice at San Angelo, until 1891. At that time was organized Crockett county, and he established one of the first offices as a lawyer in the new county city of Ozona, and has held the leadership in the local bar ever since. In addition to his work as a lawyer, he has also been engaged actively in cattle raising, and has some large holdings in that line.

On May 17, 1893, at Ozona, Judge Davidson married Miss Dixie R. Friend, daughter of J. W. Friend, who was one of the old settlers of Texas. The seven children, two sons and five daughters of Judge Davidson and wife are mentioned as follows: Joseph T.; Nannie P.; Mary P.; Maggie R.; Charles E., Jr. and Dixie R., twins, and Elizabeth D. Judge Davidson and wife are members of the Methodist church, Mrs. Davidson being particularly active in the work of that society. He is affiliated with the Masons from the Blue Lodge to the Chapter and the Council being past master of the Blue Lodge, and has also held the highest office in the Chapter and in the Council. His other fraternal affiliations are with the Woodmen of the World, of which he was trustee. He has membership in the Ozona Commercial Club and takes an active interest in Democratic politics in county and state. As already mentioned he was elected the first county judge of the county and by virtue of his office was also superintendent of the county schools. Few men have been honored as head of the county government for longer term than Judge Davidson, since he served as county judge and ex-officio county superintendent for more than twenty-one years. During that time was erected through his personal efforts and under his supervision what is considered the finest public school building, in west Texas, a splendid three-story stone building, fireproof throughout with the Wheeler system of heat and ventilation, and recognized by experts as the most modern and beautiful in its equipment and architecture of any of all the school buildings in the state. This school building is really in the nature of a monument to Judge Davidson, who was untiring in his efforts to secure the construction of the building, and it would never have been erected, but for him. Judge Davidson also had an active part in the erection of the handsome fireproof courthouse and jail at Ozona, and he took a personal interest and spent much time in getting the 3 per cent bonds issued by the county for these improvements sold at par with accumulated interest from the date of issue to the time of sale.

Judge Davidson is attorney for the Ozona National Bank and has a large clientele among business organizations and individuals throughout this section of the state. He owns an automobile and is very fond of that sport, although he employs his machine as much for business as for pleasure. The Judge owns a large amount of stock in the Ozona Water & Electric Light Company. He is attorney for the Telephone Company at Ozona, and is local reporter for the Dun and Bradstreet mercantile companies. He wields a trenchant pen and his occasional editorials in the Ozona Stockman, issued by Nolen-Davidson Publishing Company, are extensively copied by leading publications. While a very busy man, he enjoys coaching the Ozona Giants, probably the best baseball team in West Texas. The Judge thinks West Texas beats California for health and happiness:

THOMAS P. NOLEN. County and district clerk of Crockett county, an office to which he has been confirmed by five successive elections. Mr. Nolen has spent many years at Ozona and vicinity, and his character is well known and he enjoys the thorough confidence of the people of this section.

Thomas P. Nolen was born in Stephens county, Texas, January 23, 1880, the youngest of three children and the only surviving member of the family of Bryant P. and Sarah M. (Henry) Nolen. The father was a native of Louisiana, whence he came into Texas in the latter sixties, and has since become prosperous as a rancher, making his home now at Alpine. He and his wife are active members of the Baptist church. His wife was a native of Texas, in which state they were married. Her death occurred in 1883 at the age of about twenty-six years, and she is buried in Waco.

Thomas P. Nolen spent his youth in Crockett county, and received education in the public schools of Ozona. When he was eighteen years of age he took up life on his own account, when he entered a printing office and mastered all the details of a country printing plant, doing everything from standing up to the case to running the power press and collecting bills. After four years at a salary in the printing establishment he spent one year as a clerk in a store, then was in the drug business for two years, at the end of which time he was appointed deputy county clerk, and served as deputy for three years. He was then regularly elected county and district clerk and is now serving his fifth term in the office. While he was deputy clerk he bought the original newspaper in which office he had formerly been employed, and conducted it for two years before selling out. Mr. Nolen is also a member of the firm of the W. E. Smith Drug Company of Ozona.

At Ozona, December 5, 1900, Mr. Nolen married Miss Ollie Gurley, daughter of J. T. Gurley and wife of Ozona. Their two children are a boy and a girl, William B. now deceased, and Olive Josephine, in school. Mr. and Mrs. Nolen are members of the Methodist church and the latter has part in several of the church societies. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order from the Blue Lodge to the Chapter and Council, and at the present time is Worshipful Master for the Blue Lodge. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows, and has been a noble grand for several years. He has served as commander for the Woodmen of the World, and he and his wife are affiliated with the Rebekahs, he being secretary of the latter auxiliary branch of Odd Fellowship. He belongs to the Ozona Commercial Club and in politics is an active and influential Democrat.

GEORGE WASHINGTON POLK. For more than forty years a resident of Texas, George Washington Polk has had a distinguished career as a railway engineer and builder. Since 1885 his home has been in San Antonio, and in that city he is honored for his part in the construction of the first railway line to the Alamo city and for his long service in railway affairs and his high standing as a citizen.

Mr. Polk belongs to a prominent American family of revolutionary and pioneer stock, and since the early colonial days it has furnished men of distinction and leadership in the military, political, and to the professional and business affairs of this country. Mr. Polk's brother is Colonel Lucius Junius Polk, another prominent Texas railway man, an official of the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe Railroad of Texas for many years and now living at Sherman. Both Mr. Polk and Colonel Polk are members of the North Carolina Society of the Cincinnati, and also members of the Texas Division of the Sons of the American Revolution.

George Washington Polk was born at "Hamilton Place," in Columbia county, Tennessee, in 1847, a son of Lucius J. and Mary Ann (Eastin) Polk. The founder of the Polk family in America was Robert Bruce Polk, who came from Scotland to America, first settling in Maryland during the colonial times. A great-grandson of this Scotchman was Thomas Polk, who in turn was the great-grandfather of the San Antonio citizen above named. Thomas Polk, who was born at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, about 1730, and who accompanied his family to North Carolina about 1753, was one of the most influential leaders of his day. On moving to North Carolina he located in Mecklenburg county, a community that will be always intimately associated with the early efforts of the colonies to acquire independence. Thomas Polk was one of the leading spirits in the convention which promulgated the Mecklenburg declaration of independence, to which immortal document his name was affixed as a signer. After the beginning of the war of the Revolution he served as a colonel in the Fourth Continental Infantry from North Carolina, and in many other ways rendered valuable and conspicuous service to his country during the struggle against England. Colonel Thomas Polk married Susanna Spratt, a daughter of Thomas Spratt, one of the earliest pioneers of Mecklenburg county. Thomas Polk died at his home near Charlotte in Mecklenburg county in 1793. A brother of Thomas Polk was Ezekiel Polk, grandfather of President James K. Polk.

William Polk, grandfather of George W. Polk and a son of Colonel Thomas, was born in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, July 9, 1758. In April, 1775, he left Queen's College at Charlotte, North Carolina, to accept the place of second lieutenant in Captain Ezekiel Polk's company of the Third South Carolina Regiment of Mounted Infantry, under the command of Colonel William Thompson, better known as "Old Colonel Danger." William Polk made a splendid record as a soldier of the Revolution. At the battle of Great Cane Brake on December 22, 1775, he was wounded in the left shoulder. In November, 1776, he was commissioned a major in the Ninth North Carolina Infantry under Colonel John Williams, and held that rank for two years and eight months. During 1779 and the early part of 1780 he was aide to General Caswell, and was with that general at Gates' defeat at Camden. Later he was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the Third and Fourth South Carolina regiments. His service in the revolution continued for five years and two months. Among the battles in which he participated were those of Brandywine, Germantown, Granby, Guilford Court House, Eutaw Springs, and others. After the war he settled at Charlotte, North Carolina, later moving to Raleigh, where he died January 14, 1834. It is through the services of these two distinguished ancestors, grandfather and great-grandfather, that George W. Polk has a valid claim to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution and other colonial societies.

Mr. Polk's father, Lucius J. Polk, was born March 16, 1802, at Raleigh, North Carolina. After completing his studies in the University of North Carolina, he went across the mountains to Tennessee, settling on a plantation in Maury county, a few miles from Columbia. In that locality in 1832 he built a handsome and spacious residence known as Hamilton Place, the land on which it stood having been apportioned to him from his father's estate. In keeping with the record of his forebears, Lucius J. Polk was a man of remarkable ability and intelligence and of attractive and agreeable personality. He was a prominent Mason, served as grand commander of the grand commandery, Knights Templar, of Tennessee, was for several terms a member of the state legislature, and by appointment from the president served as a member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy at West Point. His death occurred October 3, 1870.

Mary Ann Eastin, the first wife of Lucius J. Polk and the mother of George W., was the oldest daughter of William and Rachel (Donelson) Eastin, and was born at Nashville, Tennessee, July 25, 1810, and died at Ham-Ilton Place August 1, 1847. The marriage of Lucius J. Polk and Mary Ann Eastin was celebrated in the White House at Washington during President Jackson's first administration. She was a great-niece of Mrs. Andrew Jackson, and a great-granddaughter of Colonel John Donelson, one of the distinguished pioneers of Tennessee, and whose record forms an interesting part of the early history of that state. Colonel Donelson, a native of Virginia and a member of the House of Burgesses from 1765 to 1767, in 1779 emigrated to Tennessee in command of a fleet of thirty boats, each containing two or three families. They floated down the Holston and Tennessee rivers to the Ohio, thence to the mouth of the Cumberland, and from there rowed up stream to the landingplace at Big Salt Lick, the present site of Nashville, arriving there April 24, 1780. That emigration was one of the most important of the early movements of the American colonists into the Mississippi valley.

George Washington Polk grew up at Hamilton Place in Tennessee, and finished his education in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville in 1868, having specialized in civil engineering. His career as a railway engineer and builder in the west began in 1870, when he was employed on the engineering staff in the construction of the Kansas Pacific, now the Union Pacific, and the Missouri Pacific Railroad from the Missouri river west to Denver. From that work in 1872 he came to Texas, landing at Galveston. His first work in this state was as a surveyor of the lands granted by the state to the Texas & Pacific and Houston & Texas Central railroads, an employment that took him to the frontier, and for weeks he was in districts that had never known the foot of a permanent settler, and chiefly occupied by Indians and buffalo. His appointment as assistant engineer for the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railroad brought him to Houston as headquarters, and in that capacity he did surveying and locating west from Columbus and continued working west until that road was completed to San Antonio in 1877. He was then called to the eastern end and in 1878 constructed the Louisiana Western Railroad, which subsequently became the Louisiana Division of the Southern Pacific, and had an active part in the railway construction from Orange, Texas, east to Lafayette, Louisiana. That division was completed about 1880, and in 1881 Mr. Polk was placed in charge as construction and locating engineer of the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio to San Antonio. He continued with that road during its extension to the mouth of Devil's river. As assistant chief engineer of the system he was in charge of locating and constructing a line on west to Langtry. That was regarded as the heaviest railroad construction work ever undertaken in Texas. When this work was finished in 1884 Mr. Polk was the first engineer employed to make the survey for the San Antonio & Aransas Pass Railway. He kept two parties in the field, and for about a year was employed over the whole route between San Antonio and Aransas Pass. On resigning his position with the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Mr. Polk was made one of the officials in charge of the land department of the Southern Pacific Railroad, with headquarters at San Antonio. After service of a quarter of a century he retired in 1910, and has since lived quietly at his home in San Antonio.

Mr. Polk married Miss Jane Jackson, who was born and reared at Florence, Alabama. Their oldest son, George W. Polk, Jr., is a civil engineer, and one of the staff of engineers employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and has his headquarters at Kansas City. The other two children of Mr. and Mrs. Polk are Miss Jane Polk and Harrison Jackson Polk.

WILLIAM CAPLES. Probably no name is more familiar to El Paso residents than that of Caples. The Caples family has been identified with this city for more than thirty years, having come here about the time with the first railroad, and having brought with them not only capital but a large amount of business energy and enterprise, which in subsequent years was employed in the up-building and development of the city, and which has made the various members of the family among the most substantial and prosperous citizens.

Mr. William Caples has for twenty years been one of the leading business men, and also during this time has served as United States customs inspector. William Caples was born May 26, 1859, at New Liverpool, in South Quebec, Canada. The family, of Irish descent, was founded in Canada by the parents, Thomas and Bridget Caples. Thomas Caples, who came over from Ireland about 1849, was a stone-mason and building contractor, and spent all his active life in that business. For a number of years he was a resident and in business in South Quebec, and in 1880 came to El Paso, being one of the pioneers of the American town, and continued in the same line of business up to the time of his death, which occurred in this city in 1897.

Mr. William Caples spent most of his youth in Quebec, where he attained his education in schools at which it was necessary to pay a tuition of $1.00 per month, that custom still prevailing in Quebec. When ten years of age he went to Montreal, where subsequently he served an apprenticeship in the stone-cutting and building trade, and he has followed this business through practically his entire career. From Canada he went into the state of New York and was associated with his father in railroad contracting in the construction of culverts and bridges, and after that work in nearly all the larger cities of the state. For several years he was engaged in the building business at Pueblo, Colorado, and also spent some time in mining while in that state. About 1884 he came to El Paso, which city has been his home now for nearly thirty years.

For a number of years Mr. Caples was associated with his brother in the mason contracting business. This brother was the late Richard Caples, one of El Paso's wealthiest and most honored citizens, whose death occurred on May 5, 1911, leaving a gap in the citizenship which no successor could fill. Richard Caples was for two terms mayor of the city of El Paso, and during the same time William Caples served as chief of police. Mr. William Caples was accorded United States customs inspectorship on June 9, 1894, and his services have been retained in that capacity ever since.

The late Richard Caples came to El Paso at the same time with the Santa Fe railroad, having been a contractor during the construction of that road, and on his arrival in this city he had a capital of $20,000. This capital was invested chiefly in real estate when El Paso, outside of its Mexican population, was only a village on the banks of the Rio Grande, and all classes of property correspondingly cheap. A large portion of this real estate was retained in the possession of Mr. Caples throughout the rest of his life, and with the improvements which he himself placed upon it and with the large growth in population and enterprise in El Paso the property was valued by the probate court of the county at the time of his death at about $800,000.00 in value.

Mr. William Caples has always been an active Democrat in politics, and was reared in a Catholic family, but himself has never affiliated with any church. On January 19, 1899, he married in El Paso Miss Mary Freeman, and the three children born to them now range in age from twelve to six years.

JOHN STEPHEN GIBSON. It was a remarkable career that came to a close at Corsicana, February 16, 1911, in the death of John Stephen Gibson. He was one of the pioneer settlers of Navarro county, had been a farmer, soldier, merchant, leader in politics, and he made his influence felt wherever and upon whomever he came in contact. The forces of his personality were not those which vanish quickly with the mortal presence. His life is one of varied performance and service, and his character was one of positive expression of the ideals and principles which composed it. He had first come to Texas in 1854, and after several trips finally settled in Navarro county in 1861. On his third trip he brought with him a flock of three thousand head of sheep, sold a large number of them at fancy prices, and it was largely from those sheep that the nucleus of the sheep industry of Navarro county was established.

John Stephen Gibson came to Texas from Lincoln county, Tennessee, where he was born March 20, 1835. His education was largely the result of the rural schools in his home locality. He was the only son of a well-to-do farmer and slave holder, Felix Gibson, whose forefathers had come from Ireland, but were of the Scotch Presbyterian stock, and had first found settlement in North Carolina. The Gibson family emigrated from North Carolina and went into Tennessee during the time of Daniel Boone, and grandfather John Gibson is said to have been the first white child born at Nashville. The generations then and later were of that determined, vigorous and active class of citizenship which had one of its best representatives in the life of the late John S. Gibson. There was a strain of religion in the family, Rev. Albert Gibson having been an influential factor in the founding of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. The profession of law seems to have been somewhat neglected by the pioneer Gibsons, and while there were few lawyers there were no educators among them.

Grandfather John Gibson married Margaret Joyce, a Virginia lady of Scotch-English descent. They had the following children: Margaret, who married John Warren of Nashville; Mary, who married Steel Buchanan of Lincoln county, Tennessee; Eliza, who married Mr. Dickey of the same county; Nancy, who married George Crawford of Tennessee; Felix, and Rev. Albert, the Cumberland Presbyterian minister and evangelist mentioned above.

Felix Gibson spent his life without notable incident in Lincoln county, Tennessee, as a planter. He married Minerva Clayton, of a well known family. Felix died when about fifty years old and his children were noted for their splendid domestic qualities, fine looks and their absolute temperance and integrity. The children were: Ann, who married John Carter, a Tennessee educator and a professor in Mary Sharp College; Mary J., who married Charles Royster, a Tennessee farmer; John Stephen; Amanda, who married Alexander Walker and died in Navarro county, Texas; Fannie, now Mrs. James Halbert of Lincoln county, Tennessee; Linda, who married John Cunningham of Mississippi; James Felix, who died as a planter in Mississippi; and Martha, who married William Turnipseed of Oxford, Alabama.

John S. Gibson, on moving to Navarro county a short time before the Civil war established his home on Rush Creek, opening up both farm and sheep ranch. He built a pretentious cabin there and was one of the first of the settlers to display a horse and carriage in the county. From sheep ranching he drifted into farming as the county settled up, and employed the Trinity river as a means for the transportation of his crops. He built the first flatboat in that vicinity and shipped his cotton to Galveston. He never failed to impress himself upon his community, and when he wanted things done, whether material or political, he had a way of accomplishing them. In 1875 he moved to Corsicana, for some years was engaged in merchandising, and in the meantime carried on farming by proxy. As a merchant he was one of the most successful in the county and his last act of business was handling implements which farmers used. He was also noted as a breeder of Durham cattle, and did that with extraordinary success for several years. The late Captain Gibson was one of the first to encourage the Grange in Texas. He was one of the stockholders of the Navarro County Grange Association in Corsicana, and was manager of its affairs until the Grange movement died out, and then purchased the association's business and conducted it himself. His first experience in merchandising was as a partner with M. Drane as Drane & Gibson, implement dealers. Later he went into a store of his own, and retired from active business as a merchant in 1892, once more resuming farming and making his country estate a model. He continued active and constant in the oversight of his interests, until a few months before his death. It is said that Captain Gibson as a cotton grower had few equals in his part of the state. He had the faculty of managing the negro, and was both their friend and master, and in his community built their first school and church after the war.

Captain Gibson served the Confederacy as head of transportation department of Texas and Louisiana, under commission of Governor Allen, of Louisiana, to bring such supplies from Mexico for the Confederate army. In that service he had one hundred men under him. As a result of his work he came into possession of large quantities of cotton, and had a large amount of this on hand for delivery when the war ended. He was advised to appropriate it to his own use, but he resented the suggestion and delivered it to those for whom it was intended. That was a sample of the strict honesty to which he adhered throughout his life. His word in business and in other affairs was always to be depended upon. His heart went out to the needy, and he furnished supplies to schools, and was liberal towards the church, and often paid taxes for those of his friends who were unable to meet their obligations to the county. It is also recalled that he possessed a tender spot for children and for all who were in distress.

Captain Gibson in his habits was a most temperate man, was never drunk nor under the influence of spirits in all his career, though constantly in association with men who were regular followers of a custom too much and too frequently abused. He never joined any church, but lived a life of service and of practical Christianity among his fellowmen. Captain Gibson was an admirer of a good sporting dog, owned some valuable animals, and devoted much time to hunting. He was also a lover of a good horse and in his supervision of his estate for many years spent almost every day in the saddle, a sturdy and picturesque personality. While of the strictest moral character, it is remembered as a characteristic of him that he could speak emphatically if occasion demanded it. Captain Gibson was one of the pioneer Odd Fellows of Navarro county.

Politically he was a power in Navarro county. He never failed to take sides in a controversy, loved the excitement of political campaigns, voted even before reaching his majority as a result of his enthusiasm, and his dynamic energy was carried into politics as well as into the practical affairs of business. In his prime Mr. Gibson's influence in the Democratic party was felt and he managed successfully many important and hotly contested political campaigns and often took time from his affairs to support other candidates, but never with hope or expectation of reward, and he himself never held office nor desired one.

Captain Gibson was married September 25, 1860, to Miss Mary A. Brent, who grew up in North Carolina, a daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Watkins) Brent. The Brents were of an old English family, originally settled in Virginia, in Colonial times, became slave holding planters of wealth and influence, and Thomas Brent finally moved from North Carolina to Lincoln county, Tennessee, followed the business of trader, and died in that state. The two children were: James H. Brent, who served with General Mosby's men during the war and died a mine owner in Mexico; and Mrs. Gibson. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson, on moving from Tennessee to Texas, went by railroad to Memphis, by boat down the river to New Orleans, thence by sea to Galveston, by railroad to Navasota, and there hired a hack which conveyed them across country to the then almost unsettled Corsicana. Their house on the Rush Creek ranch contained several rooms, had glass windows, and was a home almost of luxury, and its comforts and hospitality were extended to hundreds of travelers in the early days. Captain Gibson and wife had eight children: The first died in infancy and three died in childhood; Miss Mollie Gibson resides with her mother in their home in Corsicana. She is a charter member of one of the oldest literary clubs in the state; John S., Jr., assisted his father in the implement house when a young man, until appointed by President Cleveland as Consul to Guaymas, Mexico, and he died in Corsicana at the age of thirty-four, unmarried; Claytie is the wife of LeGrand J. Woods, of Sherman, Texas, and they have two children, LeGrand J. and Mrs. Brent Woods Pace; Elbert J. is a Dallas attorney and prominent in his profession, and by his marriage to Harriet Dickson has a daughter, Mary Anna. Mrs. Gibson has spent her life as a church woman, has proved herself a home maker where her influence radiated love to all who came within her presence, and was the first president of the Cemetery Association of Corsicana.

BURT ORNDORFF. President and general manager of the Orndorff Hotel Company, which operates the Sheldon and the Orndorff hotels at El Paso, Burt Orndorff is a type of the modern hotel men in America. He is a business executive, handles his own affairs in the incisive and prompt manner which is characteristic of successful men in any line, has the faculty of mixing with men, is genial after the manner of an older generation of landlords, and by the combination of these qualities has made his hotels among the best and most popular in the entire southwest.

Burt Orndorff belongs to a family notable for its business capacity. He was born at Moundville, Vernon county, Missouri, December 30, 1876, a son of Lee H. and Alzina C. (DeGroff) Orndorff, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Louisiana. The father was for fifteen years a merchant at Moundville, was prominent as a citizen, and as a leading Democrat was honored with the office of postmaster during the first administration of President Cleveland. He died at Tucson, Arizona, in 1888. His widow subsequently became the wife of Charles DeGroff, and they reside at El Paso. The three sons of Lee H. Orndorff are: Lee H. Jr., a leading real estate man and president of the Texas Bank and Trust Company of El Paso; Seth B., a successful farmer and stockman of El Paso county; and Burt. It is noteworthy that the Orndorff brothers and their step-father, Mr. DeGroff, have for a number of years been associated in their varied business enterprises, and have enjoyed the most amicable relations.

Though he had a good home and was well reared, Burt Orndorff may credit his successful rise in business to his own ceaseless efforts and energy. He attended school in his native town, was a student at the University of Arizona for a time, and also at a preparatory school in Highland Park, New York. At the early age of thirteen he was messenger boy and later became clerk in the Tucson post-office. It was in Tucson he began his real vocation, the hotel business, where his talents have found their best field. From Tucson in 1900 he came to El Paso, secured a hotel property, remodeled and opened it as the Orndorff Hotel. He next took the Sheldon Hotel, and after expending about one hundred thousand dollars in rebuilding and improvement opened it as one of the foremost hotels of Texas. Nothing that a good commercial house should possess is absent from the Sheldon, whether in equipment or service, and there is hardly a traveler through the southwest who does not speak with unreserved praise of this house. Besides his official connection with the Orndorff Hotel Company, which operates both hotels, Mr. Orndorff is secretary and treasurer of the Sheldon Company, which owns the hotel of that name. He is also president of the El Paso Hotel and Restaurant Keepers Association, and in 1912 was honored with the office of second vice president of the Texas Hotel Men's Association.

He is first vice president of the El Paso Chamber of Commerce, and through this and other relations is always a willing worker for a greater and better El Paso. He has been interested in Democratic politics since he got his franchise, was a delegate in 1898 to the territorial convention in Arizona, and during the second administration of Cleveland was assistant postmaster at Tucson. At El Paso he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and belongs to the Toltec Club, the Country Club, the Rotary Club, and the Ad Club.

At Tucson on December 31, 1898, Mr. Orndorff married Miss Cora K. Delano. They are the parents of three children: Alzina, Burtram and Kathleen.

HENRY P. HURLEY, M. D. A physician and surgeon of experience and with a record in the lines of his profession, Dr. Hurley has spent most of his professional career in practice in Old Mexico, but for the past year has had his offices in El Paso.

Henry P. Hurley was born in Kaufman county, Texas, July 28, 1870, and belongs to an old family of south Texas. The grandfather, and founder of the Texas branch of the family, came from England. His name was John Hurley, and he was a lawyer by profession, and died a short time before the birth of his son Andrew J. Hurley, the father of the doctor, the latter having been born near Houston, Texas, March 28, 1849. Mr. Andrew J. Hurley is one of the most successful farmers and stockmen of Texas, and owns a ranch comprising about fifteen thousand acres. At the present time he is residing on the old homestead which was first settled by his father, John Hurley. In politics he is a Democrat, and is a member of the Catholic church. Modest and retiring by nature, he has never taken any conspicuous part in public affairs, and has always declined official honors. The mother, who is also living on the old Hurley homestead, was before her marriage Miss Nancy Adeline Gillespie, born in Alabama in 1850, and a daughter of Jacob D. Gillespie. Her father came to Texas at the outbreak of the war between the states, bringing a large number of slaves to this state. He then enlisted in the Confederate service and went through the entire war as a lieutenant in his company. His death occurred at Coleman, Texas, in 1903. Dr. Hurley was the first of the five children in the family, and the others are named as follows: Samuel G., now deceased; Andrew Augustus, a cattleman of Kaufman county; Mary, wife of F. F. Bennett, of Dallas; Theresa, wife of William McMasters, a merchant of Kemp, Texas.

Dr. Hurley as a boy attended the Corsicana high school, and subsequently the St. Mary's University in Galveston, where he was graduated Bachelor of Arts. He then entered the University of Kentucky at Louisville, and received his degree in medicine in 1898. His father had supplied him with means to complete his education, but he began practice dependent entirely upon his own skill and his own ability to face the world alone, and has succeeded well from the start. On graduating in medicine he began practice in his native town, but soon afterward moved to Fort Worth, where he was in practice and one of the leading young physicians for six years. The next five years were spent at Tepic, Old Mexico, and then in the spring of 1912 he opened his office in El Paso. Dr. Hurley is a member of the El Paso Medical Society and of the Tarrant County Society, and also of the State Society and the American Medical Association. Both in this state and in Mexico he has served as physician and examiner for a number of the old-line insurance companies, and was for some time surgeon of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Order of Elks at El Paso and the Knights of Pythias. His church is the Catholic.

At Atlanta, Texas, on the Texas Independence Day,

March 2, 1904, he married Miss Hattie Hoyt, a step-daughter of Judge A. C. Smith. Mrs. Hurley was born in New York State. Their residence is at 1307 North Oregon Street, and the doctor has his offices in the Herald building.

CHARLES H. WILLIAMS, who since 1903 has been identified with El Paso's business interests, and is proprietor of a paint, wall paper, decorator materials, was born in Paris, Nicholas county, Kentucky, May 7, 1877, the oldest of eight children born to Simon P. and Martha Escolena (Robbins) Williams, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. The father, when a young man, was a school teacher, subsequently a merchant and is now living retired in Seattle, Washington. The mother is also still living.

Charles H. Williams had the larger part of his education in the public schools of Denver, Colorado, where his parents lived for a number of years. He was in school until eighteen years of age, and on giving up his school books became an apprentice in the painters and decorators trade. As a journeyman he worked in that occupation about twelve years, and in about 1903 located in El Paso. During the first five years he was one of the regular men in his line, working either for contractors or on jobs which he obtained himself. In 1908 he established a wall paper and paint business, which he conducted for some time and is now engaged in contracting in his line.

In politics he is Democratic, though never active or a seeker for any honors in public life. He is affiliated with the Loyal Order of Moose, the Knights of the Maccabees, and is a quiet, unassuming citizen who tries to do his share of the work which every member of a community should do. He was married in El Paso to Miss Maria C. Sanchez, a native of Torreon, Mexico. They have no children.

GEORGE B. CALNAN, M. D. An El Paso physician who has been in the practice of his profession for nearly twenty years, has had a varied experience in different parts of the country, and is a man of high capabilities in his profession, Dr. Calnan has resided in El Paso since 1906, and now maintains his offices for general practice in the Roberts Banner building in that city.

George B. Calnan was born in Moulton, Iowa, January 22, 1873, being the youngest in a family of eight children, born to Captain J. J. and Catherine (Giblin) Calnan. The paternal ancestry is traced back to the historic personage of King Calnan, in Ireland. John Calnan, the founder of the American branch of the family, first located in Prince Edward Island, Canada, and from there came to New York State about the beginning of the war of 1812, in which he participated as an American soldier. He followed agricultural and stock raising during his career. Captain J. J. Calnan, the father, was born in New York state, and in 1868 moved out to the state of Iowa. During the Civil War he entered the service of the Union army as a private in the Seventeenth Massachusetts Volunteers, and served from the beginning to the end of the war. During his early career before the war he was a shoe manufacturer in the city of Boston, and had a factory there and employed a number of workmen. During his residence in Iowa he followed farming and acquired a modest competence for his later years. In 1880 he moved to Marshall county, Kansas, where he continued farming and where his death occurred in 1899 at the age of seventy-five years. He always took an active part in Democratic politics, though he was not an office seeker himself. He and his family belonged to the Catholic church. His wife was born in Ireland at the city of Dublin, and was fifteen years of age when she came to America with her mother, her father being deceased. She and her mother located in Boston, where she met her husband and they were married in 1854. Her death occurred at Vermillion, Kansas, in 1908 when eighty-four years of age.

Dr. Calnan was educated in the common and high schools of Vermillion, Kansas, graduating from the high school in 1891. By hard work and economy he was able to enter the Kansas University in the medical department and paid his own way through that institution until his graduation with his medical degree in 1894. His first practice was at Powhattan, Kansas, where he remained seven years, and then went to Old Mexico, spending three years in practice at Santa Rosalia. He came to El Paso in 1906, and since then has acquired a very satisfactory general practice.

Dr. Calnan takes much interest in military affairs and has been a lieutenant in the Texas National Guards since 1910. He is a worker in the Republican party, and cooperates in all movements for the advancement of the city and vicinity. He is a member of the El Paso county and the State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, belongs to the Catholic church and is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus.

At Horton, Kansas, October 22, 1896, he married Miss Marguerite M. McGuire, daughter of Bernard and Mary McGuire, of Kansas, where the family have lived for many years. The one child of the Doctor and wife is Marion Constance, who was born at Powhattan, Kansas, January 20, 1899. The doctor's residence is at 509 East Boulevard.

WILLIAM T. SKINNER. Among the younger men of Scurry county, Texas, William T. Skinner, the county clerk, has attained no small measure of success. Although he is still in his thirties he has many years of experience in the business world and in the world of public affairs, and as a public official of this county he has won an enviable reputation for close attention to duty and for ability in his line of work. Mr. Skinner is a native of the state of Texas and is therefore deeply interested in her future and never loses an opportunity to do anything in his power to aid the people or the state.

William T. Skinner was born on the 5th day of May, 1874, near Hillsboro, Texas. He is descended from German ancestry on one side and on the other his forebears were Scotch-Irish, thus making a strong combination of two of the finest strains that go to make up the American race. John B. and M. M. Skinner are the parents of William Skinner. The former came to Texas in 1869 from the state of Mississippi, where before the Civil war his forefathers had been plantation owners and slaveholders. He devoted himself to farming and stock raising in Hill county, Texas, until 1879, when he moved to Parker county, Texas. He remained here for three years and then moved again, this time to Stephens county, near Caddo. Here he continued to farm and raise stock until 1889, when he removed to Eastland City, Texas. Here he now lives, retired from active life, and his wife is also living. They are both about seventy-seven years of age and are active for people of their years. Mr. Skinner enlisted in the Confederate army during the Civil war and was a member of a cavalry regiment under Wert Addams. He was captured and imprisoned at New Orleans, remaining there for eight months before he was exchanged. He then returned to the army and fought until the order came to lay down arms at the close of the war. Ten children were born to John B. Skinner and his wife, six boys and four girls.

Of this large family William F. Skinner is the seventh child. He received his first education in the public schools of Texas and then took a normal course in Tyler College, in Smith county, Texas. After this he taught school for about six years in Eastman county, Texas. He did not feel, however, that teaching was the work for which he was intended and so entered the business world as a bookkeeper and the manager of a cotton gin for Shropshire and Harness, of Colorado, Texas. He continued at this work until, in 1906, he was elected deputy tax assessor of Eastman county, Texas. Two years later he came to Snyder, Texas, and during the next four years served as deputy county clerk of Scurry county. In 1912 he was elected county clerk of this county, his election being won on the merits of his work as a deputy. He is now filling this office to the satisfaction of those who elected him.

In political affairs Mr. Skinner is and has always been a loyal and active member of the Democratic party, being ever ready to lend his services in behalf of the party. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World and in religious affairs holds his allegiance with the Baptist church.

Mr. Skinner was married on the 7th of October, 1907, to Miss Katie Cox, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Cox, who were formerly residents of Lampasas county, Texas. Mr. Cox was originally from Mississippi, coming to Texas during the early days of the state. He was a member of the Home Guard of Texas during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Skinner have two children, a boy, aged five, Allen Grady, by name, and a baby girl, Eula Maurene, who is just fourteen months old.

WILLIAM L. AMONETT. A resident of El Paso since 1902, and one of the extensive mining operators of old Mexico, Mr. Amonett is a young business man with a very extensive experience in mining and has acquired a large and influential position among the leaders of business in El Paso.

William L. Amonett was born in Memphis, Tennessee, April 8, 1872. His father was William Lafayette Amonette, a native of Tennessee, who subsequently became a resident of Texas, locating first in Waco and later in Corsicana. He died in 1901 at the age of sixty-one. In business he had followed merchandising and farming, and acquired a moderate success in material things, and as a citizen and as a man always enjoyed the highest esteem of his fellow citizens. He was a soldier of the Civil war, serving four years in the Confederate Army, entering as first lieutenant of his company, and during a greater portion of the war was captain. In politics he was a Democrat and was a member of the Methodist church. The late Captain Amonette married Matilda Sellars, who was born at Union Parish, Louisiana, and who died at Corsicana, Texas, in 1888 at the age of forty-six. Of the nine children in the family seven are now living, of whom William L. was the third.

He attained his education in the public schools of Corsicana, and at the age of sixteen life opened to him its vista of opportunities. He began as a farmer and subsequently was on the cattle range, and at his mother's death he became self-supporting and has won all his prosperity fairly and by the exercise of great energy and unusual business management. From 1900 he has been actively identified with mining, and since 1903, the field of his operation has been Old Mexico. Most of the properties with which he is identified as a promoter and developer are in the state of Sonora. In 1901 Mr. Amonett took up his residence in El Paso. He is secretary of the Bigam Love Stock Company, and is a large stockholder in this well known business. He is also officer and director in several mining corporations.

A Democrat in politics, Mr. Amonett votes that way but takes very little active part in party affairs. He is affiliated with the Improved Order of Red Men, and his church is the Methodist, to which he gives his support, although he is not a regular member. At Roswell, New Mexico, March 1, 1900, he married Miss Mary E. English, daughter of H. F. English, a native of Bonner Springs, Kansas. Their residence is at 328 West End Avenue in El Paso. Mr. Amonett is fond of all outdoor occupations, and of hunting in particular. He has complete confidence in the great future of the Gateway City of Texas, and is one of the men whose active support can be depended upon to promote this city in every way, and enable it to realize the full extent of its natural destiny.

HENRY A. MAGRUDER, D. D. S. The profession of dentistry at El Paso has no abler or more skillful representative than Dr. Magruder, whose residence in this western city has continued for over ten years and who during that time has built up a large practice and identified himself with the better citizenship and the social and moral activities of this community.

Henry A. Magruder is a native of the old capital of Texas during the days of the Mexican Regime. He was born at San Felipe de Austin, in Austin county, on February 16, 1875. His parents were Dr. Fortunatus B. Magruder and Mollie (Guyler) Magruder. The father was for twenty years an active physician in Austin county, and is still living though now retired and making his home with his son, Dr. Magruder, in El Paso. The mother passed away in 1907. The Doctor was the oldest of the four children, one daughter and three sons, all of whom are now living.

Dr. Magruder obtained his first schooling in the public schools of his native county, and during the years 1888-89 was a student in Baylor University, after which he took three years of professional study in the Louisville College of Dentistry at Louisville, Kentucky, where he was graduated D. D. S. in 1897. His first practice as a dentist was at Houston, Texas, where he remained from August, 1897, to 1901. In March, 1902, he established his office in El Paso and has since enjoyed a large and increasing patronage here. His offices are located in the Coles Building.

Dr. Magruder is a Democrat in politics and is an especially strong advocate of the prohibitionist cause, and has zealously supported the work being done by the anti-saloon organization. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Elks, the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Loyal Order of Moose. In religion he is a member and is treasurer of the El Paso Salvation Army, and has been a valuable factor in promoting the splendid social and philanthropic work of this great organization.

On September 2, 1896, he married Miss Mary Maze, of San Angelo, Texas. They are the parents of three sons and one daughter, namely: Fortunatus Brooks, John Haskell, Edward Guyler and Mary Emma.

MARY I. STANTON. The question what a woman may do in forwarding the important work of the world finds a specific and interesting answer in the career of Miss Stanton, one of El Paso's pioneers and educators whose record is probably unsurpassed in the state, and who as a social and civic factor of her home city has probably done more than any other individual for the advancement of those special institutions and activities which make better and fuller life for the entire community. Mary I. Stanton was born February 11, 1862, in Whitfield county, Georgia, on the farm of her parents, John W. and Lucinda (Hale) Stanton. The Stanton and Hale families are both southern stock, represented in North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee, and most of them were planters and slave owners. Miss Stanton's father during the Civil war enlisted in the Confederate army, as also his oldest son, and both fought under the gallant General Joe Wheeler. Miss Stanton was the youngest of the nine children, the others being as follows: William L., deceased; Celia Elizabeth; Peyton L., deceased; Elbert M.; Chappel Q.; Sarah J.; McClure H., deceased; and Marvin W. Peyton L. and Elbert M. Stanton were both ministers of the Southern Methodist church. Rev. Peyton L. died in Jerusalem, in the holy land, in 1911, where he had spent eight or nine years as a research student of bible history. Rev. Elbert M. is now in the active work of the ministry in Florida.

Miss Stanton obtained her early education in the public schools, subsequently was a student in the academy at Lirmount, Gordon county, to which county her parents moved when she was a year old, and for two years was a student in the North Georgia Agricultural College at Ahlonega. She was graduated from the Austin Female College at Plainville, Georgia, and in 1884 came to El Paso, where in the fall of that year she began teaching. At the end of the first year she resigned in order to take a normal course at the Central Normal School at Danville, Indiana, graduating from that institution in 1886. She then returned to El Paso to resume her work in the public schools, and has been continuously connected with the public school system of this city, having a record of twenty-nine years as a teacher, and twenty-eight in continuous work. She has taught in all the grades from the second through the high school, and at the time of her resignation, May 29, 1914, was supervisor of the Commercial Department of the high school. For many years she was a member of the county and city board of examiners for teachers.

On retiring from Public School work she established a private commercial school, known as Modern School of Business, which was opened June 1, 1914, and is located at 504 West Boulevard.

Miss Stanton holds the distinction of being named the founder of the El Paso Public Library. It was her contribution of a library of six hundred volumes which constituted the nucleus of the present library. This was by no means her only work toward the founding of the library, since she was active in agitating the matter among the local citizens, and took an influential part in organizing the first board of directors. She gave her energies seven years to the direction and promotion of this institution, and at the end of that time Mr. Andrew Carnegie came to the assistance of the city with a donation of $37,500.00 for the erection of the present handsome library building located on Carnegie Square. Miss Stanton served as head of the library directors until the building was about completed, when, on account of the pressure of her work as teacher, resigned, though she is still a member of the board and its secretary.

Miss Stanton has made a record of efficiency and promptness of performance which might well be envied by the most energetic business man. For twenty years she never was absent from her duties, and in all her years of school work has never once been tardy. When she came to El Paso there were about five thousand inhabitants and but one school building, which is now the Elks Club Building. The teaching staff consisted of the superintendent, and a teaching staff of five teachers. At the present time the population of the city numbers fifty thousand, and there are about fourteen public school buildings, all brick structures and well equipped according to the modern standard. The teaching force now numbers about two hundred.

Miss Stanton, as her other duties have permitted, has taken much interest in public affairs and in politics. Her political faith has been that of the Democratic party, and she is an advocate of suffrage for women. She is a charter member of the Woman's Club of El Paso, but on account of her numerous duties elsewhere is no longer an active member, but still retains an honorary membership in the club.

RUSSELL S. LEGATE. A banker of successful experience, and a progressive business man, Mr. Legate may be considered one of the pioneers of Denison since he has lived in that city for thirty-nine years, all his business career has been concentrated at that center, and he has witnessed its growth from a small frontier railroad town of the seventies until it is one of the most flourishing and substantial centers of population and industry in North Texas. During all these years Mr. Legate has identified himself closely with the development of the city and surrounding country, and while gaining the substantial rewards of effort for himself, is also an important factor in making Denison a city of homes and prominent business and industry.

Mr. Legate is now president of The National Bank of Denison, after having begun his experience as a minor clerk in a bank which has subsequently been absorbed by the present institution. He was born January 28, 1855, in Lawrence, Massachusetts, and comes of staunch old New England stock. His parents were Sidney S. and Hannah W. (Smith) Legate. The name is of Scotch-Irish origin, and when the family started its migration westward, one branch settled in Texas, one in Missouri, and another in Ohio, while the name also continued to be identified with Massachusetts. Mr. Legate's father was born in Massachusetts and his mother in New Hampshire. Sidney S. Legate was a carpenter by trade, and for many years was a general contractor. He moved to Kansas in 1863, farmed for several years in Johnson county, and in 1872 moved to Texas, and took up business as a contractor in Denison, soon after the completion of the first line of railroad from the north to that point. Later he returned to the north and lived in Michigan. He was engaged in farming until his death on May 29, 1913. The mother died about 1861. The Denison banker was the second of four children, two sons and two daughters, two of whom are now deceased.

His early education was acquired in the state of New Hampshire and in Kansas. He was about seventeen years old when the family moved to Denison, and his first business experience was as clerk in a store. After that he became identified with the Old City Bank of Denison, and continued with that institution until its stock was taken over by The National Bank of Denison, so that his relations with the present institution may be said to have been continuous for a long period of years. He has been with The National Bank since 1890. He was the first assistant cashier of the bank, later became cashier, and in 1909 was elected president.

In public affairs Mr. Legate has not neglected any opportunity to serve his community. He has been assessor, alderman, president of the board of school trustees, and a consistent supporter of every enterprise of public importance. In politics he has always been a Republican on national questions, but in local matters is independent and supports the men and policies which he believes are to the greatest advantage of the community. He is a member of the Republican Executive Committee of Texas. His fraternal affiliations are with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, and he is an active member of the Denison Chamber of Commerce.

His first marriage in 1877 in Denison brought him as a wife Miss Eugenia Coleman, daughter of George W. and Lucy J. Coleman. Her father was a merchant of Vernon until his death in 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Legate have one child, now Mrs. Anne M. Williamson, and also an adopted daughter, Mrs. Hattie L. Railey, living at home. The second wife of Mr. Legate was Mrs. Anna R. Foster, a daughter of Thomas W. Williams, who is a retired business man in Kansas City, Kansas. Mr. Legate has his home at 310 W. Gandy Street.

GEORGE SAMUEL PARKER. The death of George Samuel Parker, which occurred at Bryan, on the 19th day of October, 1910, was a grievous affliction to a peculiarly lovely and beloved family circle. It was a positive loss to the business interests of Bryan, the removal from scenes of activity of one who had thoroughly impressed his ability upon the city where he had spent his life, and the termination of a career characterized by a conscientious fidelity to every duty that is but rarely illustrated in the present era of progress. The close of a useful life is sad, even when its strength has waned and its days of activity have passed. When such a life is cut short at the zenith of its power, while its gathered experience and matured faculties are still capable of years of useful accomplishment, it seems to be a calamity.

George Samuel Parker was born on the townsite of Bryan, Texas, November 25, 1868, and was a son of Milton Parker, who was a pioneer to this section and came from Tennessee, and who subsequently identified himself with farming and ranching, becoming one of the conspicuous figures of the locality in those avenues of endeavor. Milton Parker married Mary J. Johnston, who is still living and a resident of Bryan, and of their children who grew to maturity there were seven, George Samuel being the first born. George S. Parker was reared in Bryan, and here went through the high school, next attending the Southwestern University at Georgetown, Texas, and finally taking a commercial course at Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, New York. On leaving school he started his career as a bookkeeper for Chance Brothers, merchants of Bryan, following which he engaged in the lumber business, succeeding to the interests of his father in the Lawrence Lumber Company. He subsequently bought the Lawrence interests also and became sole owner of the leading lumber concern of the city. To this business he added the gin system and the cotton warehouse, and in addition to these became a banker. He reorganized the Merchants and Planters Bank of Bryan and chartered it as the City National Bank, and became the second president of that institution, a position he was holding at the time of his demise.

He helped to promote the Bryan compress and was one of the organizers of the oil mill here, but disposed of his stock therein later. In the management of his various affairs and enterprises he simply overtaxed his powers and his death really before his prime followed. He was instrumental in securing the protection of the Brazos bottom lands through the building of a levee on the low side of the river, which made comparatively safe the growing crops of a wide scope of rich country adjacent to Bryan. In doing this work it was necessary to secure legislative aid in the issuing of bonds for the purpose and the construction work was done with the funds thus raised. He was not a farmer himself, although his rearing had been in that atmosphere. Mr. Parker was much interested in the moral and social life of the city. He was a member of the Episcopal church, was one of its wardens, and his contributions to phases of church work in the religious life of Bryan were frequent and important. He was identified with the Democratic party in politics, but participated solely in aid of his friends. He belonged to no fraternity. Mr. Parker belonged to the lumbermen's organizations and was an active man in the proceedings of these bodies. Although he made no pretense toward public speaking he was a ready conversationalist and spoke on his favorite subjects readily and to the point. At the time of his death, the Bryan Eagle said in part: "At an early age he developed a splendid business ability which became more marked as the years passed and his powers for organization and systematizing were little short of wonderful, to which was due the great interests which he built up and the exalted position to which he arose in the business world. When he entered the retail lumber trade he made his Bryan yard one of the leading plants of the state of its kind. To this he added ginning and milling and the large cotton warehouse, the whole making one of the chief business enterprises of Bryan, and whose payroll contributed more largely than any other single industry to the growth and development of Bryan. In 1902 he took charge of the affairs of the old Merchants and Planters Bank and reorganized it, was soon chosen its president, and his business ability was a controlling factor in its success from the start. He saw its surplus and undivided profits exceed its capital stock. As a man he measured up to the full standard and stature of honorable, upright, courageous manhood. He was true to every obligation and duty of citizenship and his loyalty to his friends knew no bounds. By day or by night, in the heat of summer or the chill blasts of winter, he was ever ready to serve them, and it was this great characteristic that drew all men unto him, and for this it could be truly said of him 'greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.' He always took an active interest in public affairs of all kinds, contributed liberally of his time and means to the fostering of Bryan's religious and educational institutions, and whatever promised the good of his city and his country won his heart, his hand and his purse. The whole current of his life was noiseless, but it was the quiet of still, deep waters, carrying in their hidden depth a power that overcomes. His impress was indelibly stamped upon his community and in his death the locality sustained little short of a calamity."

On August 29th, 1889, Mr. Parker was married to Miss Della Lawrence, a daughter of James C. Lawrence, who came to Texas from Tennessee when a boy, in company with his father, William Lawrence, who settled in Brazos county and became a farmer. William Lawrence was descended from Sir Thomas Lawrence, the noted portrait painter of England, who was born in 1767, at Bristol, England, and was a favorite of the two Georges, III. and IV., the latter of whom knighted him in 1805 John Lawrence, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Parker, was born on the Isle of Wight county, Virginia, and was a major of Revolutionary troops during the American War for Independence. William Lawrence, the grandfather of Mrs. Parker, was born July 10, 1815, at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and married Dorcas N. Richardson, they becoming the parents of the following children: Mrs. Isabella J. Derden, of Bryan; James C.; Sarah G., who married T. A. Armstrong and died in Dallas; John, who died here without marriage; and Joseph N., who left a family in Bryan at the time of his death.

James C. Lawrence identified himself with farming until the latter part of his life, when he moved to Bryan and here lived retired until his death in 1890. A member of a slave-owning family which was injured by the Emancipation Proclamation, he was in sympathy with the cause of the South, and during the Civil War was lieutenant in 2d Regiment Texas Volunteer Infantry, taking an active part in the battle of Shiloh and other engagements in which the Army of Tennessee participated. He was wounded just before the end of the war and was home at the time the struggle closed. In politics he was a Democrat, although he was never a politician. His religious faith was that of the Methodist church. Mr. Lawrence married Miss Amanda Ross, a distant relative of Governor Ross, and four children were born to them: Della, William D., John M. and Thomas K., all of Bryan. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Parker: Mary Ross, who is the wife of H. J. Schlafly, of Carlyle, Illinois, and Milton Lawrence, Dorcas and George Samuel, who reside with their mother.

WHITAKER B. SILLIMAN. In Schleicher county no one citizen has been so prominently identified in so many important capacities with the commercial and business affairs of the locality as Whitaker B. Silliman, now president of the First National Bank of Eldorado, one of the ablest lawyers of this section of the state, a large ranch and cattle owner, and possessing the unique distinction of having been the founder of the present flourishing town of Eldorado.

Whitaker B. Silliman was born in Austin county, Texas, February 18, 1866. His parents were Abraham F. and Mary Silliman. The father was a farmer by occupation, and died in 1894, while his wife passed away in 1869, and they are buried side by side. They were both members of the Methodist church. Mr. Silliman obtained his early education in the public schools, finishing at high school and then attending the Sam Houston State Normal School Huntsville, where he graduated in 1886. With that preparation for life he went out to San Angelo, where he was employed as a school teacher for one term. Practical activities then called him, and he worked an irrigated farm for one year, then taught school for another year, and after that spent a year in his native county of Austin. From Austin county he located in Sutton county, settling in Sonora, where he lived for about five years. During four years of this time he served in the office of county and district clerk. He utilized the opportunity of that office in order to carry out his ambition to become a lawyer, and after pursuing his studies was admitted to the bar. He then came into Schleicher county, became the founder of the town of Eldorado, and opened an office in law practice. As a lawyer he has enjoyed conspicuous success. His training in business and varied affairs has been a factor in his ability and influence in the profession, and he has always had as large a clientele as he could attend to. In 1908 he bought an interest in the First National Bank, and has been its president since that time, although he has no active part in the executive management of its detailed business.

Mr. Silliman has been twice married. He was married in Schleicher county to Miss Sallie Murchison, a daughter of R. W. Murchison, of this county. Her death occurred in 1890. She was a member of the Methodist church. His second son, W. B., Jr., was a child of that marriage. His second marriage also occurred in Schleicher county, Miss Agnes D. Murchison, a sister of his first wife, becoming Mrs. Silliman. Their two children are Taylor F. and Jack E. The family worship in the Methodist church, and he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. He has always done his part to support the cause of the Democratic party, and is known locally as one of the party fighters. He served in the Thirteenth session of the state legislature, and has done much for the local public schools, having served on the board and as its president for several years. Among his many interests he carried on an extensive brokerage business in cattle and general live stock. Mr. Silliman takes his vacation as a rule in hunting and fishing trips. He is a broadminded business man and citizen, possessed of large property interests, and is regarded as one of the strongest factors in the business and civic life of Schleicher county.

CHARLES E. WILLMERING. A resident of Amarillo since 1906, Charles E. Willmering occupies a prominent place in business circles of the city as a member of the firm of Willmering & Miller Concrete Company. His career has been one of industry and perseverance, and he has gained his present enviable position through the exercise of his own ability and well directed efforts, while his methods have been such as to win him the highest regard and esteem of his associates. He was born July 19, 1871, at Columbus City, Iowa, the sixth in order of birth of the eight children of Herman H. and Louise (Kuteamp) Willmering.

Herman H. Willmering was born in Germany, in 1854, and on coming to the United States first settled in Quincy, Illinois, but subsequently removed to Iowa. He was a grain dealer, became one of the prominent and successful men of his locality, and in his death, which occurred in 1906, at Columbus Junction, Iowa, his community lost a valued and valuable citizen. He was a Democrat, although he never cared for the struggles of public life, and his religious connection was with the Roman Catholic church. Louise Kuteamp, also a native of Germany, came to the United States with her parents when a girl of five years, in 1845, and first settled at York, Pennsylvania. In 1854 the family moved to Iowa, where she met and married Mr. Willmering, they becoming the parents of eight children. Mrs. Willmering still survives her husband and lives at Columbus City, Iowa, aged seventy-three years.

Charles E. Willmering received his education in the public and high schools of Columbus City, Iowa, and at the age of fifteen years started to learn the concrete business, which he followed as a journeyman for seven years. On August 27, 1906, fully prepared in his business and with an intimate knowledge of its every detail, he became a resident of Amarillo, where he established the firm of the Willmering & Miller Concrete Company, this now being the largest and foremost concern of its kind in the city, employing from fifteen to fifty-seven skilled workmen. This concern has built over fifteen miles of street crossings and approximately 200 miles of street work in the city of Amarillo, as well as doing a large amount of outside work at Lubbock, Clarendon, Hereford and adjacent points. In addition to the plant at No. 508 Tyler street, the company owns a large sand and gravel business, with pits from which 500 cars are shipped annually, and also conduct a wholesale cement business. Mr. Willmering is a stockholder in a number of other enterprises, and occupies a position of prominence and influence among the business men of the city. He is a Democrat in his political views, but has never sought office, although often asked to accept preferment. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. As a member of the Chamber of Commerce he has been identified with other earnest and hard-working citizens in forwarding the interests of Amarillo in a commercial way. With his family he is a member of the United Brethren church.

On March 16, 1891, Mr. Willmering was married at Columbus City, Iowa, to Miss Jennie A. Ramsey, who was born in the Hawkeye state, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Ramsey, the former of Ohio and the latter of Tennessee. Five children have been born to this union, three sons and two daughters. The pleasant family home is located at No. 1500 Jackson street, where Mr. Willmering owns a modern residence. He has implicit faith in the future of his adopted community, and has demonstrated this confidence in numerous ways, investing his capital in ventures here and advising others to take up their homes in a section which he believes offers great opportunities to men of ambition and determination. During his residence here he has formed a wide acquaintance, and his general popularity is attested by his numerous and sincere friends.

JOSEPH A. TRAYLOR. During the last ten years probably the leading contractor and builder of Dallas has been Joseph A. Traylor, whose constructive work can be pointed out in hundreds of buildings in the main residence and business sections of the city, and whose reputation as a builder and reliable contractor is too well established to require further comment. Not all his active career has been occupied with contracting, but it is in that field that he has met with his greatest success, and it is essentially as a builder that his prosperity has been won.

The Dallas contractor was born in Cumberland county, Kentucky, in 1864, a son of James A. and Nancy (Grisson) Traylor. His father was also a carpenter and builder, and under his instruction the son gained a thorough knowledge of the trade. In Adair county Joseph A. Traylor attended school, and for some years after learning the carpenter's trade turned his attention chiefly to commercial pursuits throughout Kentucky and Tennessee. His business for several years was that of tobacco buyer for the Louisville market and also as a buyer and seller of live stock in both states. It was in 1893 that Mr. Traylor came to Texas, and settling at Hillsboro in Hill county directed his attention to farming, and was a resident in that locality for about ten years. In 1903 he withdrew from the quiet of farm life, and resumed the building industry, this time on a more comprehensive scale.

Since 1903 the best part of Mr. Traylor's high grade work has been done in the Colonial Hill section of South Dallas, where something like a hundred and fifty fine residence buildings testify to his industry. In recent years Mr. Traylor has built fine residences in that section of the city as a private investment, and has also performed some large contracts in the remodeling of business houses and private residences throughout the city. It has come to be understood in Dallas that when the architectural and construction details of a contract are entrusted to Mr. Traylor the reliable, prompt and efficient performance is as reasonably certain as anything of a business nature. Both as a builder for himself and for others Mr. Traylor has been a very prominent factor in the upbuilding of the entire South Dallas district, now regarded as one of the most popular and attractive residence sections of the city. Since 1910 Mr. Traylor has been actively engaged in construction work in the Oak Cliff section, or the Winnetke addition as it is called, and the best part of the residences thus far put in that subdivision are the work of Mr. Traylor, including his own fine residence at Jefferson and Willomet streets.

Mr. Traylor's only fraternal relations are with the Woodmen of the World, and he has long been active in the Methodist church, having held the office of steward for a number of years. In 1883 Mr. Traylor was married in Adair county, Kentucky, to Miss Sarah Luney, daughter of James J. Luney of that county. Of the six children born to them, two, Hattie and Annie, are deceased, while the others are Cora, Rollin, Marvin and Alta.

THOMAS M. HAND. The advent of the automobile has created a profession almost altogether unknown a quarter of a century ago. Its members have learned their art, not in school, or from books, but in the office and work shop, in daily contact with the work they had to do. They have had no precedents to guide them, but have worked out the problems which their employment brought in the school of experience. They deal in values of many figures, and dispose of stupendous interests. As the automobile is one of the grandest triumphs of civilization, its conductors and managers are entitled to recognition as true leaders of enterprise, as great captains of the age. The largest automobile machine shop in the Pan-Handle is that conducted at Amarillo, Texas, by Thomas M. Hand, and the complex problems of his chosen calling have been wrought out by him in the school of practical experience. He is a native of the Lone Star state, born in Collin county, September 30, 1870, a son of Jasper and Emeline (Stalvia) Hand.

Jasper Hand was born in the State of Georgia, and about the year 1868 came to Texas, settling in Van Zandt county, not far from Willpoint, where for years he was successfully engaged in farming and stock raising. His death occurred at Amarillo, in 1908, when he was sixty-six years of age, he having come to the Pan-Handle about 1901. He was a Democrat of the old school, and was always active in politics, although not as a seeker for personal preferment. He married Emeline Stalvia in Georgia, where she was born, and they became the parents of eight children, of whom Thomas M. was the fourth in order of birth.

Thomas M. Hand was educated in the country schools of McKinney, Texas, which he attended until he was eighteen years of age, and his early life was passed on the farm and range. On attaining his majority, he embarked upon a career of his own, and for ten years after leaving home followed farming and stockraising on his own account. In 1908 he came to Amarillo, where he embarked in a saddlery and harness business, his establishment being located at Third and Polk streets, where he remained for two years. At the end of this period, realizing the opportunities of the automobile business, he opened an establishment at No. 307 South Polk street, at which address he also conducts a large automobile machine shop, where he has equipment for the repair of all standard automobiles. His business has grown rapidly from the start, and he is now known as one of the substantial business men of Amarillo, whose activities have served in material manner to add to the prestige of his adopted city. The responsibilities of the management of a large business of this kind, and the personal inspection of all work that leaves the shops, involving engrossment of thought and entire occupation of time, have precluded any considerable participation in other lines of activity. Yet, with all his business cares, Mr. Hand has found time to assist in movements pertaining to the welfare of the city, to take a keen and intelligent interest in the success of the Democratic party, and to enjoy membership in the local lodges of the Masons, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Woodmen of the World. With his family, he attends the Baptist Church. Mr. Hand has no military record of his own, but his father served gallantly with a Georgia regiment during the war between the North and the South, and in the battle of Chickamauga received a wound from which he suffered during the remainder of his life.

Mr. Hand was married at Collin, Texas, in 1901, to Miss Sallie Griffin, a native of Tennessee, and a daughter of Lee B. Griffin. Two children have been born to this union: Maude Ella, born in Collin county; and Thomas, born in Potter county. Mr. Hand and his family live in their own home at No. 2005 Washington street, and with them resides Mr. Hand's mother, who is now seventy-six years of age.

RICHARD V. PEARSON. A business man of El Paso whose success has been built up on sound and conservative principles of commerce, and who enjoys the thorough respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. Mr. Pearson has been a resident of this city for fifteen years, and has in that time been identified with the clothing and tailoring trade. He was born in northern Mississippi, Coffeetown, Yalobusha county, on June 26, 1873, being the fourth in a family of six children born to Richard V. and Lavinia Evelyn (Rice) Pearson. His parents, who were both natives of North Carolina, came to Mississippi in childhood, and received their education in the latter state. The father became well-known in political affairs, and for many years served as sheriff of Yalobusha county, and also as special officer at Memphis, Tennessee, for some time. During the Civil War he served with the Fifteenth Mississippi Regiment in the Confederate army, being in the war from the beginning to the end, and much of his duty being as sharpshooter. He was never seriously wounded and just before the close of the war he was made a prisoner at Johnson Island. He is still living, a resident of Mississippi, at the age of seventy-seven, having been born Oct. 19th, 1836. The mother, also a native of North Carolina, born there on February 10, 1848, and was married in Mississippi, January 31, 1865. Mrs. Pearson's death occurred on August 31st, 1900, at Memphis, Tennessee. Besides Richard V., of this review, the children were as follows: I. O. Pearson, a resident of Granada, Mississippi; Florence E., deceased; Maude E., now the wife of John Kuhn, a resident of El Paso; Sallie, deceased; Mrs. Ethel L. Wosika, of Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Pearson attended the public schools at Water Valley, Mississippi, and at Memphis, Tennessee, completing his education through the avenue of the high school. On leaving school he entered the shoe business at Memphis, and spent ten years in that city, during which time he acquired a thorough knowledge of the merchandise trade, and he became well equipped for his subsequent independent venture in business. In September, 1898, he arrived in El Paso where he had charge of a stock of clothing, a line of business which he followed continuously for the next ten years. At the end of that time he turned his attention to the tailoring business, and since 1909 has developed a tailoring establishment that now supplies much of the very best trade in the city of El Paso and county.

Mr. Pearson is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Brotherhood of America. In politics he is a Democrat, and he is a deacon in the First Baptist church of El Paso. At Memphis, on June 11, 1899, he married Miss Nona Clifton Shankle, who was born April 12, 1878, in Tallahatchie county, Mississippi. She is a daughter of John A. Shankle, born July 13, 1849, in Panola county, Mississippi, and his death occurred in December, 1900, at Memphis, Tennessee, while her mother, Mrs. N. R. Shankle, resides in El Paso, with her children. Mrs. Pearson was the first born in a family of three. The next in order of birth was Jessie E., and the youngest is Crofford B. Shankle. All are residents of El Paso. Mrs. Shankle's maiden-name was Nannie R. Dillon, born October 22, 1855, in Tallahatchie county, Mississippi. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Pearson are: Myra Evelyn, born to them in El Paso, on April 20, 1900, and now a student in the public schools of this city; and Richard V., Jr., born in El Paso, on December 9, 1902, also attending school here. They are promising Christian characters. The family residence in El Paso is at No. 905 East Nevada street, a cozy bungalow, and his tailoring establishment is located at 110 Texas street.

HARDY PRESTON OLIVER, M. D. To the subject of this sketch belongs the distinction of being the first physician to practice medicine in Parmer county, Texas. As such, some personal mention of him is of specific interest in a work devoted to a portrayal of the lives of men and women in this part of the "Lone Star State."

Hardy Preston Oliver was born in Elmore county, Alabama, August 8, 1861, son of Alfred Gray and Winney (Osborn) Oliver, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Georgia. In the latter part of the 40's, Alfred Gray Oliver moved to Alabama, where he lived until 1875, when he came with his family to Texas, their settlement being in Bowie county. By trade he was a blacksmith, sturdy and honest, and his life was so ordered that it spanned nearly a century. He was ninety-five years of age at the time of his death, which occurred in Bowie county. His wife also died in that county, her age being seventy-four years. They were the parents of fourteen children, of whom four are now living, Dr. Oliver being the youngest.

At the time the Oliver family removed from Alabama to Bowie county, Texas, Hardy Preston was in his early 'teens. He attended the public schools of his adopted county up to the time he was seventeen. Then he chose the medical profession for his life work and bent his energies in that direction. In 1904 he received his degree of M. D. from the Little Rock Medical School of Arkansas, having worked his way through college. Immediately after his graduation, Dr. Oliver began the practice of his profession at Park, Bowie county, but he continued there only a short time. The following year, 1905, he came to Palmer county and settled at Borina. After five years spent at that place, he moved to Farwell, his present location. All this while he has conducted a general practice in both medicine and surgery, and also has served as Health Officer of the county. His work as a practitioner has taken him into all parts of the county and over into adjoining counties, and his experience has been such as to satisfy him that this part of the State has a great future, with unbounded resources.

Dr. Oliver is a member of the State Medical Society. Also he is identified with the Masonic Order and he affiliates, politically, with the Democratic party, not, however, as an active worker but merely as a conscientious voter. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church.

Mrs. Oliver, formerly Miss Banna Hairston, is a native of Alabama and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hairston. She and the Doctor were married, April 20, 1880, at Carlisle, Arkansas; and to them have been given twelve children, only four of whom are living.

M. C. LEMASTERS. The First State Bank of Amarillo, of which Mr. LeMasters was the organizer in 1908 and of which he has since been president, is now one of the strongest financial institutions of the Panhandle. It possesses resources of nearly three hundred thousand dollars. With a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars, its deposits in November, 1912, amounted to more than two hundred and thirty-five thousand. The First State Bank is a guaranty fund bank, and the people have no doubt shown their confidence both in the state insurance of the deposits, and in the thorough integrity and ability of the officers of the institution by entrusting so generously of their funds for safekeeping in this bank.

Mr. LeMasters, president, has had a very successful career as a banker and business man in Texas. He was born in Red River county, Texas, in September, 1873, the seventh in a family of seven sons and two daughters born to J. H. and Alvina E. (Daniels) LeMasters. Both the father and mother were natives of Dover, Tennessee, and settled in Red River county, Texas, in 1871, subsequently moving to Hood county, where the father was engaged in business as a carpenter and contractor until his death in 1905 at the age of seventy-six years. The mother died in 1890 at the age of fifty-four.

Mr. M. C. LeMasters attained his early education in the schools of Red River county, and began his business career in a drug store in Hood county. After considerable business experience in different lines he went to Greer county, Oklahoma, in 1903, and there became identified with the banking business. Four years later in 1907, he came to Amarillo to take the place of cashier for the Amarillo National Bank. He was a stockholder in that institution for about a year, at the end of which time he sold his interests and in 1908 organized the First State Bank. He has been president ever since, and is one of the most influential men in the business and financial circles of the city. Mr. LeMasters is also director and president of the Bankers Trust Company of Amarillo, which was organized in January, 1913. He is secretary of the Amarillo Live Stock Company.

Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, is a Democrat in politics, and is unmarried. He is interested in the live stock industry, particularly in the raising of sheep, and enjoys all forms of outdoor life and recreation. The Panhandle, says Mr. LeMasters, is the finest stock farming and dairying country in all the world, and he advises all homeseekers who have ability and willingness to work hard and to adapt themselves to new conditions to come to the Panhandle and establish themselves in fortune and prosperity.

O. M. EAKLE. If one were to enumerate the three or four men who have been most prominent and responsible for the upbuilding and improvement of the city of Amarillo, that small group of city builders and business promoters would include O. M. Eakle, who has resided in this city since the early years of its growth and whose enterprise can be witnessed in several of the large and most conspicuous structures of the downtown district, and who has always cordially supported every movement for the betterment and advancement of the community.

O. M. Eakle was born in Washington county, Maryland, April 28, 1847, a member of a prominent Maryland family and a son of John P. and Ann Cornelia (Wherritt) Eakle. On the mother's side the ancestry goes back to English royalty. Grandmother Wherritt was a first cousin of Lord Baltimore, who was a descendant of the English reigning family. Captain George Wherritt, the grandfather, was born in 1776, on the estate of Lord Baltimore in Maryland. Captain Wherritt took an active part in the suppression of the Whiskey Rebellion in western Pennsylvania, and subsequently, in 1814, joined the American army as a soldier in the war of 1812, and was honored for his bravery in the battle of North Point, Maryland. In 1855 the parents of O. M. Eakle moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, where his father, as a contractor, did much work in practical building construction in that city. In 1856 they moved to Monroe county, Missouri, where the father lived until his death in 1889, at the age of seventy-two. The mother, who was a woman of exceptional education and qualities of heart and mind, died in Monroe City, Missouri, in 1858. She was born in 1820. There were eight children in her family, among whom O. M. Eakle was the fourth. As a boy he attended school in Ohio and in Monroe City, Missouri, and at an early age left school and took up the practical work of life in contracting with his father. In 1857 he left home and came to Texas, first locating at Fort Worth, where, in partnership with Mr. Myers, he established a planing mill, and they were fast becoming rich when, in 1885, the mill was destroyed by fire. His next venture was in real estate, and he soon established the Crystal Ice Company at Fort Worth, which he organized and developed to profitable proportions and then sold out at an excellent profit. He returned to the real estate business in 1887, and spent some time in Los Angeles, California. In 1888 he returned to Texas, and then left the state again and started a townsite near Seattle, Washington. The following year, however, he came west to Texas and located at Amarillo, a town which had been established only a few years and was still in the virgin state of growth. He opened a stock of furniture, and from being one of the local merchants he has gradually extended his enterprise to many lines, and as a business man is easily one of the foremost in this section of the Panhandle. He has bought a large amount of Amarillo real estate, and has improved it by the erection of a number of excellent buildings. The Eakle Block, which is an office and store building, is conspicuous among his various building enterprises, and he is also the builder of the structure in which his own store was located and of many other business and office structures in the business district. Mr. Eakle has one of the finest homes in Amarillo, located on one of the best residence streets of the city. At Canyon City he owns a large tract of land on which at the present time are numerous indications of oil deposits, and during the months preceding the present writing he has had engineers and workmen boring for oil. Provided this property turns out as expected it will increase the already generous share of material prosperity which Mr. Eakle has acquired through his business enterprise and good judgment. His furniture business in Amarillo he has recently turned over to the management of his son, since he is well satisfied with the rewards of his life and now desires more freedom in his enterprise and in his recreations. Mr. Eakle was one of the organizers and a former director of the Amarillo National Bank, and was the first president of the Amarillo Board of Trade.

He is a Democrat in politics, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was the first chancellor of the Knights of Pythias lodge, and is a member of the Masonic order. Mr. Eakle has been a deacon of the First Baptist church at Amarillo for many years, and was the designer of the present church structure at Amarillo, and performed the same service for the Baptist church at Fort Worth. In October, 1877, Mr. Eakle married Miss Nannie T. Edmonson, who was born in Pike county, Missouri, December 5, 1856, and died on October 31, 1886. The three children of this marriage are named as follows: Clarence M., born at Fort Worth in 1881; Pala P., wife of Mr. McGee, was born at Fort Worth in 1878, and is now the mother of two children, she and her husband residing in New Mexico; Lillian, born at Fort Worth in 1885, is a graduate of a college in Waco.

On January 26, 1902, Mr. Eakle married Mrs. M. D. Oliver, widow of Captain Oliver, of Wesson, Mississippi.

They are the parents of one child, Oliver A., a daughter, born at Amarillo, October 25, 1902.

EDWARD HORTON MARCHBANKS. Another of the native sons of Texas who takes a leading place among the progressive and successful younger business men of Denison is Edward Horton Marchbanks, who is interested in the sale of life, health and accident insurance and who is enjoying a generous measure of worldly prosperity in his field of enterprise. Mr. Marchbanks was born in Ellis county, Texas, on January 4, 1875, and he is a son of Arthur H. and Bettie Marchbanks, both of them being natives of this state.

Arthur H. Marchbanks was born at Bryan and the wife and mother at Corsicana, Texas. The father is a farming man and a stock raiser who has prospered in his business activities, and who still lives in Ellis county. The mother also lives there, and it was there on their ranch that their fine family of seven sons and one daughter were born and reared. Five of the eight are yet living, brief mention of them being here made as follows: Hal is a publisher of New York City; Homer D. is a resident of Mineola, Texas, there engaged in the real estate business; Nannie, the only daughter, married Ed C. Driscoll, who is now deceased; Owen Smith is a resident of Dallas, and is an employee of the International Correspondence Schools; the subject of this review is the remaining member of the family, though it should be stated that he is the eldest living child of his parents.

Edward H. Marchbanks had his early education in the public schools of Ellis county, and the first business he was active in was that of a tinner, and for ten years he was so occupied in Ennis, his native community. It was in 1897 that he first came to Dennison, where he secured employment in Madden's general store, and for about eight years was employed as a decorator with that establishment. Later he bought a farm some two miles west of Dennison, and though he farmed for a while, he did not feel sufficiently attracted by the enterprise to continue in it definitely, and in January, 1913, he established himself in his present business.

Though his experience had been nil in matter of insurance, either health, accident or life, he showed himself to be a capable insurance man from the start, and his success has been sufficient to warrant his continuing in his new field.

Mr. Marchbanks has all his life been a Democrat, voting and working in every way for the growth and prosperity of the party. He is fraternally identified with the Knights of the Maccabees and is district manager of the order for North Texas.

On April 8, 1896, Mr. Marchbanks was married to Miss Sallie E. Pattie, a daughter of Henry and Ella M. Pattie, of Dennison. Mr. Pattie was a locomotive engineer, employed for years with the H. & T. C. R. R., and he lost a limb in a railroad accident, from the results of which injury he died. The mother of Mrs. Marchbanks still resides in Dennison. To Mr. and Mrs. Marchbanks three children have been born—two daughters and a son. Flora, the eldest, is fifteen years of age, and is a very bright and capable young girl for her years, assisting her father very creditably in his office during odd moments of the day. Pattie, aged thirteen is attending school, as is also Arthur Henry, who is five years old.

Mr. Marchbanks comes of a family that is not widely represented in this state. His paternal ancestry is Scotch, and beyond his immediate family, there are none of the name in Texas. He is especially enthusiastic about the resources of the Southwest and of Texas especially, and regards the state as being the Mecca of homeseekers who have a reasonable amount of ambition and energy in their makeup.

The home of the family is at 1130 West Woodlawn street, while Mr. Marchbanks has his office in the Sherman building.

S. C. Glass

SAMUEL C. GLASS is one of the leading merchants of the town of Sweetwater, Texas, and has spent a large part of his life in Texas. Of fine business ability and capacity for hard work, Mr. Glass has succeeded in building up a business that has won the admiration of the business men of the town. He is a comparatively young man yet, just in his prime, and he has a bright future before him.

Samuel C. Glass was born on the 30th of August, 1869, in Marengo county, Alabama. He is descended from Irish parentage, although his father and mother were both born in this country. His father was William Glass and his mother, Sarah Glass. His father was a farmer until the call to arms came when he enlisted in one of the Confederate regiments and served throughout the war under the command of General Lee. After the war he continued as a farmer, though having been a slaveholder before the war and accustomed to the methods of cultivation that the slave system entailed, to make a bare living on his farm was now difficult. In 1893 he removed to Texas and located in Sweetwater where he went into the furniture business. He continued in this business until his death in 1902. His wife had died in 1893.

Seven children were born to William Glass and his wife and of these Samuel C. Glass was the fifth. All of the children are living today. Mr. Glass received his education in the public schools of his native state, and in 1893 came to Sweetwater with his father. Here he entered the business world as the proprietor of a confectionery establishment. He was engaged in this business until 1897 during which year he sold out and entered the grocery and ice business. He has continued in the grocery business ever since that time and is now one of the leading merchants of the city.

In politics Mr. Glass has always been a Democrat. His sole fraternal allegiance is with the Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Glass was married on the 22nd of February, 1896, to Miss Emma Bordwell, of Sweetwater, a daughter of Branard and Ada Bordwell. Mr. Bordwell was a rancher and cattleman and died in 1901. His widow is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Glass have two children, Berta and Leland, both of whom are now attending school.

CHARLES PINKNEY HOLLON, of Klondike, Texas, holds distinction as the leading business man and merchant of the town and is a prominent representative of a family which came to Delta county, in 1871, from Hollonsville, Pike county, Georgia.

It was in the vicinity of Hollonsville, Georgia, in 1860, that Mr. Hollon was born, son of William R. Hollon. The latter's birth occurred there on the Hollonsville plantation in 1833. His father, Randolph Hollon, was born in North Carolina, in 1800; in that State grew into unlettered manhood and then went to Georgia to make his mark. He became a planter and dealt in slaves, and was worth about a hundred thousand dollars before the war. He established a store on his farm, which took the name of Hollonsville and which became the center of a busy commercial community before he passed away in 1863. Being a slave dealer and owner and a man of Southern birth, his attitude was that of an uncompromising rebel, and he took a pride in sending his sons out to fight for the principles in which he believed. Five of his sons took up arms in defense of the Confederate Government. He belonged to no church or society, and his life seems to have been absorbed in the pleasure of money-making. While he never learned to write even his name, yet his judgment was unerring and he matched wits with knowledge to his own advantage every day of his life. His mother was before her marriage Miss Hannah Bond. Her children were Mary, wife of John Stewart, of Georgia; Randolph, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, and William, who died in Palo Pinto county, Texas. Randolph Hollon married Caroline Sturdivant, an orphan, who died in 1885. Their children were Theresa, who died unmarried; Hannah, whose death occurred in Delta county, Texas, was the wife of Alexander Irvin; Margaret; William R., father of Charles Pinkney; Thomas J., who died in Delta county, Texas; George W., who died at Waco, Texas; Columbus, who died in Georgia; Daniel Pinkney, of Klondike, Texas; Charles E., who died in Georgia, and Caroline, who married Jose D. Roddy and resides in Georgia. William R. Hollon, although he grew up on his rich father's plantation, with slaves around to do his bidding, yet he acquired little education that would give him admittance to the circles of educated men. Nevertheless he possessed an indescribable something which attracted friends to him and his cause and he proved himself a useful citizen throughout his life. He enlisted in the Fifty-third Georgia Infantry, and the severe wound he received at the battle of Antietam, or Sharpsburg, rendered him unfit for further military duty and he returned to Hollonsville and took charge of his father's affairs. His removal journey from Georgia to Texas was made in company with relatives, and he settled on the Delta county line, where the hamlet of Gough subsequently sprang up. Here he aided in building a gin, and he carried on his favorite vocation of farming until 1884, when he moved to Waco. A few years later he made another move, this time to a farm on the Brazos river, above the city. He spent the close of his life and passed away in Palo Pinto county, at Mineral Wells, Texas. He was an active man in the affairs of his community, and was called upon to render public service wherever he lived in Texas. He served Delta county as one of its commissioners, and is believed to have been nominated by the people for representative to the legislature, but was maneuvered out of it in a convention of Democrats. Also he was elected and served as county commissioner from the Waco precinct of McLennan county. His wife, Geraldine (Anderson) Hollon, died in 1864, leaving him the following named children: William B., who died in Delta county, Texas, and left a family; Henry R., a barber of Waco, Texas; Geraldine, wife of J. C. Bailey, of Gough, Texas; and Charles Pinkney, of Klondike. By his second wife, Elizabeth (Threlkeld) Hollon, his children are: John; Laura, wife of Fayette Cisco, of Waco; Neely, widow of Charles Catonhead; Ida, wife of a Mr. Cox of Waco; Robert, George, Thomas, Fannie, Elsie and Samuel, all residents of Waco.

Charles Pinkney Hollon was reared on his father's farm and received his education in the rural schools in the vicinity of Gough. He was actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1889, when he turned his attention to merchandising at Gough, his being the first store started at that point. He began with a small stock of groceries, worth in the neighborhood of three hundred dollars, and in this venture he prospered. He gained favorable acquaintance and accumulated some capital, and in 1903, wishing to enlarge his business operations, moved to Klondike, the nearest station on the railroad. Here he built a frame store room and opened out in business on a larger scale. In 1911 fire destroyed the building and greater part of his stock. At once he rebuilt a double store, a brick structure, and he now carries a stock of general merchandise which invoices at $18,000. He inherits in a measure the instinct for money-making with which his grandfather was endowed, and his financial advance has been equal to the opportunities offered here. He owns considerable farming land in his locality, which, under his supervision, is being cultivated, and also he has taken a hand in banking. He was a prime mover in the organization of the First State Bank of Klondike, of which he was president until January 1, 1912, since which time he has been vice president and a director.

Mr. Hollon is identified with the dominant political party of his locality and has been honored with official preferment. For five successive years he served as county commissioner, and it was during his tenure of office that the county jail was built.

On Christmas, 1883, at Shiloh church, Mr. Hollon and Miss Kittie Henderson were united in marriage, and the fruits of their union are three daughters: Claudie, wife of A. A. Moxley, of Klondike, and to whom were born two children, Allen and Erma Jean; Miss Beulah, at home, and Jessie, wife of C. B. Allard, also of Klondike, and to this union was born Hollon Bradley. Mrs. Hollon is a daughter of John Henderson who came to Texas some years ago from Kentucky.

Personally, Mr. Hollon is physically a large man, and he is distinguished for his broad views and good-natured disposition. His religious belief is that of the Christian Church, of which he is a member, and, fraternally, he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

CHARLES E. MCCLELLAND. The town of Plainview, in Hale county, honors the McClelland family as among its founders, and the men of that name have probably done more than any other family group to develop and promote the upbuilding and welfare of this portion of the state.

Charles E. McClelland, a son of the first pioneer to locate there, was born in Springfield, Illinois, December 7, 1869, a son of Hugh and Prudie E. (Metcalf) McClelland, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Missouri, but they were married in Illinois. The family came to Texas in 1862, locating first at Waco, where the father was engaged in the manufacture of brick. Subsequently he became a farmer, and in 1887 came out to the northwestern portion of the state and took up a large tract of land. He operated it as a ranch and also established a country grocery store on the old McKinzie trail, at the point now occupied by Plainview. This store was an institution before Plainview was thought of, and he continued to trade in that vicinity until the townsite of Plainview was formally established. He then built the first house in the new town, and after selling out the grocery, engaged with his son Charles in the brokerage business, buying and selling land on a large scale. The father is now living retired at the age of seventy-six, and the mother is sixty-seven years of age. Their three children are Mrs. Annie C. Lyeon of Plainview; John W., also of Plainview, and Charles E.

Mr. McClelland was educated chiefly in the Christian College at Thorp Springs of this state, and graduated from that well known old institution in 1892. On coming home from college, he joined his father in the business already mentioned, and subsequently went into the land business on a large scale on his own account. Since then Mr. McClelland has become known as one of the most extensive land dealers and money lenders in this section of Texas. He is himself proprietor of large tracts of land, and makes a specialty of dealing in big bodies of west Texas land.

He is a Democrat, though he has never sought office or position, and is content to give all his attention to his business. Fraternally he is affiliated with Masonry through all the degrees and a Knight Templar, having filled all the chairs in the lodge, being past master and high priest and a member of the Shrine. His other fraternal affiliations are with the Modern Order of Pretorians, the Woodmen of the World, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias. At Dallas, Texas, on June 6, 1905, Mr. McClelland married Miss Mae Joe Roberts, a daughter of J. J. Roberts, a well known old resident of Dallas. Their two children are Charles Edgar, born in Plainview, April 8, 1906, and Mae Joe, born June 1, 1910, at Plainview. Mr. McClelland's uncle, Peter McClelland, was the owner during early days of a large tract of land near Waco, and his nephew Charles E. is one of the heirs to that estate. Mr. McClelland, having spent nearly all his life in west Texas, is specially prepared to speak as a judge of the country, and his enthusiastic predictions that this part of the state is the garden spot of Texas, when taken into consideration with the actual facts which visitors realize, carries great weight and conviction.

LOUIS THEODORE DEATS. That an industrious and thrifty laboring man may reach a place of prosperity and influence in his community has been proved by Mr. Deats, the present mayor of Big Springs. Mr. Deats has had a career of unusual activity and increasing progress. He was in the railroad service for a great many years, and was one of the pioneer settlers of Big Springs. He is now vice president of First State Bank of Big Springs, and land owner in this section of West Texas and no man stands higher in the thriving city of Big Springs than Louis Theodore Deats.

He was born in the state of Pennsylvania on July 14, 1857. His parents were John G. and Mary Ann (Morton) Deats, both of whom are now deceased. The father was a native of Germany, and the mother of Pennsylvania. The former came to the United States when a young man, and had previously become a skillful florist and gardener. Locating at Danville, Pennsylvania, where he lived for more than forty years, he was known as a hardworking and thrifty citizen, reared and provided well for his family, and was always highly respected. The only vacation he ever took in his career was a visit to his children who had located in Texas. After visiting his son George at Fort Worth, and Elizabeth in the same city, he came out to see his Louis at Big Springs, and in this city was stricken with pneumonia and died at the age of seventy-two years. His wife died in the old home at Danville, Pennsylvania, at the age of sixty-seven years. Among the family of eleven children, Louis T. was the third, and the other members who have become prosperous Texas residents are as follows: George W., who is master mechanic on the Texas and Pacific Railway at Fort Worth; Elizabeth, wife of John D. Evans of Fort Worth; Clara, wife of John F. Cherry, who is a locomotive engineer on the Texas and Pacific Railroad, with his headquarters in Big Springs; Oscar, who is a locomotive engineer, and resides at Texarkana, Texas.

Louis Theodore Deats attained his education in the public schools of Montour county, Pennsylvania. When he was thirteen years old he left school, not because his father desired it, but in order to contribute his own earnings to the support and education of his many brothers and sisters. For some years he worked and gave all his earnings to his parents, and thus while he limited his own advantages he performed a service to the family which has always been a grateful remembrance. He remained at home until his marriage.

Mr. Deats came to Texas in September, 1883, and about the same time located at Big Springs. The railroad had been completed through this part of Texas only about two years, and Big Springs was just coming into prominence as a division point on the line. During 1884 he was employed at El Paso, but with that exception has been a permanent resident at Big Springs for about thirty years. He entered the employ of the Texas and Pacific in 1883, and remained in the railroad service until his resignation in 1906. He had a career of unusual success, beginning as a fire boy, was promoted to engineer and for many years was one of the most efficient engine drivers on this system, having charge of the best passenger train running over the line. Throughout his long service of twenty-three years and three months, he never had a serious accident, and finally tired with the well wishes of his company. During his service as an engineer he not only reared and educated a large family of children, but he put his savings to such a good use and employed such good judgment in his investment in cattle and land, that he occupied an independent position as a ranchman and stock raiser before his retirement from railroading. He bought six sections of land in Howard county, and leased three other sections and on this range started with about with a hundred head of cattle and worked same up to four hundred. All of this he had accomplished while still taking his engine on his regular run over the Texas and Pacific. With the general increase in his cattle, and advance of prices, he finally in 1907 sold out, disposing of four hundred head of fine cattle and his ranches at an excellent figure. A large portion of the returns from the property he applied to Big Springs real estate. Some of the city property he has improved with business and residence buildings, and other pieces he has used for income. Mr. Deats possesses one of the attractive homes of Big Springs.

As a successful business man he has naturally been drawn into the civic life of his community. He has served as school trustee ever since the independent school district was organized. In April, 1910, he was first elected mayor of Big Springs and by reelection has served to the present time. Mr. Deats is also vice president of the First State Bank of Big Springs and was one of the organizers of this institution in 1908. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons and also with the Brotherhood of Local Engineers. The family worship in the Methodist church.

In 1877 Mr. Deats married his first sweetheart, Miss Sarah E. Ryan, who was born in Pennsylvania. Of their nine children four are now deceased, and the others are mentioned as follows: Walter F., who is foreman in the Texas and Pacific Railroad shops at Fort Worth; Bertha M., wife of Harvey C. Rix of Big Springs; Ethel, wife of Lester Whitaker of Amarillo, Texas; Charles W. and Martha M., now at home with their parents.

DAVID P. JARVIS. A few years before the beginning of the war between the states, Edwin P. Jarvis came to Smith county, Texas, from Mississippi, and settled upon a tract of land where the town of Arp now stands. He was born in the year 1815, and was therefore a man in middle life when he settled in Texas. He was an active and influential citizen, took a deep interest in public affairs, and held the offices of justice of the peace and county commissioner for his precinct. In his political convictions he affiliated with the Democratic party, and his religious faith was expressed by membership in the Old School Baptist church, which was a strong denomination in the antebellum days. He was twice married. His first wife died before he came to Texas, leaving him a son, and his second wife was Miss Sarah Reeves. She became the mother of twenty children and lived to see her youngest child reach the age of maturity. Sixteen of the twenty children attained to their majority, viz.: Thaddeus, Epamanondas, Lyeurgus, Eugenia, Gustavus, Dr. Jarvis of Troup, Webb, Mary, Rezia, Minerva, Edwin P., Jr., Robert R., David P., Sallie, Eva, and Snap. Thaddeus died in Smith county leaving a family; Epamanondas and Lyeurgus also passed their lives in that county, the latter dying while holding the office of county assessor; Eugenia became the wife of G. W. Weatherby and now resides in Hubbard, Texas; Gustavus died in Smith county in 1892, leaving sons; Webb is a lawyer of Tyler, Texas; Mary is the widow of Rev. M. M. Wadsworth, of Jacksonville, Texas; Rezia is a merchant of Terrell, Texas; Minerva married G. D. Moore and died without issue; Edwin P., Jr., is a farmer at Troup; Robert R. is also a farmer in the same locality; David P. is the subject of this review; Sallie is now Mrs. Calvin Hicks, of Omen, Texas; Eva became the wife of J. M. Duncan and left one child at her death; Snap, the youngest child of the family, is a member of the mercantile firm of Jarvis & Company, of Troup and Terrell, and is one of the foremost business men in the community where he resides. The father of these children died in 1878, and the mother passed away aged seventy-five years.

At the beginning of the great Civil war, Edwin P. Jarvis, Sr., was too far advanced in age and his health was too much impaired to permit of his taking up arms, but five of his sons—Thaddeus, Epamanondas, Lyeurgus, Gustavus and Christopher Columbus—enlisted in the Confederate army and served through that historic conflict. At the close of the war they returned to civil pursuits and materially aided in the rebuilding of the shattered fortunes of their beloved Southland.

David P. Jarvis was born near the village of Arp, Smith county, Texas, February 14, 1857. He acquired his elementary education in the local schools between crops, and completed his scholastic training by an attendance of eighteen months at the Summer Hill select school at Omen, Texas, after he was twenty years of age. His teacher at that school was a master in educational work, and a number of young men who attended the institution have since made their mark in business, professional or political life. Upon leaving school, Mr. Jarvis engaged in business in Omen, where he was located for the first three years of his independent career. In 1888 he opened a general store at Troup and conducted it successfully for about three years, when he disposed of his business. In 1902 he united with other citizens of the town in the organization of the First National Bank and served as its first president, holding the office for seven years. At the end of that time he severed his connection with the institution, expecting to remove to western Texas, and for the next three years was not actively engaged in any business enterprise, except for his duties as vice-president of the bank. When the office of cashier became vacant in November, 1912, he assumed the active management of the bank until John W. Pace took charge of the office of cashier. Mr. Jarvis is also a stockholder in the First National Bank of Jacksonville, Texas, the Citizens' National Bank of Tyler, and the Guaranty State Bank of Arp. The First National Bank of Troup is capitalized at $25,000, and has a surplus of a like amount. The officers are Josiah H. Sharp, president; Snap Jarvis, first vice president; David P. Jarvis, second vice-president; and John W. Pace, cashier. It is regarded as one of the substantial financial concerns of Smith county.

In his political views Mr. Jarvis is aligned with the Democratic party, and he has been an active worker in behalf of that organization. He has served as a member of the county central committee and as precinct chairman, and was a delegate to the famous "carshed" convention which renominated Governor Hogg in 1892, which gave Texas one of the most exciting political campaigns in her history. Fraternally, Mr. Jarvis is a past chancellor in the Knights of Pythias, and in 1911 he was a member of the committee on the state of the order in the Texas Grand Lodge. In all matters pertaining to the welfare of the town he has been a willing helper, having served one term on the town board and is now a member and chairman of the school board. He and his family belong to the Missionary Baptist church.

On June 7, 1885, Mr. Jarvis was united in marriage at Omen, Texas, with Miss Amelia Orr, a native of Georgia and a daughter of Captain I. W. Orr, a farmer who came to Texas from that state. Four children have been born to this union—Vivian, Walton, Travis and Ruth. Vivian is now Mrs. O. D. Butler, of Louisiana. The other children are unmarried and live with their parents.

ROBERT FRANCIS DAVIS, the popular and efficient superintendent of schools of Nacogdoches, Texas, has been engaged in school work since 1892, when he entered upon his career as an educator at West Hamilton, Shelby county. He later went to South Union, then became principal of the Shelbyville High school for two years, acted in a like capacity for three years at Henderson, and then came to Nacogdoches. Here he was principal of the West End school for one year and in 1901 became superintendent of the city schools as successor to G. I. Watkins. Professor Davis' career has been one of constant advancement in the line of his chosen profession, and few men in this part of the state are better or more favorably known in educational circles. He was born six miles from Shelbyville, Texas, March 2, 1874, and is a son of Zachary Taylor and Sophronia (Pittman) Davis.

Pryor Lansford Davis, the paternal grandfather of Robert Francis Davis, was born in North Carolina, in 1813, and died in Oglethorpe county, Georgia, in 1901. He was an extensive slaveholder and planter in the latter county, whence he went as a youth, and became prominent in public matters. He was an ardent secessionist at the time of the war between the states, and lost four sons as Confederate soldiers, another son losing both arms at the battle of Mansfield. He served subsequently as a member of the Louisiana Assembly, and kicked down the door of the House when the Carpetbag Legislature was expelled by the Democrats of the state. Pryor Lansford Davis married Miss Semmes, and their family comprised fourteen children, all of whom reared families. They were as follows: Wylie, who died in New Orleans and was the legislator; Charles, who was killed at the battle of Williamsburg, in the Peninsula campaign; William, who was killed in the seven-day fight around Richmond; Isom J., who is now a resident of Shelby county, Texas; Robert L., who died in Shelby county; John, of Bivins, Texas; Zachary T., of Center, Texas; "Twit" and "Stump," who are prominent business men of Andersonville, Georgia; Sarah, who married Julius Garrett and died in Shelby county; and Mary, who married and spent her life in Georgia.

Zachary T. Davis was born in Georgia, April 30, 1850, and came to Texas as a young man of twenty years, locating at Center, near which place the active years of his long and useful career have been spent. There he was married to Miss Sophronia Pittman, a daughter of E. W. Pittman, who was a graduate of the University of North Carolina, born in 1803, served under General Scott in the Mexican War, and died in Shelby county, Texas, at the age of eighty-seven years. He married Mary Hamm, of Tennessee, and they contributed three sons to the Confederate service during the war between the states: William, who was wounded in the battle of Gettysburg, was taken captive, and experienced some of the horrors of northern prisons; and Benjamin and Jefferson, who were both in Taylor's division of the Trans-Mississippi Department of the Southern forces. Mrs. Davis, who still survives, was born May 10, 1857, and has been the mother of the following children: Robert Francis; Mary Catherine, who died as Mrs. Dr. M. M. Paul, of Shelbyville; Washington I., ex-county attorney and a leading lawyer of Center; Edward W., civil engineer of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad and ex-student of the Texas University; S. Ellen, who married S. T. Holmes and resides in Galveston, where she is a trained nurse; Thomas O., a graduate of the University of Texas, and now a lawyer at Center; Charles S., also a graduate of the University of Texas and a real estate man of Waco; Wylie, who is a successful farmer of Shelby county; Lucile, who is a student of the University of Texas; Ada, who is Mrs. Earl E. Hesser, of Rosenberg, Texas; Winnie, who married Alton Parker, of Center; Henry, who is a student of the Nacogdoches High school, class of 1914; James F., who is in the hotel business at Lufkin; and Neil and Laura, who are students of the Center High school. Of these fifteen children, all survive except one.

After he was eighteen years of age, Robert F. Davis went to the Center High school and later to the Sam Houston Normal school, finishing the course in the former and spending a year in the latter, and in addition did one year's work in the summer schools at the University. During the time he was in Shelby county he was a member of the County Board of Examiners, and has served continuously on the same board for Nacogdoches county and is now chairman of that body. He was appointed by the commissioners court as a member of the county board of school trustees when the law went into effect and has been re-elected to the position twice, serving all the time in the capacity of chairman. This position comes from a vote of the people and is designated "commissioner-at-large," and its incumbent serves a two-year term. He has conducted summer normals at Center, twice at Nacogdoches, at Timpson and at Jack-sonville, and one summer at the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas. Professor Davis was a member of the State Textbook Board in 1907 and is authorized by Congressmen Cooper and Dies to conduct examinations for students who wish to enter West Point or Annapolis, and for students who are taking correspondence work in the Southwestern University and the University of Texas by authority of the management of those institutions. He is a member of the State Teachers Association of Texas, of the superintendents and principals section of the National Educational Association, and of the Southern Educational Association, and has not missed a minute from county institute work in twenty years.

Since Professor Davis' coming to Nacogdoches the school district has been incorporated as an independent district and every building of the district has been built under his regime. They include three brick buildings, among them the Central High school building, which for years has been the best high school building in Eastern Texas. The value of the school property in the district is $75,000, and it is doubtful if a more spacious or beautiful school campus can be found in the state. It comprises thirteen acres of ground and is the old Nacogdoches University campus. Professor Davis took charge of these schools when they were ungraded and had no standing with any educational institution in the state and employed but ten teachers, whereas today the schools employ twenty-six teachers and the salaries for high school teachers exceed those of any other school in this section of the state, there being five teachers whose entire time is given to work in the white high school, none of them receiving less than $100 a month and some as high as $150. The schools run nine months and the high school is one of the twenty-eight in Texas now affiliated with every college in the South, the graduates entering these colleges without examination. They have eighteen and one-half units of credit with the University of Texas. The laboratories in physics and chemistry are not surpassed by any in this section of the state; every teacher of the high school is a graduate of a college or university of the first class. During these years this high school has sent more young men and women to college than any other school in this section, students from here having graduated from the University of California, Vassar College, University of Texas, Southwestern University, Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, Baylor University, Trinity University at Tehuacana, Randolph Macon College of Georgia, and the famous girls' school at Nashville. Among the graduates of this high school are found teachers, lawyers, physicians, farmers and members of practically every calling.

In the line of athletics the high school has had track teams which have won medals at the Agricultural and Mechanical College track meet and at the meet for high schools and academies, at the University of Texas, and the students of the schools of every department are organized for all sorts of athletics—football, baseball, tennis, track events and basketball. In debating and oratory representatives of this high school have been victors in numerous debating and declamation contests from this district as organized and recognized by the University of Texas. In tennis the teams have been victorious in county contests for both boys and girls.

On August 14, 1898, Mr. Davis was married at Shelbyville, Texas, to Miss Elma Ellington, a daughter of William D. Ellington, a well-known merchant at that place and an old pioneer from Alabama. He married Miss Nellie McWilliams, and they had a large family of children. To Professor Davis and his wife there have been born six children, namely: Robert Collis, Roy F., Charles Bryant, Evelyn, Jefferson and Dorothy. Professor Davis has shown some interest in work of a fraternal nature, and is now a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Masons, having attained to the Knights Templar degree in the last-named. With his family, he attends the Methodist church, in which he teaches a Bible class and served as a member of the board of stewards. His interests are extensive and his duties onerous, yet he finds time to devote to the welfare of his community, and no movement making for morality, education and good citizenship is considered complete unless he is numbered among its supporters.

ALBERT SIDNEY STINNETT. One of the most successful business men of Amarillo is Albert S. Stinnett, whose wholesale operations in grain and cotton-seed products made him known in commercial circles throughout the southwest. From the time he attained manhood until the present time he has been prominently and closely identified with business affairs in north and northwest Texas. Mr. Stinnett is the type of business man who is almost instinctively trusted by his fellows, has proved his ability to handle and direct large interests, and belongs to the group of men who at Amarillo control and uphold the business prosperity of the locality.

Albert S. Stinnett was born April 7, 1862, in Bosque county, Texas, and is a son of William H. and Mary (Corum) Stinnett. The Stinnett family was founded in America by the great-grandfather of Mr. Stinnett, a Frenchman who emigrated to America prior to the Revolution and settled in the colony of Virginia, where J. Francis Stinnett, the grandfather of Albert S., was born. The great-grandfather was a participant in the Colonial wars and during the war of the Revolution fought valiantly for the cause of independence. In 1844 the grandfather established his residence in Collin county, Texas, where he was one of the pioneer builders and a great factor in the development of that section, encouraging settlers to migrate thither from Virginia, Missouri and other states. In fact, the grandfather, J. F. Stinnett, was one of the prominent pioneer empire builders of Texas, and at one time owned land here and there from North Texas to the Colorado river. He owned many slaves and with them engaged in agriculture, the erection and operation of flouring mills, cotton gins, etc. Apart from these enterprises he maintained many mercantile establishments. He was practically the founder of Clinton, in Bosque county, and undertook the first water power development on the Colorado river before the Civil war. He died at the age of eighty years at Sherman, Texas, and was there buried. On the maternal side Mr. Stinnett is descended from an old Scotch-Irish family, originally founded in Virginia and later prominent in Kentucky and Missouri. Mr. Stinnett's maternal forbears participated in the heroic struggles of revolutionary times. His maternal grandfather emigrated to Texas from Boonville, Missouri, in 1855, and being also a large slave holder did much toward the material development of the state. He died at the age of sixty-eight years at San Antonio, Texas, and was there buried.

William H. Stinnett, the father of Albert S. Stinnett, was born in 1840 in Pike county, Missouri, and was a lad of four years when he accompanied his parents to Collin county, Texas. There he was reared to manhood, his education being secured principally under the tuition of his father, with whom he entered business life both in mercantile and agricultural lines. Both were large slave holders prior to the issuing of the Emancipation Proclamation. During the war between the North and the South, William H. Stinnett enlisted under General McCullough and served three years in the Confederate army, part of this time being spent in the commissary department. Although he fought bravely and gallantly and participated in numerous bloody battles, including the sanguinary struggle of Shiloh, he was never wounded nor taken prisoner. On his return to the pursuits of peace he again took up agricultural and mercantile lines, became very successful in his ventures, and at the time of his death in 1885, although only forty-five years of age, left his family an ample fortune. He was a Democrat in his political views, but never cared for the struggles of the political arena, and always declined offers of public service. He was a faithful member of the Methodist church. William H. Stinnett married Mary Corum, who was born at Boonville, Missouri, in 1844, daughter of R. C. Corum, and she still survives and is making her home at Bay City. Of the twelve children born to this union, Albert Sidney is the second in order of birth.

Albert S. Stinnett received his primary education in private schools, and after some further preparation entered Salado College, the second oldest chartered college in Texas. He was graduated from that institution in 1882 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He entered upon his business career at the age of twenty-one years as the proprietor of a mercantile establishment at Wichita Falls, Texas, receiving his financial backing from his father, and this he developed into a wholesale business. His success there encouraged him to seek a wider field for his operations, and accordingly, in 1899, he went to Fort Worth, where he continued in the same business until 1904, in which year he moved to Amarillo. Here he embarked in the wholesale grain and cotton-seed products, which is now by far the largest enterprise of its kind in the southwest, its operations covering every state west of the Mississippi river and to the border of British America. Mr. Stinnett has since the beginning of his business career possessed the utmost confidence of his associates. His opinion upon matters connected with his business has been influential with the associated dealers, who have regarded him as thoroughly informed, and have relied upon his sound judgment. As a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Business Men's Association, he has been active in the support of those measures which have meant advancement and welfare of Amarillo, and few men have been more enthusiastic in expressing their belief in the future greatness of the Panhandle. Politically a Democrat, he has been active in public matters, but has never sought public preferment. With his family he attends the Episcopal church.

Mr. Stinnett was married at Wichita Falls, Texas, February 1, 1893, to Miss Cornelia Mary Cobb, who was born in Kentucky, daughter of Major Robert Cobb, one of the most distinguished officers of the Confederacy and the originator of the noted Cobb's Battery, and now an honored veteran of the war and a resident of Wichita Falls. Three children have been born to this union: twin daughters, Felice and Daphne, born at Wichita Falls, March 22, 1895; and Francis Beaumont, born at Fort Worth, November 6, 1903. The modern home occupied by the family is at 1701 Jackson street, and Mr. Stinnett has his place of business at one of the most familiar locations in the city.

CALVIN WILLIAMSON BRATTON. Among the public officials of Falls county few are more popular than the present efficient county collector, Calvin Williamson Bratton, who is now serving his second term. Entering democratic politics in 1906, he has become one of the wheelhorses of his party in his section, and his energetic and untiring services have done much to win success for his organization here. Mr. Bratton is a native of Texas and was born at Otto Springs, Falls county, August 14, 1881, a son of Frank B. and Mary Ann (Brown) Bratton.

The Bratton family has been known in Texas for many years, being founded here in Robinson county by the grandfather of Mr. Bratton. His father, Frank B. Bratton, was born in that county in 1857, and for many years has been a successful farmer of Falls county, his residence now being at Kosse. The mother also comes of a Texas family, having been born in Livingston county, in 1861. There were eleven children in the family, as follows: Calvin Williamson, Mary A., Roy M., Neil, Elba A., Brown C., L. M., Fred A., Frank, Curtis C. and Ray.

Calvin W. Bratton secured his education in the public schools of his native place, and divided his time between his studies and work on his father's farm until he reached the age of seventeen years, at which time he devoted his entire attention to tilling the soil. At the age of twenty-two years he secured a position carrying mail on Rural Route No. 2, out of Kosse, in which capacity he acted for some sixteen months, when he entered the political arena as the candidate of the Democratic party for the office of county assessor of Falls county, in 1906. He met with defeat in this campaign, but was subsequently appointed deputy collector, under Collector Wiley Davis, and during the four years that followed discharged his duties in such an able manner that in 1910 he became the nominee for collector, and was elected to that office in the following election. His first two-year term was characterized by faithful adherence to duty, so that he was returned to the office in 1912 and continues his efficient services. Mr. Bratton is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and a helpful citizen in all that goes to advance Marlin's interests. He is the owner of his own home and three vacant lots in Marlin. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has numerous friends. With his family, he attends the Methodist church.

Mr. Bratton was married March 19, 1907, at Marlin, to Miss Nellie T. Vinson, daughter of W. P. and Sallie B. (Davis) Vinson, of Falls county, and to this union there have been born two bright and interesting children: Rice and Turner.

WILFORD JACKSON EMBREY: The junior member of the prominent Brenham law firm of Mathis, Teague & Embrey, though young in legal experience, has brought to his profession exceptional native talent, a thorough training for his work and the ideals and traditions inherited from one of the oldest American families.

The Embrey family was established in Virginia in days long before the American Revolution, and furnished some of the early settlers to the old Commonwealth. The records of Virginia show that several men of the name gained distinction in state affairs, and the military annals of the family is one of special note. There have been Embreys in practically every war since the winning of independence in the days of '76. They fought in the Revolution, in the war of 1812, the Mexican war, the war between the states and the Spanish-American war.

On his mother's side this Brenham lawyer has some interesting relations with early Texas patriots and pioneers. Wilford Jackson Embrey was born March 5, 1889, at Fredericksburg, Virginia, while his parents were on a visit to his father's old Virginia homestead. His parents were John Thomas and Nellie (Brophy) Embrey. His father, who was born in Virginia in 1842, during the war between the states fought as a private in the celebrated Blackhorse cavalry under Lighthorse Harry Lee. Some years after the war, about 1875, he brought his family out to Texas and settled in Washington county, and besides winning prosperity as a farmer and rancher was also for many years in the hardware business. Nellie Brophy, whom he married in Texas, was born in Brenham, Washington county, a daughter of John Brophy, who came from Ireland to Texas about 1840. He fought as a soldier in the Mexican war between the United States and Mexico during the '40s, and was also with the Texas troops in the war of the Confederacy. John Brophy married a Miss Jameson, and the Jamesons trace their Texas history back to the very foundation of American civilization in the Southwest. Her mother was a member of the original Austin colony of three hundred, and the family located in Brazoria county, but later moved to Washington county. Miss Jameson's brother, Isaac Jameson, a great-granduncle of the Brenham lawyer, was granted a league of land by the Mexican government in 1828. That land is still in the possession of the family, and there has never been a transfer of title except by inheritance. Isaac Jameson fought as an ensign under the immortal Travis at the Alamo in 1836, and was one of the martyrs to Texas independence who sacrificed their lives in that historic battleground.

Wilford J. Embrey was graduated from the Brenham high school in 1905, finished his course in the Blinn Memorial College at Brenham in 1906, and after a few experiences in commercial life prepared for the law in the University of Texas, graduating LL. B. in 1913; he was at once admitted to the law firm of Mathis & Teague, and his name has since had a place on the doors of that firm in their offices at No. 1 Alamo street in Brenham.

Mr. Embrey in spite of his youth has a long experience as an orator and his earliest notable appearance before the public was in the spring of 1899 when he was less than ten years of age. At that time he was selected to present to Commodore John W. Phillips of the United States Navy, on behalf of the Sunday school children of Texas, a jeweled sword, in commemoration of the commodore's instructions to his triumphant and enthusiastic crew during the battle of Santiago in 1898, that they should not cheer while the Spanish fleet was being shot to pieces and destroyed by the American ships. On that occasion young Embrey delivered a speech of presentation, and now has as one of his most cherished possessions an autograph portrait of Commodore Phillips, who afterwards became Admiral Phillips. On the same occasion a Bible was presented to the commodore by a Texas girl.

GEORGE R. SMITH. The entire professional career of George R. Smith, of McKinney, has been passed in this city, where for thirty years he has been known as one of the leading legal lights of the community. His record is that of a man who has by his own unaided efforts worked his way to a position of affluence, and his life has been one of industry and perseverance, characterized by systematic and honorable business methods and devotion to his profession, which have won him the support and confidence of many. He not alone occupies a leading position among the legists of McKinney, where he makes his home, but is also prominent in social and political circles, and his personal worth and popularity have been shown on a number of occasions when he has been elected to offices of responsibility and trust.

Mr. Smith is of Scotch-Irish descent, his ancestors on both sides of the family being early emigrants to Virginia, from whence both the paternal and maternal grandparents removed to Kentucky. Mr. Smith is himself a native of the Blue Grass state, having been born April 28, 1857, a son of Joseph L. and Martha A. Smith, who was born there. Joseph L. Smith was a farmer by vocation, and was fairly successful in his ventures, so that at his retirement he went to Oklahoma and there spent his last years in comfort, his death occurring there in 1910. The mother still survives. Of their two sons and four daughters four children are now living, and George R. is the fourth in order of birth.

George R. Smith was given good educational advantages in his youth, and being an industrious and ambi-lad, made the most of his opportunities. While he attending the public schools of his native state, he aided his father in the work of the home place, and, after some preparation, entered the University of Kentucky. Mr. Smith adopted the profession of education, in order that he might secure the means of furthering his studies in the field of law, to which he had declined to apply himself. In the capacity of school-teacher he came to the Lone Star state in 1880, and not thereafter became a student in the University of Texas, where he was graduated in 1884 with his prized degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was soon admitted to the bar and at once began practice at McKinney, where he has since steadily advanced to a high place in his profession. He has been connected with much of the important jurisprudence that has come before the Collin county courts, and has been retained as counsel by some of the leading corporations of this section of the state on cases of importance. His broad learning, his inheritance of skill and his devotion to his clients have gained him honor and public confidence, while he is respected and admired by his professional brethren for the high ideals he holds in regard to the unwritten professional ethics. His political support has always been given to the Democratic party, and he is known as one of the influential men of Democracy in this locality, being at this time the chairman of the Democratic executive committee of Collin county. His public service has been confined to four years in the office of county attorney, but he has never been willing to perform to the best of his abilities the duties of public-spirited citizenship. Fraternally, Mr. Smith belongs to the Masonic order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Elks and the Woodmen of the World. During the thirty years in which he has been a resident of McKinney, he has seen it grow and develop from a lagging village to a city that is a center of professional ability, business activity and educational and religious importance, moral, clean and well governed. In its own way he has played no small part in bringing about this growth and development, and he may well look on the city with much interest. He maintains well-appointed offices in the largest office building in the city, and has a pleasant and comfortable home, modern in its every equipment, at No. 401 Parker street. When Mr. Smith first came to Texas, in 1880, he met the line of school teaching Miss Mary J. Rodgers, of Kentucky, who had also come here to take up educational work. Their mutual interest in their labors, formed the basis for an acquaintanceship which eventually ripened into love, and in 1886 they were married in his city. She was born in Kentucky, a daughter of Dr. John and Margaret E. Rodgers, of the Blue Grass state, where the father was a well-known physician. Four sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, namely: Owen, aged twenty-six years, who has a position in the Internal Revenue office at Austin, Texas; Allen C., aged twenty-four years, who is studying law under the ableceptorship of his father and soon intends to embark in practice in McKinney; Will W., who is twenty-two years of age, and a civil engineer of McKinney, already with good clientele and a substantial reputation; and Joseph L., aged twenty years, who intends to adopt agricultural pursuits as his life work. Mr. Smith's brother, Judge W. J. J. Smith, is a prominent attorney of Dallas.

HON. JOHN T. ELLIS. The life of every public man possesses a peculiar interest to his fellow citizens, particularly if his abilities have elevated him to honorable office in which he has displayed honest effort and fidelity in the performance of its responsibilities. Preeminently this is true when judicial position is involved, and especial interest is excited in the career of the Hon. John T. Ellis, who after twenty-three years spent as the employe of a railroad company, was elected county judge of Caldwell county. Judge Ellis was not called to his office from the ranks of the legal profession, but his decisions have been as sound and as acceptable to the profession as they would have been had he been able to find aid in great legal learning, while he has excelled upon questions where no authority could be found upon which to rest and in cases outside of the beaten paths of jurisprudence.

Judge Ellis was born January 4, 1868, at Center, Atala county, Mississippi, and is a son of Peter F. and Sally E. (Patterson) Ellis. His father was born and reared in Mississippi, there received a good education and entered the medical profession, and at the outbreak of the war between the states enlisted in the Thirtieth Mississippi Infantry, attached to the division commanded by General Barkdale. He continued in active service until the battle of Malvern Hill, in which engagement he lost a leg, and being thus incapacitated received his honorable discharge and returned to his home. When he had sufficiently recovered from his injury, he resumed his medical practice, which he followed in Mississippi until 1882, when he came to Texas with his family and settled in Grayson county. There he continued to follow his calling for ten years and built up an excellent practice, from which he retired in 1892. In that year he was elected county clerk of Grayson county, an office in which he served four years. His death occurred in 1909. He married Sally E. Patterson, whose father, Capt. Duncan Patterson, was killed at the battle of Fort Donelson, during the Civil war, and she still survives.

The early education of Judge Ellis was secured in the public schools of his native state, as well as at private institutions, and when he was fourteen years of age he accompanied his parents to Texas. Here he completed his studies at Bells High school, in Grayson county, and when he was twenty-one years old he entered the service of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, as a telegraph operator. He subsequently was made station agent and had stations at various points in Texas and Oklahoma, and for twenty-three years remained in the service of this one company, coming originally to Caldwell county in 1892, and again in 1908. In 1912 he became a candidate for the office of county judge of Caldwell county, a position to which he was elected, and in which he has continued to serve to the present time, to the entire satisfaction of the people of this community. Fraternally, Judge Ellis is connected with Lockhart Lodge No. 690, F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Lockhart Chapter No. 208, R. A. M., of which he is excellent king, and Lockhart Camp No. 52, Woodmen of the World, of which he is past council commander.

On October 3, 1893, Judge Ellis was married to Miss Elizabeth C. Reed, a member of an early New Jersey family which traces its ancestors back to the year 1740, when they were property owners of what is now Elizabeth, New Jersey. Her father, Maj. A. Reed, of Caldwell county, was a native of Mississippi, and major of a Mississippi regiment during the Civil war. He came to Caldwell county in 1875 and engaged in agricultural pursuits, and at one time was a member of the commissioners' court of the county. Six children have been born to Judge and Mrs. Ellis, namely: Absalom R., a student of the University of Texas, class of 1915; Joseph F., a student at Marshall Training School, San Antonio; John T., attending Lockhart High school; and Margaret E., Martha R. and Robert R., all of whom attend the public schools of Lockhart.

JAMES A. ELKINS. One of the most prominent attorneys of Huntsville is James A. Elkins, who has spent all his life in that locality, and besides his practice as a lawyer has been honored with several important official positions.

James A. Elkins was born in Walker county, September 25, 1878. His father was the late James J. Elkins, who died January 15, 1880, at the age of forty-three. A native of Georgia, he came from that state to Texas some time after the war, in which he had served as a regularly enlisted man, but being a locomotive engineer was placed in charge of an ammunition train in the service of the Confederacy. When he came to Texas he applied himself to farming, and towards the close of his career was elected to the office of sheriff of Walker county, and died while filling out his official duty. He was a Democrat in politics. He married Miss Sarah Sims, a daughter of Nathan A. Sims, a farmer and of a Tennessee family. Mrs. Elkins is living in Huntsville, and had only two children, her daughter being Miss Fannie Elkins.

James A. Elkins grew up in Huntsville, and from the local schools was a student in the Sam Houston Normal, and completed his law studies in the University of Texas. On his admission to the bar he began practice at Huntsville, was soon elected city attorney, served as county attorney for one term, and from that office entered upon his duties as county judge. After this round of official positions, Mr. Elkins engaged in private practice, becoming the junior member of the firm of Hill & Elkins, Mr. W. L. Hill being his senior partner.

Mr. Elkins was married at Beaumont, Texas, January 20, 1902, to Miss Isabel Mitchell. Her father is Thomas M. Mitchell, secretary of the Galveston Wharf Company. To their marriage has been born one son, William, in 1904. Mr. Elkins takes much part in local affairs, is an active member of the Huntsville Board of Education, is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, and the Woodmen of the World, and is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal church.

ELIJAH M. MOSELY, M. D. In the real affairs and activities of life which have an influence in promoting the general public's welfare—in the development of interests which have made and are making for the progress of his community, and in the raising of the standard of his honored and honorable calling, Dr. Elijah M. Mosely, of Rusk, Texas, has played a conspicuous part. The doctor of medicine occupies a position in society which may be said to be analogous to no other. It is his opportunity to make for progression or retrogression, not alone along the lines of his calling, but in the various fields of usefulness opened up because of it. Through his strict adherence to the highest, though unwritten, ethics of the things which make for sterling citizenship, Dr. Mosely has won the right to be classed among the representative men of his locality, and a short resume of his career is essentially a part of the history of the community which has been the scene of his labors and successes.

Dr. Mosely is a son of Elijah R. Mosely and a grandson of A. L. Mosely, who founded the family in Texas in 1845. The latter came from Henry county, Georgia, where he was born in 1800. The grandfather's education had been almost totally uncared for, yet he was an earnest and industrious workman and endeavored to give his family the advantages which his employment as a teamster allowed. When he sought a new field in Texas he brought his wife and children overland by wagon and located in Cherokee county, near the Crockett road, about four miles southwest of Rusk, and there rounded out his life, dying in 1852. The grandmother, who had been Sallie Zachary before marriage, survived him for a long period and died in 1884, when eighty-four years of age. The grandparents had five children: Henry, who died at Fort Worth, Texas; Daniel H., who passed away at Brownwood, this state; J. Benjamin, a resident of Timson, Texas; Elijah R., and Marion, who died in early life, being assassinated at the age of 21 years.

Elijah R. Mosely was born in Henry county, Georgia, January 31, 1842, and died December 30, 1911. His father was able to give him scant educational opportunities, and the greater part of his training was secured in the schools of hard work and experience, the latter in the field of agriculture.

The Civil war found Mr. Mosely an exponent of the principles of the Confederacy, and as a private in the Eleventh Texas Volunteers, Trans-Mississippi Department, he received a flesh wound at the battle of Mansfield. With an honorable military record he then returned to the pursuits of peace, replacing his musket with the peaceful implements of the husbandman. He subsequently prospered as a cotton and corn raiser and earned the reputation of a successful farmer. A somewhat diffident man, he shunned publicity, never sought leadership in political affairs, and was content to live his life as a plain and unassuming citizen. He was ever a faithful member of the Methodist church, in the faith of which he reared his children. Mr. Mosely married while a resident of Cherokee county, Miss Rosa A. Vining, daughter of Milton Vining, a farmer who came to Texas from Alabama prior to the outbreak of hostilities between the North and South. The wedding occurred in 1869 when Mrs. Mosely was twenty-four years old, and the children born of their union were as follows: James Henry, who married Emma Dupree, and is now successfully prosecuting agricultural operations; Sarah E., who died as Mrs. J. B. Evans, September 10, 1900; Dr. Elijah M., of this review; W. Albert, a prosperous farmer, who married Elizabeth Bolton; Minnie, who is now Mrs. James Bothwell, of Rusk; Daniel M., a druggist connected with the firm of Odom & Mosely; and Rose, who is the wife of Edward Bolton, a farmer near Rusk.

Elijah M. Mosely was a farmer until almost reaching his majority. He attended the country schools of Cherokee county and the high school at Rusk, and then became a school-teacher, having assignments at Myrtle Springs and Park, but in the meantime devoted himself to the study of medicine and when he felt himself prepared, entered the medical department of the University of Texas, at Galveston. His medical education was completed at Barnes Medical College, St. Louis, from which institution he was graduated April 21, 1900. He at once opened offices at Rusk, and has continued to enjoy a large and representative professional business here ever since. Doctor Mosely's studies did not cease when he secured his diploma, for he has ever since been an assiduous student, and in 1912 took post-graduate work in the Chicago Polyclinic Institute. He holds membership in the Cherokee County and Texas State Medical Societies, and the esteem in which he is held by his fellow practitioners here was evidenced in 1913 when he was made a delegate to the meeting of the state body held at San Antonio. He has served eight years as county health officer and a like period as an official of the Rusk City Health Board. He has been successful in business lines aside from his profession, and at this time is a member of the large drug firm of Odom & Mosely, and of the bottling works which are operated under the same firm style. Dr. Mosely is unmarried.

WILLIAM D. BAGLEY. One of Milam county's enterprising and progressive business men is William D. Bagley, manager and head of the W. D. Bagley Lumber Company of Rockdale. From the commencement of his active business career Mr. Bagley has been identified with the lumber trade. He mastered its many details in early life, and with an energetic character and much business talent has won a position among the best known business men of his section of the state.

William D. Bagley was born in Burleson county, Texas, near Caldwell, January 11, 1863. His father, William H. Bagley, who was born in Talladega county, Alabama, in 1824, moved to Texas in 1850, and after a long and active experience as a farmer died in 1906. The mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Davis, was born near Huntsville in Benton county, Alabama, in 1825, and died in 1909. There were seven children, as follows: Nicholas J., who married Mattie F. Suderfelt, has one child, Mattie Mae, and is connected with the

E. M. Moseley M. C.

D. Bagley Lumber Company; Mattie, who married William Knight of Cisco, and is now deceased; Nannie, deceased; William D.; Emma, who married H. Lockwood, lumber dealer of Rockdale, and has six children; Frank, who died when a child; and one child that died in infancy.

William D. Bagley was reared and educated in Burleson and Milam counties, and up to the time he was twenty-five years of age spent about seven years in traveling around through the state. Then, in 1887, he became associated with Wallace & Company and with H. Lockwood of Rockdale in the lumber business. With a thorough experience of seven years in their employ, Mr. Bagley decided that his chief need was a better commercial training, and in line with that resolution he entered the Draughon Commercial of Nashville, Tennessee, and graduated in the course there. Returning to Rockdale in 1898, Mr. Bagley established the W. D. Bagley Company, a business which he has since successfully managed and which handles a large proportion of the lumber supplies distributed in that section.

On December 14, 1898, at Hempstead, Texas, Mr. Bagley married Minnie Lee Mins, daughter of E. E. Mins at Hempstead. They are the parents of four children: Edith; Marjorie Lee; Jessamine Marie; and Eleanor Elizabeth. Mr. Bagley has taken the Chapter degrees in Masonry, also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, The Woodmen of the World, The Knights and Ladies of Honor and the Knights of Maccabees. He is prominent in the Presbyterian church at Rockdale, being an elder, a trustee and clerk of the session. Politically he stands with the Democratic party.

ROBERT ROSCOE HALEY. Prominent in the public and business life of Roscoe, Texas, stands the sterling citizen whose name heads this brief tribute to his worth. At all times a true and loyal citizen, faithful to the best interests of his State and his country, he is honored and highly respected by all who enjoy his acquaintance. His admiring fellow citizens of Roscoe, where he has resided since 1906, have called him to positions of honor and responsibility, and as mayor of the city, chairman of the board of school trustees and chairman of the county board of education, he has rendered the public valuable service. In commercial life he has not been content with forwarding his own affairs, but has been active in the improvement of the city and has used his influence whenever possible for the promotion of industries and institutions calculated to be of lasting benefit to this section. Mr. Haley was born at Burton, Washington county, Texas, September 7, 1871, and is a son of Dr. James and C. A. (Alford) Haley.

On the paternal side, Mr. Haley is of Scotch descent, while his maternal ancestors were English, and both families settled in the South long previous to the war between the States. Dr. James Haley was a physician with a large practice at the outbreak of that struggle, but put aside his personal interests to give his aid to the Southern cause, and served gallantly as a surgeon throughout the war. About the year 1870 he moved to Burton, Washington county, Texas, and later to Moffat, Bell county, there continuing in the enjoyment of a lucrative practice up to the time of his death, in 1887. His widow still survives, making her home at Belton, Texas, with her daughter, Mrs. John Robinson, whose husband is judge of his district. Eight children were born to Dr. James and C. A. (Alford) Haley, five boys and three girls, of whom Robert Roscoe was the fourth in order of birth, and all of these are living with the exception of the eldest daughter.

After completing the curriculum of the public schools, Robert R. Haley became a student in the Southwest University, at Georgetown, Texas, and on his graduation therefrom immediately embarked in mercantile pursuits at Belton. In the year 1893 he removed to Corsicana, Texas, where he continued in the same line until 1906, then coming to Roscoe, which city has since been his field of endeavor. Here he entered the hardware and furniture business with a large, up-to-date stock, establishing himself in a building 50x100 feet, and his trade has shown a pleasing and healthy increase from the start. Mr. Haley possesses untiring energy, is quick of perception, forms his plans readily and is determined in their execution. His close application to business and his excellent management have brought him a well-deserved success, and in the achieving thereof he has depended upon no illegitimate measures or questionable means.

In his official capacity as mayor of Roscoe, Mr. Haley is giving the people of the city a business-like administration, having brought to his work the same conscientious devotion to detail that has made him so successful in business life. He has taken a pride in the achievements of the city, and has been first and foremost in promoting measures for its benefit, and it has been this desire to contribute to the public welfare that has caused him to be elected chairman of the board of school trustees of Roscoe and of the board of education of Nolan county. He has ever been a Democrat, has occasionally been heard upon the rostrum in advocating his party's principles and candidates, and is regarded as one of the wheel-horses of the great organization in this part of the State. He has not been indifferent to the benefits of fraternal connections, and holds membership in the Knights of the Maccabees, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Fraternal Union of America, in all of which he has numerous friends, as he has in the other relations of life. Mr. Haley's religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and for some time he has served in the capacity of superintendent of the Sabbath school.

On September 26, 1895, Mr. Haley was married to Miss Elizabeth O. Flewellen, daughter of W. F. Flewellen, of Belton, Texas. Mrs. Haley's father is a well-known practicing physician and surgeon of Belton. He is a Confederate veteran, and since the close of the war has followed his profession at Belton. Mr. and Mrs. Haley have one child: Robert Roscoe, Jr., aged sixteen years.

JOHN S. BALLARD. Since boyhood a resident of Cooke county, for many years one of the successful farmers, and later active in business affairs at Gainesville, Mr. Ballard is now living retired in the county seat, and is enjoying the fruits of a well spent life.

John S. Ballard was born in South Carolina, but from the age of three years was reared in Alabama. His parents were William and Catherine (Hardy) Ballard, both natives of South Carolina. The father was a farmer, moved to Alabama, and continued his vocation there until the Civil war. He then joined the Confederate army, and went through the war until the great struggle at Petersburg, Virginia, where he was among those killed. The six children in the family of the parents were: James E., deceased; John S.; Robert, a farmer in Cooke county; Gallon, deceased; Edward, a farmer in Cooke county, and Josie, deceased.

John S. Ballard was reared in Alabama, and spent his boyhood days until he was sixteen on his father's farm. He received only meagre educational advantages, chiefly owing to the disturbed conditions ensuing upon the war. At the age of sixteen he came with his mother, after the death of his father, in the war, to Texas, and the family first located in Wood county, where they spent one year on a farm and then came to Cooke county, settling twelve miles from Gainesville, where they took up some school land, and all the children under the capable direction of their mother turned to the important work of making a home, in a new county. They improved the land, put one hundred and thirty-seven acres under fence, and prepared it for cultivation and erected a good dwelling and barns, and made other improvements. John S. Ballard remained there until he was twenty-four years of age. The mother died in 1904 at the old home place in Cooke county.

After his marriage, at the age of twenty-four, Mr. Ballard bought other land, and again went through the process of clearing and improving a homestead. He continued farming there with more than ordinary success for sixteen years. He then sold his country place, and moved into Gainesville, where he was engaged in the marble and monument business for two years with a partner. At the end of that time he sold out and retired. In the winter Mr. Ballard now engages, more for pasture, than anything else, in selling and installing acetylene gas plants over several counties of the state. He is the owner of business property in Craig, Colorado, and owns an attractive home in Gainesville. Mr. Ballard is a Democrat, but no seeker for political honors. He and his family worship in the Christian church, and their home is at 701 East California Street.

In 1876 Mr. Ballard married Miss Millie Billingsly, who was born in Texas. Her parents, natives of Tennessee, were early settlers in north Texas, having located in Grayson county, when all the land was wild and unimproved, and they spent their last years in Cooke county. Mr. and Mrs. Ballard have had three children. William died at the age of fourteen, and another died in infancy. Mary is the wife of Clayton Tyce, of Phoenix, Arizona, and three children are Mary, Ruth and Lacy.

I. S. CURTIS. Few citizens of Northern Texas are better known than I. S. Curtis, now a prominent figure in the commercial and industrial life of Sherman. From the time when, as a youth, he cast his fortunes with the Confederate cause during the dark days of the struggle between the South and the North, his career has been replete with exciting experiences and high accomplishments, and through it all he has steadfastly maintained a reputation for courage, integrity, and strict adherence to the duties and responsibilities of life. He was born September 25, 1842, in Stafford county, Virginia, and is a son of Francis and Mary (Stone) Curtis, natives of Virginia, where the father was a planter and slave owner and died in 1884, while the mother passed away in 1866. There were six sons and one daughter in the family, and I. S. was the fourth in order of birth.

Mr. Curtis comes of sterling Scotch and Irish descent. He received his early education in the private schools of his native county, and from 1857 to 1858 received a military training as a cadet in the Virginia Military Institute. In 1859 he went to Alabama to complete his studies, and while there enlisted, at the outbreak of the Civil war, in Captain Calhoun's company from Talladega. From this company he was discharged and Mr. Curtis returned to his Virginia home, where he joined Company A, Colonel Lee's regiment. From that time on his services were of a nature to bring him prominently forward in the Confederate service. He was soon made courier for Colonel Bates, of the Second Tennessee Regiment, and as such captured single-handed four Northern soldiers at Waller's Landing, one of these being the son of Gen. Dan Sickels. After General Lee's return from the Kensay Valley, Mr. Curtis was transferred and made one of the great Southern leader's body-guard, in April, 1862, and on the 17th of that month was wounded while making a reconnaissance of the enemy's line, being carried to Ashland, near Richmond, where he remained until January 15th of the following year. He then walked to Spottsylvania, Virginia, a distance of some sixty miles, where he was captured, but was paroled and returned to his father's home in Stafford county. In September he returned to the army and reported for duty, and soon thereafter was sent by Gen. J. E. B. Stuart to Harrisburg, Virginia, to make an investigation as to the strength of the Union troops at that point and how they were situated. He was furnished with $100 for expenses and ordered to report to General Stuart at Lee town, Virginia. Mr. Curtis traveled to Harper's Ferry, Virginia, with a farmer who was taking a load of apples to that point, and there found the town largely occupied by the Federal army. He next took the train to Harrisburg, where he gained the acquaintance of a Northern captain and lieutenant, and, gaining their confidence by misrepresenting the state of his nativity, gained such information as he desired and immediately took the train back to Harper's Ferry. There he was able to work his way through the Union lines and to pass the pickets, but was subsequently captured by the Confederate pickets and carried before General Stuart at headquarters. Upon receiving his information, General Stuart detailed 500 of his men who made a raid and captured Harrisburg, taking more prisoners than their own number. Following this, Mr. Curtis was left in the valley with the army of Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson, and continued with that great leader as a scout up until the time Gen. Jackson was wounded at the battle of the Wilderness, in 1863. He then became one of General Lee's scouts, and continued in this line of service until the surrender of General Lee in 1865. While thus engaged, Mr. Curtis carried the last dispatches that passed between General Lee and President Jefferson Davis of the Confederacy.

When peace had been declared, Mr. Curtis returned to his father's home in Virginia, and remained in seclusion, being on a conditional parole, his final discharge reaching him by mail in Alabama, March 12, 1866. At that time he took charge of the farm of his uncle, Isaac Stone, a large plantation in Alabama, but remained only until 1867, when he came to Texas, first locating at Huntsville. There he was employed as a salesman for T. and S. Gibbs, bankers and merchants, until 1869, when he went to Navasota and entered the employ of the general mercantile firm of Wilson & Yarbrough. Subsequently he engaged in the mercantile business on his own account at Waxahachie, where he remained from 1875 until 1878, and in the latter year disposed of his interests and began buying cotton for H. Seligson, of Galveston, Texas. In 1880 he became a contractor for the Western Union Telegraph Company, building and repairing lines, and in 1884 was appointed United States marshal for the Northern District of Texas and Indian Territory. In 1887 Mr. Curtis accepted a position with J. P. and W. P. Richardson, of Bolivar county, Mississippi, and remained on their large plantation for one year, since which time he has been engaged in the wholesale and retail lumber business, making a specialty of yellow pine and Washington cedar. In this line he has become one of the leading dealers in Northern Texas, and his operations extend all over the West and Southwest. His offices are located at No. 7 Murphy Building, Sherman. In politics Mr. Curtis has always been a Democrat, and his religious connection is with the Presbyterian church.

In 1894 Mr. Curtis was married to Mrs. Nannie Webb. Mrs. Curtis has a national reputation as a temperance lecturer, and for the past ten years has devoted her entire time to this great work. Through his army associations, Mr. Curtis has derived a large acquaintance and keeps in constant touch with his old comrades of the Gray, among his particular friends being Gen. Lee's adjutant general, Gen. W. T. Taylor, of Norfolk, Virginia, and Gen. Lee's only son, Capt. Robert E. Lee, Jr., of West Point. The pleasant family home is located at No. 803 Grand avenue.

ANDREW J. SMITH. Now living retired, after a long and active career as a merchant, Andrew J. Smith is president of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Overton, has been a forceful factor in local affairs, and represents one of the real pioneer families of Texas, identified with the Republic, with the state, with the moderate state and with the great Lone Star Commonwealth of the past half century.

The Smith family in Texas was founded by Gen. James Smith, for whom the county of Smith was named by the legislature of Texas. He was born in Spartanburg county, South Carolina, September 10, 1792, was there reared and educated, and at the outbreak of the War of 1812 enlisted in the army of his country as a lieutenant under Gen. Andrew Jackson, distinguishing himself in the battle of New Orleans. He was married in his native community to Miss Hannah Parker, and three years later moved to Lincoln county, Tennessee, where he became a prominent planter and was made head of the vigilance committee for the protection of the settlers from the Indians and lawless characters of that then frontier community. Records show that he was equal to each and every emergency and that protection was given to the people. The year 1834 saw General Smith's advent in Texas, when he came to Nacogdoches county, of which Smith county was then a part and continued so until 1846 when the Republic of Texas having been merged into the United States the old counties were sub-divided. General Smith, Rusk, Cherokee, Kaufman, Dallas and other counties were carved out of Nacogdoches. General Smith's family followed some time later, arriving January 1, 1836, and he opened up an extensive plantation in Nacogdoches and was successful in this and in all of his business undertakings. Later, when the Republic granted him for his services as a soldier a league and a labor of land, he selected that domain in which is now Rusk county, locating upon the townsite of Henderson, and after donating that land for the purpose of town building, General Smith remained his home until his death, December 25, 1855, and he was buried with military honors by Gen. Thomas J. Rusk, one mile south of the old house in the town limits. His tomb, a massive wall of brick and stone, twelve feet high, is standing today, as is a monument erected by the public in his memory, and his portrait hangs on the wall of the district courtroom.

During the early part of the year 1836, being desirous of aiding Texas in her revolutionary struggle and eager to see her independence established, General Smith returned to Tennessee, where he raised a company of twenty-five volunteers consisting of men from that state and Alabama, and, returning to Nacogdoches, was chosen captain and with his company was mustered into the service of Texas. His own means were freely given for the support and transportation of these troops, for their outfitting, arms and ammunition, including seventy-five and of arms, purchased in New Orleans, which were subsequently presented by General Smith to the newly established Texas Republic. Captain Smith rose through the ranks of major and colonel to that of brigadier-general of volunteers and held the chief command on the northwest frontier of Texas. In August and September of 1836, when many of the soldiers after being discharged returned from the field to Nacogdoches in a destitute and helpless condition, it was General Smith who at a large personal expense furnished them with clothing and supplies, for which, like all of his expenditures for the Texas cause, he was never reimbursed. It is said of him that he feasted his whole company at his home with beeves from his own herd, and seemed pleased and happy to be able to do honor to men who placed such confidence in his ability to serve them by commanding them. During the years 1837 and 1838 the wives and children of the frontier settlers of Texas were frequently driven by the depredations of the Indians from their homes, while their husbands and fathers were away fighting at the front, and would seek refuge and safety in the town of Nacogdoches and its vicinity, often-times encamping near the home of General Smith for weeks at a time, he and his family generously furnishing them shelter and provisions and doing everything for their comfort and security. In 1839 he led a body of troops to assist General Burleson in suppressing the Cherokee Indians who were on the warpath, and in 1841 was again commander of the army on the Northwest frontier, receiving the thanks of the congress of the Republic of Texas for his valuable services. In 1844 he was ordered by General Houston, then president, to the command of the troops raised to quell the "Regulators" and the "Moderators" in Shelby county, where strife had become so general that civil war was threatened. General Smith, however, overcame great difficulties, showed ability and tact in his mission, as well as the valor and courage of the born soldier, and through his prudent and firm course of conduct the belligerents were induced to lay down their arms and submit to the laws. General Smith's last important fight is believed to have been with the Cherokees under Chief Bolls, when that old warrior was slain.

General Smith was in every sense one of the strong men of early Texas. He enjoyed the close friendship and confidence of such men as Thomas J. Rusk, Sam Houston and J. Pinckney Henderson, and President Houston offered him a place in his cabinet, an honor which, however, was declined. A man of fine executive and business ability, he accumulated much property, and although averse to holding office always exerted a profound influence in public affairs and in matters of state. He was a follower of his old commander, Gen. Andrew Jackson, in politics, and was a prominent factor in securing the annexation of Texas to the United States. A member of the primitive Baptist church, he always contributed generously to its movements. It is told of him that on one occasion a local preacher passed his home on foot, and the General immediately sent one of his men to secure and equip a mount for the use of the frontier minister. He possessed the rare and happy faculty of loving his neighbors at least as well as himself and shared his property generously with anyone who had greater need than he, and when he died his passing brought forth tribute from all classes and conditions of citizenship.

Among the several children of this grand old Texas patriot was the late Judge Andrew J. Smith, who was born in Tennessee in 1826, and came to Texas with his father when six years of age. He was given a somewhat limited, although thoroughly practical education, and grew to manhood in Rusk county. For several years during his early life he followed the profession of surveying, and during the war with Mexico enlisted as a private, and upon his return home was elected the first county judge of Rusk county under the present constitution of the state of Texas, serving in that office for twelve years. Judge Smith married Miss Mary Wadsworth, a daughter of William Wadsworth, a Texas pioneer from North Carolina, and their children were as follows: Leon K., Frank M., Isaac N., Andrew J., Duane, Kate and Esther.

Andrew J. Smith, of this review, was born at Henderson, Texas, February 6, 1866. The public schools gave him his early education, and when a young man he moved to Overton and entered merchandising, which he carried on with consecutive success until September 1, 1913, at that time selling out and temporarily retiring from business life, except as a banker, and in the supervision of his private interests. He was very successful as a merchant, and at this time deals extensively in farm lands, which he develops, thus contributing to the agricultural prosperity of this vicinity. Mr. Smith was a participant in the organization of the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Overton, several years ago, and is president of this substantial institution, William H. Barton being vice president, and Mr. Thompson cashier.

One of Mr. Smith's accomplishments which has added to the attractiveness of Overton as a center of population and commercial activity, was the erection of his own home. It occupies the only important elevation in the village and its grounds and surroundings mark the fine taste of a successful business man and broad-minded citizen.

Mr. Smith was first married in 1892 to Miss Eva Gipson, a daughter of John P. Gipson, of Overton, now deceased. At her death, in March, 1902, she left the following children: Marvin, who is attending school at the Agricultural and Mechanical College; Mary Elise, at school in Overton; and Andrine Jackson, also a student in the Overton school. In October, 1904, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Bertha Howze, a daughter of Capt. J. A. Howze, a Rusk county farmer. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, namely: Esther Kate; Andrew J., Jr., and Amanda, who died at the age of five years.

LAWRENCE W. HOLLIS, M. D. In the modern circles of the medical profession in Texas, no one member stands higher in ability, in range of achievements and in personal character than Dr. Lawrence W. Hollis, of Abilene. The career of Dr. Hollis, both as a doctor and as a citizen, possesses exceptional interest, although now regarded as one of the most skilful physicians and surgeons of the state, in point of time and experience he also belongs among the pioneer doctors. He practiced in west Texas at a time when it was required of the physician that he should ride or drive for miles over roads and almost impossible trails in order to reach his patients. Dr. Hollis is specially distinguished as a surgeon who performed an operation for the removal of the appendix two years before the first published report of such an operation, and he has successfully performed upwards of three hundred similar operations during the last quarter of a century.

Dr. Hollis is proprietor of the Hollis Sanitarium at Abilene, which when first established was the only sanitarium with hospital conveniences in all the vast scope of country between Fort Worth and El Paso.

Lawrence W. Hollis was born in San Augustine, Texas, December 21, 1861. His father before him was an eminent physician and surgeon of Texas, and as Dr. Hollis has a son who is now preparing at medical college, three generations of the family have given their service in this great science and social profession. The parents of Dr. Hollis were Dr. Thomas H. and Katherine (Dumas) Hollis. Dr. Hollis was for many years a resident of Nacogdoches, and it is a matter of curious interest that for more than thirty-five years he had his offices in the old Stone Fort, an ancient and historic institution of Nacogdoches which was built during the early Spanish era in East Texas, and which was the center of all the fighting in what was known as the Fredonian Rebellion during the early part of the last century. Dr. Hollis had probably as extended a practice as any physician in Texas during the middle period of the last century. During the war he was chief surgeon in Walker's Division of the Texas troops, and served the Confederate cause from the firing of the first shot until the final surrender. He was participant in many of the great battles of the war, and among them the Battle of Mansfield, known as one of the bloodiest of the entire war. The death of this honored old soldier and doctor occurred in Nacogdoches in 1896, when he was sixty-one years of age. His widow now resides with Dr. Hollis in Abilene. The elder Doctor Hollis was always active in behalf of the Democratic party, but would never accept any official honors. The children of the family are mentioned as follows: William H., who is a farmer in Jones county and has held the office of sheriff in that county for a number of years; Dr. Lawrence W.; Minnie, wife of Judge Edward Nicolds, of Caddo, Oklahoma; Katherine, wife of W. J. McCloud, of Oklahoma City, her death having occurred in 1911 as the result of an accident with a runaway; Hattie, wife of Maxwell R. Andrews, who is a commercial man of Oklahoma City; Blanche, wife of Mack Merchant of Abilene; Dr. Thomas S., a dental surgeon in Abilene; Charley, wife of James Skinner, of Austin, Texas; and Linnie L., wife of W. T. Russell, of Sherman, Texas.

Dr. Lawrence W. Hollis received his early education in the public schools of San Augustine and Nacogdoches, and then entered the University of Louisville, Kentucky, where he was graduated in the class of 1883. At the age of twenty-two he began the practice of his profession at Anson, in Jones county, Texas. This was then a sparsely populated part of Texas, and Dr. Hollis carried the skill and services of his profession to ranchers and farmers throughout Jones county and adjoining counties for a period of thirteen years. During that time he served as surgeon of the board of medical examiners of the Thirty-ninth Judicial District, which district comprised several counties. Finally the state abolished this board and adopted a state board. Dr. Hollis removed from Anson in 1894 to Abilene, and has since enjoyed a very successful practice in this growing commercial center of West Texas. In 1904 he built on the outskirts of Abilene a large and handsome and well equipped structure known as the Hollis Sanitarium. Its location is on several acres of ground in a very beautiful spot, and the sanitarium through its service has gained a very deserved reputation in this section of the state. It is equipped with twenty-one beds, and has all the appointments of a modern sanitarium. It was the first sanitarium built between Abilene and El Paso. It is now conducted mainly as a private institution.

In 1886 Dr. Hollis performed a successful operation in appendectomy. Two years later was published the first report of a case of appendectomy. The doctor has himself issued no report of his operation, and was therefore deprived of the honors of his pioneer work in surgery. Since that time Dr. Hollis has a record of more than two hundred and seventy-five appendectomy cases, and has a reputation all over Texas as a most successful surgeon. He is a member of the Texas State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and all his family for generations have been members of the Baptist church.

On February 20, 1884, Dr. Hollis married Miss Eva Scott, a native of Mississippi and a daughter of T. F. and Adaline (Ragsdale) Scott. The Scott family were among the pioneer settlers of Jones county, their location and home having been near old Fort Phantom Hill. It was in that locality that Dr. Hollis began his practice. The four children of the doctor and wife are as follows: Eva May, wife of M. B. Hanks, who is owner and business manager of the Abilene Daily Reporter; Lawrence W. Hollis, Jr., who is a student of medicine in Baylor University at Waco, being a member of the class of May, 1913; Beatrice Marlin, wife of M. K. House, of Fort Worth, her husband being state manager in Texas for the Broyle Commission Company, of Wichita, Kansas; Scott Wingo, who is a student of medicine also.

GEORGE WASHINGTON FOSTER. County judge of Dawson county, Mr. Foster was during his early life a teacher in several counties of northwest Texas, and for a number of years has been proprietor of a stock ranch with a special reputation for its fine Hereford cattle.

Prentiss county, Mississippi, was his birthplace, on August 20, 1874, and his parents were James Jackson, and Leon (Johnson) Foster. The father was also a native of Mississippi, his parents having originally come from Kentucky, first to Tennessee, and later to Mississippi. For many years he was engaged in planting and in 1878 removed to Texas, being a resident first of Tarrant county, next of Jack county, and finally coming to Floyd county. He followed farming in all those localities, and now lives at Floydada at the age of sixty-two.

ms. The mother, who was born in Mississippi, in 1851, was married in that state, and now lives in Floydada. She was the mother of eleven children, of whom Judge Foster was the second.

George Washington Foster attended school in Tarrant county, completing the public school course in Jack county, and was in school with more or less regularity until he was eighteen years of age. At that time he took a higher course of training, and was fitted for teaching. He spent four years as a teacher in Jack county, and also taught in Crosby and Floyd counties elsewhere. From teaching he turned his attention to stock farming in Borden and Dawson counties, and has been peculiarly successful in this branch of industry. He maintains on his ranch a fine herd of registered Herefords, and his stock has long been the admiration of gentlemen in this part of the state.

In November, 1912, occurred his election on the Democratic ticket to the office of county judge, and he is now the administrative head of the county government in Dawson county. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, having taken the Royal Arch and Council degrees, and also belongs to the Woodmen of the World. His church is the Missionary Baptist. In Jack county, July 14, 1897, Judge Foster married Miss Ollie Beauchamp, daughter of H. A. and Lou Beauchamp, who are still living in north Texas. The six children born to their union are: Gladys Ethel, born in Jack county, in May, 1898, and attending high school; Louis Leon, born in August, 1899, at Floydada and a student in the Lamesa high school; Mattie Ruth, born March 8, 1901, in Motley county and attending grade school; Valla Beatrice, born in Borden county, September 18, 1906; Georgie May, born March 19, 1909, in Borden county; and George W., Jr., born December 3, 1912, in Lamesa.

LEE F. CLARK. Among the valued citizens of every community are constructive men, men who have a gift and the ability to apply it to material development. One of the leading and successful contractors and builders in El Paso is Lee F. Clark, who during his six or seven years of business activity in this city has erected numerous buildings that are a credit to El Paso and to himself as a workman and business man. Texas has claimed him as a citizen for a score of years and the city of El Paso has been his residence and field of business since 1907.

Mr. Clark was born in Spartanburg, South Carolina, May 1, 1863, a son of John Foster Clark and Emily Adeline (Clement) Clark, both of whom were natives of South Carolina. John Foster Clark, born in 1809, came of Scotch descent and from an old family of South Carolina that originated in this country on the soil of Old Virginia. Prior to the Civil war he was a wealthy and prosperous planter in South Carolina and owned a large number of slaves. He came to the state of Texas in 1870 and located in Hunt county, where he was one of the first settlers and where he thereafter followed farming until his death at Wolfe City, Hunt county, in 1883. He was a Democrat in politics and was a member and deacon of the Baptist church. Emily Adeline (Clement) Clark came of Irish lineage and is the representative of an old South Carolinian family that first was established in Virginia. She was born in 1831, and is yet living, residing in Hunt county, Texas. She is also a member of the Baptist church. Nine children were born to these parents and of this family five yet survive.

Lee F., the fifth in birth, was educated in the public schools of Hunt county to the age of eighteen. Until he attained his majority he remained at the paternal farm. When starting out in life for himself he chose to learn the carpenter and builders trade, which he spent three years in mastering and which he thereafter followed five years as a journeyman. He then began contracting, first at Wolfe City and then at Dallas, Texas, and continued to operate in that locality until 1907, when he removed to El Paso. Here he has been very actively and successfully engaged in his line, has taken a place among the leading contractors of the city, and has contributed his full share in erecting substantial buildings of tasteful and appropriate design and that enhance the attractiveness of this city. Mr. Clark has found good business opportunity here and holds the opinion that El Paso will continue the phenomenal growth it has enjoyed during the last decade. In political views he is a Democrat and at times takes an active interest in party work, though he has never sought preferment for himself and has never held public office. He is a member of the Baptist church.

CAPT. JAMES T. SHANNON. The career of Capt. James T. Shannon, one of Madison county's most distinguished citizens, has been filled with noteworthy accomplishments and unflinching devotion to those principles which he has considered right. A man of strong mentality and forceful personality, whether in war or in peace he has been a natural leader of men, inspiring them with his own enthusiasm and imparting to them a part of his own ability. Captain Shannon was born in Choctaw county, Mississippi, February 25, 1840, and is a son of Edward M. and Margaret J. (Robinson) Shannon, his forefathers on both sides of the family having come to this country from Ireland. They were Scotch-Irish.

Edward M. Shannon, a planter, was born in Chester District, South Carolina, and died in Mississippi, July 6, 1841. He was married April 7, 1832, to Margaret J. Robinson, who subsequently married John A. Crow, by whom she had six children. Of the Shannon children there were: Capt. John A. R., of Madison county, Texas, who died there and left a family of four children; Capt. James T., of this review; and Lucretia, of Tom Green county, Texas, who married Thomas Ethridge, the orderly sergeant killed at Dallas, Georgia. The Crow children were as follows: S. E., who married Dr. A. K. Pruitt and died in Mississippi; Penelope, who married W. A. Estes, of Ackerman, Mississippi; Samuel A., of Choctaw county, Mississippi; J. S., of Ackerman, that state; Dr. I. M., who died at Pearsall, Texas; and Dr. W. C., of El Paso, Texas.

Capt. James T. Shannon was brought up on a plantation, surrounded by the slaves owned by his father, and as a boy put in some time working on the farm. His family was of the independent class, and the labor was largely done by slaves. He went to the country schools, and in 1861 entered the Confederate army for service during the Civil war. Although himself opposed to Secession, when Mississippi left the Union he espoused her cause and became orderly sergeant of Company A, Fourth Mississippi Regiment, Captain Hale and Colonel Drake. The company and regiment rendezvoused at Grenada, Mississippi, and there organized and was soon ordered to Union City, Tennessee, where drilling and general efficiency was the order of the day, the brigade being commanded by General Tillman. When ordered to the front the brigade went to Fort Henry on the Tennessee river and the regiment took part in the fight at that point, and when the army abandoned that fort he went to Fort Donelson and there engaged General Grant's army until February 16th, when practically the whole army was captured. The Southerners were taken as prisoners of war to Camp Morton, Indianapolis, Indiana, and were in prison some eight or nine months.

As military prisoners Captain Shannon and his comrades passed their time in various activities and amusements, and during a part of the time the Captain served as a wardmaster of the hospital for Confederate troops. The prisoners were exchanged in September of the same year at Vicksburg and went into the parole camp at Jackson, Mississippi. There the companies reorganized and were armed and equipped, and Captain Shannon was elected first lieutenant of the company commanded by James Montgomery, who was subsequently killed in the action near Atlanta during the Atlanta campaign. When the army took the field again it went into Louisiana, at Waynesboro, where nothing save guard duty was performed. From there it went to Mobile, Alabama, where, after a short time in camp, the command received orders to proceed to Pollard, Alabama, and again went into camp. The next move of the command was to the front before Vicksburg, and Captain Shannon was taken prisoner by the enemy, and subsequently paroled, following which came the Atlanta campaign. The regiment participated in the battles of Resaca, Dalton, Kenesaw Mountain, New Hope Church, Peach Tree Creek, and at the last-named place Captain Shannon was shot in the head by a minie ball, which split, one half hitting him, and the other half killing his brother-in-law, Wesley Easley, who was then orderly sergeant of the company. Captain Shannon was at that time in command of the company, and his wound rendered him unconscious for several days. When the missile was removed from his head in the hospital, it matched perfectly with the half of bullet that was taken from the neck of his orderly. Captain Shannon was in the hospital at Griffin, Georgia, for thirty days before he became able to resume his place at the head of his company, Captain Montgomery having been killed while Captain Shannon was in the hospital. The regiment was then under command of Colonel Layton, who had assumed charge at Enterprise, Mississippi, where the second parole camp had been established, and the Tennessee army then was in command of General Hood, he having superseded Gen. Joseph E. Johnston after the failure of the Atlanta campaign. The army returned to the North in the rear of the Union forces in command of General Schofield, and the Confederates took several small garrisons in passing toward Florence, Alabama, where they crossed the Tennessee river. They met the Federals again at Franklin, Tennessee, where General Hood ordered a charge on the strongly entrenched ranks of the Blue, and this resulted in one of the bloodiest battles of the great war. On that famous field of carnage many of the Confederate officers of high rank fell, among them Gen. Pat Cleburne, General Adams and many lesser line officers. Of Company A of the Fourth Mississippi, only seven men came out and left the field in order, the remainder having been killed, captured or stampeded. Captain Shannon was wounded severely in that battle in the thigh, but he did not allow this wound to send him to the hospital. However, he was so disabled for infantry duty that he went into General Armstrong's cavalry brigade, Company A, of the Second Mississippi Regiment, of General Forrest's command.

In his new service, Captain Shannon was made a drill-master and, in fact, had his brother's place in the cavalry command. He took part in the fight at Selma, where the Confederates were completely swamped by the Federals, and Captain Shannon and his older brother, who was commanding the cavalry company, went back through the Blue line and escaped through a swamp in which they remained all night, along the Alabama river, and about sunrise the next morning succeeded in getting free of the water. They reached Greensboro, Alabama, where the command reassembled, and went back to Artesia, Mississippi. On the way back to Greensboro, the Captain and his brother each took a mule from a negro, cut ropes from cotton bales to guide them, and thus rode into camp. This was about the close of the war, and at Artesia the command surrendered to the forces under General Wilson.

The war being over and fighting a thing no more to be indulged in, Captain Shannon started for his home, which he reached May 5, 1865. After the years of fierce fighting, when every day might mean one's last, it was difficult to return to the ordinary activities of life, but Captain Shannon returned to the plow from necessity and made a success of his operations under the greatly changed condition of things. He entered politics in a quiet way, although he and his comrades had been disfranchised.

For some ten years after the war the negro of the South and his Northern leaders were in the saddle and managing the local affairs of the seceded states with a high hand. This condition finally became unbearable, and a method of ridding the country of the trouble was devised by the Southern leaders, resulting in the organization of the famous Ku Klux Klan. Captain Shannon, with other good men, was among those who gave this movement their endorsement, but served it only in a private capacity during the ordeal which eventuated in the securing of control once more for the white man.

Captain Shannon left Mississippi in 1876 and made the trip to Texas by wagon with his family, settling first in Grayson county, where he farmed for a year. Following this he went back to Lamar county and at Roxton resumed his vocation for two years. He then returned on a visit with his family to Mississippi for two years, and in 1882 moved to Frio county, and for five years was a ranchman. At the end of that time he moved to Madison county, which has since been his home and the scene of his activities. Captain Shannon's political activities have been devoted to the Democratic ticket and he has ever been a strong advocate of Senator Bailey. In the Hogg-Clark battle in Texas politics he was strictly for Governor Hogg, and in the matter of prohibition in politics he has never espoused the cause. He belongs to the Presbyterian church, in the faith of which he was reared. He has never joined an order, nor has he made a speech. Although a great warrior he has gained the reputation of being a man of peace. He has lived an unselfish life, having had at all times more thought for others than for himself. He has demonstrated a capacity for business, but, having no sordid desire for wealth, has not commercialized his efforts, and is therefore not a rich man in a material way, although he has gained the priceless wealth of the esteem and respect of his fellow men.

Captain Shannon was married in Choctaw county, Mississippi, October 20, 1860, to Miss Lucy A. Garvin, a daughter of Robert Edward and Frances (Williams) Garvin, originally from South Carolina, belonging to the agricultural class. Mrs. Shannon died in 1892, having been the mother of the following children: Edward, who died at the age of twenty-three years; Margaret Frances, who married J. J. Arthur, of Coleman, Texas; Perryman B., of North Zulch; Theodore Mobley, a merchant of North Zulch, married Mildred Phillips and has one son, James Edward.

Perryman B. Shannon, who has been a successful merchant of Madison county since 1902, is a worthy son of a worthy sire. He was born in Choctaw county, Mississippi, September 3, 1873, and his boyhood in Texas was spent for five years on his father's ranch in Frio county. His education was secured in the schools of Madison county, prior to a collegiate course, and in 1897 he was graduated from Southwestern University, Georgetown, Texas, with the degree of Bachelor of Sciences. He had taught for two years in the country schools of Madison county, and subsequent to his graduation he taught three years at Iola and two years at Bedias, and while in Grimes county he acted as a member of the board of county Teachers Examiners. His last teaching was at Ingram, Kerr county, Texas, in 1907, and in that same year he entered actively into mercantile pursuits at Mecca, Madison county. Following this, he came to North Zulch, where he has been prominently identified with the business interests of the city as the proprietor of a thriving mercantile business. He also aided in the organization of the Farmers Guaranty State Bank of North Zulch of which he is now president. He is a man of sterling integrity and high business ability, and his activities have done much to forward the interests of the town. In political matters Mr. Shannon is a Democrat, and has been identified with county matters as precinct chairman and in numerous other capacities. He has attended gressional conventions, and was secretary of the convention at Houston that nominated Pinkney for Congress. Fraternally, he is connected with the Blue Lodge Chapter of Masonry, the latter at Normangee. Although brought up in the faith of the Presbyterian church, he is now affiliated with the Methodists. Mr. Shannon was married in Madison county, Texas, June 2, 1912, to Miss Etta Hollis, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Boone) Hollis, the latter a lineal descendant of Daniel Boone, of Kentucky.

MORUS B. HOWARD. There has been one class of men greatly affected by the election to the presidency of a Democrat, and these are the postmasters. To most of them it means a loss of their position and many of them have held office for years. To Morus B. Howard, of Sweetwater, who was appointed postmaster during the McKinley administration, this worry need not come, for a thoroughly efficient has he been and so popular has his management of affairs in the postoffice been that he is being endorsed for another term by Democrats as well as by Republicans. Such an occurrence is most unusual and Mr. Howard must be an unusual man to receive such a compliment. He is unusual in being straightforward, honest and conscientious in his work, always sacrificing himself for the public, and his chief ambition is to give them the very best of service. It is certainly to be hoped that he receives the re-appointment. Morus B. Howard was born in McNary county, Tennessee, on the 29th of November, 1875, the son of William B. and Martha (Farris) Howard. Both of his parents were born in Tennessee, and there grew to manhood and womanhood and were married. They removed to Jones county, Texas, in 1885, and William Howard became a farmer and stock raiser. After five years in Jones county, the family moved to Nolan county and here William Howard has continued as a stock raiser and farmer up to the present time. He owns his own lands and has considerable property, and he and his wife have reared a family of seven children who are a credit to the great state of Texas.

Morus B. Howard was educated in Jones and Nolan counties, attending the public schools. After completing his education he assisted his father on the ranch until he was nineteen years of age. He then found employment for two years on neighboring ranches, but he never cared for ranching as a steady occupation and so, at the age of twenty-one, he went into railroad construction work. After following this line of work for a year he turned to the mercantile business and found a position as a clerk in one of the mercantile establishments of Sweetwater. He was thus employed, clerking in various stores of the town, until 1897. At this time he was appointed by President McKinley as postmaster of Sweetwater and he has filled this position ever since, to the entire satisfaction of everyone. His desire to serve the public as successfully as possible has already been mentioned. His disregard for his own comfort has been carried to such an extent that he has never availed himself of the Sunday closing law for post-offices. He has had many letters from prominent Democrats since President Wilson has been in office, assuring him of their friendship and that their influence will be used to secure his re-appointment. In addition to this, not only are the majority of the residents of Sweetwater endorsing his re-appointment but the heads of large business concerns outside of Sweetwater and even editors of Democratic papers are using their influence in his behalf. Even though he does not receive the re-appointment, such a display of friendship should make him feel very proud. During the fifteen years of his official service he has allowed himself a vacation of only ten days. He is not dependent on the postoffice for his livelihood, for he has a farm in Nolan county, which he has purchased with his savings, and it is in a fine state of cultivation. He also owns an attractive home in Sweetwater and has other property in the town.

Mr. Howard is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and of the Woodmen of the World. In religious matters he is an active member of the Methodist church, being one of the board of stewards. Since 1905 he has been a member of the school board and is secretary of this board.

In 1898, on the 1st of April, Mr. Howard was married to Miss Ina McClain, the daughter of James E. and Mary (May) McClain, and a native of McClellan county, Texas. Her parents were early settlers of the state and Mr. McClain is a prominent and successful farmer and stock raiser. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Howard, Thelma and Opal Jo.

Mr. Howard believes that a bright future is in store for Nolan county, and he sincerely hopes that the population will double in the near future, as splendid opportunities are offered to workers and homeseekers. He himself will gladly give any information in his power as to conditions in this section.

ANDERSON Y. BAKER. It is possible within the limits assigned to this sketch to give but a cursory review of the salient points in the career of a man whose exploits have gained him renown throughout the southern part of Texas. A native son of the Lone Star state, reared to the life of the plains, trained in the accomplishments that make for leadership in all forms of manly, outdoor existence, he early gave promise of possessing those qualities which were to make his name known from El Paso to the Gulf. As an official representative of law and order his high quality of courage has made him greatly feared among the criminal class, and as sheriff of Hidalgo county, Anderson Y. Baker has made his section of the country one of the most law-abiding in the State.

Anderson Y. Baker was born at Uvalde, Uvalde county, Texas, in 1874, and is a son of T. G. and Verda (Bates) Baker. T. G. Baker was born in Alabama, and after the death of his father, who was a soldier in the Confederate army, came to Texas with his mother, and became a cattleman. Later he gave his attention to the law, and became a prominent member of the Uvalde bar. He married Verda Bates, who was born at Batesville, Arkansas, daughter of E. A. Bates, a member of the family for which Batesville was named, and who later came to Zavalla county, Texas, the county seat, Batesville, being subsequently named in his honor. He was a man of large affairs and was the pioneer in irrigation enterprises, building the first irrigating canal in Zavalla county.

Anderson Y. Baker was reared and educated at Uvalde. From his earliest boyhood he has lived in the open, and was practically raised in the saddle, becoming a cowboy in his early teens. He early evinced remarkable expertness with a "forty-five," and this, together with his coolness and bravery, won for him, in 1897, a place in the famous Texas Rangers. He joined this organization, in Capt. J. A. Brooks' company, at Cotulla, LaSalle county, Texas, and was constantly in service as a Ranger for six years in Southwestern Texas, particularly in the Rio Grande country. The term of this service embraced a period in the history of the border that witnessed many desperate crimes by outlaws, and the running down, capture and execution of these criminals demanded the greater part of the time of Capt. Brooks' company. It should be said of Mr. Baker that he was one of the most fearless and efficient Rangers ever employed by the State of Texas, and a long and interesting article could be written of his exploits, thrilling battles with desperadoes at close range and narrow escapes from death. He has been wounded several times, and today carries bullets in his body received while in the discharge of his duties. In situations of the greatest danger he showed absolute fearlessness, and was never known to lose his head in any emergency, while as a marksman and "dead shot" his fame was widespread. In this capacity it would, indeed, be difficult to recall the name of an officer who has been his equal. After severing his connection with the Rangers, he became a mounted inspector of Customs, patrolling the Rio Grande, with headquarters at the Brownsville Customs offices, and he was so engaged until 1908, when he was elected county treasurer of Hidalgo and removed his home to the town of that name, at that time the county seat. When the county seat was removed to Edinburg, Mr. Baker removed his home to this place, which has since been his residence. In 1910 he was re-elected county treasurer, and continued to serve as such until December, 1912, when he became sheriff of the county, being elected for a term of two years. His service has continued to be characterized by the same faithful devotion to duty and the same indomitable courage that has ever marked him and the citizens of Hidalgo county have reasons to be congratulated upon their choice of representative in the responsible office of sheriff. With commendable foresight, and supreme faith in the future of his locality, he has invested in ranch lands and is now the owner of 2000 acres in Hidalgo county, where his operations have met with unquestioned success.

Mr. Baker was married to Miss Lena Sappington, a native of Kansas, and to this union there have been born three children, namely: Anderson Y., Jr., Samuel Gillespie and Imogene.

THOMAS PINKNEY BOYETT. This name is one that has been familiar and honored in Brazos county for a great number of years. Thomas P. Boyett has lived in that county half a century, was a boy-soldier in the Confederate army, has been closely identified with business affairs, and for the past sixteen years has held the office of city marshal at Bryan. It is said the city has never had a more conscientious citizen and officer than Captain Boyett. In the course of his career as marshal he has never drawn a gun on an offender, his firmness and his moral courage being sufficient to subdue the most obstreperous individual and to uphold the majesty of the law.

Thomas Pinkney Boyett was born in Tyler county, Texas, on Billum's Creek, north of Woodville, August 10, 1845. His father was James T. Boyett, who was born in middle Tennessee of Scotch ancestry. The father first came to Texas in 1833, three years before the winning of independence, and became a permanent citizen in 1836. In 1863 he moved to Rock Prairie in Brazos county, and there spent the rest of his life. James T. Boyett married Miss Martha Carson, whose father John Carson, was an Irishman, who was a large slave holder when the war broke out, and who died in Blanco county. The children of their marriage were: Robert, who died just after the war, after service as a Confederate; Captain Boyett; Mrs. Martha Gray of Bryan; James C. of College Station; Mrs. Phoebe Hearne of Bryan; and William C. of College Station.

Thomas P. Boyett was about eight years old when the family moved to Brazos county, and there he grew up, with limited advantages in the way of schooling, and at the age of seventeen in 1862, entered the Confederate army. He was in company C of the Fifteenth Texas Regiment under Col. Spaight, a regiment which was attached to Polignac's Division of the Trans-Mississippi Department. The regiment was in Arkansas, and also fought the Guerrillas in the Indian territory, in 1863 went to Louisiana, participated in the Red River Campaign, and at Yellow Bayou Mr. Boyett and his company were captured. They were sent to New Orleans, where he remained prisoner about three months in the Picayune Cotton Press, until finally paroled. Returning to his command, he was soon given a furlough to return home, but rejoined the regiment in South Texas, and continued until the stoppage of all hostilities, early in 1865.

With the close of the war Mr. Boyett turned his attention to farming in Brazos county, but ill health compelled him to forego that occupation after a short time. During the reconstruction era he declined to take the oath of allegiance and for a number of months went about from one part of the country to another avoiding the provost guard. Finally he engaged in merchandising at Calvert, lived there for a year or two, returned to Bryan and soon went to Houston, where he was engaged for two years in the retail liquor business. Mr. Boyett then went out on the cattle trails, and for ten years was engaged in the varied duties of the range and trail, driving cattle from Texas to Dodge City, Kansas, for General H. B. Stoddard, one of the best known cattle men of his time. Captain Boyett, as foreman of the herd, made up his company and started the drive from the vicinity of Brazos county, and almost invariably took the old Chisholm trail to the north. Eight different times Mr. Boyett followed that historic old route between Texas and the northern market. He never had any difficulty except such as fall to the lot of every cattle driver, and never had any need for guns to defend the men or the cattle. When he finally left the cattle trail, Mr. Boyett engaged in the wholesale beer business at Bryan, and has continued in that line for the past twenty years. He is local manager of the Houston Brewing & Ice Company, and is one of the stock holders in the Interurban Railway and is owner of the American Steam Laundry. In other ways he has been an active spirit at Bryan, and takes a keen interest in all the measures for the advancement of the city and the welfare of its people. His political work has been done as a Democrat, and he has been city marshal of Bryan since his first election in 1896, that having been his first and only office.

Captain Boyett was married in Brazos county during the seventies to Mollie Wicker. Their children are Edna, who married Charles LaHatte of Bryan; Pearl, wife of B. H. Knox, of Bryan; Blanche, who married F. A. Peters, of Humble, Texas; Ralph of Bryan; G. Ivy, of Bryan; Jennie, wife of Charles Ramsey, of College Station; and T. P., Jr., of Bryan.

COL. J. SHELBY WILLIAMS. The Williams farm and ranch near Paris has a fame extending all over the state and indeed all over the South. Nowhere have scientific methods and intensive cultivation been brought to more perfect point than on the Williams farm. It acquired wide fame for some time as the scene of the government experimental station for this region of the South. The owner, Col. Williams, is one of the remarkable men of the state of Texas. He possesses reasonable wealth, made with his own industry and good management. He has recently had a permanent part in Texas politics as chairman of the Democratic State Committee for 1912. A number of years ago he served as United States Marshal at a time when the Federal court at Paris, with jurisdiction over the southern portion of old Indian Territory, was the busiest court for criminal cases in the entire country. Col. Williams has also been a traveling salesman, a farmer, a developer of the great Alaska gold fields, and in many directions a man of large affairs and influence.

J. Shelby Williams was born in 1850. His father was Lemuel H. Williams, one of the seven men who gained fame in Texas history by their vote against secession during the Secession convention of 1861. Lemuel H. Williams came to Texas the year it entered the American Union in 1845, and was accompanied by his brother, J. Shelby Williams, who passed his life in Lamar county as a successful farmer, and was noted over this part of the state as one of the great hunters. The brothers were both from Clinton county, Kentucky, where their father, Pleasant H. Williams, lived and owned many slaves, being one of the leading men of that district.

J. S. Williams

Pleasant H. Williams was born near Abbeville, Virginia, about 1797, and died in Clinton county, Kentucky, in 1855. The ancestry of the Williams family comes from the Rhode Island Williams, to which the noted Roger Williams belonged, and many of the subsequent generations have followed the ministry as the profession rather than business.

Pleasant H. Williams, the grandfather of Col. Williams, married a Miss Shelby, of Kentucky, and Lemuel and J. Shelby were the only sons of their union.

Captain Lemuel H. Williams, who died in 1882, was born in Clinton county, Kentucky, in 1820, received a liberal education in Alabama, and early displayed a marked capacity for business affairs. From his farm he moved to Paris, and became a merchant there during the ante-bellum days, and his old place of business is still to be recognized by a historical progression in the prominent firm of Crook-Record Dry Goods Company of Paris. Captain Williams founded this business in the early 50's. After the war between the states he took as a partner J. D. Wortham, under the firm name of Williams & Wortham, and into this firm came T. J. Record and J. D. Crook as subordinates, subsequently to become the principal figures and to take the leading place in the present firm of Crook-Record Dry Goods Co. The late Captain Williams was a man of great vitality and business energy, and as long as his physical vigor remained he continued active in business. He was president of the first bank established in Paris. His associates in this enterprise were Dr. Clements and W. B. and Travis Wright, and under their management the bank became a very strong institution. A number of other local enterprises sought the capital and interest of Mr. Williams, and he exerted an important influence over local affairs as long as he lived. His only public service was as a member of the Secession convention of 1861. In politics he was a Democrat, and was one of the founders and chief supporters of the Missionary Baptist church at Paris. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Masons. Captain Lemuel H. Williams married in Kentucky, Miss Emily Irwin, a daughter of John Irwin, who was a farmer of Kentucky. Mrs. Williams died in 1897. The children born of their marriage were as follows: Dromgule, of Grant, Oklahoma; Mrs. J. D. Wortham, of Paris; F. I. of Paris; Pleasant H., of Jonesboro, Texas; Mrs. George P. Henley, of Paris; Col. J. Shelby; and George H., who still reside in Lamar county.

Col. J. Shelby Williams, as a boy, was a pupil in the Paris schools and secured an excellent business training by work in his father's store. When he was nineteen years of age he went on the road as a salesman for the Schwabs Clothing firm and subsequently for Banner Brothers, and for twenty-five years was a traveling salesman over this southern country, with an extensive trade, during which work he won a wide popularity as a citizen and made more money than the average local merchant. From his experience as a traveling man dates his present fortune, because he invested his earnings in lands and stable securities, and it was from the natural increase of this invested money that his present fortune has arisen.

Leaving the road in 1894, Col. Williams accepted an appointment from President Cleveland as United States marshal, succeeding J. J. Dickerson. He completed a four-year term, and through his acquaintance and efficiency as the executive officer of the court, the Federal judge then presiding asked the new administration to retain his services. Thus he was reappointed by President McKinley, though without any solicitation on his part, and served nearly a year under the Republican administration. As already mentioned, the Federal court at Paris then had jurisdiction over a large part of the Indian Territory. Probably never before, and certainly never since, has the business of the court exceeded what it was while Col. Williams was marshal. Almost a small army of deputies and other aids were required to execute the processes of the court and to maintain something like order in the territory. All the country of the five civilized tribes was embraced within the court's jurisdiction, and the line on the south was the Gulf. During Col. Williams' term as marshal forty-eight violent law-breakers met death at the hands of deputies, including the notorious Bill Dalton, a dozen men were hanged, five died while under sentence of death, fourteen sentences were commuted and eight hundred and fifteen violators were taken to prison.

While still in the office of marshal, Col. Williams had become interested in the Klondyke country. This region was just coming to the attention of the world, and was a new mining eldorado. He made a preliminary visit of exploration in that region, and within a few months after retiring from public office took his family and went into the far Northwest. As a result of his preliminary investigation, and in keeping with his executive ability and judgment, he went to Alaska with a definite plan. The first steamboats used in that region were shipped "knocked down" by Colonel Williams. The parts were hauled over the Chilcoot Pass and were assembled on Lake Bennett, being operated from the head of that lake to White Horse Rapids. Colonel Williams also operated the first steam dredge for gold mining there, and on a single trip of his boat brought a cargo from Dawson of thirty-two tons of gold, consigned to the Canadian Bank of Commerce, to be delivered to the steamships at Skagway. Colonel Williams explored the entire region, made entries and developed some of the larger gold claims, located some valuable copper deposits, and he was one of the chief men in that district during those years. Col. Williams kept a close watch on the movements of all the prospectors and mining men, and through his own representatives kept in close touch with every new discovery made during the several years he spent in that country.

On returning to Texas in 1908 Col. Williams resumed his original place as a rancher, on his splendid estate near Paris. Here extensive farming has since claimed his entire attention. For fertilizing, using modern methods of cultivation, and by a varied experimental work, he has developed here one of the notable model farm estates of Texas, and besides his agricultural crops has also bred a number of horses for the speed ring. As a result of the experiments and work carried on upon his estate in farming, lands which had formerly produced only a third or half bale of cotton came to produce a bale or a bale and a quarter. As was natural, this result was published broadcast throughout the cotton country, and aroused a great deal of curiosity and study among all cotton men and the methods pursued have since had a valuable influence in raising the standard of cotton production in many localities in this state and elsewhere. The experiments demonstrated in particular the value of commercial fertilizers in raising the fertility of the soil to the point where it would produce three or four times as much as had formerly been the case. Col. Williams is a member of the Farmers' Congress, and it was due to his invitation that Mr. Bennett, of the United States Agricultural Department made the Williams' Ranch his headquarters for one entire season, issuing his bulletins from here, and under his supervision producing the best grade of cotton raised in the vicinity of Paris that year. The cotton raised on the Williams estate that year had the largest boll, the largest yield per acre, and was more nearly storm proof than any cotton grown at that time. The Williams Ranch contains altogether several thousand acres of land, with several hundred acres under cultivation. It is improved with modern buildings and its beautiful country home, in sanitary arrangement, electrical equipment, is the equal of almost any city residence in the southwest.

Col. Williams was married at Paris on January 1, 1873, to Miss Alice Pierson, a daughter of Samuel Pierson, who came to Texas from the state of Mississippi. The only child of Col. Williams and wife is Lala, who is the wife of Samuel Bell Maxey Long. Mr. Long is a lawyer and the foster-son and nephew of late U. S. Senator and Confederate Brigadier S. B. Maxey, a distinguished citizen of Paris, whose career is familiar to all.

Col. Williams is a Knight Templar Mason and a Shriner. He has long exerted a large influence in public affairs, but closed his activity in politics with his chairmanship during the campaign of 1912, being content at the conclusion of that campaign with the assurance that a Democratic administration would for the next four years occupy the chief places of national government.

THOMAS JEFFERSON ALEXANDER. Foremost among the business men of Teague, Texas, is Thomas Jefferson Alexander, president of the First State Bank of the city and Mayor of Teague, as well. He has been a resident in Texas since 1871, when he came to the state from Warren county, Tennessee, where he was born on February 20, 1864.

Mr. Alexander is a son of John C. Alexander, who died in Houston, Texas, in 1886, at the age of sixty-three years. He was a farmer in Texas, but in Tennessee he spent his days in the mercantile business. Born in Warren county, that state, John C. Alexander served as a Confederate soldier from that region when the war broke out, and he saw much service from first to last. When he came to Texas in 1871 he settled in Houston county, and there ended his days. He was a member of the Christian church all his life, and was a Democrat, though not active at any time in politics. He married Miss Viola Wood, a daughter of Benjamin F. Wood of Alabama, who came to Texas in an early day. Mr. Wood was a Mexican war soldier in the days of the Texas Republic, and late in life went back to Alabama, where he died. He located land in Texas in return for his services to the government, but he let it and other lands, which he purchased, go by default, so that he never owned property in this state. The first child of John C. Alexander's first marriage was Thomas Jefferson Alexander. The next were John, now of Okeemah, Oklahoma, and Frank, of Cherokee county, Texas. They were the children of Martha (Wood) Alexander, she being a first cousin of Viola Wood, who became the second wife of Mr. Alexander. The children of his second marriage were Josie, who married Samuel Denby and resides in Tennessee; Bettie, the wife of George Smith, now a resident of Houston county; James B., also of Houston county; and Florence, who married Hard Cash, of Fannin county, this state.

Thomas Alexander grew up on the Houston county farm on which the family located on coming to the state, and he had his schooling more as the result of observation and experience than by actual contact with books in his younger days. He continued at home until he married, and after that event his father came to live with him, and there remained the rest of his life. Mr. Alexander started out as a farmer without capital. He was only a boy when he married, and for a time he lived on his father-in-law's farm, soon buying a small piece of land on credit. It was raw land, but he applied himself to the business of clearing it, and when he had forty acres under the plow he sold it, reinvesting the proceeds on the Neches river. He lived on the place six years, paying for the place in that time, and when he sold it at the end of the period he was able to build a cotton gin out of the proceeds.

Mr. Alexander moved to Weches and set up a small dry goods establishment. He had a six hundred dollar stock when he began, but the venture proved successful, and when six years later he moved to Alto, he had a stock of six thousand dollars, all his own. In Alto he took a partner with a similar cash capital, and that the little firm prospered is evident from the fact when after two years the partner died, Mr. Alexander settled with his widow for $12,000 cash. Not long after he sold out the business and moved to Teague, settling here in February, 1908, and he continued in successful mercantile operations until 1911, when he retired from the management in favor of his sons, who operate the concern as the Alexander-Milburn Company. The firm has a stock of from $25,000 to $30,000 and it does a purely retail business in general merchandise.

When Mr. Alexander quitted the store he became president of the First State Bank of Teague, and he is also a director of the bank.

Politically, Mr. Alexander is a Democrat, and his first political activity came to him in Teague when he ran for the office of mayor of the city and was elected, in April, 1912. His administration has thus far been noted for its improvement of the streets, and the betterment of the water works system of the town, with the promotion of the use of gas from the Mexia gas fields. Also, the establishment of the city grade and much of the concrete walk work has been done during his regime. He has been identified strongly with the "good roads" movement, now a feature of every up-to-date official's activities, and his support of the movement has been marked and helpful. Altogether, he is regarded as one of the most progressive mayors the city has yet had, and as a citizen who is concerned in the civic welfare of the community, from a purely unselfish viewpoint. Mr. Alexander is a Mason of the Blue Lodge and Chapter, and he is further fraternally identified by his membership in the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. With his family, he has membership in the Christian church.

Mr. Alexander was married in Houston county, on December 12, 1883, to Miss Eva Mitchell, a daughter of David Mitchell and Tennie (Garrett) Mitchell, who came from Tennessee and settled in Nacogdoches county, this state. Mrs. Alexander was one of their three children,—the others being W. T. and R. W. Mitchell. W. T. Mitchell died in Brown county, leaving a family, and R. W. lives in Lubbock, Texas.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander are Hugh G., of Teague, married to Valerie Stafford, and the father of a son, Hugh, Jr.; Ernest, of Teague, who married Ida Fowler and has a daughter, Elizabeth; Evelyn is the youngest child of the family and is unmarried.

FRANK WARDWELL BROWN. Wherever you may find them the descendants of the Puritans and Pilgrims show the same characteristics that impelled their ancestors to brave all the dangers of the ocean and the wild country for the sake of what they thought was right. We are beginning to realize now how powerful a thing heredity is and that what one's ancestors have been must affect us, therefore those of us who can look back upon a long line of strong, clean, energetic men and women must remember that we have a better start than some of our neighbors and that for this reason we should simply work the harder. This is what Frank Wardwell Brown, of El Paso, Texas, has realized. The old Puritan stock from which he is sprung would not permit him to do work except of the best and starting from little or nothing he is today one of the biggest dealers in hides in this section of the United States.

Born in Swampscott, Massachusetts, on the 5th of April, 1861, he is the youngest of the three children of Joseph S. Brown and his wife. His great-grandfather was a drummer boy in the Revolution and served throughout the war. Both his father and mother were descended from the earliest settlers. His mother's ancestors come to Massachusetts on board the Mayflower, and those of his father came from England some time in 1600 and settled at Marblehead, Massachusetts. Joseph S. Brown was born in Massachusetts and when the rush of gold-seekers came in 1849 he joined a band of men and went to California where he followed mining for many years. Previous to this he had been a a-faring man. He returned to his old home before he died and spent his last years there. His death occurred in 1903, when he was eighty years of age. He married Sarah Wardwell, who like her husband was born in Massachusetts. She died there in 1893 and they lie in the old Massachusetts graveyard side by side.

Frank Wardwell Brown grew up in the little Massachusetts seaport town and here received his education in the grammar and high schools and later in a private school. After leaving school he earned a living for a little while as a fisherman, but when he was eighteen he left home and with the pioneer spirit strong within him he came to Texas. This was in the later seventies and he has lived in the state ever since. He first settled at Austin, where he remained for about a year, working at various occupations. He then went to San Antonio, only remaining here a year and then going to Menard county. Here he took up some land in partnership with his half brother. They followed ranching and stock raising, and worked for various cattle companies for a number of years, and on the whole were fairly successful. They managed to save enough money to go to Abilene, Texas, and there go into business for themselves. Entering the hide and wool business they conducted it in Abilene for several years and then removed to El Paso where they continued in the same business. Mr. Brown remained in business until 1909 when the Finnegan-Brown Company was incorporated and he became vice president and manager of the firm. He still holds this position and it is largely due to his executive ability and thorough knowledge of his business that the prosperity of Finnegan-Brown is so well assured. In all his business dealings he has clung to the two old Puritan standards of honesty and industry and the extensive business which he now conducts is founded on the firmest of foundations. The firm has branch houses in all the principal towns in Texas, New Mexico, Old Mexico and Arizona, and they do a general hide, wool, pelts and tallow business.

Mr. Brown is a prominent member of the Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, having passed through all the degrees from the blue lodge to the mystic shrine and the thirty-second degree. He is past master and past high priest and is one of the past officers of the shrine. He is a member of the chamber of commerce and is a firm believer in the future of the state and of El Paso in particular. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party but does not care to take any active part in politics. In addition to being a Mason he is an Elk and a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, being grand chaplain of the latter society for the state of Texas. Mrs. Brown is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. All of the family attend the Protestant Episcopal church. Mr. Brown most of the recreations of the modern business man, but he is especially fond of browsing among his books. He has an especial weakness for history and owns a well stocked private library.

In August, 1895, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Grace Blaney, of Swampscott, Massachusetts, where the marriage took place. Mrs. Brown is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Blaney, and comes of an old pioneer family of Swampscott. Four children have been born of this marriage, all of whom are girls, as follows: Alice, Frances, Grace and Jeanette.

S. E. ELLIOTT. The ordinary individual is rarely brought into contact with the stern realities of life before he has reached years of near maturity. In most cases he is granted the chance to make a choice of vocations and allowed, so far as circumstances permit, to follow his own inclinations. Should he show an early predilection for one of the learned professions, for the activities of trade or for public life, he may be given the opportunity to develop his talents in his chosen line, and his success or failure rests upon the manner in which he exercises his inherent gifts. It is not the ordinary individual, however, who always attains the highest eminence. Both history and biography show that the man who achieves distinction and who grasps the things worth while in life, has often had his start in obscurity. The individual who takes upon himself the responsibilities of manhood when still in the days of his youth, who puts aside personal ambitions to assume duties thrust upon him by the will of fate, who unselfishly bends his every energy toward the accomplishment of those things which chance has placed before him, who finally gains the fruits of victory and finds them sweet, is far above the ordinary individual.

S. E. Elliott was given few advantages in his boyhood. He was still a lad in years when he joined the army of the world's workers, and since that time he has continued to be a forceful, energetic and progressive worker in whatever field he has found himself located. He had no opportunity to choose as a lad; he had his ambitions, and they have since been gratified in a full measure, but in his early days his personal desires were put aside because of dire necessity. Mr. Elliott is not an ordinary individual; his position as one of the leading figures in the business world of Grayson county could not have been attained, under the circumstances, by the average man. In the review that follows, it will be endeavored to show how he has labored and won his way to the forefront, although such a sketch must be, of necessity, limited to the salient points of his career.

Mr. Elliott was born February 5, 1824, in Anderson District, South Carolina, and is a son of Ervin and Minerva (Carter) Elliott. The parents were natives of South Carolina, where Ervin Elliott was a planter, and died in 1831, when S. E. Elliott was but seven years of age. There were three sons and one daughter in the family, all of whom are deceased but our subject. His education was secured in a country school which he attended for seven months, and for this tuition he was compelled to work for five months, and in the meantime he was supporting his mother up to the time of her death. He accepted whatever honorable employment presented itself, showed himself faithful and industrious in whatever task he undertook, and carefully saved his earnings. He was married at the age of twenty-one years, and at that time traveled by horse and wagon to Lowndes county, Mississippi, where he worked as overseer of a plantation for some time, and subsequently moved to Hinds county, in the same state, there working first as foreman in a milling business and later engaging in building mills through that section of the country. Mr. Elliott came to Texas in 1854 and located in Montgomery county, where he continued in the millwright business and eventually formed a partnership with Charles Cone. During the Civil war he ground grain for the Confederate army, a title assessed by the Confederate government, and this service he was compelled to do gratuitously, also distributing meal and flour among the soldiers' families. Prior to the outbreak of the war he had commenced loaning money, and the fall of the Lost Cause made him lose in the neighborhood of $12,000. Mr. Elliott purchased a home in Sherman in 1876, and here engaged in business in partnership with his son-in-law, in the conduct of a book store. After the latter's death Mr. Elliott closed up the business and again engaged in the loan business, in which he has successfully continued to the present time. His offices are now located at No. 218 M. & P. Bank Building. Essentially a business man, outside activities have held little interest for him, and he has never been prominent in public life, although he has always been a Democrat, and cast his first presidential vote for James K. Polk. Since 1852 he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity. He has always been identified with movements for the good of the state. One of the oldest residents of the community of Sherman, he has seen this city grow from a small village controlled largely by the saloon element and lawlessness into a temperance city of 20,000 population, with schools, colleges and churches, a law-abiding municipality and a center of refinement, culture and education. Each year Mr. Elliott takes a vacation of two or three months traveling through the West and spending a large part of the time at the home of his son, Austin E. Elliott, of Los Angeles, California. Although in his ninetieth year he remains active in body and alert in mind, and attends to the daily routine of his large business affairs in a thorough, capable and efficient manner. Few men have a wider acquaintance in business circles, and none have in greater degree the esteem and respect of their associates. His business transactions have ever been handled in an honorable and straightforward manner, and his entire life has been passed along lines of integrity and probity.

On January 15, 1845, Mr. Elliott was married in South Carolina, to Miss Sarah Ann Campbell, who was born in the Old South State, daughter of Daniel Campbell, who served as a soldier during the War of 1812, and subsequently became a large planter and slave owner. Eight children were born to this union, of whom four are now living, namely: Mrs. Hattie McAfee, widow of Marshall McAfee, who served as a soldier in the Confederate army and died about the year 1898; W. D., who is well known in real estate circles of Sherman, where he makes his home; Mrs. Missouri McAfee, the wife of Lee McAfee, ex-sheriff of Grayson county, and now engaged in the real estate business at Sherman, and Austin E., teller of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles, California.

THOMAS H. ROYDER. One of the progressive citizens of Brazos county, Thomas Harvey Royder has extensive interests in his native county and also in some of the important cities of the state, and has done good service in furthering the agricultural and stock-growing industries of Texas. He was one of the founders of the village of Royder, named in honor of the family, and here he and his two brothers control the mercantile trade. He is also serving as postmaster at Wellborn, and his brothers, John H. and Andrew W., had previously held the same office, with which the family name has thus been consecutively identified for fully a quarter of a century.

Mr. Royder was born in the Rock Prairie community near Wellborn, Brazos county, on the 21st of May, 1864, and represents an old and honored pioneer family of this section of the state. He is a son of Adam and Mary A. (Price) Royder. His father was born and reared in the Kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, whence he immigrated to the United States in 1846, when seventeen years of age. He made Texas his destination and his first means of earning a livelihood here was farm work. By energy and frugality he was enabled to purchase land in Brazos county, taking advantage of obtaining such property when low prices prevailed. He gave his attention largely to the raising of live stock and was one of the large land holders of the county at the time of his death, when sixty-five years of age. At the outbreak of the Civil war he naturally cast in his lot with the Confederate states, and enlisted in a Texas regiment and served during practically the entire course of the great conflict between the North and the South. His army service was principally on the coast, in the army commanded by General Magruder. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, was a stalwart Democrat, held membership in the United Confederate Veterans' Association, but was not formally identified with any church organization.

Adam Royder first married Miss Mary A. Price, who died in 1869. Their children were John H., James M., Walter, Thomas H. and Jeff P. For his second wife Adam Royder wedded Barbara Ellen Harrell. The children of this union were: Jesse C., Janie, Elizabeth, George, Fannie, Emma, Charles and Cleveland. Janie married Irving Todd, of Brazos county; Elizabeth, who is deceased, was the wife of John H. Adkins, of Well-born, this county; Emma, who likewise died in Brazos county, was the wife of Horace Battle; and Elizabeth, who died in the spring of 1914, was the wife of William P. Buckhalter, of the same county.

Thomas H. Royder was reared under the conditions and influences of the middle-pioneer epoch in the history of Texas, and thus his educational advantages were confined at first to the primitive common schools in the vicinity of his home, though later he attended the village school of Wellborn, where he studied bookkeeping, as he did later in a business college. When of age Mr. Royder engaged in stock raising in a semi-independent way, as he kept for his father "on shares" beside giving considerable attention to agriculture. It may consistently be said that few men in Brazos county have made so valuable a contribution to the elevation of the standards of agriculture and stock-growing as has Mr. Royder, and at the present time he is the owner of a fine landed estate of one thousand acres, all under cultivation and fully one-half the tract developed and improved by himself. On his farms he has erected twenty-five homes for his tenants, and he provides employment for fifty families in connection with his various enterprises. In 1885 he established a general store at Royder, and he assumed personal direction of the same in 1889. He was associated with his brother, John H., in establishing the first store at Royder, after the town had been founded, on the line of the Houston & Texas Central Railroad. Mr. Royder has been actively and successfully identified with the mercantile business since the year last mentioned. At Royder he erected a cotton gin and also established a lumber yard. In 1906 he and his brother dissolved partnership and since that time he has conducted his business at Royder in an individual way. He and his brothers, John H. and Andrew W., now control all mercantile enterprises in the thriving little village.

While Mr. Royder was actively engaged in the live-stock business in the earlier years he was accustomed to provide a local market for stock, and he is still identified with the breeding and raising of cattle, horses and hogs. He has introduced the Red Polled cattle in his native county and has induced his neighbors to breed this kind of cattle, as well as Jerseys, the result having been a distinctive raise of grades in the community. He has also accomplished a similar result in the introduction of the Hambletonian strain of horses. As an apiarist Mr. Royder's experimentations in this line have covered a period of fully ten years and his Italian bees have brought many premiums at the farmers' congresses in connection with the Texas Agricultural & Mechanical College. He introduced the first Poland-China swine into his section of Brazos county and for several years gave special attention to the raising of registered swine, with some fine herds on his estate.

Mr. Royder is a stockholder in the oil mill at Navasota, the enterprise having been projected and being maintained by representative agriculturists of the district. He is a director of the Dallas Dry Goods Company in the city of Dallas; is a stockholder of the Western Casualty & Guaranty Company in the same city; is a director of the National Insurance & Trust Company, of Waco; and of the Texas State Bank & Trust Company of the same city. He is a stockholder also of the Hogan-Allnoch Dry Goods Company, a leading wholesale concern of Houston, and he owns a general merchandise establishment at Cawthon.

In politics Mr. Royder has been a delegate to the state and congressional Democratic conventions in Texas, as well as to the Brazos county conventions. He was a delegate to the state convention of 1906, at Dallas, and was appointed a member of the state executive committee. He served four years in this capacity and wielded much influence in party affairs during that period. He was a stalwart supporter of Woodrow Wilson in the national campaign of 1912, but his large business interests have caused him to withdraw largely from active tical work. He is now serving as postmaster at Wellborn, where he maintains his home. He is a Master Mason and is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. May 28, 1891, recorded the marriage of Mr. Royder and Miss Ida Burkhalter, a daughter of the late David D. Burkhalter, who came from South Carolina and became one of the early settlers of Brazos county, after having served as a valiant soldier of the Confederacy. Of his children three are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Royder became the parents of nine children, the first four dying in infancy. Those who survive are Douglas, Annie Paul, Joda, Thomas H., Jr., and Foy.

This article is not complete without special reference to the liberality shown by Mr. Royder in furthering local educational interests. He strongly favors the policy of advanced work in the graded schools, that students may have due opportunities without the expense of leaving their home places. When the Wellborn school district was created and he was suggested as a member of its board of trustees, he gave public statement to the taxpayers that if he were to serve in this capacity they could make ready to contribute liberally for the furtherance of educational work. As a trustee he has ably held to this advanced policy, has not been denied due cooperation, and has supplemented the popular expenditures with several hundred dollars of his own funds in order that some of the work of the high school course might be done in the graded schools of the district. His civic loyalty in this one connection entitled him to much credit.

ROBERT H. BAKER. Texas has been the home of Robert H. Baker for more than thirty years. While his activity has extended to several of the routine lines of business, he will probably be longest remembered for his achievement in developing and constructing railway property in this state. His efforts in financing and building the Trinity and Brazos Valley Railroad are well known to the people of the state.

Robert H. Baker, whose home has been at Austin since 1899, was born at Memphis, Tennessee, September 4, 1858, a son of Robert and Annie (Miller) Baker. His father, a native of Tennessee and a planter, was a soldier in the Confederate Army, and died soon after the close of the war. The mother, who was born in South Carolina, of an old family, after the death of her first husband married Major M. Burke, general manager of the M. & T. Railroad Company, and who was prominently identified with the city affairs of Memphis. Texas is deservedly proud of its achievements in originating and developing many of the principles of commission government for cities, but the history of commission government in America is really traced beyond its first practical application at Galveston to the city of Memphis, Tennessee. In this connection it is noteworthy that Major Burke, who was one of the civic leaders at Memphis following the epidemic of yellow fever during the '70s, had a prominent part in abolishing the old charter of the city and in forming what was known as the taxing district of Shelby county, instead of the city of Memphis, and became one of the three commissioners appointed to govern the city of Memphis under a commission plan, that being, according to all the best information on the subject, the first efficient and practical administration of municipal affairs by a commission in this country. Major Burke's associates on that commission were D. T. Porter and John Overton.

Robert H. Baker attended the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, and most of his early experience was in railroading in his native state. On coming to Waco, Texas, in 1882, he became identified with the mercantile business and in a few years was active in public affairs and the larger phases of finance and business. When Mr. Baker moved to Austin in 1899 he was general manager for the Equitable Life Insurance Company of New York for the territory of Texas.

His interest in railroad development and construction led Mr. Baker to undertake the financing and building of the Trinity and Brazos Valley railroad. He served as vice president and general manager of the company, subsequently as president and general manager, and retired from the office of president in January, 1910. During the same year Mr. Baker acquired an option on the Texas Central Railroad, and after exercising it sold the property to Edwin Hawley for the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad system. The consolidation of the properties was not immediately effected, and in the meantime Mr. Baker accepted the office of president of the Texas Central Railroad until the property could be formally taken over by the Missouri, Kansas and Texas, and thus for about a year and a half Mr. Baker was president of the Texas Central. He retired in favor of A. A. Allen, president of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company. It was due to Mr. Baker that the several Wichita Falls lines of railroad, on which he had secured an option of sale, were finally transferred and have become operating branches of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas.

While these have been some of the major transactions of Mr. Baker in the field of finance, his time and attention have also been attracted to various other enterprises, especially in economic and industrial development, and he is a familiar figure in the financial district of New York city, making several trips each year to the financial metropolis on business affairs. Mr. Baker has now formed a partnership with his son, Burke Baker, in a Texas development and financing business, with offices in the Union National Bank building at Houston. His son, Burke, retired from the office of bond officer for the Bankers Trust Company of Houston in order to engage actively in business with his father.

Mr. Baker is a director in the Union National Bank of Houston, the Bankers Trust Company of Houston, the American National Bank of Austin, and has large interests in numerous other financial companies. He belongs to various country and business men's clubs in various parts of the state. At Waco in 1882 Mr. Baker married Miss Nellie Faulkner, daughter of Mrs. J. S. Faulkner. Her mother's family, the Wilsons, came from Louisville, Kentucky, in the very early days, were among the old and prominent families of south Texas, and in 1854 settled in what is now called Coryell county. Mr. Baker and wife have three children: Burke Baker, of Houston; Nellie Baker, attending school in Colorado; and Elizabeth Baker, at home. The family residence is at the northeast corner of Twenty-seventh and Nueces streets in Austin.

JUDGE WARREN W. BEALL. One of the most successful men and prominent members of the legal profession in Texas is Judge Warren W. Beall, of Sweetwater, Texas. Although he has given a number of years of his professional life to the work of the bench, yet before he was elected to judicial office he had made a wide reputation as a lawyer of great ability and a student of wide learning. Judge Beall is a man of strong character, unhesitating in his championship of any cause which he believes to be right. His sense of justice, which is keen, can not be dulled by money or influence, and this uprightness of character has won for him the trust and confidence of the people wherever he has been located. He is one of the men to whom the recall offers no terrors.

Judge Warren W. Beall was born on the 18th of April, 1860, at El Monte, near Los Angeles, California. He is the son of Walter D. Beall and Sarah C. (Watson) Beall, natives of Georgia and Missouri, respectively. Until he reached early manhood, Walter D. Beall lived in his native state. In 1854 he came to Missouri where he met and married Sarah Watson. Later he removed to Texas and settled in Tarrant county near Johnson Station. He was a farmer by occupation and what was rare in those days, was a scientific farmer. Today everyone realizes the value of scientific farming and it means the reorganization of the agricultural forces of the country, but in those days things grew or they did not grow, and the farmer laid all upon the weather or bad luck. Mr. Beall was therefore a pioneer in the field, and his success encouraged others to follow in his footsteps. In 1856 he moved to Southern California, where he lived till the outbreak of the Civil war. He then enlisted in the Confederate army under Brigadier-General Green, serving for four years. His division was stationed west of the Mississippi river and he took part in many of the important conflicts that took place in this section of the Confederacy. After the war he returned to Tarrant county, Texas, where he again engaged in scientific farming. He was very successful and continued here until 1881, when he sold his holdings and moved to Nolan county. Here he again engaged in farming and stock raising, and here he lived until his death, which occurred on the 24th of August, 1911. He had retired about ten years before his death, for he lived to be eighty-four years of age. He was highly honored and respected not only as a scientist, for he was known all over western Texas for his work, but as a man. He had political honors offered to him many times and strong pressure was brought to bear to make him accept some of these, but he always refused, saying he loved his work far better than such honors. He was always active in the affairs of the Democratic party, of which he had always been a staunch member, and he was well known as a prohibitionist. In the fraternal world he was a prominent Mason and also belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife died in 1887. They became the parents of three children.

The eldest son of the family, James Henry Beall, has practiced law in Sweetwater since 1883, and is now a member of the firm of Beall and Spencer. He has served as county judge of Nolan county and as a member of the Thirty-second Legislative Assembly. He is active in the fraternal world, being a prominent Mason and a member of the Odd Fellows. Sarah Catherine, the youngest of the family is the wife of E. L. Collings, a successful merchant of Pecos, Texas.

Warren W. Beall is the next to the eldest in his family. He received his education in the public and high schools of Tarrant county, Texas. At the age of eighteen, his education completed, he came with his parents to Nolan county, and for two years after his arrival he was engaged in teaching school in this county. During this time he began to read law and all of his spare time was spent in poring over his law books. In 1887 he was admitted to the bar and he began the practice of his profession in Roby, the county seat of Fisher county, Texas. In 1888 he was elected county attorney and served two years in this office. Upon the conclusion of this term of office the people of the county and district showed their appreciation of his work by twice electing him District Attorney of the Thirty-ninth Judicial District in 1892 and 1894 respectively. He filled this position for four years and then resigned in 1896 and removed to Sweetwater, where he established, in company with his brother, the firm of Beall and Beall. This firm was destined to become prominent all over the state of Texas. They handled with success many important cases and they figured largely in most of the important school land cases on record. Their reputation grew and extended far beyond the borders of the county and their practice became lucrative as well as extensive.

In November, 1912, Judge Beall was elected to the bench as District Judge of the Thirty-second Judicial District. Since this time he has devoted his entire attention to the duties of his office.

In the fraternal world Judge Beall is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to the Chapter, and he is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Woodmen of the World. In religious matters Judge Beall has always been a staunch Cumberland Presbyterian, and in 1906, when the Cumberland Presbyterians attempted to join forces with the United Presbyterians, the Judge refused to go with them, and stands firm by the principles for which he as a member of the Cumberland branch of the church, believes to be right.

Judge Beall has been twice married. He was first married in 1881 to Miss Janie Floyd, of Tarrant county. She died in 1897, leaving four children, as follows: Walter D. Beall, who is engaged in the abstract business and lives in Sweetwater; May, who is the wife of Raymond Fitzgerald, of Marfa, Texas; W. Floyd Beall, who is a druggist of Colorado, Texas, and Katharine, who is the wife of Willis Barbee, the under-sheriff of Nolan county.

In 1900, Judge Beall married for the second time, his wife being Miss Nannie G. Buchanan, the daughter of G. W. Buchanan of Snyder, Texas, and the sister of Judge Charles Buchanan. She is herself a native of Virginia. Three children have been born of this marriage, Juanita, Claude and Graham.

GEORGE GERLACH. The biographical record of any individual who started out as a wage earner at fifty cents a day and who became the head of large industries would be of interest. In the case of George Gerlach of Canadian, Texas, special interest attaches inasmuch as his activities have gone far toward the development of the town and locality in which he lives; his achievements stand out as an example of what brains and energy can accomplish in the big State of Texas.

Mr. Gerlach is a Texan by adoption. He was born in Macoupin county, Illinois, son of Joseph Gerlach, a native of Germany. Joseph Gerlach, on coming to America in 1848, went direct to the Isthmus of Panama, where he spent six months in railroad work. At the end of that time he came north and took up his residence in Indiana. There, also, he engaged in railroad work as a contractor, building stone bridges and culverts. This work took him over into Illinois, and about 1851 he settled in Virden, where he followed the same line of building. In 1873 he went to Pawnee county, Kansas, and took up Government land. Meanwhile he continued work at his trade of stone mason. His death occurred in 1887. He served his adopted country as a Union man, having enlisted at St. Louis, Missouri, as a member of the Twelfth Missouri Regiment, the fortunes of which he shared for nine months. Then, on account of disability, he was honorably discharged. He was Republican in politics, and his religion was that of the Roman Catholic church. Mary B. (Gilmartin) Gerlach, mother of the subject of this sketch, was born in Chicago, Illinois, of Irish parentage, and died at Canadian, Texas, in April, 1907, at the age of sixty-two years. In the spring of 1888, she had come to Texas to make her home with her sons. She was the mother of three children, two sons and a daughter. The daughter, Miss Capitola Gerlach, is a woman of marked business ability and is secretary and treasurer of the Gerlach Mercantile Company of Canadian. The two sons, George and John J., have always been more or less closely associated in their business enterprises. John J. was for nine years a resident of Canadian, was one of the founders of the Gerlach Mercantile Company and is still identified with the firm. He was the first Treasurer of Hemphill county, and filled that office for a period of seven years. He is now a resident of Woodward, Oklahoma; is president of the Gerlach Bank, vice president of the Gerlach Hopkins Mercantile Company, president of the Avar State Bank, and one of the three members of the State Banking Board of Oklahoma.

George Gerlach, the eldest of the family, received his education in the public schools, up to the time he was twelve years old, having attended school at Virden and Jacksonville, Illinois, and Larned, Kansas. His early life was spent on a farm, and naturally when he started out to earn some money on his own account, he sought in the field. He began by hoeing corn at fifty cents a day, and for two years he was employed as a farm hand. Then, under his father's instructions, he learned the stone mason's trade. This work, however, was not to his liking and he went back to farm work, which he followed for six years at from $10.00 to $25.00 a month. At the end of that time, in company with his brother, he came to Texas and settled on Horse Creek, Hemphill county, seven miles west of Canadian, where he entered a section of school land, under State law, and there followed farming and merchandising for two years, running a small store on his farm. After selling that bit of land, he moved to Clear Creek, a small village of about 200 inhabitants, and kept store there about six months. The next move was to Canadian. The Gerlach brothers were among the prime movers in the building of this town. With a capital of about two thousand dollars, they established the first store in the town. Today the Gerlach Mercantile Company, Incorporated, is the largest establishment of its kind in this part of the country. It has a floor space in its store of 17,000 square feet, and a warehouse floor space of 6,000 square feet. The company has a capital stock of $50,000. In addition to being the head of this concern, Mr. Gerlach is president of the Gerlach Hopkins Mercantile Company at Woodward, Oklahoma, which has a capital and surplus of $100,000; vice president of the Gerlach Bank of Woodward, which has a capital and surplus of $100,000; and president of the Avarad Mercantile Company, of Avarad, Oklahoma, with a capital and surplus of $20,000. Politically, Mr. Gerlach is a Democrat, but has never had time to seek or fill office. He maintains a commendable pride in civic affairs, and as vice president of the Canadian Commercial Club is among the foremost in fostering the best interests of the town. Fraternally, he is identified with the I. O. O. F. and the O. W. He was a charter member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Canadian and assisted in its organization in 1900.

Of Mr. Gerlach's immediate family, we record that he consists of wife and four children. He was married at Jacksonville, Illinois, in September, 1890, to Miss Vera Knollenberg, a native of Illinois, of German parents. Their children, all born in Canadian, are Mary, Helen, Dorothy and Charlotte, the last two being twins.

DAVIS SPANGLER, M. D. The medical fraternity of Grayson county has accepted Dr. Davis Spangler as a young man of exceptional qualifications and thorough training, and has shown their appreciation of his character by electing him secretary of the County Medical Society, an office which he now holds.

Davis Spangler was born September 20, 1891, in Washington county, Texas, a son of D. A. and Mary (Davis) Spangler. His father was born in Illinois, and his mother in Ohio, but came to Texas many years ago, where his father took high rank as a lawyer. His father served as mayor of Bonham in 1908 and 1909, and is now once more in the same office. For a number of years he was a member of the Pension Examining Board for the Southwestern District of the United States.

Dr. Spangler is the only child of his parents, and his early education was acquired in the Bonham high school and his professional studies were pursued in the medical department of the University of Texas at Galveston, where he graduated in May, 1913, M. D. Locating at Sherman he has already passed over the highest period of a young physician's career, and is well established in the confidence and patronage of the public. Dr. Spangler is a member of the Phi, Alpha Sigma College fraternity, belongs to the Christian church, and is still a bachelor. The Grayson Medical Society, of which he is secretary and treasurer, has affiliation with the State Medical Society, and is in a manner a unit to the still higher organization, the American Medical Association. The object of the local society is to advance medical knowledge, among members of the profession, by exchange of observations and experience, to uphold the high standards of professional ethics, and in every way possible to promote public health and the general welfare of the county physicians. The Association at present consists of sixty-eight members, all of whom are practicing physicians in good standing in Grayson county. The society was first organized in 1885, and has been kept up by the efforts of the more earnest and public spirited members of the profession. There were eleven members when the society was constituted, and at the present time the organization has not been brought up to its possible strength, since there are at least ninety ethical physicians in Grayson county. Dr. Spangler has his office at 117½ South Travis street.

JOHN B. THOMAS, M. D. Few members of the medical profession in Texas have equaled Dr. Thomas of Midland in progressiveness and in keeping themselves informed and in touch with the latest developments of the medical and surgical science and practice. Dr. Thomas began his practice about ten years ago, and since then has taken a great deal of time from his practice in order to pursue courses of study and clinical observation in the best schools and hospitals of the country.

Dr. John B. Thomas was born in Callahan county, Texas, July 31, 1878, being the oldest in a family of two sons and four daughters born to David and Eliza Thomas. The father, who came to Texas from Missouri, being one of the old settlers of central and western Texas, is now living at Abilene, and has for many years been in the stock business in Callahan county, where he still owns and operates his ranch.

Dr. Thomas attained his education in the public schools of Texas, and subsequently entered the medical school of the University of Texas at Galveston, where he was graduated in 1902 with the degree M. D. During the following year he was in the John Sealy Hospital at Galveston as a member of the resident staff. In 1903 he opened his office at Abilene, where he remained in active practice until 1905. In that year he established his business at Midland, and has enjoyed a large and prosperous practice in this city and surrounding country. In 1908 Dr. Thomas took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic Medical school and hospital, and in 1912 followed this up with another course in the Philadelphia Polyclinic College for graduates in medicine. He is an active member of the County Medical Society, and is ex-president of the El Paso-Big Springs Medical Society, is a member of the Texas State Medical Association, and belongs to the American Medical Association. The Doctor is a staunch Democrat, and fraternally is affiliated with the Masonic Order. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of Hella Temple of the Mystic Shrine and his church is the Baptist. On May 28, 1908, at Big Springs, Texas, Dr. Thomas married Miss Read Hurt, a daughter of Dr. J. H. Hurt, of Big Springs, where he is division surgeon for the Texas and Pacific Railroad. The mother is Mrs. Lillie Read Hurt, and both her parents are still living at Big Springs. The doctor and wife have two children: Lillian Hurt and Lucile Hurt Thomas, the former aged four and the latter two years.

HON. CLAUDE POLLARD. It is but natural that the world should instinctively pay deference to the man whose success has been worthily achieved, who has attained success by honorable methods and acquired the highest reputation in his chosen calling by merit, and whose social prominence is not less the result of an irreproachable life than of recognized natural gifts. Among the men who have brought honor and prestige to the Panola county bar, Hon. Claude Pollard holds a prominent place. Belonging to that class of men who appreciate and value their success the more because it has been self-gained, he has steadfastly risen in the ranks of his profession, until at this time he holds the responsible position of general attorney for the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico Railroad (The Frisco System), with headquarters at Kingsville. Mr. Pollard is a native of Texas, and was born in Panola county, in the eastern part of the State, in 1874, a son of Hamilton and Jane (Davis) Pollard.

Hamilton Pollard was born in South Carolina, and as a young man went to Texas during the fifties and settled in Panola county. At the outbreak of the war between the North and the South, he enlisted for service in the Confederate army, and for four years fought valiantly in Walker's Division of the Trans-Mississippi Department. At the close of the war he returned to Panola county and was elected county clerk, but shortly thereafter was ousted from his position by the reconstruction governor, E. J. Davis, because of his refusal to take the "Iron Clad Oath." Immediately following the reconstruction position, he was elected by the people to his former position, and continued to serve in that office for upwards of a quarter of a century, eloquent evidence of the esteem in which he was universally held. His death occurred in 1897, when his community lost one of its best and most highly-respected citizens.

Claude Pollard was reared on his father's farm in Panola county, and secured his early education in the public schools. He began his legal studies at home, and his knowledge of law and jurisprudence was entirely self-gained, the youthful student often remaining with his books far into the night. This assiduous study made it possible for him to pass an acceptable examination before the board at Carthage, where he was admitted to the bar in 1895, and he at once began practice there. His excellent attainments soon attracted attention and won him recognition in the form of election to the office of county attorney, in which he served for three years. Following this he was elected district attorney, a capacity in which he acted for four years in the Fourth Judicial District, and he was then appointed assistant attorney general of Texas under Attorney General Davidson, and continued as such four years. In 1908 Mr. Pollard accepted his present position as general attorney for the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico Railway, known as the Frisco System, with headquarters at Kingsville. He has always been a prominent factor in public affairs during his residence here, and his progress and enterprising spirit have been potent elements in the substantial development and advancement of Kingsville. As counsel for corporations Mr. Pollard is considered invaluable, and among his fellow practitioners is recognized as a desirable associate and as a worthy and formidable adversary. Fraternally, he is connected with the Masons, in which he has reached the York Rite and Shriner degrees.

Mr. Pollard was married to Miss Julia Newton, who was born in Panola county, Texas, and to this union there have been born two children: Loraine and Claude, Jr.

ANDREW L. ELLIOTT. Among the business men of Waco who have gained success in special fields of endeavor, Andrew L. Elliott is entitled to more than ordinary mention. As an auditor and accountant he has built up an excellent business, and at the present time has on his books the names of many of the leading business houses of the city. During the fifteen years that Mr. Elliott has been a resident of Waco, he has been engaged to a large extent in clerical work, for which he received an admirable training, and the experience thus gained was of inestimable value to him when he embarked in his present field of labor.

Mr. Elliott is a native son of Texas, born in Gregg county, January 13, 1859, a son of Dr. LeBaume and Frances A. (Burnett) Elliott. His father, born in Williamson county, Tennessee, in 1821, came to Texas as a young man of twenty-seven years, and here became a successful physician and a citizen who was respected because of his public-spirit and enterprise. His death occurred in 1901, when he had reached the advanced age of eighty years. He was still in the active practice at the time of his death. Mrs. Elliott was born in Georgia, in 1835, and passed away in 1884, having been the mother of nine children, as follows: Corinne, Minnie, Andrew L., Lelah, Maria, Burnett, Ada, Annie M., and Fannie.

Andrew L. Elliott received a thorough training in his youth which fitted him for a business career. After completing the curriculum of the public graded and high schools, he entered Central College, at Fayette, Missouri, and when he graduated from that institution became a bookkeeper in Dallas, following that vocation for eight years and being connected with various business houses. He next was appointed a deputy in the office of the county clerk of Dallas county, a position he held four years, and in 1899 came to Waco, again assuming the duties of bookkeeper. During this time he was securing valuable experience, with the end in view of becoming the head of his own business, an ambition which was realized in 1912, when he opened accounting and auditing offices at No. 512, Amicable Building. Mr. Elliott has built up a good patronage in his field, having given evidence that he is an expert in his particular line. He controls a goodly share of the business of the city, and has shown himself capable, efficient and absolutely honorable in every engagement.

On February 20, 1889, at the home of the bride, Mr. Elliott was married to Miss Lucy E. Barnes, daughter of Dr. W. T. Barnes, of Rockwall county, Texas, and to this union there have come three children: Minnie, Louise and LeBaume E. Of these Minnie married Perry A. Duncan, clerk for A. Bush & Company of Waco. Mr. Elliott holds membership in the Pretorians and has been identified with the Knights of Pythias since 1883. A Democrat in politics, he has been a notary public since 1896, and from 1910 to 1911 served efficiently as secretary of Waco. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is serving as steward and trustee thereof. Aside from his auditing and accounting business, Mr. Elliott is a stockholder, director, secretary, treasurer and manager of the Artesian Water Company, a successful business enterprise of Provident Heights, Waco. He is fond of outdoor sports of all kinds, principally fishing, and is a popular member of the Young Men's Business League and the Rotary Club, but his greatest pleasure is found at home among his family and with his books.

REV. JOSEPH STANTON KEY. The venerable Bishop Key of the Southern Methodist church is now eighty-four years of age, and probably the most active and vigorous old man in his profession throughout the ministry of his church. The city of Sherman has long been proud of the fact that it is the home of Bishop Key, as also of his talented wife, Mrs. Kidd-Key, whose executive ability has found a large scope in the management of the Kidd-Key Conservatory of Music, one of the finest institutions of the kind in the southwest.

Joseph Stanton Key was born at LaGrange, Georgia, July 18, 1829, a son of Rev. Caleb Witt and Elizabeth (Haymes) Key. Both native Georgians, the father being a minister of the Methodist church. Bishop Key attained his early education at Emory College of Oxford, Georgia, where he was graduated A. B. in 1848. In the same year he entered the active work of the ministry, so that his connection with the church as a minister has lasted for fully sixty-five years. He continued as a pastor in various localities, and in the year 1860 the Degree of D. D. was conferred on him by the State University of Georgia. Since then his career in the ministry has been continuous. He was elected Bishop on May 14, 1886, and has been located in Texas now for a quarter of a century. During that time he has visited all the southern states, China, Japan, and Mexico, repeatedly, administering office of Bishop, and supervising the church. For number of years his residence was at Fort Worth.

Bishop Key was first married on January 10, 1850, to Susan M. Snider, a daughter of Benjamin Snider Savannah, Georgia. The three children by that union are Rev. Benjamin W. Key, Dr. Howard W. Key and Lucy Key. On April 4, 1893, Bishop married Mrs. Lucy Ald, whose maiden name was Lucy A. Thornton, daughter of Willis Thornton of Kentucky.

The Kidd-Key School, or the North Texas College, is one of the institutions upon which Sherman fame as a center of culture and education now rests. The college occupies handsome grounds and its buildings number fifteen. The annual attendance at the institution is more than five hundred young ladies, whose homes are scattered only throughout the southwestern states, but in most remote parts of the United States and foreign lands. The faculty of the Kidd-Key conservatory comprises thirty-two instructors, and the curriculum comprises all the higher branches, music and all the fine arts. The Kidd-Key Conservatory is admittedly the largest conservatory in the south. Its faculty is cosmopolitan, and includes natives of Norway, France, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and opportunities are thus given for a varied contact with the culture of the entire world.

WILLIAM C. JONES. A native son of Texas, a fact of which he is properly proud, William C. Jones has for a number of years been active in local commercial affairs in Hamilton county, and now among other interests is proprietor of a furniture store at Hico.

William C. Jones is of Scotch Irish descent, and before the Civil war his grandfather was a slave holder in the state of Georgia. The son of the Hico merchant is the venerable Martin Hudson Jones, now bearing the burden of seventy-four years, and with a long and active experience behind him. Martin H. Jones was born November 28, 1839, in Blount county, Alabama. In 1848, he came to Texas, locating in Milam county, and in 1853 moving to McLennan County. There he farmed for a few years, and in August, 1861, enlisted in Company E of the Sixth Texas Cavalry. He was mustered into service on the seventh of September, and up to the spring of 1862 was in service in the states of Missouri and Arkansas. His command was then dismounted and sent east of the Mississippi River, but in the fall of the same year was remounted. He fought in the battle of Elk Horn, in the Missouri Campaign, at Corinth, Iuka, Hollow Springs and Murfreesboro. It was at Hollow Springs that the troops of which he was a member captured the wife of General Grant. The command went on into Georgia and Alabama under General Johnston, returned after the Atlanta Campaign to Tennessee with Hood and fought at Franklin and Spring Hill. In the spring of 1865 Mr. Jones surrendered at Big Black River, twenty miles from Pittsburg. Returning to Texas he continued a resident of McLennan county for a number of years, and in 1880 moved to Hamilton county, locating on Gilmore Creek. All his active years were spent in farming and stock raising, and he is now living retired, one of the popular citizens, and an interesting old gentleman who can relate many thrilling experiences of the war, and of his long career in western Texas. Martin H. Jones and wife had nine children, two of whom are deceased. The seven now living are five boys and two girls, and among them William C. Jones was the fourth in order of birth.

William C. Jones was born in McLennan county, Texas, January 27, 1876. His early education was that supplied by the public schools of his native county, and he also attended college at Stephenville. His first business activity was in the operation of a gin at Lanham, and has been engaged in cotton ginning ever since. Some years ago he established a furniture store at Hico, and is also secretary and one of the stockholders in the Collier Gin Company of Hico.

His citizenship has always been of the virile sort, and at the present time he is serving as a member of the town board. His political tendencies have been those of the Democratic party, and he works consistently for the success of that organization. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Yeomen. He is an active member of the Commercial Club of Hico, and his church is the Baptist.

On October 22, 1903, Mr. Jones married Miss Allie Tidwell, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Tidwell. Her father was a farmer and stockman, and his death occurred about 1878 as the result of an accident in which his team ran away. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are the parents of two children, both daughters: Miss Loretta was born August 25, 1904, while Wynona was born February 22, 1908. Loretta is now attending school. For recreation Mr. Jones enjoys nothing better than an occasional fishing and hunting trip, and usually spends his vacations in the enjoyments of those sports.

CHARLES E. DURHAM, M. D. Since his graduation in 1899, Dr. Durham's career has been one of exceptional activity and professional success. He has been practicing at Hico since 1905, and is a recognized leader of the medical fraternity in this part of the state.

Charles E. Durham was born March 19, 1869, at Kosciusko, Mississippi, a son of J. J. and Mary J. (Oldham) Durham, both of Mississippi. The Durham family is of English descent, while the Oldhams are Irish. There are still large families of both sides living in Mississippi, and before the war, they were prominent as planters and slave holders. J. J. Durham spent his active career as a farmer and merchant. During the Mexican war of 1848 he was a private in Jeff Davis' Regiment and returned home after the war. He was assistant doorkeeper in the House of Representatives at the beginning of the 1861 struggle. He resigned, returned home and then moved from Mississippi to Louisiana, and was living in that state when the Civil war came on. For a year or so he was employed in a tannery in the manufacture of leather for the use of the Confederate government. About 1863 he went into the army in Walker's Division, and continued to carry a musket and fight for the stars and bars until the end of the struggle. In 1880 he moved to Texas near Dublin, in Erath county. There he continued as a farmer until his death in 1894. His widow survived him a number of years and passed away in 1909. There were four children, three sons and one daughter, the latter being now deceased. One of the sons lives at Clairette in Erath county, and another in Waco.

Dr. Durham, the youngest of the family, though he had a good home during his boyhood and never lacked any of the real essentials of training, largely depended upon his own exertions to advance himself after he reached young manhood, and is self-educated in the sense that he paid his own way throughout his schooling. He was eleven years of age when the family moved to Texas, and for several years he attended school at Dublin. After that he was a teacher for three years in country schools and in 1891 entered the University of Texas at Austin, where he remained until finishing the regular academic course and his graduation with the class of 1895 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. With that equipment he continued teaching, and for one year was president of the Southeast Texas Male and Female College at Jasper in Jasper county. In 1896 he entered the medical department of the State University of Galveston and remained until completing his studies and graduating in 1899. He also saw service as interne in the John Sealey Hospital at Galveston. His first practical experience as a physician was at Sulphur Bluff in Hopkins county. He remained there four years and built up a good practice. In 1905 the doctor located at Hico, and has now been in practice there eight years. Outside of looking after the interests of his private patronage, the doctor has been city health physician and also local surgeon for the Texas Central Railroad. It can be said that he has almost never taken any vacation, and for period of recreations has devoted himself to study and post-graduate work for a more successful practice of his chosen vocation. In 1902 he took a course in the New Orleans Polyclinic, in 1905 was a student in the Rush Medical College of Chicago, and during 1913 attended the Chicago Polyclinic.

Whether in professional or social relations, Dr. Durham is a very pleasant man to meet, and enjoys both the friendship and esteem of his community. With success in practice he has become interested in local business affairs, and is vice president of the Walnut Springs First Guaranty State Bank and a director in the Lingleville First State Bank. As to politics the doctor has always supported the Democratic party. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order and with the Woodmen of the World, and is examining physician for the latter order, a place he has held for some years.

On July 14, 1909, at Huntsville, Texas, Dr. Durham married Miss May Goodrich, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Goodrich. Her father is a contractor in Huntsville. The doctor and wife have one child, a son born July 12, 1912.

ROBERT NATHAN GRISHAM resides at Sweetwater, Texas. He is a direct descendant of Sir Thomas Grisham of England, and other illustrious characters of the motherland; is a great-grandson of Nancy Hale, wife of John Grisham, who was related to Edward Everett Hale and Nathan Hale, prominent in the early history of our country; and is the son of Nathan R. Grisham, who moved to Weatherford, Texas, with his father's family in 1853. Nathan R. Grisham was placed in college in Missouri and a few years later the family were driven from the country by an Indian raid, and the young man returned home and joined a company of Texas Rangers who went to the border to protect the early settlements of Texas from Indian hostilities. In this service he remained at intervals until the close of the Civil War, when he married Irene Brown, the daughter of a pioneer Methodist preacher of Palestine, Texas. In 1874 the subject of this sketch was born and two years later his father made a permanent settlement in Parker county, near Springtown, and in which vicinity he resided until his death, in 1899. Nathan R. Grisham was a farmer, but throughout his life was much given to works of re-trenchment and reform. He organized throughout Texas, Mississippi, and other Southern state the Farmer's Alliance and other labor unions, and was a plain citizen of remarkable ability in public address.

Robert Nathan Grisham, before arriving at the age of thirteen, was seized with a desire to mold his destiny and gain his own education. Accordingly, upon slight provocation, at that age he left home. Under the roughest of adverse circumstances, subjected to menial toil from which he never shrunk, he made his way through the public schools and acquired a liberal college education.

While teaching a western school he studied law, and in 1899 was temporarily admitted to the bar, and the following year permanently admitted, and the same year was elected County Judge of Kent County, where he had recently taught, and there commenced the practice of law. In 1903 he moved to Stanton, Texas, and there pursued his profession with remarkable success. In 1908 he offered for District Attorney, subject to the action of the Democratic party. There were fifteen counties in the district and two opponents in the field. He carried fourteen of the counties, and two years later he was re-elected without opposition. During his incumbency he established his residence at Sweetwater. His administration was characterized with earnest and impartial service and the most faithful and fearless performance of duty. Since January, 1913, he has been engaged in the general practice of his profession and enjoys the full confidence and esteem of a large and appreciative clientele.

He is a member of a number of secret orders and of the Methodist church. He is a Democrat and stands sponsor for its foremost reforms. A tireless student and inured to every species of battle known to the hustings, he is not without force in the forum and in the field.

On April 29, 1899, he was married to Miss Mattie Fox. They have two boys, Robert Copperfield and Nathan Everett. The home life of the family is ideal and its genial hospitality is enjoyed by many friends.

In the onward march of Texas, where men are needed in the van of human endeavor, with his face to the fore this hardy frontiersman may be found doing his part for home, church and state day by day.

JOHN W. FOSTER. To have lived sixty-two years; to have given forty-three of those years to the faithful performance of daily duties, is to have achieved a record worthy of a place in the list of the honored veterans of the railroad game. And John W. Foster, now street commissioner of Waco, achieved such a record, having begun his connection with railroading one year after the termination of the Civil war. In the history of railroading, it was a period of new life—expansion and refinement. Lacking the many remarkable devices of today, the work was fraught with a distinct element of danger. Yet during all that period and in the years that followed, Mr. Foster's record shows remarkably clean, without the death of a passenger to scar or blemish it.

Mr. Foster was born in the city of Mobile, Alabama, August 26, 1852, a member of a family which originated in Scotland and which always exemplified the sterling traits of the people of that country. His great-grandfather, Solomon Foster, was born in Scotland and in 1779 came to America and founded the family in New York, being the owner of 3500 acres of land on Long Island, between Hempstead and Brooklyn, on which he herded sheep. This was known as the Foster Meadows, and in some places the old stone fence can still be seen. The great-grandfather was buried in Hempstead Cemetery, and recently it was necessary to dig up the headstone on his grave, which during its long placement had sunk into the earth. Nathaniel Foster, son of Solomon Foster, was born in Mobile, Alabama, in 1812, a grandson of Solomon Foster. He was a merchant by vocation and the proprietor of a prosperous business, but at the outbreak of hostilities between the United States and Mexico he laid aside his private interests and became a volunteer in the army of his country. He took part in a number of engagements, in one of which he received a wound from which he never fully recovered his death occurring in 1858. Mr. Foster married Miss Annie E. McKeever, who was born in New York, in 1825, and came south to New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1833. Her father, Robert McKeever, owned one-half interest in a linen manufacturing establishment which was located on the site of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York. Mr. and Mrs. Foster became the parents of two children, namely, Ellen and John W. In 1860 Mrs. Foster was married (second) to B. F. Saxon, proprietor of a sawmill, and he died in 1880, the mother surviving until 1901.

The early education of John W. Foster was secured in the Spring Hill School, Mobile, Alabama, which he attended until he reached the age of eight years, and at that time the family moved to Clark county, Mississippi, where he continued his education in the district schools. It is probable that the youth inherited some of his father's courageous and adventurous spirit, for in 1864 he ran away from home to join the Confederate army at Mobile, although then a lad of only twelve years. When he had walked to Mobile, a distance of ninety-six miles, he found that the city had been taken by the Federals, and thus he did not gain any military experience. Returning home, he attended school for another year, at DeSoto, Mississippi, and at the end of that time, a strong, sturdy youth, secured employment as a railroad brakeman, thus receiving his introduction to a business in which he has been continuously in the railroad service with the exception of two years when he was marshal and deputy sheriff of Clark county, Mississippi. In 1880 he came to Texas and settled in Falls county, in the vicinity of Marlin, but after eight months came to Waco, which city has since been his home with the exception of five years when he was engaged in railroading in Old Mexico in the passenger service. Mr. Foster has an exceptional record. He has never participated in a strike, has never had a rear end collision, has never made a mistake in train orders, and has never had a passenger killed while in or on his train, during all of his forty-three years of railroad service.

Mr. Foster was married at Shubuta, Clark county, Mississippi, June 12, 1873, to Miss Dora Watson, daughter of J. J. Watson, a planter and slave owner of Sumpter county, Alabama. Nine children have been born to this union, as follows: Walter, Carrie, Jack N., Hattie, May M., John J., Cecil D., William R., and an infant, of whom Jack N., Hattie, May M., John J., and an infant are deceased. Walter is a passenger conductor on the San Antonio & Aransas Pass Railroad, having been in the service for twenty years, and lives at Yoakum, Texas; Carrie, a widow with two children, Dorothea and Barbara, keeps house for her father, Cecil is a conductor on the Southern Traction lines and lives at Waxahachie, Texas; and W. R. is an automobile mechanic and lives at Waco.

Mr. Foster is a democrat in politics, and in 1912 was elected street commissioner of Waco, a capacity in which he has continued to act to the present with excellent results. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, and a member of the Order of Railroad Conductors, being local chairman of that order. With his family he attends the Methodist church. He owns seventeen residence properties in Waco, including his pleasant home at No. 116 Dallas street. Mr. Foster has ever shown his whole-hearted interest in the welfare of his adopted city, and has made a specialty of promoting good roads movements. His acquaintance is large, and the many friendships which he has gained since coming to this city he has without exception retained.

JOSEPH N. EDMONSON. One of the public spirited men in Hillsboro is Joseph N. Edmonson, a successful real estate dealer, and who has given considerable attention to the civic and political affairs of his home community. Mr. Edmonson has had a career of continued and straightforward progress from small beginnings to one of substantial influence in Hill county. He was brought to Hill county when three years old, his father settling about eight miles east of Hillsboro, grew up in this locality, and as he has been known to the citizenship for many years, so he has at the same time established a reputation for square dealing and thorough honesty, valuable assets in his success.

Joseph N. Edmonson was born in Dallas county, Texas, May 13, 1875, and his father, Richard H. Edmonson, who was born in Kentucky in 1835, was a substantial farmer and died May 31, 1905, at the age of seventy. The mother was Mary J. Smith, who was born about 1843, and now lives in Montgomery, Alabama. There were just two children in the family, the daughter, Beulah, married Captain George T. Barnes, who is secretary of the Montgomery State Fair Association, and lives at Montgomery, Alabama. They are the parents of three children: Gladys, George and Sarah M.

Joseph N. Edmonson attended the Hillsboro high school, until he was sixteen years of age, after that was for years clerk in a store in the county, and with that practical experience opened a stock of goods and sold merchandise on his own account for seven years. He was then elected tax assessor of Hill county, and gave a capable administration of that office from 1902 to 1906.

Following this he was for six months teller in the Sturgis National Bank, but on account of ill health was compelled to resign and engaged in less confining labor. After two years' experience in the real estate firm of Simmons and Read, in 1911, he opened an office of his own for real estate and loans, and has since enjoyed excellent success in this line. His customers have come to rely upon his promise and his judgment and for that reason his outlook is exceedingly bright. Mr. Edmonson owns a home in Hillsboro, one hundred and twenty-three acres in farm land in the county, and two lots in the city and five lots in Bynum.

Mr. Edmonson was married at Brandon, Texas, December 29, 1896, to Miss Pomona A. Alderson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Alderson. To their marriage have been born three children: Catherine, Velma, and J. N., Jr. Mr. Edmonson is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and also affiliates with the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the First Baptist church of Hillsboro, and in politics is a regular supporter of the Democratic interests.

DAVID M. RAY, M. D. Few men have so indelibly impressed their personality upon a community as did the late Dr. David M. Ray, of Whitewright. A member of the medical profession for a period of nearly a half a century, he rose to a high position in the line of his calling, his high achievement making him known throughout the northern part of the state. It was not alone as a physician, however, that he gained and held the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. His personality was such that he attracted to him friends and admirers from all ranks of life; his high ideals of citizenship and his willingness to conscientiously perform the duties devolving upon him made him one of the most helpful men of his day, and his support of movements calling for religious, moral and educational advancement made his influence felt for good in all walks of life. When he passed away the whole community mourned him as a man and a friend.

Dr. Ray was born in Marion county, Kentucky, September 16, 1840, a son of Zachariah and Elizabeth Ann (Miller) Ray. The family was founded in America as early as 1710, by William Ray, the great-great-grandfather of Doctor Ray, who emigrated to this country from England. His son, Joseph Ray, was the father of John Sheckels Ray, the latter being the father of Zachariah Ray. For years the family resided in Baltimore, Maryland, from whence it moved to Kentucky, and there Zachariah Ray was born. He came to Texas in 1852 and was a slave owner prior to the Civil War, carrying on large operations in the vicinity of Kentuckytown, in Grayson county. There he died November 7, 1859. By his first marriage he had one child. His second marriage was in Kentucky to Elizabeth Ann Miller, who died July 11, 1888, and they became the parents of eight children, of whom three survive: Dr. Alfred Judson, who was for years a practicing physician, business man and agriculturist of Grayson, and is now living retired at Whitewright; Mrs. Ida McComb, wife of Dr. J. W. McComb, of Jacksboro, Jack county, Texas; and Mrs. Martha Lindsey, widow of John Lindsey, who was a rancher in the vicinity of Jacksboro.

Doctor Ray was reared on the home farm in Kentucky, where he received his early education in the public schools, and was twelve years of age when he accompanied his parents to Texas. Here he completed his preliminary studies, and after some preparation entered the University of Louisville, Kentucky, being graduated from the medical department of that institution with the highest honors of his class. His first practice was in Kentuckytown, Texas, where he joined the Confederate army during the Civil War, as assistant surgeon, and later was promoted surgeon of Company G, Sixteenth Texas Dismounted Cavalry. At the close of his military service, he returned to Texas, but soon re-entered the University of Louisville for further preparation, and at the end of three years again took the highest honors of his class. On his return he resumed his practice at Kentuckytown, but on September 8, 1878, opened offices in Whitewright, which continued to be the scene of his labors until his death, May 7, 1907.

Doctor Ray's high ability, his devotion to the best and highest ethics of his honored calling, and his deep and inherent sympathy combined to give him high rank in his profession, and he was honored alike by the members thereof and by the general public. His practice was large and representative, and among his patients he was known not alone as medical adviser, but as friend. He never ceased to be a student, and in addition to keeping fully abreast of the advancements made in his calling spent much of his time in original research and investigation, many of his articles and pamphlets being recognized as authorities by the Grayson County Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, in which organizations he long held membership. His fraternal connection was with the Masonic order, in which he stood high, and which conducted his burial. His funeral was held at the Baptist church, of which he had for years been a consistent member, and services were conducted by the Rev. J. L. Truett, assisted by Elder J. O. Keyes and other ministers of churches of various denominations. Addresses were made by teachers and Professor Williams of Grayson College, in glowing terms spoke of Doctor Ray's devotion to his church and his community. He was an enthusiastic friend of Grayson College of Whitewright, and was the leading spirit in the rebuilding of the same after its destruction by fire. He was chairman of the board for many years. His remains were laid to rest in the Whitewright City Cemetery.

Doctor Ray was married January 30, 1873, in Kentuckytown, Texas, to Miss Sarah Elizabeth Beall, daughter of Edward and Martha H. Beall, early settlers of Texas from Kentucky. Mr. Beall came to Texas in 1865, having been a slaveholder prior to the Civil War, here took up a tract of land and became one of the substantial men of Grayson county. He died October 10, 1865. There were three daughters and one son in the Beall family, of whom Mrs. Ray is the eldest. Doctor and Mrs. Ray became the parents of five children, of whom three are now living: Miss Edna Earl, born August 31, 1876; Inez Ray, born July 8, 1885; and Gladys Beall, born March 25, 1891. David Bright died April 10, 1884, and one died in infancy. Mrs. Ray is of English descent, and belongs to a family which settled at an early time in Virginia. She still survives the Doctor and resides in Whitewright, where she and the members of her family are widely known in social circles.

JAMES S. JONES. The Bastrop county branch of the Jones family has furnished able men to the business, professional and military life of Texas for two generations. Mr. James S. Jones, himself a lawyer of fine attainments and successful practice, is the son of an early settler in Bastrop county and one time a member of the legislature, and a nephew and for some years a law partner of the late Colonel George W. Jones, one of the state's distinguished citizens.

James S. Jones, junior member of the law firm of Page & Jones, attorneys at Bastrop, was born in Bastrop county in 1875, a son of Benjamin Franklin and Margaret (Wilson) Jones. His father came from Tennessee about 1848, settling in Bastrop county, where his vocation was that of farming and ranching. In 1878 he was honored by his people with election to the state legislature. His death occurred in 1884, while his widow is still living in her seventieth year.

The public schools of Bastrop county afforded James S. Jones his early training, and he is a man of liberal education, having graduated from the Virginia Military Institute and took his law studies in the University of Texas, where he was graduated in 1897 LL. B. His practice began almost immediately at Bastrop as a partner of his uncle, the late Colonel George Washington Jones, under the firm name of Jones & Jones. This partnership was broken by the death of Colonel Jones in 1902. Colonel W. G. Jones won his military title by gallant service in the Confederate army during the war, was very prominent as a lawyer and also in the political affairs of the state, having served two terms in Congress and at one time was a candidate for the office of governor against Governor Ireland. After the death of his uncle Mr. Jones practiced his profession alone until 1913.

In 1901 he was elected a member of the twenty-seventh Texas legislature, and in 1906 was appointed to fill the unexpired term of J. P. Buchanan, now member of Congress, in the office of district attorney in the twenty-first judicial district court, and was regularly elected to the office in 1908, and again in 1910 and 1912. The duties of this office brought him a broad experience in all phases of the law, and in 1913 he resigned his office in order to form a partnership with Judge P. D. Page, under the name of Page & Jones. Mr. Jones served as a captain of the Sayers Rifles until that organization was discontinued in 1905. Fraternally he is especially active in Masonry, having membership in Gamble Lodge, No. 244, A. F. & A. M.; Bastrop Chapter, R. A. M.; Smithville Commandery, K. T.; Ben-Hur Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine; besides membership with the Woodman of the World and the Improved Order of Red Men. In 1901 Mr. Jones married Miss Lulu Reynolds, daughter of A. B. and Marietta (Green) Reynolds of Bastrop county. To their marriage has been born one daughter, Margaret Jones.

WILLIAM J. RUSSELL. Superintendent of the Exporters and Traders Compress Company at Hillsboro, William J. Russell has been in this business for a quarter of a century, and has a thorough experience as a cotton man and is known and enjoys a wide acquaintance among cotton producers and dealers throughout the state.

A native Texan, he was born at Brazoria, Texas, October 6, 1867. His father, Daniel L. Russell, who was born in 1840, was an attorney by profession and died in 1906. His mother Margaret A. (Smith) Russell, was born in Virginia, and is also deceased. There were four children: William J., Daniel L., Jr., Julian, and George A.

The first seventeen years of his life were spent principally in Bell county, and while there he acquired enough of an education to fit him for his practical work in life. The following two years were spent chiefly in travel, to many remote sections of the United States, all the time with a view to a situation which would give the proper opportunity for advancement and afford him a contented lot in life. His quest finally brought him home to Texas at the age of nineteen and here he has found ample satisfaction for the ambitions of his earlier years. He became identified with cotton compress work and went from place to place over the state, until 1898. He then went to work for the Belton Compress Company, at Belton, and in 1903 began work for the exporters and traders cotton compress and warehouse company. Since 1905 he has been superintendent of the Hillsboro plant of this corporation, and is regarded as one of the ablest men in his line in this part of the state.

Mr. Russell was married at Belton, Texas, January 1, 1904, to Miss Mary E. Glover, a daughter of Joseph Glover of Bastrop, Texas. They have two children, Lindsey G. and Margaret. A Democratic worker, Mr. Russell for six years held the office of City Collector at Belton. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and fraternally his associations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, having numerous friends both outside and inside of his fraternal relations. He also belongs to the Commercial Club and the Booster Club. His home is at 317 Corsicana Street.

W. J. Carlton.

HON. W. T. CARLTON. One of the most dependable and successful practitioners at the bar of Wichita Falls, W. T. Carlton also has the distinction of having been the architect of his own fortunes. When he embarked upon his career he was possessed of neither capital nor influential friends, and succeeded in making a name and a position for himself only after a period spent in the most earnest and assiduous application to his chosen vocation. A man of settled purpose and firm conviction, practical and progressive in his aim, he holds a high and substantial position not alone in his profession but is the confident of the general public as well.

Mr. Carlton, who was born in Navarro county, Texas, May 2, 1862, is proud of the destiny which made him a native of the Lone Star State, and also has reason to congratulate himself upon the part which various members of his family have played in Texas since the early days. His father saw service as a Confederate soldier, and not a few of the better distinctions of the world have been possessed by this family.

W. T. Carlton was the first-born of twelve children in the family of Blake and Mary Elizabeth (Richey) Carlton. Blake Carlton was born in Thomas county, Georgia, a son of Shadrach and Mary (Sloan) Carlton, who all came to Houston county, Texas, in 1852, becoming early settlers in that portion of south Texas. Shadrach Carlton was born in North Carolina and his wife was descended from a family of early North Carolina settlers. Both Shadrach and Mary Carlton died in Houston county. Of their eight children, four sons and four daughters, Blake Carlton was sixth. The latter spent many years as a successful stock raiser in various parts of Texas, and about ten years after he came to this state he enlisted as a private in Parsons' Brigade of Texas cavalry. He fought with that command in many campaigns and engagements, and went through the war without wounds or capture. His death occurred at Frederick, Oklahoma, July 12, 1912, resulting from a stroke of paralysis which fell upon him as he was visiting his oldest daughter. Blake Carlton was married in Navarro county, Texas, to Mary Richey, who was born at Wheelock, Robertson county, Texas, was educated in the schools at Corsicana, and who died at Fort Worth, May 21, 1906, when sixty-five years of age. She was a daughter of William and Polly (Spence) Richey, the Spences having come from Tennessee. Besides W. T. Carlton, the other eleven children of Blake Carlton and wife were as follows: Annie, is the wife of B. W. Chism, of Frederick, Oklahoma, and has a family of five children; J. B. Carlton, who is a farmer of Erath county, married Alice Simer, a native of Texas, and has seven children; Susan, married J. A. Walker, a native of Louisiana, and engaged in the general transfer business at Fort Worth, and they have one daughter, Nettie, the widow of Peyton Parker, who was born in Texas, and became a prominent ranchman, and died in April, 1913, at Roswell, New Mexico, is now living with her brother, Judge Carlton, in Wichita Falls, being the mother of two girls; R. H., who died at the age of sixteen years at Dawson in Navarro county; Parlee is the wife of D. H. Bowen, a native Texan and a farmer of Erath county, and has seven children; Louise, married Frank Hurst, who is a farmer at Weatherford, Texas, and at her death in February, 1900, left two sons; Lizzie, married John Simer, a native Texan and farmer at Lamesa, Texas, and has five children; Ada, died in infancy; Kirksey H., died at the age of five years; and Lena, is the wife of Custer Britton, a native Texan rancher and farmer in Erath county, and they have three children.

Mr. W. T. Carlton received his early education in the public schools of Navarro county, and that was supplemented by a course in a private institution under the preceptorship of E. C. Chambers at Thornton. Adopting the vocation of educator, he was for some seven years engaged in teaching school in Limestone county, and in the meantime applied himself principally to his law studies. Admitted to the bar in 1894 at Erath county, Mr. Carlton was engaged in practice there until 1910, in which year he moved to Wichita Falls. Here he has represented as attorney a number of large interests in important litigation during the past few years, and is now one of the most successful practitioners in the county. He has always been absolutely devoted to the cause of his clients in whatever field he has worked, but has never forgotten the ethics of the profession nor stooped to unworthy means to gain an advantage. He is still a close student, possesses a valuable law library and takes an active interest in the work of the local and county bar association. Politically he is a Democrat, but has not cared for the struggles of the public arena, preferring to devote his entire energy to his profession. As a Master Mason he has passed all the chairs in the lodge.

Mr. Carlton was married October 21, 1886, to Margaret Lofton, a daughter of William Lofton. Her father was of a prominent Texas family in Limestone county, well known in that locality as a farmer and merchant. Mrs. Carlton died three months after their marriage at Dawson in Navarro county, February 10, 1887. On Christmas Day of 1891, Mr. Carlton married Laura Whitacre, a daughter of Captain W. B. and Matilda (Robert) Whitacre. Captain Whitacre, who was born in Ohio, and descended from the noted Whitacre family which has furnished many successful men and women to the world, spent his early boyhood in Illinois, and came to Texas in 1850. During the war he served as captain in the Home Rangers, and was a prominent man in many ways during the early history of central Texas. His death occurred June 10, 1910, when eighty-two years of age.

Matilda Roberts comes of an early Texas family, and she died in 1897 or 1898. Mr. Carlton has one child, Ora Laura, who was born October 3, 1892, at Lingleville, Erath county. Miss Carlton has a prominent part in the social circles of Wichita Falls and the family reside in a handsome modern home in that city.

ARTHUR L. BLANCHARD. The career of Mr. Blanchard of Hillsboro has been one in which he has utilized from time to time all the opportunities presented, and from one point of vantage has worked to another, until he became independently prosperous in business affairs, and stands in the front rank of his profession in the state. For twenty years, Mr. Blanchard, as a result of an illness which compelled a change of vocations has been a photographer, and his position in that work is indicated by the fact that he served three years as president of the professional photographers association of Texas, for six years as secretary and is now in his third term as treasurer of the association.

Arthur L. Blanchard was born at Middletown, New York, April 21, 1853. His parents were George and Emily (Loomis) Blanchard, both of whom were born near Windham Center, New York, the father in 1836, and the mother in 1831. In 1861, the family moved to the state of Virginia, and from there came to Texas in 1876. His father, who was a farmer, died in 1904, and the mother passed away June 7, 1907. Their five children were: Olney, Arthur L. Howard, Irving and Fannie.

Arthur L. Blanchard grew up in Virginia, attended the common schools at Scottsville, and was also a student in the University of Virginia for some time. When he was twenty-one years of age he came to Texas, and spent four years as a farm laborer. His father was renting a place in Hill county, and the son obtained permission from the owner of the land to put in a crop of cotton on ten acres of marsh. As the spring was a dry one, he had little difficulty in plowing and planting his ten acres, and the crop netted twelve bales. The sale of this cotton was what started Mr. Blanchard on his business career. His father was a man in only ordinary circumstances, and allowed the children only very meagre returns for their labors and assistance, so that it was necessary for him to secure some capital by independent enterprise. In 1881 Mr. Blanchard moved to Hillsboro, and began business as a carpenter and contractor. In time he had developed a large and prosperous business, and was only prevented from following it to more successful conclusions by a stroke of the sun, which obliged him to give up outdoor occupation and seek other employment. His interests had already been directed to photography and since 1894 he has conducted the business in that line in Hillsboro, and his work has brought him a standing among the ablest photographers in the southwest.

On January 8, 1881, Mr. Blanchard married Miss Bettie F. Cleveland, a daughter of Richard Cleveland of Fluvanna county, Virginia. To their marriage have been born four children: Myra, who died at the age of sixteen months; Horace, who is a railroad man with headquarters at Dallas; Cary, in the cotton business; and George, a shipping clerk. All the sons are unmarried.

Mr. Blanchard affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Honor, and the Woodmen of the World. A Democrat, he served ten years as alderman of his ward, and was secretary of the board of trade for four years. For three years he was secretary of the retail merchants association, and was a member of the school board for two years. He belongs to the Commercial Club, and is an active worker in boosting everything which will make a better and greater city of Hillsboro. At the present time he is serving in the office of city fire marshal. He and his family worship in the Presbyterian church, and outside of his business and his civic relations his home is his chief source of pleasure, and he and his wife enjoy much travel together.

ROBERT B. LEATHERWOOD. This well known Hillsboro citizen whose establishment as an undertaker is located on the north side of the square, is a successful man, though little past the age of thirty, and has won all his prosperity through his own well directed efforts.

Born at Iuka, Mississippi, July 30, 1882, he is a son of John C. and Sallie E. (Bennett) Leatherwood. His father, born in Alabama, in 1844, was for many years engaged in banking, real estate, undertaking and embalming at Pottsboro, Texas. The mother, who was born in Alabama in 1847, died in 1900. There are three children: Edwin A., who is practicing his profession as an osteopath at Eureka, California, married Minnie Dunbar of Denton, Texas, and has one child, Guy; Bessie is a widow, living at Pottsboro, and has three children, Luella, John and Henry.

Robert B. Leatherwood grew up at Pottsboro, Texas, and as soon as his regular school attendance was terminated at the age of eighteen he went with his father, and by practical observation and performance gained a good knowledge of the undertaking business. Subsequently he graduated from the Philadelphia Training School of Embalming and also attended during 1903-04 the St. Louis College of Embalming. In 1904 Mr. Leatherwood came to Hillsboro and was employed a year and a half with J. K. Dennis. After that he was traveling representative for the Dallas Coffin Company for five years, and in 1912 with J. L. Williams, established the present undertaking and embalming business.

At Hillsboro June 21, 1908, Mr. Leatherwood married Miss Minnie Hooks, a daughter of B. D. and Ada Hooks. Mr. Leatherwood and wife have no children. They are popular people in social circles at Hillsboro, and their diversions are traveling and the study of good literature. Mr. Leatherwood is associated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is an active member of the fire department, a member of the Young Men's Business Club, and belongs to the Texas Funeral Directors Association. In politics he is a Democrat.

J. J. THOMPSON. Farmer, cotton ginner and merchant of McKinney, Mr. Thompson has been in active business along these lines in north Texas for more than forty years, and though well upwards of fourscore mark in life is still active, a hale and hearty young old man, who has seen a great variety of experience, has met all his obligations promptly, and deserves all the contentment and happiness of a green and smiling old age.

His birth occurred December 18, 1835, at Hopkinsville, Kentucky. His parents were George O. and Margaret Thompson, the former from Virginia and the latter a native of Kentucky. His father was a furniture dealer and undertaker, and lived in Hopkinsville until his death, about 1896, his wife having passed away several years before. Mr. J. J. Thompson is the oldest of a family of two sons and three daughters, and beside himself the two still living are: Mrs. McElwane of Trenton, Kentucky, and Mrs. Paine of Pembroke, Kentucky.

Mr. Thompson grew up at a time when public schools were little known, but managed to acquire a practical education at Hopkinsville. Some time after attaining his majority, in 1859, he came to Texas, and was in this state at the time of the beginning of the war. His enlistment followed for service in Company I of the Ninth Texas Infantry, a regiment which saw long and active service in the armies operating on the east side of the Mississippi in Tennessee and other southern states. Mr. Thompson participated in the tremendous fighting at Shiloh in April, 1862, and received a wound from a spent ball. After the evacuation of Corinth his command went to Tupelo and there he rejoined his regiment, and continued with it in its campaigns and battles until the close of the war. After the return of peace Mr. Thompson instead of returning to Texas remained in Kentucky at his old home till 1870. Since that year he has been an active Texas business man. Locating at Rock Hill, he operated a cotton gin and store and a farm until about 1890, in which year he located in McKinney, having sold his other property, he engaged in the ginning business, bought a nice country estate in the suburbs of McKinney, and has conducted a store as a part of his general enterprise.

Mr. Thompson has always been a loyal supporter of the Democratic party, and for sixty-three years has been a devout worshiper in the Baptist faith. In 1870 occurred his marriage to Miss O'Brien of McKinney. About a month after their marriage Mrs. Thompson lost her life when a horse which she was driving backed the buggy off a bridge. In 1873 he married Miss Field, whose father, Jess Field, was an early settler in Texas, coming from Missouri. To this marriage were born two children: George F. Thompson, who is associated with his father in the management of the cotton gin; and Margaret, wife of Dr. G. H. Provine, a practicing physician at McKinney. In 1889 Mr. Thompson married Mrs. Anna Gatewood, who came to Texas from Tennessee, a daughter of Edwin L. and Rebecca M. Allen, who came from Fayette county, Tennessee, to Texas in 1883. By this marriage there were four children, namely: J. J. Thompson, Jr., now twenty-three years of age and manager of the store for his father; Miss Anna Rebecca, living at home with her father; Miss Rutha, aged fifteen, and Miss Rachel, aged fourteen, both in school. The mother of these last children died in 1909.

When Mr. Thompson settled in Collin county forty-four years ago, north Texas was still largely in the possession of the forces of the wilderness. He has seen Indians, buffalo, deer, wild turkeys and prairie chickens in great abundance, and in all the remarkable transformations which have been effected by civilized man since that time he has borne a not unimportant part. His interest has always been with the betterment and progress of his community, and he is the kind of man who is always a serviceable factor in a community. Mr. Thompson a few years ago lost his right forearm in the machinery of his cotton gin, but has borne this misfortune with great fortitude and can now use his left hand to write and still keeps active in business, though seventy-eight years of age. He belongs to a family which has always been remarkable for its sturdy constitutions, and his father was eighty-six at the time of his death. Mr. Thompson's home combines the advantages of both the country and the city, and it is a beautiful place, located at one time quite apart from city activities, but now becoming surrounded with the buildings and streets of the larger city of McKinney. As a Kentuckian, Mr. Thompson possesses the fine old traits of hospitality that characterized the people of that state, and it has always been his delight to entertain on a liberal scale, and to make his friends and callers feel at home, and he has succeeded in transferring much of the old-time famed Kentucky hospitality to his residence at McKinney.

JOSE ANGEL ORTIZ. When a man is intrusted by his fellow citizens to handle the public funds of a municipality, it is evidence of both his integrity and business ability. J. A. Ortiz, cattleman and capitalist, present city treasurer of Laredo, is a native of that city and a son of Juan and Maria Jesus (Farias) Ortiz, both now deceased. His grandparents were Reyes and Maria Antonia (Gil) Ortiz, and the fact that his grandfather was an officer under the Spanish government shows that the family has been one of importance for several generations in the affairs of Texas. Mr. Ortiz graduated at the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College as a member of the class of 1891, and began his business career as a clerk in the store of E. Morris in Laredo. After some time in this position he embarked in business for himself as a manufacturer of ice cream. He continued in this line of activity until the death of his father, when he was appointed administrator of the estate, to which he devoted his attention for some time. He then became one of the organizers and first president of the First State Bank of Laredo in 1906 and retained his connection with that institution for about two years, when he retired and engaged in the abstract business. His property interests in Webb county and over the border in Mexico continued to grow in importance until all of his time was required to look after them, and the abstract business was sold out. He owns a large cattle ranch in the northwestern part of Webb county, where he has carried on a successful cattle business for years. This ranch and that of his sister adjoining comprises some 50,000 acres. He is also interested in capitalistic enterprises, both in Laredo and Mexico, and is regarded as one of Laredo's most prosperous and substantial citizens. Although not an active political worker, he takes a commendable interest in public matters and believes in good government. This interest and the confidence of his fellow townsmen in his probity and judgment led to his being elected to the office of city treasurer, and the manner in which he has conducted the affairs of the office indicates that the people made no mistake in their choice.

ROBERT MCCOMB, Mayor of Laredo, Texas, and a prominent merchant of the city, is a native Texan and has had a varied experience in many parts of the State.

Mr. McComb was born at Corpus Christi, Texas, March 25, 1859, son of Samuel and Annie (Reid) McComb. His father and mother, both natives of Scotland, came to Texas in 1846 and settled at Corpus Christi among the pioneer inhabitants of that town. There Samuel McComb died in 1868. His widow was a sister of the late Dan Reid, who was Mayor of Corpus Christi and one of its prominent characters.

At an early age, Robert McComb was thrown on his own resources and from that time forward made his own way in the world. He began work as a sheep herder at $6 a month, and educated himself by attending school at intervals between periods of work. Before he emerged from his 'teens he learned the carpenter's trade, and soon after he reached his majority he was an alderman of Corpus Christi. He took an active part in, and interestingly relates incidents of, the stirring events of the '70s and early '80s in Southwest Texas, particularly along the Mexican border. His work as a cow boy on the open range took him over a wide extent of territory, and not infrequently brought him in contact with the desperadoes and cattle thieves that then infested Southwestern Texas. It is his opinion, however, that such outlaws as Ben Thompson and King Fisher, with whom he had intimate acquaintance in those days, were far above the average type of desperadoes of their time. They possessed, he says, many traits of character which placed them above the more wanton criminal class. Mr. McComb's own adventures with the outlaw element were thrilling and involved him in many narrow escapes. He is also old enough to remember the Comanche Indian raids of the early 70's.

Mr. McComb first came to Laredo in 1874, but he left here in 1875 to go to work in Mexico in the bridge department of the Mexican National Railway. Also for some time he was engaged in train service on the old Corpus Christi, Rio Grande and San Diego (now the Texas & Mexican Railroad), which was the first road built out of Corpus Christi, and on which Mr. McComb was the second conductor. In 1892, he severed his connection with railroading and returned to Laredo, which has since been his home. Here he established himself in the paint and wall paper business, and contracting in connection with these lines, and this business became the most prominent of its kind in Laredo. In 1908 he was elected Mayor of the town, to fill the unexpired term of Amador Sanchez, and he has been re-elected to this position in the two regular April elections of 1910 and 1912, and has served the city most efficiently in this capacity. In every respect Mr. McComb is a progressive. It is due to him that the city, under his administration, has secured a regular city charter, by special act of the Texas legislature; something that was greatly needed.

At Laredo, in 1909, Mr. McComb married Mrs. Mary E. (Spann) Burbank, who was for several years customs inspectress for the United States Government at Laredo.

JAMES D. COWAN. The years directly following the close of the Civil war were prolific in settlers in Texas. The men who had gone forth to fight in the ranks of the Gray during that great struggle and who with the fall of the Lost Cause had returned to their homes in the Southland to find them dismantled, with families disrupted, and earthly possessions gone, felt that they needed some new scene of activity in which to begin life anew and to forget the terrible disappointments and calamities which had marked the four years of red warfare. Texas, with its open range and spreading acres, offered itself as a fair field for these men, the greater number of whom had sacrificed their all to the Confederacy and were without financial means, and in almost every part of the state settlements sprang up peopled by these veterans and their families. To them Texas owes much for its rapid advancement and development, for the admirable discipline, sturdy forbearance and absolute courage which had become theirs through their army experience fitted them well for the conquering of the prairie and the establishment of a great commonwealth.

Among the men of this class who came to Texas in 1866 was the late James D. Cowan, at that time a penniless young man with only ambition and determination to aid him, but who at the time of his death, in 1897, was one of the wealthiest and most substantial men of Live Oak county. Born in South Carolina, June 8, 1832, he was a son of John and Eliza (McMinn) Cowan, his father being a planter and one of the early settlers of the Old South state. He received good educational advantages in private schools and was married in 1854 to Miss Anne Quinn, the daughter of J. O. and Elizabeth Quinn, natives of Ireland who emigrated to South Carolina during the early twenties. At the outbreak of the Civil war, Mr. Cowan enlisted in a South Carolina regiment, and during the four years that followed fought gallantly under the flag of the Confederacy, and when he returned to his home at the close of hostilities he found both his parents dead and the estate gone. Mr. Cowan came to Texas in 1866 with his wife and only child, James D., Jr., who had been born August 1, 1858. He took up his residence in Live Oak county, where, in the years that followed, through thrift and perseverance, he became one of the county's foremost men. He passed away in 1897, but his memory continues to be held in reverent affection by all who knew him. Mrs. Cowan preceded her husband to the grave in 1894.

The only son of James D. Cowan, James D. Cowan, Jr., inheriting his father's thrift and good business judgment, has added largely to the estate since he came into its management at the time of the elder man's retirement about six years prior to his death. He owns farms and ranches in several counties of this state as well as plantations in Mexico, and is essentially a business man, having never sought any public offices nor become a member of any fraternal organizations. He is of a very modest and retiring nature, but is known as a sterling citizen and as a leading member of the Free Methodist church. He has never married, but has educated two of his cousin's children, James and Anne Quinn, whom he desires to be his heirs. His comfortable residence is located at Van Vleck, Texas.

JAMES L. DOWNING, of Wichita Falls, Texas, is entitled to distinction as the pioneer nurseryman of this place. Some of the facts concerning his life and ancestry are as follows:

James L. Downing was born July 25, 1861, in Fayette county, Kentucky, and belongs to a family long resident in America. The Downings are of English origin and were prominent there for many years, a street in London being named in honor of them. William Downing was the founder of the family in this country and his settlement was in Maryland, where he was a farmer. James E. Downing, the father of James L., was born and died in Kentucky. He was a successful farmer and stock raiser and passed his life on the old Kentucky home place that has been in possession of the family for over a hundred years and is still held by its heirs. Mr. Downing's mother, also a native of Kentucky, was Susan (Hunt) Downing, daughter of Wilson H. Hunt, a pioneer farmer of Fayette and Meade county. She was the mother of eighteen children and lived to a ripe old age. Of this family, eight sons reached manhood and seven are now living. James L. was the fifth-born.

James L. Downing never attended school a day in his life. His education has been received at home and out in the business world. By close observation and the exercise of good judgment and perseverance he has won success, and he ranks today with the representative business men of his city. Up to the age of twenty-one years he lived on his father's farm, assisting in the work without compensation other than his board and clothes. During the next fourteen months his father paid him $12 per month and board, and out of this he saved $100. October 9, 1883, with a cash capital of $140, he left Kentucky for Texas, Terrell, Kauffman county, his objective point. After two years spent in that place, engaged in gardening, and the nursery business, he came to Wichita Falls, and established a nursery. Here he has spent twenty-seven years and has built up a prosperous business, being the pioneer in his line and still having the only nursery and greenhouse in this locality. In connection with his modern greenhouse, which has 12,000 feet of glass, he conducts a small farm of ninety-two acres, adjoining the city. Also he has extensive real estate holdings elsewhere, both improved and unimproved.

In the Texas Nurseryman's Association, of which Mr. Downing has long been a member, he was honored with the office of vice president for three years. Also he is a member of the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce. While he has always affiliated with the Democratic party, he has never taken an active hand in politics, and the only public office he has filled has been that of school board member. In this capacity he has served ten years. He is an Elder of the Christian Church.

Mr. Downing owns his own home at 812 Brook street. He was married October 18, 1899, in Archer county, Texas, to Miss Mary Hutton, who was born in Menasha, Wisconsin, September 6, 1871, a daughter of William and Louisa V. (Bellows) Hutton. The Hutton family were early northwest Texas pioneers, having come to Clay county, in 1875, and they were among the very first to settle in what is now Archer county, having been the third white family of settlers there, and when Archer county was organized in 1881 Mr. Hutton was the first assessor. He was also justice of the peace and postmaster for a number of years. He died March 23, 1911. His wife survives, making her home with Mr. Downing. Mr. and Mrs. Downing are the parents of four children: Norman Hutton, Alice, Wymore Bellows and James Layton.

SIMON G. DOMINGUEZ. There is one man in Laredo, Texas, who is doing a great work for future generations, and this man is Simon G. Dominguez. He conducts a private school for the instruction of Mexican boys and girls, and not only has a very successful institution but one that is of incalculable benefit to the young Mexicans. He is a native of Laredo, Texas, and has lived here all his life and he is widely known and liked throughout the city.

Simon G. Dominguez was born in Laredo, Texas, on February 18, 1866, the son of Lazaro Dominguez and Rudecinda (Jaime) de Dominguez. His father was of Spanish descent, while his mother was of Mexican ancestry. The latter was born in the state of Tamaulipas, Mexico, and both his father and mother are dead. Simon G. Dominguez was reared and educated in Laredo, and in 1890 when he was only a young man himself he established a private school, known as the "Instituto Dominguez," for the education of the Mexican boys and girls of Laredo, the town possessing a large population of this nationality. He started with just four pupils, but so successful has he been, and so high is the reputation of the school, that he now has over one hundred and fifty pupils. The school has been in existence ever since its founding, and Professor Dominguez gives individual instruction to his pupils. He is a thorough and painstaking teacher and takes especial pride in the purity with which his little tots speak the English tongue. He gives a course that embraces the first, second, third, fourth and fifth years, and the instruction is given in both the English and Spanish languages, so his pupils become proficient in English as well as in their native Spanish.

Professor Dominguez is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and is a member of a number of other fraternal societies in both Laredo and Nuevo Laredo. He married Miss Maria Muguerza, who was born in Laredo, and they have become the parents of seven children, as follows: Simon L., Horacio M., Adoracion B., Alma P., Minerva M., Homero M. and Primorosa V.

ROBERT E. DAVIS. A young business man who has had a successful experience in electrical lines is Robert E. Davis, head of the Davis Electrical Company at Hillsboro. Mr. Davis is thoroughly equipped in the technical details of his profession, and at the age of twenty-five has made a start in business and accomplished what many men ten years older consider a fair degree of solid prosperity.

Robert E. Davis was born in Hill county, Texas, April 3, 1888. His father, Edward S., was born at McKinney, Texas, in 1853, was a civil engineer, was trained at the University of Michigan, and was employed in government work on the Mississippi River until he resigned in 1878. He is now vice president of the Farmers National Bank at Hillsboro. The mother, whose maiden name was Agnes A. Turner, was born at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in 1861, and died in 1906. The five children were Robert E., Olney T., W. J. Bryan, Lucile, and Edward S., Jr.

J. L. Downing

Robert E. Davis attended the public schools of Hillsboro, then the Carlyle Military Academy at Texas for one year, was graduated from the Hillsboro high school in 1906, and then spent about four years at the University of Texas, chiefly in the study of electrical engineering, and in kindred technical and shop experience. After leaving the University one year was spent in travel, and he then established an electrical business at Waco. His place was burned out at the end of four months, and then in 1912 he came to Hillsboro and set up his present establishment, which has already reached successful proportions. With his thorough and scientific knowledge of electricity he is prepared to furnish a service commensurate with all possible demands.

Mr. Davis is unmarried, is a member of the Masonic Order and a Democrat. He attends the Presbyterian church of the United States, is a member of the Boosters Club, and a lover of all outdoor life. He is also a stockholder in the Hill County Agricultural Fair Association.

CHARLES GEBHARDT. One of Hillsboro's most successful business men is Charles Gebhardt. Mr. Gebhardt is a baker by trade, the proprietor of a large and flourishing establishment of that kind at Hillsboro, where he has been in business for the last fourteen years, and his success is due to the fact that he has concentrated his energies chiefly along one line, at the same time relying upon his business judgment and caution to invest his earnings in such a way as to insure him a competence. Mr. Gebhardt came to America a poor youth, with little knowledge of American language or customs, and in twenty years time has created for himself a substantial success.

Charles Gebhardt was born in Germany February 8, 1874, a son of August and Louisa (Leunig) Gebhardt. His father was born in Germany in 1841, was a shoemaker by trade, and died in 1884. The mother was born in 1844 and still lives in the fatherland. There were two children, Charles and Minnie.

With an education in the German common schools up to his fourteenth year, Charles Gebhardt then entered upon a thorough apprenticeship of the baker's trade, and between the ages of fourteen and seventeen also studied at night school and in a private school in order to complete his education and gain an equipment which would be sufficient for a business career. At the age of seventeen, having learned his trade, he came to America and located in Texas. The first year was spent at Giddings in Lee county, he was four years at Austin and then moved to Kyle in Hays county, where he started a bakery of his own and was in business for three years. In 1900 Mr. Gebhardt came to Hillsboro, bought an old building which for some time had been used as a bakery, and in 1905, his business having prospered, he put up a modern brick structure on the site of the original building, and now has the best equipped plant for the manufacture of wholesome bread and other bakery products in Hill county. At the same time he has prospered in other lines, and is the owner of two hundred and fifty-eight acres of improved farm lands in Hill and Ellis counties, besides two vacant lots in the city, and the property comprising his home and place of business on East Franklin street.

At Kyle in Hays county in October, 1897, Mr. Gebhardt married Marie Arnold, a daughter of Valentine and Mary Arnold. Three children were born to their marriage: Minnie, Louisa and Valentine, the last dying in 1912 at the age of thirteen years. Mr. Gebhardt has taken thirty-two degrees in Scottish rite masonry, belongs to the Mystic Shrine, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Woodmen of the World, the Loyal Order of Moose, the fraternal order of Eagles, and the T. W. A. In politics he is a Democrat, and his church is the German Lutheran. His own business and his family are the objects of his chief attention and ambition, but he occasionally takes a trip for pleasure and enjoys both hunting and fishing.

WILLIAM T. RENFRO. The business career of William T. Renfro of Hillsboro covers about twenty years, and in that time he has filled many positions, clerked, general utility man, a worker for others and for himself, and for the past several years has been proprietor of a garage and automobile supply company which returns him a generous revenue, but only in proportion to the service which he affords the public through that establishment.

William T. Renfro was born at Rockwall in Rockwall county, Texas, December 31, 1875. His father, William C. Renfro, was born in Barron county, Kentucky, in 1845, came to Texas when two years of age, was for many years an implement salesman, and died August 8, 1912. The mother, whose maiden name was Emma Isabella Hicks, was born near Athens, Georgia, in 1851, and now lives at Fort Worth, Texas. Her six children are named: Elmer, William T., Anna M., Graham W., Augusta S. and Grady. Elmer is assistant cashier in the American National Bank of Fort Worth; Anna M. married Gus Lashart, a loan agent at Los Angeles, California, and has two children, Elizabeth and James; Graham married Elizabeth Barksdale, who has two children, Elizabeth and Graham, Jr., and he is manager of the Life Insurance Company at Tulsa, Oklahoma; Augusta, who is unmarried, is in business at Dallas; Grady is time keeper and inspector for a large firm of contractors at Fort Worth, and married Lena Ellis.

William T. Renfro attended the common schools until he was seventeen years of age, then began as a laborer in an oil mill, spending two years at that, an experience which he followed with a year and a half as a grocery clerk. With that experience he came to Hillsboro and for eleven years was employed as clerk and assistant manager in a hardware store. Two years following found him in the office of superintendent of the water works, and then for three years he was manager of the Independent Telephone Company. In 1910, having a thorough knowledge of business in general and of several special lines in particular, and with a large acquaintance throughout the county, he opened his automobile garage, with a complete line of supplies, and with sales rooms.

Mr. Renfro was married at Hillsboro, January 18, 1900, to Miss Catherine D. Harrington, whose father, H. P. Harrington, is connected with the Ratan Grocery Company of Hillsboro. They are the parents of three children: William Henry (who died in infancy), Robert D. and Joseph T. Mr. Renfro is a Democrat, and one of his greatest pleasures and interests is looking after the city's welfare. He is alderman from the third ward, and always ready to work for the community. His church is the Catholic, and he is an active member of the Boosters Club. He owns an attractive home, besides three lots, and is well entrenched in the community, both as a business man and citizen. His hobby is athletics, and for a time he served as instructor in the Y. M. C. A. at Fort Worth, and for two years owned and managed a gymnasium at Hillsboro. At odd times he goes hunting and fishing and usually spends the summer on the coast with his family.

MARVIN WALDO LOVELL. Hillsboro in 1913 elected to the office of mayor Marvin W. Lovell, a progressive young business man, who has already shown the quality of his enterprise by formulating a fine program of municipal improvement and those who know the character of him as a business man are confident of his success in administering the public affairs of Hillsboro with better net results than has been true of any previous administration in a good many years. Mr. Lovell has been in the cotton business nearly all his active life, and is one of the business leaders fitly honored in his election to his present municipal post.

Marvin Waldo Lovell was born in Lamar county, near Honey Grove, Texas, September 6, 1874. His father, William T. Lovell, born in Kentucky in 1844, came to Texas and located in Lamar county, in 1851, when a child, entered business as a cotton buyer, and in 1889 moved to Temple and to Hill county in 1890. His death occurred in 1913. William T. Lovell married Gertrude Bennett, who was born in Illinois in 1858, and died in 1890. Her sister, Laura Bennett, became the second wife of William Lovell. All the children, seven in number, were by the first wife, namely: Marvin W., Mortimer N., Walter R., Gertrude, Bell, May, and George, the youngest who died in infancy.

Marvin W. Lovell grew up in Lamar county, attended the common schools at Honey Grove, and for one year was a student in the State University at Austin. His business career began as a clerk in the cotton trade, and after two years he began buying independently, and has since enjoyed a large success in that line. He is a stock holder in the Citizens National Bank of Hillsboro. He is one of the hard working members of the Boosters Club of Hillsboro, and whether as a private citizen or an official has done a great deal for the extension of city improvement. Perhaps his chief hobby is good roads, both in the country district and good streets for the city, and along this latter line will be directed much of his energy in the office of mayor. Mr. Lovell served as a member of the City Council from 1909 to 1911, so that he brought to the office of mayor a large fund of practical experience in city affairs. He is a Democrat, a member of the Methodist church, and affiliates with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Lovell owns his own residence in Hillsboro. In this city, on June 29, 1898, he married Miss Aline Rice, a daughter of Professor S. P. Rice. Her father, who died in 1887, was for many years proprietor of a school of collegiate rank at Florence, Alabama. Mr. Lovell and wife have three children: Marvin W., Jr., eleven years old; Elizabeth, aged ten; and Aline G., who is eight years old.

JUDGE PHILIP LINDSLEY. The death of Judge Lindsley removed from Dallas one of her best-known citizens—a lawyer, a business man, an author and a citizen whose career had many distinctions to elevate it above the common level of mankind. He was a fine type of the old southern gentleman, possessing the courtesy of the heart and the kindness and the courage that were the highest attributes of mankind in the old south, and he was a man of exceptional scholarship. Judge Lindsley came to Dallas in the pioneer days, soon after the building of the first railroad, and here he practiced law for many years and was always keenly interested in the commercial and civic affairs of the metropolis. He was also a lover of literature, and his facile pen bespoke companionship in reading and thought with the writers who still live in books. He was pronounced a writer of rare wit and the choicest diction, and some of his writings, published in the Round Table, the News, the Trotwood Magazine and other periodicals have been widely copied by the press of the country. He found recognition in leading periodicals of the east, where his productions appeared by the side of the world's greatest writers. His "Humor of the Courtroom," a pamphlet prepared for private distribution among his friends, is declared to be of exceptional worth. And not the least among his valuable publications may be mentioned the History of Greater Dallas and Vicinity, which he edited in 1909.

Judge Lindsley came of a long and noble line of ancestors, all of whom were cultured men and many were writers of ability and professional men. His grandfather, Philip Lindsley, was president of the old University of Nashville, which subsequently became Vanderbilt University, and his mother, Julia (Stevens) Lindsley, was a daughter of Moses Stevens, of Davidson county, Tennessee, a man of wide fame in his day and to whose memory the Masons of the state erected a monument which stands in the city cemetery at Nashville. Judge Lindsley's father was Nathaniel Lawrence Lindsley, of Lebanon, Tennessee, noted as a literary man. He was the founder of Greenwood Seminary, the most noted school for young ladies in the south before the war. The ancestry of this family goes back through nine generations to Colonel Francis Lindsley, who left England in 1680, on account of religious persecutions, and settled in New Jersey.

Many tributes were paid to the life and character of Philip Lindsley at the time of his death, but the most concise statement of his career was contained in the resolutions drawn up by a committee of the Bar Association of Dallas county. These resolutions, which form a part of the permanent records of the courts of the county, read as follows: "Philip Lindsley, died at Dallas, Texas, on December 4, 1911. He was born at Nashville, Tennessee, on the 2d day of August, 1843. Sixty-nine years was his span of life, consecrated to honor and crowned by integrity. This modest, quiet, cultured gentleman made the world better for his living. He breathed an atmosphere of gentleness and lived in the sunshine of kindness; courteous always and considerate of all, he found a warm place in the hearts of his associates; and his friends were many. He is and deserves to be remembered as a good man.

"Philip Lindsley received exceptional educational advantages. Lebanon, Tennessee, was the alma mater of his legal education. Ill health cut short his service in the Confederate army, he having enlisted in Hatton's Seventh Tennessee Regiment, while still a student. After a time he resumed his law studies, and after the war began the practice of law in Nashville. He served in the legislature of Tennessee, having been overwhelmingly elected thereto from Davidson county. He was a conspicuous figure in the municipal affairs of Nashville, vigorous in the uplift of its civic virtue and in the advancement of the cause of education.

"In 1871 he removed to Dallas, which continued to be his home until his death. For twenty-five years or more he practiced law in this city; for the past ten or twelve years he abandoned the practice of law and devoted himself to investments and his private business, his connection with the law being confined to serving as master in chancery in the United States court at Dallas, which he filled with unbiased judgment and unfailing fairness. Among the older lawyers of Dallas, Philip Lindsley was a familiar figure and beloved by them all; esteemed for his learning; respected for his intelligence and integrity, and distinguished for his genial nature and fairness and his never-failing courtesy and kindness; and through all the years among us this modest, genial gentleman has lived up to these ideals and is deserving of this distinction.

"His life suggests the thought expressed by the poetic pen of Alice Carey:

"True worth is in being—not in seeming,
And doing each day that goes by
Some small good—instead of dreaming
Great things to do by and bye.

"For whatever men may say in their blindness,
No matter the fancies of youth;
There is nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth."

"Philip Lindsley was from young manhood a member of the Presbyterian church, and around his fireside, that now knows him not, he is remembered and revered as a loving, indulgent father and devoted husband. Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Bar Association of Dallas county that in the death of Philip Lindsley the legal profession has lost a kindly and honorable member and the community a useful and kindly gentleman."

Very Sincerely Yours
Philip Kindsler

In 1869 Judge Lindsley was married to Miss Louise Grundy Dickinson, a daughter of Henry Dickinson, of Columbus, Mississippi, and a granddaughter of Jacob and Louise (Grundy) McGavock, of one of the most distinguished pioneer families of Tennessee. Mrs. Lindsley is a sister of J. M. Dickinson, a distinguished American lawyer and citizen, formerly general counsel for the Illinois Central Railroad and secretary of war under President Taft. Mrs. Lindsley and four children survive the honored husband and father: Henry D. Lindsley, prominent as a Dallas business man and one of the most vigorous exponents of good government in the city; Mrs. Louis F. Becker, of Dallas; Mrs. J. D. Wingate and McGavock Lindsley, of Ennis, Texas. Judge Lindsley was a member of the New York Society of the Sons of American Revolution and of the Dallas Chamber of Commerce. He became a member of the Presbyterian Church, South, when quite a young man, and for many years was one of the most active members of the Sabbath school.

WILLIAM O. BROWN. Head of the Brown and Renfro Automobile Company, the firm which does the largest business in automobiles and supplies in Hill county, William O. Brown has had a long and successful experience in mechanical and business lines, and is thoroughly well qualified to direct his present enterprise to success.

William O. Brown was born at Waco in McLennan county, Texas, December 18, 1879. William D. Brown, his father, who was born in Sunflower county in Mississippi in 1855, came to Texas about 1874, was for many years a druggist, and is now deputy county clerk of Hill county. The mother's maiden name was Mattie Caldwell, who was born in Grimes county, Texas, in 1859, and died in 1893. Their three children were William O., Myria L. and Mattie D.

Mr. Brown received his early education in the Hillsboro public schools, spent two years in the Culbertson Select School of that city, and his independent career began as clerk in the office of the Hill county clerk, where he spent two years. The following five years he worked as an inspector with the Bell Telephone Company, managed the Hill county lines of that company for five years, and then once more took up his work as inspector with the Hillsboro Telephone Company for two years. In 1910 he went into business for himself, organizing the Brown and Renfro Automobile Company. They handle some well known makes of automobiles, conduct a first class shop and garage, and the system and prompt efficiency which Mr. Brown has introduced into the business has been the chief factor in making it successful. Mr. Brown is also a stockholder in the Hill county State Bank.

At Hillsboro on June 24, 1903, he married Miss Jack Straight, a daughter of William A. Straight, a painter and decorator of Meridian in Bosque county, Texas. To their marriage have been born two children: Jack O. and Lenora M. Mr. Brown affiliates with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, worships in the Baptist faith, and is a Democrat in politics. He takes great pleasure in outdoor recreation, is an excellent driver of an automobile, and is fond of the national pastime of baseball and of fishing and hunting. His home is at 201 East Franklin street in Hillsboro.

CLAYTON C. DAVIS, M. D. One of the ablest men in his profession in North Central Texas is Dr. Clayton C. Davis, of Hillsboro, who has enjoyed special prestige as a surgeon for the past fifteen years, and has given the greater part of his attention to that specialty. His father before him was a noted old-time doctor, and for two generations the Davis family has given efficient and devoted service to the cause of humanity.

Dr. Clayton C. Davis was born in Randolph county, Alabama, March 5, 1859. His father, Dr. Joseph H. Davis, who was born in Oglethorpe county, Georgia, in 1818, finished his medical course at Milledgeville, Georgia, practiced medicine for many years, and died in 1878. His first wife was Harriet A. McBryde, by whom he had six children as follows: David L., Joseph H., James L., Samuel J., Maria R., and one that died when four years of age. For his second wife Dr. Joseph Davis married Mary E. Gillespie in 1858, who was born in Georgia in 1833, and died in May, 1914, at the age of eighty-one at Dothan, Alabama; and is buried at Lafayette, Alabama. She was the mother of seven children as follows: Clayton C., Walter G., Robert S., Stephen A., Harriet A., Martha C., and Mary E.

Dr. Clayton C. Davis graduated from the public schools of Alabama, and got into work which enabled him to earn a living and also provide the means for his future profession. In 1889 he was graduated M. D. from the Medical Department of the University of Alabama, and in the same year opened his office at Lafayette in that state, subsequently practicing at Dadeville, in Tallapoosa county, Alabama, until 1893. Dr. Davis has been identified with Texas as the state of his residence and professional career for twenty years. For five years he practiced at Bowie, was at New Boston for seven years, and since 1905 has been established with an increasing patronage and a growing reputation as a surgeon at Hillsboro.

At Chambers county, Alabama, December 24, 1890, Dr. Davis married Miss Willie L. Seroyer, daughter of John P. and Hamah (Smith) Seroyer, her father having been an early settler in Alabama. To their union have been born six children, whose names are as follows: Ruth S., born January 31, 1891, at Dadeville, Alabama; Robert H., born December 3, 1893, at Bowie, Texas; Clayton C., Jr., born in February, 1895, at Bowie; Mary W., born at Dalby Springs, in Bowie county, in April, 1898; Harriet G., born at New Boston, Texas, in 1900; and one that died in infancy.

Dr. Davis is a Knights Templar Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, and the Woodmen of the World, is a Democrat in politics, active in church affairs, and deacon of the Baptist church, and while he has had little time for public affairs outside of his profession, he has served four years, from 1908 to 1912, as health officer of Hillsboro, and gave a very efficient administration of that position. He is a stockholder in the Southern Traction Company, and in the Amicable Life Insurance Company of Waco. The doctor owns his own home in Hillsboro, and is one of the prosperous citizens. In the line of his profession he belongs to the Hill county and the State Medical Society, the North Texas Medical Society, and the Central District Society, and the American Medical Association. He has won well deserved prominence in surgery, and for three years represented the Trinity & Brazos Valley Railroad, Hillsboro, as surgeon. His vacations are spent at the hospitals of the north and the east, and he is as keen a student and observer now as he was twenty-four years ago when beginning his practice.

SIDNEY B. NORWOOD. In ability as a financier and in general business affairs, the city of Cleburne has no stronger character nor one better known among all classes than Sidney B. Norwood, president of the National Bank of Cleburne. Mr. Norwood is a type and example of one who succeeds in life in spite of every obstacle, and his record is the more interesting because he entered the present institution in the capacity of a clerk, and by proved ability and merit advanced to the head of that institution.

Sidney B. Norwood was born in Kaufman, Texas, August 3, 1877, and is still a very young man, and one of the younger bank presidents of the state. His father, Peter J. Norwood, who was born in Sequatchie county, Tennessee, in 1844, and who died in 1900, was one of the best known fire insurance men in northeastern Texas. Sidney B. is one of five children, the other four being Della, Lula, Oscar, and an infant that died unnamed.

The boyhood of Mr. Norwood was spent in Cleburne, and he attended the local schools until he was fourteen years old. His opportunities corresponded with his ambition, and he found a place in the bank as a clerk, was subsequently advanced to bookkeeper and then through a steady succession of functions arrived at the presidency of one of the strongest financial houses of Johnson county. With his success as a banker, has also come varied other important relations with the business world. Mr. Norwood is the owner of eighteen hundred acres of land in this state, and has a large part of it improved and under cultivation, and operates it through tenants. He is also the owner of two residences for renting purposes, and has a handsome home in Cleburne and is the owner of a business block in the city. He has on many occasions proved himself a valued counselor to his associates in business, and his customers as a banker, and stands very high in the esteem of the local community.

On September 17, 1902, at Cleburne, Mr. Norwood married Miss Emma Randle, a daughter of G. B. and Emma Randle of Rockdale, Texas. They have two children, Judith A., and Sidney B., Jr. Mr. Norwood is a Knights Templar Mason and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. He believes in religious institutions and is a church attendant, though not a member of any denomination. In politics he is a Democrat.

E. L. BURTON, M. D. For twenty-five years a member of the medical profession in Texas, Dr. Burton early in his practice began to specialize in the treatment of the eye, ear, nose and throat, and as a specialist in that field possibly has no superior in the southwest. His work has been more than that of a practitioner. His observations and research have contributed to the knowledge and facilities of medicine and surgery, he has been prominent in the activities of the organized profession, and for a number of years has conducted the best-equipped sanitarium in north Texas for the treatment of cases coming under his specialties.

Edwin Lee Burton was born December 22, 1865, at Atlanta, Georgia. Dr. Burton comes of an old and distinguished American family. His great-grandfather, Edmund Burton, left England and settled in the American colonies before the Revolutionary war. He made a notable record as a soldier, serving seven years during the Revolution and seven years in the Indian wars. By his marriage to Miss Walker in England three sons were born: Thomas W., William B. and Prettyman Burton. Of these, Thomas W. Burton, grandfather of Dr. Burton, was born in Orange county, Virginia; at the age of eighteen moved to the state of Georgia, where he became a farmer and a planter. Among other members of the family it should be mentioned that I. W. Burton, a second cousin to Dr. E. L. Burton, fought in the Texas Revolution and was a member of the party which captured Santa Anna at the battle of San Jacinto. By occupation he was a surveyor, and his death occurred as a result of getting poisoned while surveying.

Dr. Edwin Lee Burton, Sr., father of the McKinney physician, was born in Hancock county, Georgia, July 28, 1833; in 1856 graduated from medical school in Savannah; practiced in Hancock county until 1867, and during the war, in 1862, was appointed as one of the examining surgeons of the Twentieth senatorial district of Georgia for the Confederate service, and subsequently was made surgeon of Stephens' Battalion, and continued in the service until the close of the war. Dr. Burton Sr. in 1861 married Miss Mary I. Johnson of LaGrange, Georgia. In 1868 he moved out to Fannin county, Texas, practiced there until 1870, then abandoned his profession and has since given his attention to horticulture and agriculture.

Dr. E. L. Burton Jr. had a common school education and from the public schools entered King & Gillespie's private school at Bells, Texas, and subsequently was a student in Louisville, Kentucky. While working as a drug clerk in Denison he studied pharmacy, later matriculated at the University of Louisville, and took up the regular course of medical study in the Kentucky school of medicine, or the medical department of Transylvania University. That institution graduated him M. D. June 20, 1889, and for his work on general therapeutics he received the gold medal.

From early childhood Dr. Burton was a diligent student, and took up the medical profession because of his love for the science and his entire career has been one of the highest ideals both professionally and in his personal life. He is a lover of nature and outdoor sports. His practice after graduation began at Rockwall, the county seat of Rockwall county, and during his eighteen months there he acquired a fine practice. Subsequently he was in general practice in Dallas and did considerable surgery. After two or three years' experience in the general field of medicine, Dr. Burton decided to limit his work, and subsequently studied in New York city, New Orleans and St. Louis, taking special courses on the eye, ear, nose and throat. At the conclusion of this preparation for special practice, Dr. Burton located at McKinney, which city has been his home for the past twenty-two years. During sixteen years of his time Dr. Burton has limited his work to his specialty, and for ten years has conducted a private eye, ear, nose and throat sanitarium. While very successful in his practice, Dr. Burton has devoted much time, money and service to charity and has been a leading citizen as well as a prominent physician. Governor Culberson appointed him from his district to examine soldiers for the Spanish-American war. Subsequently the surgeon-general of the United States army ordered Dr. Burton to report for duty at Fort Sam Houston at San Antonio and requested the doctor to accept an appointment for service in China, an honor which the latter declined on account of his family, since it would have involved a great sacrifice for him to leave his wife and child for service in such a distant country.

Dr. Burton has been actively engaged in every enterprise for the betterment of McKinney, and his name has stood for progress. In the special lines of his work he has taken post-graduate courses in New York city, New Orleans and Chicago. He has performed many important operations, has been a student of both methods and mechanical devices, and probably his name is familiar to a large number of specialists in his field throughout the United States. He made some original operations for trichiasis with clamp, was inventor of the first tonsil punch in 1891, was inventor of compress with needle for bloodless operation of hip joint, is the inventor of an automatic iris forceps, and has originated various modifications of technique in other operations.

Dr. Burton is a member of the Texas State Medical Society, was secretary six years of the Collin County Medical Society, is a member of the North Texas Medical Association, the Southern Medical and Surgical Association, and is a Fellow of the American Medical Association. During 1888-89, in his student days, he was assistant demonstrator in the laboratory of chemistry and microscopy in the Kentucky school of medicine. Dr. Burton is the author of many scientific essays and papers on professional topics, and two of these which were read before the State Medical Society and printed in the Texas State Journal of Medicine are entitled: "Optical Iridectomy with Special Reference to Leucoma, a report of cases," and "Sympathetic Ophthalmia." Dr. Burton is a Past Exalted Ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and also affiliates with the Masonic Order and the Woodmen of the World. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat. While his sanitarium at McKinney for special treatments of eye, ear, nose and throat is modern and up-to-date in every particular, Dr. Burton also occupies the best-equipped offices in North Texas.

Dr. E. L. Burton on December 15, 1897, at McKinney married Miss Mary Elizabeth Duer. She is a direct descendant from Lady Duer of England, and of William

E. L. Burton M. D.

Duer, who with Hamilton, Madison and Jay during 1787-88 wrote the Federalist papers. Her father, William Thomas Duer, was born in the city of Baltimore, and served in the Southern army during the war between the states. Many of Mrs. Burton's ancestors were writers of note. Mrs. Burton has been prominent in north Texas society and club activities, has served as president of the City Federation of Women's Clubs at two different times, and was president of the Second District of Clubs a district including about twenty-two cities in north Texas and about fifty-three clubs. To Dr. Burton and wife were born three children: Edwin Weisman Burton, born July 19, 1899; Grover Cleveland Burton, born March 9, 1903; and Duer Burton, born March 5, 1907. On the birth of his second son Dr. Burton wrote to Grover Cleveland and told him he had named his son after the greatest man he knew. The young son received a letter and picture from the former president, written in the latter's own hand, and among other things was the expression of the following wish: "May the name he bears have no handicap in his race of life."

PERRY G. DEDMON. The Tarrant county bar suffers none with comparison with other counties of the state, and among its members one whose record of practical success has won him distinction and leadership in the local profession is Perry G. Dedmon, whose practice has brought him varied and important relationship with the business and community affairs at Fort Worth. Among the younger law firms it is said that none enjoys a better civil and commercial business in Fort Worth and vicinity than that of Dedmon & Potter, of which Mr. Dedmon is the senior member.

Perry G. Dedmon was born March 1, 1883, in Middle Tennessee, a son of W. F. and Mary J. (Potter) Dedmon, both of whom were also natives of Tennessee. The grandfathers on both sides were slave-holding planters and prominent Tennesseans. Mr. Dedmon on his mother's side is of Irish stock and German on the parental line, but a number of generations of the family have lived in America, and some of the early ancestors of both the Dedmons and Potters participated as soldiers in the struggle with Great Britain for independence. It was originally religious persecution and a desire for civic and religious freedom which caused the Dedmons and Potters to leave the old country and seek homes in America. Mr. Dedmon's father was a Tennessee farmer, and all the near relatives of the Fort Worth attorney live in Tennessee.

The fourth in a family of five children, Perry G. Dedmon was reared in Middle Tennessee, graduating from Hickman Academy, taking his degree of Bachelor of Science from the Pure Fountain College. His law studies were pursued in the law department of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, where he graduated LL. B. Like so many successful lawyers, his early experiences and source of livelihood and means to gain higher equipment were through the avenue of teaching, and after leaving college he taught school for several years. Before entering college he taught in the Liberty Training School at Liberty, Tennessee, and subsequently taught the ancient languages and also the physical sciences. With a liberal education and with the advantage which comes to a man from inheritance and fine family lineage, Perry G. Dedmon, successfully engaged in practice for the past ten years, has already reached a high place in his profession.

Mr. Dedmon has a number of fraternal affiliations, including the Masonic Lodge and the Royal Arch Chapter, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Beavers, the Maccabees, the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America. An active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Mr. Dedmon is superintendent of the Polytechnic College, which is the largest school conducted by the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the state of Texas. He is also the superintendent of the M. E. church Sunday school. His political affiliation is with the progressive wing of the Democratic party. Mr. Dedmon is a member of the board of legal examiners for the second supreme judicial district of Texas.

Mr. Dedmon married a former belle of Denton, Texas, Miss Jessie Allen Blow. Her father, W. M. Blow, was originally a prosperous Tennessee farmer and a number of years ago located in Denton county, Texas, and is now living with his wife at Polytechnic, Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Dedmon have three children: Roberta Louise, aged six; Annie Mae, who is four years of age; and Christine, now two years old.

Mr. Dedmon has been engaged in the practice of law at Fort Worth for the past eight years, and has lived in Texas for ten years. So far as he can read the future, Texas is for him a permanent home, and from the foundation already laid his career promises numerous distinctions and achievements both in the law and in citizenship. He is a speaker of pleasing style and earnestness, and his powers in this field have been exemplified outside of court and the usual routine of the lawyer, and he has been heard with pleasure on the lecture platform, and has recently prepared an entertaining lecture on Texas and her future.

PHIL W. ALLIN. The oldest established and most successful insurance agency at Cleburne or in Johnson county is that now conducted by Phil W. Allin, whose father established the business in 1898.

The founder of the business, Phillip Allin, who died October 6, 1906, was born at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, December 15, 1839, came to Texas in 1860, and soon afterwards went out with the Texas troops to do battle in defense of the southern Confederacy. He was in Company G of the First Texas Infantry in Hood's Brigade. After the war he returned to Palestine, Texas, and steamboated on the Trinity River from Old Magnolia to Galveston, and then came to Cleburne in March, 1871, where he went to work under C. Y. Kouns as deputy county clerk of Johnson county. Later he was elected justice of the peace of Precinct No. 1, served for two years, and then was elected district clerk and served ten years. He was then appointed chief clerk under John H. Hollingsworth, commissioner of A. statistics and insurance, serving there for four years, and then returned to Cleburne and engaged in the insurance business.

Mr. Allin married Maggie Vanoughy, who was born in Perryville, Kentucky, July 15, 1849, and now lives at Cleburne with her son Phil, who is an only child.

Phil W. Allin was born at Palestine, Texas, April 23, 1868, and has had a varied and successful experience since beginning life on his own account. Up to the age of sixteen he attended the public schools of Cleburne, then spent four years in the office of district clerk of Johnson county, and following that was for three and a half years in the Santa Fe Railroad office at Cleburne.

During Treasurer W. B. Wortham's administration he was given charge of the State School lands in the State Treasury Department, and spent five and a half years in that work. He then came to Cleburne, and in 1899 bought a half interest in his father's real estate and insurance agency, and has managed the business alone since his father's death in 1906.

On December 3, 1888, Mr. Allin married Miss Daisy Graham, daughter of David and Letitia (Jordan) Graham. Her father was a well known railroad man of Colorado. To their union have been born two children: Charles V. and Stella H. Charles V. married Virginia Criner, has one child, Stella Bess, and is in partnership with his father in the insurance business. Stella B. married Thomas Cleveland, a banker at Las Cruces, New Mexico, and has one child, Thomas K., Jr.

Mr. Allin affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World, and the Modern Order of Pretorians. He is a Democrat, and has been an active worker for the public good of his home community, having served as mayor of Cleburne from 1906 to 1910. He has an attractive home of his own and owns other resident property. He and his family worship in the Christian church.

Since September 1, 1912, he has represented the Fort Worth Southern Traction Company at Cleburne. Many years ago when he was a young man he was a member of the Cleburne Light Guards. He finds his best recreation in his home, but at the same time enjoys fishing and hunting, has all he can do in a business way, and is a very prosperous and well contented man.

HUGH C. BLASINGAME. In a little more than twenty years Mr. Blasingame has promoted himself as a result of persistent effort and good native business capacity from a position as a member of the fire department and a clerk into the proprietorship of a flourishing storage and transfer business, which is the chief industry of its kind at Cleburne. He has given close attention to business, which is of course one of the secrets of his success, and has good reason to be proud of his record.

Hugh C. Blasingame was born in Marshall county, Mississippi, September 12, 1869. His father, John F. Blasingame, was born in Walton county, Georgia, in 1839, was a farmer, and died in 1889, while his mother, Lena Mavetta, born in South Carolina in 1843, died in 1888. The eight children in the family were: Fred M., Hugh C., Mary L., John W., Bettie, William J., Dow, and Edwin. While Mr. Blasingame was a child the family came to Texas, locating in Hood county, and he received practically all his education in the city of Granbury. Up to 1890 he was employed at different occupations, but chiefly on a farm or in a store. In that year he came to Cleburne, and for six years was a member of the local fire department. He was then employed for a similar length of time with the ice and fuel company and next engaged as a general contractor in grading and street and road construction, following that line for three years. Since 1906 he has given all his attention to the building up of his transfer and storage establishment. He maintains ample warehouse facilities, has four teams and an automobile truck for his business, and keeps a staff of men constantly busy, in handling the daily business of his firm.

Mr. Blasingame first married Lena Vickers, who died in 1905, and their six children were: William D., Louis, Leo, Carl, Norman, and Nora. For his second wife he married Mrs. Lizzie Charles, who died in 1911, leaving no children. On March 9, 1913, he married Ruby Guinn. Mr. Blasingame affiliates with Lodge No. 131, I. O. O. F., at Cleburne, is a Democrat, and has no particular church.

FRANCIS MARION ETHERIDGE. With a membership of more than thirty years' duration in the Texas bar, Mr. Etheridge has long since gained rank among the foremost civic lawyers of the country. He enjoys, both within and without the state, a reputation for integrity, thorough ability, and success probably second to none in the Texas bar. Mr. Etheridge is the senior member of the firm of Etheridge, McCormick & Bromberg, whose offices are in the Commonwealth National Bank Building at Dallas.

Francis M. Etheridge, a son of Daniel T. and Mary Elizabeth (Pirtle) Etheridge, was born in Bradley county, Arkansas, November 13, 1859. His parents moved to Texas in 1869, when Francis was ten years of age, and settled in Falls county.

The early education of Francis M. Etheridge was acquired chiefly in the public schools of Falls county. The public schools in that vicinity during his boyhood were institutions offering only limited advantages in general scope and were continued for only a brief season of each year. Along with this paucity of facilities, he also had to contend with the handicap of working for his own self-support and advancement. It was in the face of these difficulties that he finally entered the law, after persistent application to the line marked out by his early ambition. For several years he taught school, during which time he applied himself to the study of law in the evenings and at any moment which he could snatch from the work of the day and of his regular occupation. After this persistent effort in acquiring his education, he was admitted to the bar at Pittsburgh, Texas, on December 9, 1881, and at that time began his career as a lawyer, which has since placed him among the leaders of his profession in Texas.

Mr. Etheridge practiced for some years at Groesbeck, but in 1891 located at Dallas, which has since been his home and the center of his activities as a lawyer. On March 6, 1892, Mr. Etheridge was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States. His partners in the present firm are Joseph Manson McCormick and Henri L. Bromberg. Their practice covers the entire field of civil law, and, of late years, they have been retained in many of the most important legal battles fought in the district, state, and federal courts of Texas. The firm has also accumulated one of the largest and best law libraries in all the United States, they having the reports of every state in the Union and also of England and Canada. Of late years Judge Etheridge has specialized in large will cases only, and the following article, showing his leadership in this department, was taken from the Los Angeles Times of July 12, 1912, and reads as follows:

"The argument of the demurrer to the complaint in equity filed in the United States District Court, involving the interpretation of the will of the late John W. Hunt, closed before Judge Wellborn in the United States District Court yesterday. After a hearing covering two days, the court took the matter under advisement and briefs will be furnished.

"The attorneys were Francis Marion Etheridge, of Dallas, Texas, and Hon. Charles M. Cooper of Jacksonville, Florida, and Bradner W. Lee of this city. Etheridge appeared for the complainant, the latter two attorneys for the defendants. The arguments of Messrs. Cooper and Etheridge have, perhaps, never been equaled in a local court for their eloquence and judicial learning, that of Etheridge being especially brilliant. His diction and knowledge of the law on the subject of the creation of trusts in wills, running all the way from the earliest days of English law down to the present time, quoted by the Dallas man without reference to any book, were the marvel of all who heard it. The effort of his adversary, Cooper, was but little less remarkable."

Mr. Etheridge, with the assistance of his partners, has recently won in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit a will case, McClelland v. Rose, involving a million dollars of property. This is destined to be a cause célèbre, because, in a number of previous cases in which the will was drawn collaterally in question, it had been held that the gift of the estate by the will to Peter McClelland, Jr., had been revoked by the codicil and that he took nothing other than a mere monthly allowance, whereas Mr. Etheridge contended that the codicil did not revoke or cut down the devise made by the will and that so much of the prior decisions as held to the contrary was obiter and ill-considered, and his contentions were fully sustained by the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. Etheridge was married in New Orleans, Louisiana, May 1, 1907, to Miss Katherine Stigler of Mississippi. Their residence is at 707 Browder Street, in Dallas.

THOMAS PRESTON TURNER. The business career of Mr. Turner covers a period of nearly a quarter of a century, and at different localities in Texas. His home is in Cleburne, where he is best known as a real estate dealer, but has numerous other interests as a result of his many years of successful endeavor.

Born in Columbia county, Florida, October 22, 1868, Thomas Preston Turner is a son of William B. and Louisa

F. M. Sherridge.

(Strickland) Turner. Both parents were born in South Carolina, the father in Sumter county, in 1846, and the mother in 1849. The father was a merchant and cattleman, came to Texas in 1890, did farming in Bosque county until 1897, then engaged in cotton buying and shipping until he was stricken with blindness in 1902, since which time he has lived retired at Gainesville, Florida. The mother is living at the same place. Their eleven children are named as follows: Thomas P.; Mattie L.; Amy B., deceased; William A.; Nettie L.; John A.; DeWitt T.; Lottie, deceased; Walter, deceased; Dillie; and Hazel, deceased.

Thomas P. Turner received his education partly in Florida and partly in Brenham, Washington county, Texas. His school days were finished when he was seventeen years old, and he quickly got into the active marts of trade, first as clerk in the cotton business. At the age of twenty he went into east Texas and engaged in merchandising for himself at New Birmingham, in Cherokee county for a year and a half. Returning to Brenham, he worked as clerk, classer, and instructor in the cotton business until 1897. With all that experience back of him, he went into the business for himself as a cotton buyer and shipper at McGregor until 1900. In that year he located in Cleburne, established himself in the retail grocery, produce and grain business, and in 1906 sold out and opened a real estate office. During the panic months of 1907 he retired from real estate temporarily, and moved to his farm. After three years spent in the quiet vocations of tilling the soil and stock raising, Mr. Turner returned to the market places, and since 1910 has been one of the very successful real estate men of Johnson county.

On June 10, 1894, at Clifton, Bosque county, Mr. Turner married Maggie E. Etheredge, daughter of Captain T. A. and Bettie P. (Davis) Etheredge of Clifton. Captain Etheredge served as postmaster at Clifton for many years. Mr. Turner and wife have no children.

He is a stockholder and president of the Texas Land & Loan Company of Cleburne, a large and flourishing concern, with a capital stock of seventy-five thousand dollars all paid in. Among other interests he owns and calls his homestead one hundred and seventy-eight acres, besides three hundred and sixty-five acres south of Cleburne in Johnson county and three hundred and twenty in Reagan county, in west Texas. Until he retired from the stock business in 1912, he made a specialty of raising mules and Jersey cattle. He now leases his land on the share principle, and most of it is cultivated to cotton. His most enthusiastic interest is real estate, buying and selling farm and city property, and perhaps no man in Johnson county is better informed as to present and future values of real estate than Mr. Turner. He holds commission as notary public, given him in 1907. Mr. Turner affiliates with the Woodmen of the World, and with the Woodmen's Circle, is a Democrat, and has no one church connection, but believes in and supports religion. He is a member of the Commercial Club and for some months during 1885 was a member of the Brenham Light Guards in the State Militia.

JAMES R. KEITH. Among the younger lawyers of Texas, James R. Keith of Cleburne is entitled to the position merited by thorough attainments and successful work and standing in his community.

James R. Keith was born in Johnson county, Texas, August 7, 1878, and belongs to a well known family in this section. His father is James H. Keith, a Cleburne capitalist, who came to Johnson county in 1875, having been born in Jackson county, Alabama, June 24, 1851. James H. Keith married Octavia J. Miller, who was born in Buncombe county, North Carolina, August 31, 1856. Their six children are: James R.; John W.; Samuel B.; Eula; Tommie; and Davis.

James R. Keith grew up in Cleburne, and after getting such training as was afforded by the public schools, he entered the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, and in preparation for the law was a student in the law department of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee. Mr. Keith graduated LL. B. in 1901, and in the same year was admitted to the local bar, and in December of 1901 was admitted to practice in the state and federal courts. He has since built up a large business as an office and court practitioner, and has a very profitable clientele.

Mr. Keith has one child, James R., Jr. In politics he is a Democrat, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to the Methodist Church South. Outside of his profession and his various local interests, he finds his favorite diversion in fishing and hunting.

PIERCE B. WARD. A lawyer whose practice began nearly thirty years ago, who served a large private clientele and in different capacities the public, Pierce B. Ward is senior member of the firm of Ward & Ward at Cleburne. Mr. Ward is noted for his power as a public speaker, and for his civic leadership, manifested at different occasions and in official capacity and is an excellent example of the self-made man.

Now fifty-four years of age, he was born in Enterprise, Clark county, Mississippi, and his parents died when he was quite young. He came to Texas at the age of eighteen, worked on farms and saved his earnings, went to Granbury College in Hood county, Texas, and after leaving college received an appointment to a clerkship in the general law office of Texas at Austin. There he read law and was admitted to the bar at Austin in 1885. He served an appointment as county attorney of Stephens county, and in 1888 was elected district attorney of the Eighteenth Judicial district. In 1908 he was elected state senator from the Tenth district, and now resides in Cleburne, engaged in a large general practice in both the state and federal courts.

While serving in the state senate Mr. Ward was author of many important measures that became laws. He introduced the bill in the senate and obtained an appropriation of two thousand dollars to build a monument at Acton in Hood county, over the grave of Mrs. Elizabeth Crockett, wife of Davy Crockett, the hero of the Alamo. Senator Ward delivered the unveiling speech on the 30th of May, 1913, when this monument was presented by the state of Texas. His speech on that occasion may be found below.

Mr. Ward affiliates with the Woodmen of the World. On June 18, 1885, he married Miss Mollie L. Thompson, daughter of W. C. Thompson, a farmer and stockman of Bosque county. They are the parents of five children: William L. Ward, Irwin T. Ward, Laura Ward, Bertie Ward, and Pierce B. Ward, Jr. The family are members of the Methodist church, and Mr. Ward is a loyal Democrat.

Following is the speech of Mr. Ward at the unveiling of the monument to Mrs. Crockett:

Ladies and gentlemen and fellow citizens:

On an occasion as this its pleasures are mingled with solemnity. To eulogize the deeds and preserve the memories of those who, in peace or war, have conferred benefits or added luster to their country has ever been regarded among the civilized as a privilege and a duty.

The desire to inspire an ambition to emulate such examples has doubtless given stimulus to such usages and sentiment; nor can it be denied that the means are conducive to a beneficial end.

The human mind is so constituted that it is not only interested, but aroused and stimulated by lofty ideals of excellence.

Indeed, a clear conception of what has been done, and what, therefore, can be done, is an important factor in achieving eminence in any profession or in any enterprise.

Cæsar might never have won his splendid triumph as a soldier and statesman had he not chanced to see in an obscure village in Spain a statue of Alexander the Great.

His passion for military glory was then and there fired by the thought that the Macedonian at thirty years of age had conquered the world, while he, though thirty-five, had achieved but little renown.

It is certain that an intense interest in the lives and deeds of the great men of their respective commonwealths formed no small part of the patriotism of the ancient Greeks.

Athens was but a vast museum of architecture, sculpture and painting dedicated to the national glory and the worship of the gods. The city was full of the memorials of actual history. Its youth was perpetually surrounded with incentives to patriotic devotion.

Every street and square, from the Piræus to the Acropolis, was adorned with the statues, by the most consummate masters that ever gave life to marble, of the great men of the Republic.

Solon—the lawgiver; Canon—the admiral; Pericles—the mightiest of their statesmen; Demosthenes—the prince of their orators, in imperishable marble gave inspiration to the Athenian youth.

Twenty-three centuries have not extinguished this sentiment of veneration for the illustrious dead. It lives to console and elevate humanity. Its memorials are found today in every civilized land.

On the banks of the Danube, that historic river whose waves have witnessed the march of the hordes of Atilla and the Paladines of Charlemagne, whose shores have echoed to the tramp of the Roman legions, the hymns of the Crusaders, and the Artillery of Napoleon, stands a noble structure of marble called the Hall of Heroes, a modern Valhalla, filled with the effigies of the great men of Germany.

"By the soft, blue waters of Lake Lucerne," says the eloquent Meagher, "stands the Chapel of William Tell."

In the black isle of the old Cathedral of Innsbruck the peasant of the Tyrol kneels before the statue of Andrew Hofer.

In her new Senate Hall, England bids her sculptors place the images of her noblest sons, her Hampden and her Russell.

In this great American Republic, in our capitol city, which bears his name, rises the monument of the Father of his Country.

Yet, even in young America the idealizing power of the painter and the sculptor are employed to kindle the generous ambition of the youthful aspirant to fame.

We should not defraud the illustrious of their reward, which is the great moral compensation for contemporaneous prejudice and injustice.

Nay, more, we should never take away from coming generations the strongest incentive to patriotism, to the love and service of their country.

Rather let it be proclaimed by memorial service and monumental marble, by noble and beautiful art, that those who consecrate their talents or their lives to their country will not, shall not be forgotten; that they shall live in memory so long as man shall reverence law, honor patriotism or love liberty.

Yet we, the people of Texas, must bow our heads and confess to the world that we have been derelict to our duty in neglecting to pay the tribute of honor to many of the illustrious dead who sacrificed their lives for the hallowed domain we inhabit today. A land purchased by the blood of Crockett, Bowie, Travis, Fannin and others of the valiant heroes who offered themselves upon the altars of patriotism at the historic fall of the Alamo and on the battlefields of Goliad and San Jacinto. History will never record a nobler deed, a more daring stand, a purer, more self-sacrificing devotion to the interests and liberties of their adopted country than the fight and fall of Crockett, Bowie, Fannin and their gallant compatriots. One hundred and fifty or sixty men under Travis arrayed against thousands of Mexicans under Santa Anna, the then President of Mexico, who had so often styled himself "The Second Napoleon," heroically did they wield the battle blade till the last man of that glorious band made to measure his length upon his mother earth. quarter was asked or given, and not a soul was left to the tale save the wife of Dickinson, with her infant daughter.

Well has it been said—"Thermopylae had its messenger of defeat; the Alamo had none." How terrible how heart-sickening, must have been the sight of conflict, the massacre of that devoted, unaided few—

Upon that dreadful night
When Crockett had to fight
The myrmidons of power
And the opposers of the right.

Throughout this broad land of ours we may view to the memorials which have been erected to those martyrs whose sacrifices made them possible.

The great educational institutions of the State, devoted to the uplift and advancement of the sons and daughters of Texas, and to the millions yet unborn who shall share their benefits; our great industrial manufactories; our wonderful equipment for the transportation, by land and water, of the commerce of our country to other parts of the world; the millions of acres of what were once barren prairies or unbroken forest land, roamed over by the wild beasts and savage Mexicans and Indians, transformed into fertile lands, and today we listen to the music of the sickle and the reaper in the harvest field; a land of beautiful homes, and houses of worship, their spires pointing heavenward, reminding us that we are living in this great Christian commonwealth, the Lone Star State, the brightest in the galaxy of the United States of America. A state that is the gateway between the Great Lakes of the North and the Panama Canal.

All of these beneficent conditions may well be considered a monument to the memory of David Crockett and his fellow heroes.

Three quarters of a century have passed since his ashes were buried amid the ruins of the Alamo, when in heroic defense of the cause of Texas he willingly sacrificed his life.

"Heard ye that sign with melancholy tale,
Borne mournfully on by evening's fitful gale?
Like some lone whisper from the silent tomb,
Shrouding a nation with its saddening gloom?
It came from Texas like a dying knell,
Where gloriously the immortal Crockett fell.

"Like some tall giant on the field of blood
Undaunted midst the gallant slain he stood,
He knew no fear mid dangers' darkful storm,
He boldly, proudly reared his warrior form.
His cause, the cause of freedom and the free,
His glorious watchword, Death or Liberty.

"Sleep, mighty warrior, in thy tombless bed,
The bravest hero of the valiant dead,
Thy name is cherished in a nation's pride,
Whose tears for thy sad fate can ne'er be dried.
Some sculptured marble yet shall rise and tell How Crockett and his brave companions fell.

"Freedom shall light her torch around thy tomb,
And Freemen write the story of thy doom;
Tyrants shall tremble at thy honored name,
And blush to read the record of thy fame;
While millions at their annual jubilee
Shall toast: A Crockett lost; a nation free."

To the children of our State the name of Crockett is as familiar as a household word, and generations yet to come will sing his praise; yet no marble shaft commemorates his deeds, and his name is graven on the memory of a grateful people.

History is replete with the events of his life and not extravagant to say that neither eulogy nor sculpture chisel can accentuate his glory or add luster to his fame. In that eternity beyond the stars where are assembled the saints and heroes of the ages, his spirit dwells.

There in the home of the immortals he is with Bowie, Travis, Fannin, Bonham, Houston, Austin and other heroes of the Alamo and the battlefields of Goliad and San Jacinto. For him we need not raise the granite shaft or the marble pillar. His fame is secure.

Yet upon us has devolved the duty of paying tribute to the memory of our illustrious dead, and we are gathered here today, upon an occasion which might be termed the Seventy-seventh Anniversary of Texas Independence, to attest our patriotic appreciation of the great service of David Crockett to our common country by marking with a suitable monument the resting place of his devoted wife, Elizabeth Crockett.

History discloses the fact that man never plays the hero alone. In all great accomplishments the hand of woman may be discerned. It is true that the condition of woman in the pagan world was unfavorable to the expression of the higher qualities of her nature. She belonged to her husband or her father, rather than to herself. She was universally regarded as the inferior of man. Cloistered in the seclusion of her home, she was given in marriage without her consent. Valued chiefly as a domestic servant, who was doomed to household drudgery as if she were capable of nothing higher. In short, her lot was hard because it was unequal, humiliating and oftentimes degrading, rendering her timorous, frivolous or artful. Her aspirations were scorned; she rose only to fall; she lived only to die; she was the object of degrading admiration or cold neglect.

The Jewish woman seems to have been more favored and honored than were the women of Greece and Rome, even in the highest period of their civilization.

But in Jewish history we read of woman as the coy maiden, the vigilant housekeeper, the ambitious mother, the obedient daughter or the patriotic songstress, rather than the sympathetic friend.

Though we admire the beautiful Rachel, the heroic Deborah, the virtuous Abigail, the affectionate Ruth, or the fortunate Esther, we do not find in the Rachels and Esthers the hallowed ministrations of the Marys, Marthas and Phoebes, until Christianity had developed the virtues of the heart and kindled the loftier sentiments of the soul.

It was not until then that she was seen to possess those qualities that inspire reverence and elicit the deepest respect when the mind of man is divested of its natural egotism. Then woman became not merely the down-trodden drudge or the petted plaything, but she took her place at the side of her husband, his friend and co-partner, the equal of man in character and his superior in the virtues of the heart and soul.

The original beatitude of the Garden of Eden returned, and man awoke from the deep sleep of four thousand years to discover, with Adam, that woman had been given him for a helpmate, to stand by his side in prosperity or adversity, to be his guardian angel amid the entanglements of sin and the cares of toil.

To the honor, to the eternal honor, of woman be it said that in the path of duty no sacrifice is with her too high or too dear.

Nothing is with her impossible, but to shrink from what love, honor, innocence and religion require.

The voice of pleasure or of power may pass by unheeded, but the voice of affection never.

The chamber of the sick, the pillow of the dying, the vigils of the dead, the altars of religion, never miss the presence or the sympathies of woman.

Timid though she be, and so delicate that the winds of heaven may not too roughly visit her, on such occasions she loses all sense of danger and assumes a preternatural courage which knows not and fears not consequences.

Then she displays that undaunted courage which neither courts difficulties nor evades them; that resignation which utters neither murmurs nor regret, and that patience in suffering which seems victorious even over death itself.

"Not she with traitorous kiss her

Savior stung;

Not she denied him with unholy tongue;

She, when Apostles shrank,

Could dangers brave,

Last at the Cross and earliest

At the grave."

It is stated that to only two women of the South have monuments been erected by a grateful people. Margaret of New Orleans, the big-hearted Irish girl who worked for a daily wage, found time to minister to the needs of the children lying sick in the hospitals of the city, by giving them pure milk. Seeing the good she could do, she saved from her weekly pittance and bought more cows, steadily increasing her bounty and enlarging her sphere of usefulness until finally she purchased a bakery and supplied the needy with wholesome, nourishing bread. When that beloved woman passed away the whole city was in mourning for her, and to her memory was erected an appropriate monument, representing a woman seated in a chair, a shawl draped about her shoulders and one arm thrown protectingly around a little child.

The other memorial in honor of a Southern heroine is dedicated to Mrs. De Peachin, of Houston, who so fearlessly and faithfully nursed the sick in a terrible scourge of yellow fever in Memphis and Houston, and who also, realizing the need of a home for orphan children, devoted the remainder of her life to the care and training of these little unfortunates. When she died, Houston and Memphis combined in erecting to her memory, in the City of Houston, not a marble shaft, but an institution called the "Faith Home," which she had hoped to establish; and thus was her life work perpetuated and a lasting tribute paid to her beloved name.

By an Act of the 32nd Legislature, appropriating two thousand dollars, the State of Texas presents this the monument, being the third and only monument at the grave of a woman in the South, we present and unveil to the world on this memorable day.

One of your best citizens, George Randle, long before his death, labored hard to bring about the erection of this monument and we wish his useful life could have been longer to have witnessed this unveiling today.

It was the pride and pleasure of every Senator and member of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-second Legislature to vote for this appropriation. And much is due to your then worthy Representative, Hon. Jess. Baker, in having this appropriation measure pass the House after passing the Senate. And a great pleasure it was to Governor Colquitt to give his hearty approval to the provisions for this memorial.

In the early history of our State, when a great commonwealth was being carved out of the rough-hewn wilderness, many an heroic woman, whose name will never be known to fame, and whose achievements will remain unsung, stood shoulder to shoulder with her husband in overcoming the difficulties which beset their way.

Thus the noble wife of David Crockett stimulated his ambitions, inspired him to renewed effort and aided him in every undertaking.

In the days when he was leading a rugged political life with General Jackson and others in the wilds of Tennessee he, with his associates, helped to shape the destiny of that State. It was then that he needed, and received, as always, the encouragement of his God-given helpmate.

And when through a mysterious Providence, he was led to join Travis, Bowie and Fannin to set free from bondage an oppressed people, he bade farewell to his beloved wife and children, pressing them again and again to his heart, his brave companion, forgetful of herself and her needs, whispered words of good cheer and wished him God's speed, standing, with her children clustered about her, in the doorway of their humble log cabin in the hills of Tennessee, waving goodbye until at last the sturdy figure of her dauntless husband disappeared from sight, never to return.

Ah, well may the State of Texas erect this monument to the sainted wife of David Crockett and the mother of his children; to the wife who shared his trials and stimulated his devotion to his country; to the helpmate who willingly yielded her claims that her husband might respond to the call of duty and who, when deprived of his aid and support, bravely undertook the task, under the most trying conditions, surrounded by difficulties and burdened by hardships, in the wilds of an undeveloped country.

History tells us that her son, Robert Patton Crockett, followed in the footsteps of his father, after the fall of the Alamo; left his home in Tennessee; came to Texas and joined the Revolution, remaining in the service until the independence of Texas had been secured, then returned to his native hills and in 1854 brought his mother to the land consecrated by the ashes of his illustrious father. And here in the shadow of this beautiful monument, which is thus enabled to do a double service, rests the body of Robert Patton Crockett beside that of his mother.

Down through the coming generations this marble shaft will mark the resting place of the wife and son of David Crockett, a fitting expression of the love and veneration in which his memory will forever be held by the people of Texas, and teaching to the youth of our land the lesson of appreciation for the hardships and privations which were endured by the wives and mothers in the frontier days in order that we might enjoy the advantages and the prosperity which surrounded us in these modern times.

Among the pioneers of our country none are more worthy of honor than the brave-hearted women who shared the burdens equally with the men; who assisted in transforming the savage-ridden wilderness into a land of peace and plenty; who repelled the invasion of the Indians when their blood curdling yell resounded around the unprotected cabins; who cheered and encouraged in times of disaster or privation, who bore with Christian fortitude the manifold trials which encompassed their path, and who with sublime faith and unquestioning patriotism sent forth their husbands and sons to carve out the glorious future of the Lone Star State.

And now in presenting and unveiling this monument let us reflect with gratitude and reverence upon the debt which we owe to the memory of Elizabeth Crockett, and other heroic women, who so willingly sacrificed themselves and their dear ones upon the altar of their country.

Fifty-three years ago her body was consigned to this grave to await the resurrection morn, and let it forever be a sacred spot here in Acton Cemetery and over her resting place let the myrtle and the fragrant flowers be planted, that the vine may entwine its purest and most sacred garland and the sweet singing bird carol its loveliest requiem.

JAMES WOLCOTT BYRNES. A business career of special interest was that of the late James Wolcott Byrnes, who died in Dallas June 5, 1907, having taken up his residence in that city in 1906. For thirty years previously he had been identified with south Texas cities. His widow, Mrs. Byrnes, still lives in Dallas, her home being at 808 North Ewing Avenue.

Born in Oriskany, New York, August 9, 1842, the late James W. Byrnes grew up in his native state, received his preliminary education there, afterwards attended college, and at the age of twenty-one began his practical career in connection with manufacturing. From there he moved to Washington, D. C., and did a good deal of paving contracting in that city during Lincoln's administration. He came to know Lincoln personally, and was always a warm admirer of that great and eminent statesman and president. During the war he enlisted in the Federal army, and saw one year of service.

After the war he transferred his operations to New Orleans, and was there engaged in paving contracting with George Fletcher as a partner. They established and built up a business of more than local importance, and continued together for a number of years. In 1876, Mr. Byrnes moved to Houston, Texas, and as a contractor laid some of the first permanent pavements in that city. After a year he went to Galveston, which city he determined to make his permanent home. He was connected with contracting and other lines of business in Galveston about thirty years. During this period the problem of furnishing fresh water on Galveston Island had vexed both private and municipal authorities, and it was a serious handicap to the growth and development of the city. It was thought that a solution to the question might be reached by sinking deep artesian wells on the island. The contract was given to Mr. Byrnes by the city to furnish a supply of fresh water, and he sank some thirty wells on the island. All of these proved failures, because they reached strata of salt water. In 1893, while still experimenting with the problem, Mr. Byrnes sank what was then the deepest well in the world. It also proved to be salt, and having failed in this direction it became necessary to attack the problem from a different angle. Mr. Byrnes then went out on the mainland some fifteen or twenty miles from Galveston, and put down a series of wells which produced an abundant supply of fresh and pure artesian water. A system of water mains conducts this supply from its point of origin, from underneath the waters of Galveston Bay to the Island. The Galveston water supply has for years, since the completion of this mainland water works plant in 1895, stood the test of all demands as to purity and quantity. During the great storm of 1900 which practically wrecked the city, the water mains suffered no comparative injury, and the city could rely upon a supply of fresh water in that calamity. Mr. Byrnes continued in business at Galveston until 1906. He constructed a great many wells and docks, and other public works for Mexican cities. Some years before leaving Galveston he directed his efforts into a new line, the creosoting of wooden construction and became general manager of the International Creosoting Company. While head of this company, he established two large plants for the treating of lumber products, one at Beaumont and one at Texarkana. Mr. Byrnes built both plants and operated them until he retired from business about two years before his death. As a northern man, and at one time a Union soldier, Mr. Byrnes always supported the Republican party, and had an influential part in politics, though he never held office. He and his family worshipped in the Methodist church.

The parents of the late Mr. Byrnes were Patrick and Katherine (Winnie) Byrnes, the father a native of Ireland and the mother of Holland. His father spent nearly all of his active career in New York State. James W. Byrnes had one sister, Fannie, now deceased, who was the wife of Russell Bentley, of New York, and the mother of one son.

At New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1872, Mr. Byrnes married Miss Amelia Rodgers, a native of Richmond, Virginia, and a daughter of William and Margaret (Matthews) Rodgers. Her mother was a native of Marseilles, France, while her father was from Cork, Ireland, and both are now deceased. Mrs. Byrnes has one brother, Charles, now in Cork, Ireland. The five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Byrnes were: Margaret, the wife of S. Orr Neal, a business man of Dallas, has one child, Beverly Byrnes Neal; Frank is unmarried, a Dallas business man, and resides with his mother; Josephine is at home; Fannie died in infancy; and Jessie died in girlhood.

By a previous marriage to Miss Lordiska Dockstater, a native of New York, Mr. Byrnes was the father of three children, namely: Frederick, deceased; Louisa, deceased; and Lillian, wife of Alfred Evans, who is an engineer in the employe of the engineering department of the state government with home at Baldwinsville, New York, and they have one son, James F. Evans.

WILLIAM P. BALL, M. D. A Cleburne physician with distinctive qualifications for his work and whose success has been well justified by his thorough preparation and his devotion to the interests of his calling, Dr. William P. Ball is the son of an older representative of the medical profession in Cleburne, and the family have been identified with this section of Texas for upwards of forty years.

William P. Ball was born in Greenwood, Mississippi, February 26, 1871. His father, Dr. John L. Ball, who was born in Louisville, Winston county, Mississippi, in 1841, came to Cleburne in 1856, retired from the active cares of his profession, in 1903, and now lives retired in this city. The maiden name of the mother was Addie P. Scales, who was born in Greenwood, Mississippi, in 1851, and she likewise is still living. There were seven children, namely: Dr. William P., Jennie L., M. Scales, John C., Robert L., Leslie I., and James W.

Five years of age when his father located in Cleburne, Dr. Ball grew up in Johnson county, had a public school training there, and in 1892 was graduated from the literary department of Baylor University at Waco. Like many successful professional men, Dr. Ball had a preliminary experience as a school teacher, and some of the means with which he prosecuted his studies in medical college were acquired from that work. He was a teacher for four years, then entered the Fort Worth Medical College and afterwards the Memphis Hospital Medical College in Memphis, Tennessee, where he was graduated M. D. in 1899. He was an intern in the Memphis Hospital during 1899-1900, and from there returned to Cleburne, and has ever since been closely identified with the work of his profession. For a few months in 1906 he interrupted his private practice to pursue post-graduate studies in the Chicago Polyclinic. His practice is of a general nature, and from 1900 to 1907 he served as assistant local surgeon for the Santa Fe Railroad Company.

Outside of his profession Dr. Ball claims no permanent relationship, and his time is almost strictly divided between his home and his practice. He was married at Cleburne, December 23, 1908, to Miss Maggie Lockett, daughter of Judge and Mrs. O. L. Lockett of Cleburne. They have no children. Dr. Ball is a Knights Templar Mason, is a deacon in the Baptist church, a Democrat in politics, and served three terms as alderman of Cleburne. He owns a good residence and some ranch property in this state.

JOHN KEOUGH RUSSELL. The record of Mr. Russell as a lawyer has been specially noteworthy in his position as assistant prosecuting attorney and prosecuting attorney of Johnson county. Since his election to the chief office in 1912 he has proved one of the most vigorous and impartial prosecutors in many years, and has paid particular attention to the bootlegging business at Cleburne. Within less than two years he has driven at least twelve notorious places out of business, and has practically put a quietus on what was for a long time a very flourishing trade in this city.

John Keough Russell was born in Johnson county, Texas, July 29, 1882, and is consequently one of the youngest members of the Texas bar. His father is Dr. Chester E. Russell, a physician of Johnson county, living at Venus in that county. He was born in Alabama in 1851, and married Josie Keough, who was born in Galveston, Texas, in 1861. Their eleven children are named: Julian A., George A., John K., William C., Lelah E., Charles J., Arthur B., Frank E., Tula M., Condie and Stella R. John K. Russell attended for a time the public schools of Alvarado, graduated from Burnetta College at Venus in 1903, with the degree of

A. B., spent two years in Baylor University at Waco, and in 1908 took his degree of LL. B. from the law department of the University of Texas. In the meantime in 1907, he had been admitted to the bar, and has since been in active practice at Cleburne. One of his first promotions to success was his appointment as assistant prosecuting attorney, and his record in that position was so convincing as to result in his election to the office of prosecuting attorney in 1912. Mr. Russell has given most of his energies to the criminal branch of law, and is a well read and thoroughly competent lawyer, both as a counselor and jury advocate.

On September 8, 1909, he married Adrel, a daughter of Dan Brown, a well known Cleburne merchant. They have no children. Mr. Russell is a Democrat, a member of the Baptist church, served as first lieutenant for six months in the Texas Light Guards, is a member of the Cleburne Commercial Club, and affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Masonic Lodge. His outdoor pleasures are chiefly found in the sports of hunting and fishing. He owns a good residence at Cleburne, and for renting purposes owns six dwelling houses in that city.

JOHN D. MITCHELL. One of the old and honored residents of Cleburne is John D. Mitchell, a veteran of the war between the states, having seen active service in the armies of Lee from the beginning to the end of that great struggle, and his business career since the war has brought him into many and varied relationships and he has seen a great deal of men and affairs. He was one of the early employes of the Wells Fargo Express Company in the west at a time when the life of an express agent was not a matter of routine duties, but one of extreme hazard and adventure. For many years his home has been in Cleburne, and he is president of the Cleburne Sewer Company.

John D. Mitchell was born in Abingdon, Virginia, July 29, 1843. His father, likewise named John D., was born in the same locality in 1799, and was of Irish descent, a merchant by occupation and died in 1859. The mother was Eliza F. Smith, who was born near Richmond, Virginia, June 6, 1822, and died in September, 1905. There were eleven children in the family, three of whom died in infancy.

With a liberal equipment of education, John D. Mitchell grew toward manhood in his home state, and besides the public schools was a student for two terms at Emory and Henry College in Washington county, Virginia. His college work would have been prosecuted further had not the war interrupted his studies when he was eighteen years of age.

In 1861 he left school, early in the year, to join the Confederate army. He was mustered in on April 25, 1861, in Company K of the Thirty-Seventh Virginia Infantry. In 1862 he was made sergeant major of his regiment. His service was under Lee in many of the battles about Richmond and in the Shenandoah Valley, and at the famous "Bloody Angle," he was made a prisoner and taken to Fort Delaware, where he was held for thirteen months, and not released until June, 1865, after the close of the war.

His experiences following his life as a soldier were on a plane of almost equal danger. As a messenger and clerk for the Wells Fargo Express Company, he traveled in various parts of the west and was at Cheyenne, Wyoming, when the first house was built in that section. He lived or had his headquarters at Cheyenne until 1873, when he came to Texas and after one year in Dallas moved to Johnson county. He engaged in business as a general merchant, and for six years served as constable for Precinct No. 1 and as deputy sheriff of Johnson county for four years. For five years he was manager for the D. M. Osborne & Company at Cleburne, and while there worked as a clerk and in different occupations until 1900.

He then became manager for the Cleburne Sewer Company, and in 1911 was advanced from the post of manager to that of president, an office which he still holds. Mr. Mitchell has been uniformly successful in his business affairs, and is regarded as one of the most substantial men of Cleburne.

At Marshall, Texas, March 19, 1879, he married Mrs. Eugene B. Suratt. By a former marriage she had a daughter, Lala, now Mrs. W. L. Baird, of Kingsville, Texas. Mr. Mitchell and wife have five children, as follows: Eliza F., wife of T. C. Cobb, a Cleburne merchant; Eugene C., living in Los Angeles, California; Ruth, unmarried; and two that died in infancy. Mr. Mitchell owns his residence, and also has two houses and lots in the city besides twelve vacant lots. He takes much interest in the surviving members of the Confederate army, and has filled all the posts in Pat Cleburne Post of the United Confederate veterans. He also affiliates with the Masonic Order, the Knights of Honor, and is a Democrat in politics, while he and his wife worship in the Methodist church.

WILLIAM RODDY GIBSON. Now serving his second term as county attorney of Armstrong county. Mr. Gibson is a lawyer whose abilities are of the most substantial kind. When a boy he had to earn his tuition and support by acting as janitor and in other menial positions. His father for nine years was an invalid and was unable to afford the assistance he desired to his family of children, and it is for this reason that the son William was dependent upon his own efforts to advance him. He has succeeded and is a man of both influence and fairly prosperous condition.

William Roddy Gibson was born in Rhea county, Tennessee, on a farm, February 28, 1875, his father, Andrew Jackson Gibson, a native of Tennessee, died in Rhea county in 1894, at the age of forty-nine. He had been a merchant in which he had prospered up to the time he was compelled to retire on account of ill-health and for ten years had served his community as a school teacher. He was a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. The maiden name of the mother was Sarah Elizabeth Engle, who was born in Tennessee, and is now a resident of the old home place in that state. Of the seven children all are living, and William R. was the oldest.

When a boy he attended the public schools in his native county, and also the Grand View Normal Institute in the same county. Graduating in 1897, he had already, at the age of seventeen, become a school teacher and was engaged in that line of endeavor until 1901. In July, 1900, he came to Claude, Texas, and two years were spent as a teacher in Armstrong county. For several years he had given his serious study and labor to the study of law, and successfully passed the examinations and was admitted to the bar in August, 1901. He at once took up private practice and was later associated with Judge D. B. Hill of Dalhart, during 1907-08. At the same time he served as county attorney of Dalham county. In 1910 he returned to Claude, where he took up private practice alone, and was elected to the office of county attorney, in which he is now serving his second term. During four years of residence in Tennessee, Mr. Gibson was a member of the National Guard at Spring City, advancing from the rank of private to first lieutenant. In 1898 he made a visit to Dayton, Ohio, and while there enlisted in the First Ohio Cavalry during the Spanish-American War, and saw six months service as a real soldier. In politics he is a Democrat, has been active in party affairs since casting his first vote, and in fact had little more than reached the voting age when he first appeared in public in support of the campaign of Bryan in 1896. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World, also with the Auxiliary orders of the Rebekahs and the Eastern Star. He takes an active interest in the Claude Commercial Club, and for eight years served as superintendent of the Sunday School and church work of the Baptist denomination.

On Christmas Day, of 1906, Mr. Gibson married Miss Fay Virginia Kight, who was born in Texas, a daughter of H. M. Kight, who has been a resident of Claude for the past twenty years, and one of the leading merchants of the town. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are: Garland Belmont, born at Dalhart, Texas, October 12, 1907; Virginia Louise, born at Dalhart, July 7, 1909; Lillian Faye, born at Claude, October 12, 1910; and Hazel Naomi, born at Claude, April 20, 1913.

CHARLES W. BREECH. The city of Cleburne now has one of the most progressive executives in the state. Much is due to the enterprise of Mayor Charles W. Breech. He was elected to his present office in 1910, and not only while in office, but while a successful business man here, it has been his ambition to make Cleburne the best city in Texas. In April, 1914, by a much larger majority than at any of the previous elections, he was elected for a third term to the office of mayor. While not a radical, he has always allied himself with progressive reforms, and among other things has been an advocate of municipal ownership for the water works and the sewerage system. The proposition for a city's own water works plant has been carried, and the service is now one of the departments of the city government. Having become familiar through his private business career with the necessities of accurate accounting, he has since taking office as mayor, installed a system of bookkeeping, which in itself has brought about much economy, and he keeps the closest track of all the details of the city's expenditures and business. Through his energies the fire department has been better equipped, and in less than four years the city's debt has been reduced about twenty-five thousand dollars.

Charles W. Breech was born in Washington county, Ohio, January 18, 1866. His father was John M. Breech, born in the same county of Ohio, in 1837, and who followed farming as his vocation until his death in 1895. The mother's maiden name was Ellen Stidd, who was born in Monroe county, Ohio, in 1843, and still lives in that state. Mayor Breech was one in a family of nine children, as follows: Elizabeth, Mary N., William E., Charles W., Sarah J., James R., Francis M., Ida, and Jeannette.

Charles W. Breech had a common school education in Ohio, attending school and working on the farm alternately until he was eighteen years old. The activities of the great oil fields then attracted his energies, and for four years he was a common laborer, then became a driller of wells, an occupation which he followed for fifteen years, and succeeded that with five years in the contracting business for the sinking of wells in the oil territory. In the meantime Mr. Breech had come to Texas, and located in the oil fields of this state in 1890, making his headquarters at Cleburne, which has since been his home. Since 1908 he has been retired from business affairs, and thus has complete liberty to prosecute his important work as mayor of a flourishing city. In 1910, however, he entered the larger field of business by organizing the Cleburne Foundry Company, with a capital stock of thirty-five thousand dollars, and he is president of that important local industry. He is also a stockholder and director in the Traders State Bank of Cleburne, and a director in the Morgansport Oil Company of Louisiana. A Democrat, he previously served as alderman of the city from 1908 to 1910. He is a Baptist in religion and in Masonry he affiliates with Blue Lodge No. 315, at Cleburne, with the Royal Arch Chapter No. 100, and with Cleburne Council, No. 61. He has filled the chair in the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Council. At Cleburne on November 6, 1893, he married Miss Evangeline Day, daughter of Absalom Day, a pioneer of

H. R. Gibson

Johnson county, Texas, and a blacksmith by trade, who died in 1897. Mr. and Mrs. Breech have no children.

THOMAS CARLTON HONEA, M. D. Some of the best talent in the Texas Medical fraternity is confined to its younger representatives, men who only a few years ago came out of medical college, yet with a stock of equipment, ideas and experience such as none of the older school of physicians has acquired, except as a result of continued application and post-graduate studies as they went along. One of these exceedingly capable and well trained younger physicians is Dr. Thomas Carlton Honea, of Cleburne.

He was born in that city September 25, 1884, a son of Thomas J. and Nannie D. (Poole) Honea. His father was born in Texas in 1853, and has been a rancher all his active career and still lives in Johnson county. The mother was born in Texas in 1857. Their nine children were: Lena E.; Lester W.; Thomas C.; Pearl; Clifton E.; Nellie; Lola, who is deceased; Jewell and Lena.

Dr. Honea was educated in the Cleburne Academy until seventeen years of age, then entered the Texas Christian University, took his degree of A. B. from that institution in 1905, and then after two terms in the Rush Medical College at Chicago, entered the Medical Department of the University of Nashville, Tennessee, where he was graduated M. D. in 1909. The following year and a half was spent in the capacity of chief surgeon in the Louisiana Hospital at Shreveport, and in 1910 he returned to his native city, and has since successfully built up a good business in a general practice. He has membership in and is secretary of the Johnson County Medical Society, and belongs to the State Society and the American Medical Association. He is at this writing president of the Rotary Club of Cleburne, and has fraternal affiliations with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, and the Yeomen. The doctor while at Texas Christian University was first sergeant of the cadet corps. In politics he is a Democrat, and is a member of the Christian church. He owns a good home at Cleburne, and outside of his profession his chief interest centers in the little domestic circle. On October 10, 1911, at Cleburne, he married Nellie M. Yater (?) daughter of Dr. William Yater of Cleburne. Their one child is named Marion.

MILLS DENNIS, M. D. It is in the field of surgery that Dr. Mills Dennis has gained his chief successes and distinctions, and besides a long experience as surgeon with the Santa Fe Railroad Company, has since 1907 enjoyed a large private practice as physician and surgeon at Cleburne.

Representing one of the old and honored Texas families, Dr. Dennis was born in Wharton county, Texas, December 21, 1874. His father, Isaac N. Dennis, born in Alabama in 1824, came to Texas about 1854. He was a planter, also a lawyer, successfully combining both vocations, and was a citizen of more than ordinary influence in his community. His death occurred March 25, 1910.

Isaac Dennis married Maggie Knox, who was born in Kentucky and died in 1886. Their five children were: John H. H., Mills, Nannie J., Newton, and one that died in infancy.

Dr. Mills Dennis was liberally educated, and since his first graduation from medical college had been steadily improving his skill and is as much a student today as he was fifteen years ago. The basis of his education was laid in the public schools of this state, and he then entered the medical department of the University of Texas at Galveston, where he was graduated M. D. in May, 1897. One year was spent as intern in St. Mary's Infirmary in Galveston, after which he moved to Temple, and became house surgeon in the Santa Fe Railroad hospital. That position held for five years gave him a splendid experience, and a varied qualification for his subsequent practice. Dr. Dennis is also familiar with conditions abroad, having served two years in the Medical Department of the United States army in the Philippine Islands. After a course of post-graduate study at Chicago, he returned to Temple, and was again for two years in the railway hospital in that city. In 1907 he was sent by the railway company to Cleburne as surgeon for the Santa Fe in that city. He has since enlarged upon his practice as a railway surgeon, and is regarded as one of the best qualified men in his part of the state.

Dr. Dennis has membership in the Johnson county and the State Medical Society, and is quite active in local affairs. He is the owner of several pieces of real estate, is a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, and the Business Men's Class, affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, and is a Democrat in politics. At Cleburne, on November 22, 1911, Dr. Dennis married Una F. Honeycut, daughter of A. B. Honeycut, a Cleburne railroad man.

W. P. ALEXANDER, M. D. It is claimed by those who are in a good position to know that Dr. Alexander of Cleburne has a medical practice as extensive and valuable as that enjoyed by any other regular physician in North Texas. He has been a resident of Cleburne, and in active practice there for the past thirty years, and besides his prominence as a physician, is identified with the community in a business and civic way.

Willie Phillip Alexander was born in Cumberland county, Kentucky, March 24, 1853. His father, Hilory M. Alexander, born in Cumberland county, Kentucky, in 1833, was a farmer, served for many years as sheriff of his home county, and after his removal to Texas in 1882 engaged in farming the rest of his active career. His death occurred in 1910. His wife was Margaret R. Roland, born in Cumberland county, in 1834, and died in 1899. They had ten children: Willie P., John Q., Nannie Agnes, Sallie M., Fannie L., Robert L., Florence G., Charles F., and Hilory M.

With a common school education as the basis of his preparation for a profession, Dr. Alexander first studied in the Louisville Medical College, and then in the Kentucky School of Medicine, and was graduated M. D. in 1876. From that year until 1883 he was in practice at Burksville, Kentucky, and arrived in Cleburne, which was to be his permanent home, on October 28, 1883. Dr. Alexander has never specialized to any extent and most of his work is in the general field of medicine. It was his early policy, from which he has not desisted in later years, to make a careful study of every case before prescribing, and his success as a physician is largely due to this methodical and studious work. He is a member of the Johnson county Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association.

In 1875 Dr. Alexander married Laura Hereford, who died in 1877. At Columbia, Kentucky, on December 11, 1878, he married Loue B. Baker. Of the four children, Laura Lee, an infant, and Georgia May are deceased, while Mary Q. is a graduate of the Cleburne high school, and now a student of German and music at Cleburne.

Dr. Alexander since 1907 has been president of the Cleburne school board, and a member of that board since 1903. Since boyhood a member of the Methodist church south, he has been president of the board of stewards in the Cleburne church for twenty-eight years, and is one of the church trustees. Dr. Alexander is a stockholder and for one year was president of the American Dry Goods Company. He is a Democrat in politics, has affiliations with the Masonic Order and the Woodmen of the World, and his interests are of a varied character and he is one of the highly respected and prominent men of Cleburne. Dr. Alexander has a great fondness for Kentucky horses and Jersey cattle, and has indulged his tastes in these classes of livestock by acquiring one fine sample of each.

JOHN EDWARD KALLENBACH. The retail flower trade requires of its members that they first of all must have a love for flowers and a thorough knowledge of how to care for them. Such experience cannot be acquired in a month or a year. It is necessary not only to have a complete education in floriculture, but the additional business ability to conduct a flower shop, and the business end cannot be learned without actual experience in such a store. Most of the successful florists of today are those who have started establishments of their own after working for others. In this class is John Edward Kallenbach, proprietor of the Amarillo Green House, located at Fourth and Jackson streets, Amarillo, Texas. In addition to the qualities above mentioned, Mr. Kallenbach owes his success to his taste, his tact and his originality, extremely necessary adjuncts to the man who would gain a full measure of success. Born with a love for flowers, an artist in the designing of handsome floral wreaths, and possessed of marked ability to initiate and create, his career from boyhood has been devoted to his vocation, in which he has risen steadily to a recognized position.

John Edward Kallenbach was born at Erie, Pennsylvania, July 13, 1881, and is a son of John and Annie (List) Kallenbach. His father was a native of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, early in life adopted the trade of moulder, and still follows that vocation in Erie, where he and his wife still live. Four of their children are still surviving, and of these John Edward is the oldest. He received his early education in the public schools of Erie, and subsequently entered the Erie Business College of that city. At the age of twelve and one-half years he left his studies to become apprenticed to the florist business. During the next eighteen and one-half years he continued to be thus engaged, and among other concerns was with C. H. Schluraff of Erie for three years and Henry Niemeyer one year, and for five years was general manager for the Baur Floral Company, of Erie, the largest wholesale and retail nursery concern in the United States. Having thus worked his way up from a humble position to one of the largest, on June 9, 1912, he left the East and came directly to Amarillo, where he purchased the established business known as the Amarillo Green House, which had been founded in the spring of 1909, the first business in this line in Amarillo, and now the only complete green house in the Panhandle district. Since assuming sole charge of this enterprise, Mr. Kallenbach has increased his planting and growing space by one-third, and now has 21,000 square feet of glass. To the general business he has also added wholesale and retail dealing in seeds, and is enjoying an excellent trade in both lines. Genial and pleasing in manner, and a man who impresses himself favorably upon those with whom he comes in contact, he gives the impression of being what he is, a sound, reliable business man, thoroughly conversant with his own line. Politically, Mr. Kallenbach is identified with no party, believing it his privilege to support those men and principles which he deems best for the community, regardless of political lines. He is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, and his fraternal connections are with the Odd Fellows, the Knights of the Maccabees and Amarillo Lodge, B. P. O. E., No. 923. With his family, he attends the Lutheran Church.

On September 26, 1900, Mr. Kallenbach was married to Miss Bertha Kuch, who was born at Erie, Pennsylvania, daughter of Phulp Kuch, and to this union there have been born two children: Verne and Kenneth, both born in the Keystone State. In addition to the green-houses and grounds, Mr. Kallenbach is the owner of his modern home, which is situated at No. 406 West Fourth street.

ARTHUR C. BURNS. For the past three years Mr. Burns has practised his profession as a veterinary surgeon at Cleburne. He is one of the best prepared men in his line in the state, was brought up on a ranch, has an instinctive love for domestic animals, and all his training has been directed toward preparing him for a service which is of most obvious importance in this great stock raising country.

Arthur C. Burns was born at Cuero, DeWitt county, Texas, August 14, 1886, one of the five children of Arthur and Evie (Cardwell) Burns. His father was born in DeWitt county in 1853, has been a prosperous stockman and still lives in his home county, where his wife likewise was born in 1855. Their five children are named: John C., Arthur C., Evie, Anna B. and Douglas.

Dr. Burns for the basis of his training had a public school education at Cuero high school, later graduated Bachelor of Science in 1907 from the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, then entered the Ohio State University at Columbus, and graduated D. V. S. in 1910. In October of the same year he located at Cleburne, and has since acquired a very excellent practice, and has all the facilities for the proper handling of his cases.

Dr. Burns affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, belongs to the Presbyterian Church, is a Democrat in politics, and while attending the Agricultural and Mechanical College for four years was a member of the cadet corps, and is therefore possessed of considerable military training. Outside of his business he finds his chief pleasure in an occasional fishing and hunting trip, in his social relations with the community of Cleburne and Johnson county.

WILLIS HOWARD SHEPPARD. A Rosenberg citizen who has been a resident of Fort Bend county for seventeen years, and previous to that lived from childhood in North Texas, Mr. Sheppard has had his share of healthy prosperity as a farmer, and has wisely invested his profits against the evil day and is now living practically retired in his little south Texas city.

Willis Howard Sheppard is a Missourian by birth, born in Greene county, near Springfield, April 19, 1851, the son of John O. and Sarah Jane (McGill) Sheppard, his father having been a native of Kentucky. By descent the family is of Scotch Irish ancestry, and on the paternal side were among the hardy pioneers of Kentucky in the stirring days of Daniel Boone. All his life the father was a farmer and stockman. As a young man he left his native state, moving to Greene county, Missouri, where he met and married his wife. Owing to the death of the mother in 1851, when Willis H. was an infant, little is known of her people. In 1861 the father came by wagon to Texas and settled in Collin county, where he farmed until his death in 1873-4. A man who had the respect and confidence of all who knew him, he was justice of the peace for many years. He took a keen interest in education, and did all he could to advance it. For many years he was a deacon in the Baptist church. The other children of his family are mentioned as follows: Mary Robinson, a widow, residing in Farmersville, Texas; Mary Ella Young, a widow living in Mayfield, Oklahoma; Eliza Thompson, a widow, living in Farmersville, Texas; W. T., who is in Willard, Missouri.

Willis Howard Sheppard, the youngest of the family, was ten years old when his father moved to Texas and he remained at home, working on the farm until 1871. He then married Miss Elnetta Young, of Kentucky, a daughter of Harvey and Mary (Williams) Young. Her parents came by way of Missouri to Texas in 1861. Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard have had three children born to their union, namely: George Monroe, of Glidden, Texas; Mrs. Laura Lowery, of Rosenberg; William Young, who died at the age of twenty-four as the result of an accident in which his horse fell upon him.

After his marriage Mr. Sheppard continued farming in North Texas, in Collin and Hunt counties, until 1896, when he bought land in Fort Bend county. Moving his family to South Texas he continued farming in the Brazos Valley until about six years ago, when he sold his farm and moved into Rosenberg. Since that time he has been leading more or less of a retired life, except that he has been acting as money guard for the Wells, Fargo & Company Express from Rosenberg to Kansas City and Newton, Kansas. Of his duties, consisting largely in guarding bullion from the mines of Mexico, he has had little to do of late owing to the Mexican revolution. However, he deserves a holiday after many years of hard and careful labor. During his residence in north Texas Mr. Sheppard acted as trustee and road overseer for many years. He and his wife are members of the Baptist church. He owns a comfortable home in Rosenberg.

John Edward Kallinbach

J. H. Giddings

J. D. GIDDINGS. Among the older families of Texas none have been more conspicuous in business and the professions, in the early military history and in constructive public affairs of all kinds, than have the Giddings, whose chief center of residence has been Washington county. Several of the more prominent representatives of this family are given brief mention in the following paragraphs, with special mention of the late J. D. Giddings, whose name has been fitly honored in the town which is the county seat of Lee county.

J. D. Giddings was born in Pennsylvania, and was the second son of James and Lucy (Demming) Giddings. The Giddings family in America are descended from George Giddings and wife, who came to this country from England in 1635. Two of the first ancestors were among the original grantees of Connecticut, and later members of the family joined the patriot army during the war of the American Revolution, and another of the family served at one time as governor of the state of Connecticut. James Giddings, the father, was born in Connecticut, in early life was a sea captain and later followed the quieter vocation of farming in Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania. Lucy Demming, his wife, was of a French family which had settled in America a number of generations previously, and members of which also served on the side of the colonists during the Revolution. Lucy Demming was a relative of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the first great American novelist.

The oldest brother of J. D. Giddings was Giles A. Giddings, who came to Texas in 1835. A civil engineer by profession, it was work in that line which occupied him during several months of residence in the state, and early in 1836, on learning that Houston's army was retreating before the advancing forces of Santa Ana he hastened to join the Texas troops, reached the command three days before the battle of San Jacinto, and then wrote his parents a letter telling them if he fell they would have the joy of knowing their son had died fighting against oppression and for the rights of man. During the struggle at San Jacinto he received wounds from which he died on the second day of May following.

It was the death of this Texas patriot which brought J. D. Giddings to Texas in 1838 for the purpose of finding the body of his brother. While here he decided to remain, located in Brenham, and there became very prominent, not only as a lawyer, but also as a banker and influential citizen. Though he never held but one political office, his good judgment and success in matters of finance made his services as counsel and adviser invaluable to the community in many ways, and he devoted both time and money to the improvement of his home community. He likewise made a record in the early struggles of Texas against Mexico, and was a member of the celebrated Mier Expedition of December, 1842.

It will be in his relations to Washington county as a railway builder and promoter that he will deserve most lasting memory in that part of the state. In 1856 he took the lead in promoting the construction of the Washington County Railroad, now a part of the Austin branch of the Houston and Texas Central, and which was the first line built to tap on the west side the main north and south route of that road. He became first president of the Washington County Railroad Company, the charter of which was granted February 2, 1856. In May, 1858, the first section of eleven and a half miles was finished, and trains were operated from Hempstead to Brenham, beginning on October 1, 1860. The first engine ever run into Brenham was named the J. D. Giddings, and it was for his part in constructing this railway and his prominence in many other ways that caused his name to be chosen to designate the county seat of Lee county. In 1866 Mr. J. D. Giddings was a member of the first legislature during the reconstruction period, and was chairman of the judiciary committee, and member of other important committees.

In 1848 J. D. Giddings was joined in Texas by two more of his brothers, James J. Giddings and George H. Giddings. The former was a civil engineer who surveyed the route for the Washington County Railway and subsequently met his death at the hands of Indians in Arizona. George H. Giddings later came into prominence as the owner of the stage line from New Orleans to San Francisco. At the beginning of the war between the states President Lincoln sent him to Austin on a mission to try to prevent Texas from seceding. Unsuccessful in that matter, having arrived in Austin too late to prevent action, he soon went with his state and enlisted in the Confederate army, and became colonel of a regiment. He had command of his troops in the last battle of the war near the Rio Grande river on May 13, 1865, several weeks after the army of Lee had surrendered in Virginia.

In 1852 two more brothers of the Giddings family came to Texas, Frank Giddings, a physician and surgeon, who was killed at El Paso, and Dewitt Clinton Giddings, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this publication, and who became a partner of J. D. Giddings in the practice of law under the name J. D. and D. C. Giddings. In 1866 J. D. Giddings and D. C. Giddings organized the private bank of Giddings & Giddings, and that firm name has now stood for responsible banking and the highest commercial integrity for upwards of fifty years.

The late J. D. Giddings was prominent in Masonry, in which he held the Knight Templar degree, was a past grand master of the Grand Lodge of Texas, and well known among the members of the craft throughout the state. His church was the Methodist Episcopal South. J. D. Giddings was married at Brenham to Miss Ann Tarver, whose family came to Texas from Tennessee about 1840. She was a sister of Edmund Tarver, at one time attorney general of Texas, a prominent lawyer, a persuasive orator, and said to have possessed one of the brightest minds among all his contemporaries. When J. D. Giddings died in 1878 he left two children: Charles Giddings; and Louise, who married Heber Stone.

THOMAS NEWTON SELF, M. D. During twenty years of residence and active practice of his profession in Johnson county, Dr. Self has gained the regard of a large community for his services and his ability as a physician and surgeon. He stands high in his home community of Cleburne, and has been honored in different ways outside of the immediate limits of his profession.

Thomas Newton Self was born in Johnson county, Texas, February 12, 1868, and was one of eleven children whose parents were Francis M., and Sarah A. Easter Self. His father was born in Barren county, Kentucky, December 10, 1835. He was a farmer by occupation, and came to Texas when about twenty years of age, and settled as a pioneer in Johnson county, before the war. During the struggle between the north and the south he enlisted and served as a Confederate soldier. His death occurred August 27, 1907. The mother was born in Alabama in 1838, and died in 1903. Of their children five died in infancy, and the others are named as follows: William A., who died in 1907; Mollie, Francis M., John W., Corilla, and Thomas N.

The first twenty-three years of Dr. Self's life were spent on the home farm in Johnson county, and he was a student of the common schools and of the splendid discipline of hard work on the homestead, and for three years was a teacher. Largely with the means secured from his own efforts, he entered Tulane Medical College, and was graduated M. D. April 5, 1893. Up to December, 1901, Dr. Self practiced in the country locality of Joshua, in Johnson county, and succeeded in acquiring a good reputation and paying practice. Since then his home has been in Cleburne, and he has proved himself an able man in a larger field, having a very excellent general practice.

Dr. Self was married February 25, 1894, to Luella Pierce, daughter of Thomas M. Pierce, a Tarrant county farmer. The doctor and wife have five children: Loena, Cleo, Luella M., Thomas N., and J. Byron.

Dr. Self has membership in the Johnson county Medical Society, the North Texas District Medical Society, and the State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He was for one year president of the County Society. Fraternally he is a Knights Templar Mason and a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, and the Knights and Ladies of Honor. A Democrat in politics, he was for two years president of the Cleburne School Board, is a member and director of the Cleburne Commercial Club, and he and his family worship in the Church of Christ. Though he has other interests as indicated, he has given his attention, with little deviation, to his profession, in which he has gained no small degree of success and distinction.

GEORGE W. MECHAM. A business man of Cleburne, George W. Mecham represents one of the oldest families of South Texas, identified since the time of the Texas republic with the county of Brazoria, and Mr. Mecham himself is a native of the historic old town of Columbia, which at one time was distinguished as the site of the first Texas government.

He was born there January 2, 1863. His father, George W. Mecham, born in the same county in 1833, before the establishment of the Republic, was for many years a merchant, and died in 1887. The mother was Ann T. Hutchison, born in Kentucky in 1837, and now living in California. Their six children were: George W.; Ransom A., deceased; Francis E.; John, who died in infancy; Rosa L.; and Willie, who died in infancy.

Mr. Mecham during most of his active career has been identified with his native town of Columbia. The public schools of that locality furnished him an education until he was seventeen years of age, after which he clerked for his father, and gained thereby a thorough business training until he was twenty-two years old. Following that he was deputy sheriff of Brazoria county for six years. Mr. Mecham conducted a confectionery and restaurant business in Columbia, until the destructive flood of 1900, a disaster which caused him to come to North Texas and locate first in Itaska, where he continued in the same business and in 1911 moved to Cleburne, and opened his present popular establishment on the north side of the square. He enjoys a large trade, is a man of long experience in his particular line, makes a study of its requirements, and has been very successful in meeting the demands of a very exacting custom. He understands all the details of candy manufacture, and runs a high class luncheonette parlor.

Mr. Mecham married at Cleburne on April 7, 1904, Miss Ima Irving, daughter of Professor Irving of Cleburne. They have three children: George P., Elizabeth I., and Francis N. Mr. Mecham is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the Presbyterian church, a Democrat in politics, and has frequently been honored with public positions. He was a clerk in the postoffice at Columbia for four years, his service of six years as deputy sheriff already having been mentioned, was for three years alderman at Itaska, and was a member of the Jackson Guards at Columbia for three years, serving as first sergeant. He is a member of the Cleburne Commercial Club, and stands high in his relations with Cleburne business men. He still owns a residence in Columbia.

JOHN M. LUTTRELL, M. D. The residence of Dr. John M. Luttrell in Mineral Wells is contemporaneous with the city government; he has seen nearly the whole of the municipality's marvelous growth and has borne a conspicuous part in all of its busy life. A leading member of his profession, his practice has been gained through skill, knowledge and a wealth of human kindness, and few men of his community are more highly esteemed. Dr. Luttrell was born near Elk river, in Lincoln county, east of Fayetteville, Tennessee, April 19, 1853, and is a son of Wesley and Lucy (Pruett) Luttrell, of English descent. His father was born in the same house in which the Doctor was born and reared; and the mother was also a native of the Big Bend state, although in her youth she lived for a time in Indiana. The maternal grandfather, Richard Pruett, was a member of the Indiana State Legislature while living near Terre Haute, Indiana. Wesley Luttrell was a successful farmer and stockraiser in Tennessee, but died while still in the prime of life, in 1856, his demise being caused by an attack of typhoid fever. There were two sons in the family, John M. and Thomas J., the latter of whom was for years engaged in farming and is now living retired at Norman, Oklahoma, whence he moved in order to give his children better educational advantages than the country schools afforded. One of his sons, John E. Luttrell, recently entered upon the practice of law at Norman.

John M. Luttrell received his early education in the public schools of Lincoln county, Tennessee, and Ellis county, Texas. He was but three years of age when his father died, and it was necessary for him to make his own way in the world. Accordingly he chose the vocation of educator, and was engaged in teaching in the schools of Ellis county, Texas, until 1888, in which year he realized a long cherished desire in entering upon his medical studies in the Missouri Medical College, St. Louis, Missouri. He was graduated therefrom in 1891, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and subsequently, in 1897, took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic College. He first established himself in practice in Freestone county, Texas, but soon thereafter came to Mineral Wells, which place has since been the scene of his endeavors and successes. Dr. Luttrell has been a witness to the wonderful growth of this now famed health resort. When he came here, in 1891, the city numbered about 500 souls, and the only house other than frame was a stone structure. Today the population is in the neighborhood of 8,000, and its buildings are handsome, substantial and of the most modern construction. For some years Dr. Luttrell was a member of the Board of Health here, and his opinion as to the city's climate and desirability as a health resort may be taken as an authority. He contends that there is but little malaria here, a minimum of typhoid fever and practically no dysentery among children. It is to be noticed, furthermore, that there are but few short graves in the cemeteries, and the majority of deaths which occur are among those who have come here too late to save their failing health. In his profession Dr. Luttrell is justly regarded as one of the leading men of his community. He has never ceased being a student, and his constant study keeps him fully abreast of the developments of his chosen vocation. In politics he is a stanch Democrat, but has not desired public position, preferring to devote himself entirely to medicine. His fraternal connection is with the Knights of Pythias, and his religious belief is that of the Baptist church.

W. J. Sparks

On December 12, 1890, Dr. Luttrell was married to Miss Mary E. Richards, daughter of T. S. and Molly Richards, of Mineral Wells, the former from Alabama, where he had been a farmer and stockraiser. He came to this place with his wife, who had for years been seriously ill with kidney trouble, and after she had been cured by the waters from the famous Star well, he bought that property and has continued to own it ever since. Five children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Luttrell, of whom four are living: Mary Thomas and Bertie, aged twenty-one and nineteen years, respectively, and teachers in the public schools of Mineral Wells; Wyeth W., aged eighteen, working on a ranch with his uncle, W. L. Richards, in North Dakota; and Pruett S., aged eleven, who is attending school. The members of the family are widely known throughout Mineral Wells, and all have hosts of warm and appreciative friends.

WILLIAM J. SPARKS. In the election of William J. Sparks to the office of county and district clerk of Midland county, the citizens of this county shows one of their most popular young business men, and honored a man whose character and ability thoroughly deserved such preferment.

William J. Sparks was born in Hawkins, Upshur county, Texas, May 26, 1878, a son of Joseph J. and Pernice (Stephens) Sparks, natives respectively of Mississippi and Texas. Joseph J. Sparks was an early settler in Texas, where he was married, and his death occurred when his son William was a child. He had during the war served as a Confederate soldier. The mother passed away several years after the death of her husband, and William J. was left an orphan when only a lad. He was reared in the home of his grandmother, and up to the time he was fourteen years old attended school in Cisco, Eastland county. At the age of fourteen he began his practical career, becoming an apprentice and general utility boy in a drug store. He learned the business and trade of pharmacy, and most of his business career was spent in that line of work. He was in the drug business at Thurber, and subsequently followed his trade at Fort Worth. In 1907 Mr. Sparks engaged in the drug business for himself at Midland. He sold out his store just prior to his election to the office of county and district clerk in 1908. Mr. Sparks was re-elected to the same office in 1910 and again in November, 1912. He has the complete confidence of the people of Midland county, and his services are likely to be retained by the citizenship as long as he is willing to serve.

Mr. Sparks has been active in behalf of the Democratic party, in his own quiet but efficient way for several years. He is a man of modest manner, but is for that reason none the less popular. He is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World, and belongs to the Presbyterian church. As diversion he is fond of fishing, and takes a special delight in good reading, having an excellent private library where he spends much of his leisure time.

MARK PUTMAN. One of the most capable and successful automobile men of Parker county is Mark Putman, who is proprietor of a modern and complete garage in Weatherford, and handles the sale of several of the best known makes of cars in that part of the state. He has proved himself the man for the business in which he is now engaged, and his popularity and prominence in automobile circles is steadily increasing.

Of Scotch-Irish family, Mark Putman was born January 21, 1880, in Falls county, Texas, a son of E. and Mollie Putman. His father was from Alabama, and on moving to Texas first located in Johnson county, where he met and married his wife, a native of that county. The senior Putman, a stock man and dealer in horses and mules, died November 18, 1911, while the mother is still living at the old home place in Weatherford. There were only two children, a son and a daughter. The latter is Mrs. Addie Benning, whose husband, Oscar Benning, is a traveling salesman with home at Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Mark Putman was reared in Weatherford, enjoyed the advantages of the public school, and his first regular employment was with the Texas and Pacific Railroad for three years. His railroad service was as brakeman, and was finally terminated when the train jumped the track one day, and Mr. Putman was picked up with his right leg so injured that it had to be amputated. Thus restricted as to his future movements and employment, on recovering he found work as a mail carrier on one of the rural routes, leading out of Weatherford, and continued to serve the public in that capacity for several years. In December, 1910, he engaged in the garage business, and on account of his personal popularity and the first class service he supplies has built up one of the best establishments of its kind west of Fort Worth. The building occupied by the garage, and store room is fifty by one hundred and fifty feet, with a machine shop in the rear, thirty by fifty feet. He carries all kinds of supplies for automobiles, and does general repairing. The cars handled and sold by him are the Ford, the Studebaker, and the Overland and a full line of accessories is also found in his establishment.

Mr. Putman has been a staunch Democrat since casting his first ballot, and fraternally is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, the Independent Order of Foresters, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. At Weatherford, he belongs to the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Putman was married at Pecos, Texas, February 24, 1900, to Miss Georgie Crosby, a daughter of G. W. and Mattie Crosby. Her father, who is still living in El Paso, is a contractor, and her mother died when Mrs. Putman was a child. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Putman have been born two sons: Elijah, aged eleven, and George, aged ten, both now attending school.

JAMES H. EASTLAND, M. D. To his work as a physician and surgeon, which has been carried on at Mineral Wells since 1903, Dr. Eastland has brought an exceptionally varied and thorough training and experience, in addition to his natural qualifications. Dr. Eastland makes a specialty in the practice of internal medicine, and while studying for his profession and also after beginning practice had unusual opportunities for observation and study, while connected with some of the large public institutions for the care of the permanently afflicted. Dr. Eastland enjoys a position second to none among the local fraternity at Mineral Wells.

James H. Eastland was born at Waco, Texas, February 6, 1876, a son of Dr. W. D. and Helen (Terry) Eastland. The founder of the American family of Eastland came to Virginia from England about 1640. The mother's family is also of colonial ancestry, and its earliest members settled and founded New Londonderry, New Hampshire, in 1680. Dr. W. D. Eastland was one of the pioneer physicians of Texas, having moved to this state from Mississippi, in 1845, where he raised a company of Mississippi Volunteers for the Mexican war, went out as first lieutenant, and was one of the few Americans wounded in the battle of Resaca de la Palma on Texas soil at the beginning of the war. On recovering from his wound he rejoined the army, and served in the final campaign in Old Mexico, coming out with the rank of brevet captain. Soon after that war his medical studies were taken up, and his first practice was at Sumner's Mills in Bell county. Later he moved to Belton, and was the first mayor of that city. It was he who suggested or selected the name Belton, instead of the former designation, "Old Nolansville." About 1875, the senior Dr. Eastland moved to Waco, in order to educate his children in Baylor University, and his death occurred in that city in 1878. His wife is still living, being nearly eighty years of age.

There were eleven children, five sons and six daughters, and Dr. J. H. is the youngest.

From the public schools, he entered Baylor University at Waco, graduating Bachelor of Literature, and his college life was followed by three years as a teacher. Largely with the means acquired by teaching he entered Vanderbilt University Medical School at Nashville, and was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1903. His first practice as a physician was in the State Epileptic College at Abilene, and later he was physician at the State Insane Asylum at Austin. While at Abilene Dr. Eastland became lieutenant and later captain in the Texas National Guards. This was followed by post-graduate studies in the United States army college at Washington, D. C., and after completing the course he returned to Texas, and in 1907 located at Mineral Wells, where his practice has been steadily increasing, and practically all his time is now given to the specialty of internal medicine.

Dr. Eastland served as city physician of Mineral Wells one term, was a director of the Commercial Club, and was recently a member of the advisory board to the City Council. His politics have always been that of the Democratic party, he has taken the Masonic degrees, and belongs to the Shrine, and is also affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. His church is the Baptist.

Dr. Eastland on December 22, 1903, at Cameron, Texas, married Miss Alpha Jeter, a daughter of William Jeter, and a granddaughter of Rev. Dr. Jeter, an eminent minister of the Baptist church in Virginia. Her mother, Cordelia Pearson, was a cousin of Richmond Pearson Hobson of Alabama. Mrs. Eastland's father was a lumberman at Cameron, Texas, and was born in Alabama. To the marriage of the doctor and wife have been born three children, one son and two daughters: James, aged eight; Dorothy, aged six, and Elizabeth, aged four.

W. PERCY SMITH. Admitted to the bar and locating at Mineral Wells in 1902, Mr. Smith has since gained recognition as one of the leaders in the bar of the city and county. His practice is of a general nature, and identifies him with much of the more important litigation that passes through the local and state courts.

W. Percy Smith was born December 5, 1873, at Meridian, in Bosque county, Texas. His parents, Thomas A. and Sarah E. Smith, came from Alabama to Texas in 1865, settling in Bosque county, where his father followed the vocation of farming for a number of years. In 1891 the family moved to Weatherford, and in 1906 to Mineral Wells, where both parents now have their home. During the war the senior Smith was a soldier on the Confederate side, belonging to Company H of the Tenth Alabama Infantry. His experience as a soldier lasted from early in the war until its close, and comprised participation in a number of battles, and one slight wound, also just before the surrender of Lee he was taken prisoner by the Federals. There were five children, three sons and two daughters, and the oldest daughter died in childhood.

W. Percy Smith, the fourth among the children, prepared for the law, largely by self-study and his independent effort. His education was acquired in the Weatherford College, and at the age of nineteen he took up work as a school teacher. In vacation periods, and at all other times when opportunity was afforded he pursued his studies of the law, and in 1902 in the circuit court at Weatherford was admitted to the bar. Since that time his practice has been at Mineral Wells, where he has served as city attorney, and in many other ways has identified himself with the best interests of this locality.

His political support has always been given to the Democratic party, his fraternal associations with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World, his name is on the roll of active membership in the Mineral Wells Commercial Club, and in religion he belongs to the Baptist church. On June 5, 1901, at Palo Pinto, Mr. Smith married Miss Georgie Mayhew. Her father, L. E. Mayhew, a native of New Jersey, was a merchant and stockman, and died in 1906. The mother, Nannie B. Mayhew, who was reared in Palo Pinto county, is now living at Davis, Oklahoma. To the marriage of Mr. Smith and wife were born two children, and both died in childhood.

JOHN T. HONEA. The appointment of John T. Honea as deputy United States marshal of the Northern District of Texas brought to the federal staff of justice one of the best qualified men that could have been found in the entire state. Mr. Honea's career since early manhood has brought him in contact with all classes of people, and his service in many positions, ranging from constable to county sheriff, was the best possible sort of preparation for his present work.

John T. Honea is a native of Tennessee, and of Irish descent on his father's side. The tradition is that four brothers of the name left Ireland in the early days and settled in Alabama, and one of these was great-grandfather of Marshal Honea of Fort Worth. John T. Honea was born February 26, 1864, in McKenzie, Carroll county, Tennessee, a son of Dr. D. F. and Martha J. (Roach) Honea. His father was born in Alabama and his mother in Tennessee. The former attained prominence as a physician, spent many years in active practice in Tennessee, and during the war between the states held the rank of surgeon in the Confederate army. His death occurred in 1876, and his wife survived until 1905, and passed away at the old home in Tennessee. There were six children, five sons and one daughter. Two of the sons died at Gladewater, Texas, in 1887, and the four others are still living. Marshal Honea has a brother, R. E. Honea, who is agent for the Wichita Valley Railway at Stamford, Texas.

John T. Honea, the fourth among the children, had a very limited education when a boy, since he left home and in 1878, when fourteen years of age, came to Red River county, Texas, with the intention of earning his own way. He found work in a camp of men engaged in making railroad ties, and not only did the heavy work required of tie makers, but also for a time served as camp cook. That was rough work, and many of the workmen were rough in character as well. In that camp was the beginning of his practical training which has made him so competent as an officer of the law, since he came to know the practices and manners of rough characters and outlaws, a number of whom from time to time drifted into such labor as tie making. Mr. Honea also worked on farms at salaries ranging from fifteen to eighteen dollars a month for several years. At Weatherford, Texas, he found employment on the farm of his uncle, Judge I. M. Roach, but eventually left Texas, feeling that he owed a duty to his widowed mother, and returning to Tennessee spent a number of years at the old home and aided in caring for and supporting his mother. In 1890 Mr. Honea returned to Texas and located at Arlington in Tarrant county. His first employment there was in a lumber yard, until appointed Marshal of the town, and that position again increased his experience in performing the delicate and sometimes dangerous duties as an executive of justice. In that as in later work he established a reputation for fearless handling of his responsibilities, and in 1892 was elected constable at Arlington. With four years of service as constable he was ready for the next advancement, which came in 1896 with his appointment as deputy sheriff of Tarrant county under Sheriff Sterling P. Clark. After about three years as deputy sheriff Mr. Honea did private detective work until 1902, and in that year was chosen to the responsible office of sheriff of Tarrant county. His service of two terms set a standard which will probably never be excelled for prompt and courageous handling of the duties which come under the supervision and administration of such an office.

H. H. Clark

as that of sheriff of Tarrant county. Following his term as sheriff he was made an inspector for the Live Stock Sanitary Commission of Texas under Governor Campbell, and served about one year. During 1907-08 Mr. Honea lived on his farm four miles northwest of Fort Worth, but in 1909 established himself in Fort Worth in the private detective service, and for one year was house detective in Westbrook Hotel of Fort Worth. One specially noteworthy service which he performed as private detective was his employment by the trustees of the First Baptist church of Fort Worth after the church was burned on February 4, 1912. He collected practically all the evidence that could be found to prove a case and establish exact responsibility for the burning of the church, but as yet the cases have not resulted in conviction. In April, 1913, Mr. Honea received his present appointment as United States Deputy Marshal for the Northern District of Texas. His record in that office is a continuation of the faithful and efficient performance which has characterized his career in previous places of responsibility. He is regarded as one of the best qualified men for such work not only in the district, but one of the very best in the entire state. As part of his official record, which is too long for detailed description, it should be stated that Mr. Honea has closed up many of the lawless places in the city of Fort Worth. As deputy sheriff and while a private detective he ran down and brought to justice a number of outlaws in this section of the state.

Politically his alignment has always been with the Democratic party, and few men have been more consistent in their political relations than Mr. Honea, who has never scratched a ticket. Religiously his membership is in the First Baptist church at Fort Worth. In Tennessee he married Miss Maggie Parker in May, 1886. They became the parents of three children: O. S. Honea, who is now twenty-six years of age and is a traveling salesman with home in Oklahoma; J. A. Honea, aged twenty-three, associated with his father in private detective work; and Olga, who is the wife of S. G. Tankersley, Jr., a traveling salesman for the Armour Company, with headquarters in Fort Worth. The mother of these children died in 1897, and Mr. Honea subsequently married Miss Laura Roark, daughter of J. A. Roark, a farmer and stock man living near Arlington, Texas.

As a citizen Mr. Honea is well known and popular. As an officer in the discharge of his duty he has shown an absolute impartiality, and believes and acts upon the principle that the strict enforcement and obedience to the law must prevail in order to maintain the rights of all citizens. He is absolutely fearless in the discharge of his duty, yet has the urbanity and natural kindness of a man of broad character and big heart, and has never been known to mistreat a prisoner.

HENRY HERMAN CLEEK. Among the enterprising young business men of Panhandle, Texas, is Henry Herman Cleek, of Cleek Bros. Hardware Company, and now Clerk of Carson county.

Although a native of Tennessee, born in Overton county, February 23, 1887, Mr. Cleek has been a Texan from his earliest recollection, having been brought here in early childhood by his parents. He comes of German ancestry on his father's side and Irish on his mother's. Samuel Cleek, his father, and Mary (Masters) Cleek, his mother, were both born and reared in Tennessee, where they passed their lives until 1900. That year they came to Texas and settled in Carson county. Here Samuel Cleek became a prosperous farmer and enjoyed the confidence and respect of all who knew him. He died in September, 1905, at Panhandle, at the age of sixty-five years. His political affiliation was with the Democratic party and he was always conscientious in the exercise of his franchise, but he never sought or filled public office. His religious faith was that of the Presbyterian Church. His widow is still living. She bore him seven children, six of whom are living, Henry Herman being the fifth in order of birth.

Henry Herman Cleek was educated in the public schools of Panhandle and at Tyler, Texas, where he took a business course. Up to the age of nineteen his life was spent on a farm. His first position when he started out on his own responsibility was as clerk in the hardware store of L. L. Sellers at Panhandle. After clerking in this store for two years, he and his brother Fayette purchased the store. That was in 1911, and they have since not only successfully conducted the business, but have given it a boost that ranks it as the largest and most modern store in this section of the Panhandle. The brick store building, 25 x 80 feet, at the corner of Main street, they erected in the fall of 1912, and in addition to a complete line of hardware they carry implements, harness and buggies.

Politically, Mr. Cleek is a Democrat, and has always shown an enthusiastic interest in local affairs. In 1912 he was the choice of his party for the office of District and County Clerk of Carson county, and in November was elected to the office, for a term of two years. He is one of the active members of the Commercial Club, and is fraternally identified with the W. O. W. and the A. O. U. W.

June 7, 1911, Mr. Cleek was married to Miss Opal Carhart, a native of Texas and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Carhart, old settlers. Mr. and Mrs. Cleek are members of the Methodist Church South.

LON BARKLEY. Of a family that were among the early pioneers of Tarrant county, reared and trained in the strenuous outdoor life of the West Texas frontier, a cowboy and rancher, and regarded as one of the ablest and most popular cow men in the northern part of the state, later engaged in business in Fort Worth, Lon Barkley after a career which has thus identified him with the most conspicuous phases of Texas life is now completing his second term as postmaster at Fort Worth.

Lon Barkley was born October 8, 1853, in Harrison county, Kentucky, but his life from early infancy has been spent in Texas, and there is no more loyal citizen of the Lone Star state. The Barkley family is of stanch Scotch-Irish stock, and Mr. Barkley's parents were Dr. B. F. and Melinda E. Barkley, both natives of Kentucky and of well known families of that state. Dr. Barkley, the father, practiced medicine for a number of years in Mason, Bracken and Harrison counties, and in 1855 left Kentucky and established a home in the pioneer and frontier region of North Texas. Only a few years before the military post of Fort Worth had been established, and Tarrant county was very new, and the only village of Birdville was still the county seat. It was at Birdville that Dr. Barkley located, and the family name has been well known in that vicinity for more than half a century. He practiced medicine in and about Birdville until his death on December 25, 1882. The mother is still living, and one of the venerable pioneer women of Tarrant county. She is eighty-seven years of age, quite active for her years, and makes her home with her youngest daughter, Mrs. Josie Woods in Fort Worth. There were seven children altogether, four daughters and three sons, and the Fort Worth postmaster was third in order of birth.

His early education was necessarily limited. There were hardly any schools worthy of the name in Tarrant county during his youth, and such instruction as he did receive was given in private schools at Birdville. Most of his training came from actual participation in the life and activities of farm and ranch, and though always regarded as a man of broad information and intelligence Mr. Barkley gained most of his education through his own efforts. His career as a cowboy began when he was seventeen years of age, when he helped to take a herd of cattle over one of the great cattle trails from Texas north to Chetopa, Kansas. Without resources, he had not money enough to buy his horses, and according to the free and easy custom of the time gave his word instead of a written note as promise to pay for the horses and other equipment, and it is needless to say that he met the obligation on returning home as promptly as men in this more formal time would take up their note. As a cow puncher Mr. Barkley's career in various parts of West Texas covered about twenty-five years. As a skillful rider, a master of horses, an expert manager of cattle and all departments of range and ranch, Mr. Barkley's reputation is second to none among his contemporaries in that great industry. Finally selling out his interests as a rancher, he engaged in mercantile business for several years, and in 1906 received appointment from President Roosevelt as postmaster of Fort Worth. In 1910 President Taft confirmed him in office, and at this writing he is concluding his eighth year of service. In that time the affairs of the Fort Worth postoffice have never been in better hands, and his capable administration is commended by all citizens regardless of party politics.

Mr. Barkley has always been a man of the bluff and independent character of the true rancher and frontiersman. He has hosts of friends both in Fort Worth and all over Northwest Texas. Some time after he began his duties as postmaster at Fort Worth, a number of cowboys who had come to Fort Worth with a train load of cattle made a visit to the postoffice. The leader of the party was an old-time acquaintance of Mr. Barkley, and introduced the rest of his comrades to the postmaster. One of the strangers who had heard much of the prowess of Mr. Barkley as a cow puncher viewed him from head to foot, and then with the frankness of the man of the plains said: "Mr. Barkley, when did you come down from cow punching to postmaster?" In spite of the fact that Mr. Barkley is almost Texas born and bred, and has always lived in the South, of a Southern family, and among Southern associates and relatives, he has been a stalwart Republican in political principles. A Democratic judge and man of prominence once asked him how it could be that with such associates and associations, he could affiliate as a strong Republican rather than as a Democrat. The ready retort of Mr. Barkley was: "It is not necessary for one to be a fool because he was raised in Texas." Fraternally Mr. Barkley stands high in Masonry, having taken all the degrees in both the Scottish and the York Rites except one.

On October 8, 1889, at Birdville, Mr. Barkley married Miss Laura Hardesty, whose father, Charles Hardesty, was a farmer and stock man of Tarrant county, representing one of the oldest and most prominent pioneer families in that section. Mr. and Mrs. Barkley have two children: Mrs. Julia Crabb is the wife of Dr. L. C. Crabb, a graduate of the Kansas City Veterinary College and now practicing his profession at Fort Worth; and Burk Barkley, who is living in Fort Worth and his father's assistant in the postoffice. Personally Mr. Barkley is a man of extremely sociable qualities, and it is not difficult to account for the fact that practically every acquaintance desires to be his friend. He is positive and truthful, frank and outspoken, a man who has always done practical things well, and has the complete confidence of the community where public responsibilities are concerned. The loyalty which he has exemplified in later years is of the same quality as that displayed when he was a cow puncher, and was so faithful to his employers that he would have given his last drop of blood in defending the interests entrusted to his charge.

ROBERT DRUMM. The Drumm Seed & Floral Company of Fort Worth, of which Robert Drumm is president and founder, is the largest concern of its kind in the state of Texas. The business, started more than thirty years ago at Fort Worth by Mr. Drumm, who has been a practical florist all his active career, long since developed beyond the usual range, a local greenhouse and floral supplies establishment. The business is now conducted on both a wholesale and retail basis, its goods are sent all over this part of the southwest, and the importations of seeds and plants are in themselves, as large business. The business headquarters of the company are at 507 Houston Street in Fort Worth.

Robert Drumm was born on a farm in Warren county, New Jersey, February 21, 1853, a son of Thomas and Sarah (Butler) Drumm. Reared on a farm, Mr. Drumm's outlook was early cast beyond the limits of the old home, and with a taste and talent for the growing and cultivation of beautiful plants, his attention was early directed to the florist business. His first practical experience in that line was acquired in New York, and he had a thorough training in his business before he came to Texas. Mr. Drumm has been a resident of Texas since 1888, the first two years being spent in Dallas. On locating in Fort Worth in 1882, when Fort Worth was still a comparatively small town, and chiefly a headquarters for the cattle industry, Mr. Drumm established some greenhouses and opened a small store for the sale of flowers and seeds. The business developed rapidly, not only proportionate to the increase of population, but also under the legitimate stimulus supplied by the enterprise of Mr. Drumm. In 1890, the business had increased so that it was advisable to incorporate, at which time the present title of Drumm Seed & Floral Company was adopted, and the capital stock of the concern placed at one hundred thousand dollars. At the present time the company have greenhouses at Riverside and at Arlington Heights, and forty-five thousand square feet are under glass and devoted to the growing of flowers and the many rare plants which can be obtained from the Drumm Company. Large quantities and varieties of seed are imported and sold through this company, and it is the headquarters for supplying the trade in rare tropical plants. The company grow and sell through their retail stores all kinds of cut flowers, and are regarded as the premier florists for the supplying of floral designs, which is a large feature of the business, their products being shipped to all parts of the state. The wholesale department is in itself planned and conducted on a large scale. More than fifty persons are employed in the various departments of the business. The Drumm greenhouses, during the chrysanthemum season, are a show in themselves, and are visited by thousands of people from the city. During the horse and stock show, which is held every year in Fort Worth, the Drumm display is one of the most attractive features. At any of the big functions held in Fort Worth, the floral decorations are almost invariably made by the Drumm Company. Mr. Drumm has a reputation for never decorating in the same manner twice, and is not only a skillful producer of the finest of flowers and greenery, but has an artistic eye for decorative effects and arrangements.

Mr. Drumm was married to Mrs. Nannie (Cross) James, a daughter of Robert Cross. The two children in their household are the fruit of Mrs. Drumm's previous marriage. Theirs is a fine home at 1010 Fifth Avenue, Fort Worth, and both the house and grounds are beautified with flowers and many rare plants and trees. Mr. Drumm is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and an active member in the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce.

HARVEY A. TURNER. In the practice of law at Fort Worth since 1907, Mr. Turner is now a member of the firm of Goree & Turner, with offices in the Fort Worth National Bank Building.

Mr. Turner was born in Henderson, Rusk County, Texas, April 15, 1880, a son of J. H. and Mary Lee (Collins) Turner of Henderson. He is a University man, graduating in the law department in the University of Texas in 1904. He began practice at Henderson with his father under the firm name of Turner & Turner, and that association was continued for three years. In 1907 Mr. Turner came to Fort Worth and entered the co-partner-

Henry Hertner

Winn & Turner and engaged in a general civil engineering practice for three years. For the following year he was in practice by himself, and then joined forces with Mr. Goree, the firm of Goree & Turner giving its exclusive attention to corporation practice. Mr. Turner has never married and makes his home at the University Club.

HENRY E. HERTNER. Among the newly arrived business men who have established themselves in Amarillo, Texas, during the past three years none has come to the fore more prominently than Henry E. Hertner. The story of Mr. Hertner's life proves the advisability of earning some one thing and learning it well, for Mr. Hertner's success has come through the masterly way in which he was able to perform his work. True worth and not influence of friends or personal popularity or family backing has been the means of attaining success in his case. He is now one of the prosperous and highly respected business men of Amarillo, and a citizen of whom the town is proud.

Henry E. Hertner was born in Basel, Switzerland, an important commercial center for industrial Switzerland. His birth occurred on the 29th of September, 1857, and he is the son of Henry and Veronica (Stauffer) Hertner. Both of his parents were born in Switzerland and his father was a well-known designer of laces and silk fabrics. He died in 1862 at the age of thirty-three, leaving his young son fatherless and his widow with the care of four young children. She died in 1871 at the age of forty-two, when young Henry was only a lad of fourteen. Henry was the next to the eldest of his parents' children, consequently it was necessary for him to go to work rather early in life.

After attending the schools of Switzerland and France, until he was sixteen years of age, at which time his uncle apprenticed him to a plumber to learn the trade. He served a hard apprenticeship of three years without pay, but at the end of this time he was an expert plumber and he has never regretted those three endless years. After completing his apprenticeship he spent one year as a journeyman and then came to America, landing on these shores on the Fourth of July, 1877. He went directly to Illinois, where he had an uncle, and there secured a position. He remained here for four years plying his trade and gaining much valuable experience. In July, 1881, he went to Girard, Kansas, and there established himself in business. His business steadily grew and after a few years he was able to build a home and buy other property in Girard. He continued to prosper with the passing years and became one of the best known and most influential men in the city. For thirty years he was located in business in Girard and would, in all probability, have been there today had he not come to Amarillo on a visit.

On looking over the city he decided that it offered fine opportunities in a business way and consequently determined to locate here. This was in 1910, and after starting his son in business here, in the plumbing and heating line, he himself returned to Girard to wind up his affairs. After a year he returned to Amarillo, bought property and erected a home and took active charge of the business. When the firm of H. E. Hertner and Son was established it was universally believed that he would not remain long, for no one thought that he would be able to compete with the older, well-established firms. His first year was not very profitable, but presently people began to find out that he did very high-class work, and now most of the older firms are comparatively idle while Mr. Hertner has all the work he can handle in the plumbing and heating line. He never pronounces a piece of work completed until he has himself thoroughly tested and inspected it, and this fact alone has done much to win him friends in his business. As an example of his courage he started in business by going in debt.

Mr. Hertner belongs to the Ancient Free and Accepted

Masons, being a member of all the Masonic bodies to the Thirty-second degree, his affiliations being with the Fort Scott, Kansas, lodge. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In politics he is independent, preferring to vote for the man he considers most fit rather than any party candidate. He is a member of the Protestant Episcopal church.

On the 19th of May, 1883, Mr. Hertner was married to Miss Emily Smith, of Girard, Kansas. She is the daughter of Albert and Emily Smith, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Smith was a well-known contractor in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and removed from that state to Kansas in 1863, where he died. Mr. and Mrs. Hertner have two children. The son, Henry Albert Hertner, was born on the 3rd of January, 1889. He has been connected with his father in the business since childhood and was made a partner when he became of age. He has at present under his charge the elaborate plumbing of the P. H. and John Landergen residence, also the J. D. Shuford residence, both considered the finest residences in Texas. The son has full charge of the plumbing work, though only twenty-four years of age. The work has been very favorably commented upon by many experts and is considered unsurpassed in every respect. This will be a monument to his expert mind and abilities. His other work includes the residences of J. M. Shelton, Avery Turner and many others. Mrs. J. C. Speigle, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hertner, was born April 19, 1885, in Girard, Kansas, and now lives in Amarillo. She has two daughters, Elisabeth and Mary, both of whom were born in Pittsburgh, Kansas.

SIMON ALEXANDER, president and general manager of the Alexander Shoe Company, 605½ Houston street, Fort Worth, Texas, has in his German make-up the characteristics which tell for success and are at once manifest wherever the German-American establishes himself.

Simon Alexander was born in Germany, August 17, 1873, and was reared to the age of thirteen years in his native land. In 1885 he came to America and took up his residence in Brooklyn, New York. He resided there until 1896, when he came to Fort Worth, where he had a brother at the head of the Columbia Dry Goods Company. He at once became identified with this concern also, and remained with it until the business was sold to The Burton Dry Goods Co. He then went to work for his brother, Marcus, who was engaged in the gentlemen's furnishing goods business and there he remained for six years. He saved his money, and had cash on hand amounting to $14,000 when, through the failure of a shoe company, he had opportunity to buy for that amount a $24,000 stock of shoes. He bought the shoes and assumed charge of the Alexander Shoe Co., in spacious rooms on Houston street, and has been engaged in business here ever since, meeting with signal success. He now handles more shoes than any other company in northern Texas. He buys in large quantities and he sells on small margins, making a specialty of handling sample shoes. "Low prices and high grade shoes" is his motto. He keeps a corps of efficient clerks, and last year his business touched the $48,000 mark. He also conducts a store at 1204½ Main street.

Mr. Alexander is a student of the sort that goes to the bottom of a subject. He studies both men and books. He has accumulated a library, including many rare and choice volumes as well as the standard works. And when absent from the store, he may be found either with a book or on the golf links, golf being one of his favorite sports. Mr. Alexander is unmarried.

BAYLUS N. LOVE. Among the men of the younger generation in western Texas there are many who are forging to the front and who bid fair to rival the successes of their fathers and the older pioneers of this section. Among these may be mentioned Baylus N. Love, of Sierra Blanca, Texas. Although one of the youngest of this group of successful men he is well known throughout the cattle country as one of the progressive and able stock raisers of the section. His father before him won a reputation as a cattleman and the son, brought up in the cattle business, as it were, seems to have inherited the older man's judgment as well as his knowledge of the business.

Baylus N. Love is a son of Thomas D. Love and Mallie Love. Thomas D. Love has been engaged in cattle raising practically all of his life, going into the business in Mitchell county, Texas, when the country was free and open to grazers. He worked here for A. P. Bush, and under his guidance learned all there was to know about stock raising. At a later date he was made sheriff of Borden county, Texas, an office in those days requiring not only physical but moral courage, and the highest honor that could be paid to a man in many parts of the cattle country was to make him sheriff. He first went into the cattle business for himself about thirty miles from Big Springs, Texas, and about the same distance from Colorado City. He was located here from 1892 to 1902 and then came to Sierra Blanca, Texas, and formed a partnership with his brother, G. W. Love, in the cattle business. They owned and used for grazing purposes about ninety thousand acres of land lying to the north and south of Sierra Blanca and they leased other lands adjoining, being one of the largest firms of cattlemen in this section. In 1911 the two brothers dissolved partnership and divided the land, Mr. Love still remaining in the cattle business. He keeps on the average about three thousand head of cattle grazing on his land and has improved his herd by the addition of fine Hereford stock. Mr. Love is also interested in business enterprises in the city of El Paso, where he conducts a commission business. He is also a stockholder in the Commercial Bank in El Paso. Mr. Love is now about fifty years of age and is one of the most prominent residents of this section of Texas, being highly honored wherever he is known.

Baylus N. Love was born at Alpine, Texas, on the 27th of September, 1888. He is the next to the eldest in a family of two boys and two girls, and he has grown up in Texas and New Mexico. He received his education in the public schools of these two states, and when he was through school he went into the cattle business with his father. He has been thus engaged since that time, now having charge of the ranch.

The entire Love family are members of the Democratic party, and Baylus N. Love is keenly interested in fraternal affairs, being a charter member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons in the town of Sierra Blanca.

It was on the 31st of July, 1909, that Mr. Love was married to Miss Addie Finley, of Sierra Blanca. Mrs. Love is a daughter of J. T. and Jane Finley, her father having been one of the pioneers of this part of Texas. He is also in the cattle business, having a ranch on the Rio Grande and owning and leasing large tracts of grazing land. Mr. and Mrs. Love have two children, Helen, aged two years, and Mallie, a baby of five months.

JUDGE WILLIAM TECUMSEH POTTER. Among the prominent legal authorities in Taylor county, Texas, and indeed, in this entire section, is Judge William T. Potter, of Merkel, Texas. He is not only a prominent attorney but he has won a wide reputation as a politician and statesman. Gifted with a powerful mind and an eloquent tongue he is a notable speaker whether in the courtroom or the political mass meeting. He has built up a splendid practice in Merkel and is attorney for some of the most influential business firms in the county. When he takes a case the opposing counsel always realizes that the fight is going to be a hardly contested one, for Judge Potter inherits fighting blood from his ancestors and never acknowledges defeat until the last defense is taken.

William Tecumseh Potter was born in Hamblen county,

Tennessee, on the 9th of June, 1865. His father was George W. Potter and his mother was Emma Boyd before her marriage. Both George Potter and his wife were natives of Tennessee, and like many of the residents of eastern Tennessee, his sympathies were with the Federals when the Civil war came to a head. He enlisted in the Union army and served under General Grant, participating in many important engagements, among them being the siege and battles about Vicksburg. In 1882 George Potter removed with his family to Texas, locating in Grayson county, where he became a farmer and stock raiser. He soon became a prosperous and influential citizen of the community, and his death at Sherman, Texas, in 1908, removed a man highly beloved by his fellow citizens. Mrs. Potter is still living at the old home in Sherman, highly respected and loved by all. Prior to their residence in Texas, Mr. and Mrs. Potter had lived on their farm in Hamblen county, Tennessee, eight miles from Morristown, living there from 1865 until they came to Texas in 1882.

Seven children were born to George and Emma Potter, of whom Judge Potter is the eldest. Julia, the next in years, is the wife of James Gentry, a farmer and stockman of Van Alstyne, Texas. Mattie is the widow of Robert Francis and makes her home in Grayson county. Mary became the wife of John Evans and they make their home in Oklahoma where her husband is a farmer and stock raiser. James B. is a successful business man in Sherman. Lucy married Hugh Kleypas, a farmer of McLennan county, living near Waco, Texas. Ola married Wayne Shearer of Sherman, Texas, a successful commercial traveler.

The early education of Judge Potter was had in the public schools of Hamblen county, Tennessee. After his parents removed to Texas, young William Potter entered the Van Alstyne Collegiate Institute of Grayson county and after leaving this school became a student in the Sam Houston Normal at Huntsville, Texas. He was graduated from this institution in 1887 with the degree of L. I. Upon leaving college Judge Potter began his career in the world as a teacher. For ten years he followed the pedagogical profession. His first position was as superintendent of the schools of Whitesboro, Texas. He remained here for three years and then for the next three years he was superintendent of the schools of Vernon, Texas. The record which he made during these six years brought him before the notice of the school board of Tyler, Texas, and he was elected by them superintendent of schools in that city. For four years he held this position and it was during this period that he began the study of law.

It was in 1897 that he was admitted to practice law by the District Court of Tyler, in March of that year. He resigned his superintendency in June, 1897, and began the practice of his new profession in Tyler. He remained in this city for ten years, building up a fine practice and a splendid reputation as a lawyer. During his residence here he served one term as city attorney and was also sent to the State Legislature, serving one term in the Twenty-eighth Legislative Assembly.

Judge Potter came to Taylor county in 1907 and located in Merkel where he began his practice with the determination to succeed in a place where he was little known. In the campaign of 1908 he entered the political field with much enthusiasm and became one of the political leaders of the state, speaking throughout the state in behalf of Joe Bailey, Ex-Senator from Texas. Again in 1911, Judge Potter took an active part in the fight against the Prohibition Amendment to the State Constitution. In 1912 he "stumped" the state, speaking for the present Governor Colquitt.

In politics Judge Potter is a member of the Democratic party and he never loses an opportunity to serve his party. During his years as a teacher he was a member of the State Examining Board for Teachers, his term of office being during the years 1891, 1894 and 1896.

WILLIAM D. REYNOLDS

Among the many wealthy clients which Judge Potter has in Taylor county are two of the prominent banking houses of Merkel.

Judge Potter and his wife are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. The judge is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being a Past Grand Master.

It was on the 28th of December, 1887, that Judge Potter married Miss Emma Bright, a daughter of James and Emma (Johnson) Bright. The grandfather of Judge Potter, Alexander Johnson, was one of the first to settle in Polk county, Texas. He was a well-to-do and wealthy planter before the war and in Tennessee was a large slave owner. Judge Potter and his wife have become the parents of three children, namely, one son, Lee, who has become the wife of Joseph D. Shepherd and lives in Dallas, Texas; Dorothy Lee Potter and one daughter, Mary Potter.

WILLIAM D. REYNOLDS. Whether as a cattle man or merely in the role of citizen, it is doubtful if any individual name in Texas has a larger current of familiarity and respect and admiration than that of Reynolds, as borne by the two noted old-time frontiersmen and stockmen, W. D. and George Reynolds. William D. Reynolds is now vice president of the Reynolds Cattle Company, whose offices are in the New Reynolds Building at the corner of Main and Ninth Street in Fort Worth, with which company his enterprise and residence have been identified for many years.

William D. Reynolds was born in Montgomery county, Alabama, April 22, 1846, and has been a resident of Texas since the Spring of 1847. Of Scotch lineage, his father, B. W. Reynolds, was native of Georgia, where he married Anna Marie Campbell. In 1847 he moved to Shelby county, Texas, bringing his two sons, W. D. and George. The oldest son had died in infancy. Twelve years later, just before the outbreak of the war, the father moved to old Fort Griffin in Shackelford county. This family were five sons and two daughters, all of whom made their home in and about Albany for many years. The son, Glen, had his home in Arizona, and was serving as sheriff of Gila county when he was killed November 2, 1890, by the notorious Apache Kid. The sons of B. W. Reynolds, the father, in the cattle business began in 1860, when he exchanged a negro slave for a few head of stock, and from that time until his death he was one of the well-known cattle men of West Texas whose headquarters were about the noted old military post and cattle town of Fort Griffin. The death of B. W. Reynolds survived him many years to a venerable old age.

Three years old when the family came to West Texas, William D. Reynolds spent his youth at a time when schools were by no means common in any part of Texas, and his education was of the most practical sort, resembling more the old Spartan ideals of education than those of modern times, since he was from earliest boyhood acquainted and trained in the physical and business exercises which would serve him in his career, and received only a very meagre training in the literary arts and such knowledge as comes from books. He managed to secure the assistance of a teacher during a few short winter days, when his services were not needed at home, but the chief result of this was an understanding of the most fundamentals of learning. Even those who most strongly insist upon the value of education in its usual sense cannot but confess that the training of Mr. Reynolds was best adapted for his career, and that he possessed the natural ability and talents which require little assistance for their development and exercise. His natural ability and enterprising spirit conducted him successfully through a career such as few of his contemporaries have enjoyed.

Mr. Reynolds' active life as a cattle man dates from October 22, 1867, when he took a position with Messrs.

Loving & Goodnight, and started with a herd of thirty-two hundred cattle for Colorado. His salary was fifty dollars a month, out of which he was expected to furnish his own horses and saddles. In the meantime he had possessed himself of forty-two head of cattle on his own account, largely through trading, and these were placed with the herd of his employer's, and sold at the same time the other stock was sold during that winter. The price of cattle was then running high, and having saved the greater portion of his salary, Mr. Reynolds on the last day of February, 1868, had seven hundred dollars in cash and a mule worth one hundred and twenty-five dollars. During this expedition to Colorado occurred one of the sad and familiar tragedies of the plains during that era of the sixties and seventies. Oliver Loving, one of the owners of the cattle, was killed by the Indians, and Mr. Reynolds was a member of the party who brought the body down the old Pecos trail to Weatherford. Mr. Loving was a great favorite among all the old cattle men and his loss was generally regretted.

Later in the spring of 1868 W. D. Reynolds and his brother George combined their cash capital and engaged in business together. Already known as shrewd, conservative young men they had no difficulty in purchasing several herds of cattle on credit, and took their stock into southern Colorado. That was practically the beginning of the Reynolds Land & Cattle Company, a combination which was later incorporated and was developed to such magnitude that the name has been familiar throughout all the grazing regions of the West. In the fall of 1876 a long and severe drought compelled the Reynolds boys to remove their herds and headquarters into Roberts county, in the Texas Panhandle, and they sold off most of their stock in the ensuing spring to Charles Goodnight. Mr. Reynolds then returned to the old family home at Fort Griffin and was engaged in the cattle business about that point until 1883. He then took up his residence in Albany, where he invested heavily in town property, and became interested in the First National Bank of Albany, of which he was later vice president. It would fill a large catalogue to mention in the most casual manner the various enterprises and fortunes and vicissitudes also of Mr. Reynolds in his connection with the live stock industry and other lines of enterprise in Texas during the past thirty years. He has been through the whole schedule, has witnessed and experienced the bad years with the good, has fought Indians, has endured drought and blizzards, has herded his cattle over the vast free ranges when only the buffalo and the Indians disputed his possession of the territory, and has also conducted his operations in the presence of the agricultural settlers and the railroads and with all the varied facilities and activities of modern civilization. The important fact is that Mr. Reynolds, by exceptional business ability and the persistent courage of the true cattle man, has always averaged a little bit above the standard of success, and for years has been one of the most influential and prosperous citizens of Texas.

W. D. Reynolds is a man whose figure and dignified bearing would attract attention in any company. His manner is modest and unassuming, and during his long eventful career he has made many friends. No man stands better or has greater influence with the people of his section, and there are few more careless of the honors that might be gained for the asking. He has no political aspirations and has never allowed his name used in connection with a public office. His greatest happiness has always been in his home surroundings, and in the companionship of his wife and children. Mr. Reynolds was married January 1, 1879, to Miss Susie A. Matthews, a daughter of J. B. Matthews of Albany, Texas. Mrs. Reynolds was a woman of accomplished intelligence and character, and besides giving inspiration to her husband in his practical career, also reared and gave careful training to their family of eight children. These children are named as follows: George Eaton Reynolds, Ella Reynolds, William D. Reynolds, Jr., Joseph Matthew Reynolds, Annie Merle Reynolds, Watt Wendel Reynolds, John Reynolds, and Nathan B. Reynolds.

As vice president of the Reynolds Cattle Company, Mr. W. D. Reynolds is one of the owners of an aggregate of about one hundred thousand acres of land, located principally in the counties of Shackelford and Throckmorton and Haskell. At the present time their herds of cattle number about forty thousand head, and these are chiefly high grade Herefords, many of which are the finest specimens of the breed to be found in the entire state. Mr. Reynolds, aside from his connection with the cattle company, is an extensive owner of bank stock, ranch lands and city property. But like the majority of old-time Texans he values his wealth not for itself but for what it represents in a strenuous activity of many years and for what good he is able to accomplish with it. His generosity and liberality have been typical of the open-handedness always associated with the westerner. And his helpful influence has been behind a great many movements and enterprises which could be chronicled as practical benevolence.

JAMES EDWIN CAWTHON. A young lawyer who has done much to prove his ability and open a way for a successful career in the law, James Edwin Cawthon, formerly a resident and practicing member of the Grayson County Bar at Denison, but now of El Paso, is a native son of Texas, belongs to an old southern and Texas family, whose members have been prominent in the ministry, in the professions and in business. Besides the family accomplishments which have been his inspiration and environment, Mr. Cawthon possesses to an unusual degree the attributes that bring success in the law, including a legal mind, ability to concentrate, fidelity to his work, and the progressive ideas and ideals which characterize so many successful young Texans.

Mr. Cawthon was born October 1, 1881, near the old Brazos river town of Port Sullivan in Milam county, the oldest son of Dr. N. and Fannie M. Cawthon. Through his father he is Scotch-Irish and through his mother Scotch. His grandfather Cawthon was a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal church in Tennessee and stood high in the Methodist Conference of the South. The maternal grandfather was Captain E. T. Thompson, now living retired at Port Sullivan, Texas, and who fought as a volunteer in the Confederate army from Alabama, holding the captaincy of his company and remaining in service from the early part of 1861 to the close of the struggle. Captain Thompson's wife, the maternal grandmother of the El Paso lawyer, was a Ghent, a sister of Dr. Henry Clay Ghent, a noted physician and surgeon who until his recent death had for many years resided in Belton, Texas. We pause here to say a word about this remarkable woman, who, though blind for thirty-five years prior to her death, was one of the most faithful and devout Christians that ever prepared, under such adverse circumstances, a diadem of beautiful deeds and little kindnesses, to be placed upon her brow as a reward for her beautiful life.

Dr. N. Cawthon, the father, was a native of Tennessee, came to Texas shortly after the close of the Civil war, and from Waco, which was then a small village, journeyed by stage to Salado to join his brother, William, who had already been a resident of this state for a number of years. At Salado Dr. Cawthon took up the profession of dentistry, continuing in the practice until his retirement a few years ago. Both parents are still living and have their home in Waco. The mother, who was born in Alabama, came to Texas in an early day with her parents, locating at old Port Sullivan. Dr. Cawthon previous to his removal to Texas had been a volunteer in the Confederate army, and was in the famous cavalry body commanded by that intrepid leader, General Forrest, his service keeping him on the skirmish line between the armies of the North and South during most of the war. He was in the bloody battle of Franklin, Tennessee, where he was wounded, and at one other time had his horse shot from under him. Dr. Cawthon and wife were the parents of four children, James E. being the oldest son. T. S. Cawthon, a brother, living in Waco, engaged in the real estate and insurance business. N. M. Cawthon, the youngest brother, also of Waco, is teller in the Farmers & Merchants State Bank. This brother at the age of sixteen enjoyed the distinction of being the youngest banker in Texas and is a young man of much promise. The only daughter, Viola, wife of B. N. George, is living in Wichita Falls, where her husband is chief clerk of the freight department of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railway.
